Fred A. Schneider, president, and William H. Steffens, secretary, of the Dix Theater Company, at 605 Dix avenue, and downtown offices at 1704 Dime Bank building, are offering for sale the entire issue of $75,000, the amount for which the company is incorporated. The Stratford is the name of the theater which the company is having erected at Dix and Ferdinand avenues. It will seat 1,200 people, will have auto boxes, pipe organ, washed air, full stage and other modern equipment. It is being rushed to completion for early fall opening. The land is owned by the company and is 62 by 139 feet in size, and is in the heart of the west side business section. The territory served is a rapidly growing residential section now numbering upwards of 60,000 persons, mostly home owners. Dix avenue is the business street of that section. The company has the unqualified support of the community. Prominent business men and residents in the vicinity have subscribed liberally for stock. There is no bonus stock and none will be reserved. All stock is common. The scenic effects will be installed by the Kunsky Scenic Company of Detroit.

Detroit Exchanges Grow

Many New Picture Theaters in and About the City Make Demand for Larger Quarters in Nearly All Exchanges—Offices That Have Moved or Added to Present Space—Reports Show Encouraging Business.

By Jacob Smith. Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.) Corresponde nt of Moving Picture World.

WITH the number of theaters in Detroit and Michigan increasing, has come the demand for more space on the part of the various exchanges. Detroit is the exchange center for Michigan exhibitors, all business for the state being transacted from Detroit, where the branches have headquarters.

A few months ago the General Film Company moved to larger quarters in the old Telegraph building, at Griswold and Congress streets; The Universal Film Mfg. Co., recently moved from Woodward and Larned streets to first-floor headquarters at 159 Jefferson avenue west, where it has one of the finest exchanges in the country; The Pathe Exchange, formerly at 414 Smith building, will move the 1st of September to 40-42-44 East Larned street, where it will occupy the entire second floor; The Metro Film Corporation, now located in the Campau building, plans to move to a new location within a few weeks; the Standard Film Service Company, in the Peter Smith building, Griswold and State, will practically double its floor space; the World Film Corporation has found it necessary to remodel its quarters at 99 Woodward avenue in order to get more room; V-S-L-E has opened offices in the Peter Smith building and will later have an exchange here.

All of the film companies report that business is great for this time of the year and that they are doing more business now than they did during the regular season. It looks very much as if the next twelve months to come will be very prosperous ones for exhibitors who have large seating capacities, up-to-date theaters and who will give their patrons the best features. During the past ten days the writer made a personal canvass of the leading theaters in all parts of the city, and from every manager he received the information that trade was much better than last year, much better than they expected, and that this fall it is not going to be a question of "will we do business," but "will we be able to handle all the business?"

THEATERS COMBINING.

The chain plan of operating moving picture theaters is very much on the increase in Michigan, as no doubt it is in other sections of the country. In the city of Detroit John H. Kunsky, Inc., operates seven theaters and will soon open his eighth at Grand River and Fourteenth street, all of them money-makers. A. Arthur Caille is a large stockholder and is responsible for the Majestic and Maxine theaters, and recently purchased the Addison theater, which he has renamed the Fine Arts. William F. Klatt, with offices in the Union Trust building, has a chain of houses which he operates under the Detroit Theaters, Inc., including the Rosedale, on Woodward avenue; the Gratiot, Vendome and Jewell theaters, and will soon have another, the Regent, seating 3,000 people, at Woodward and Horton avenues. Henry S. Koppin is president of the Woodward Theater Co., which controls the LaSalle, on Randolph street, the Comique on Pingree Square, the Pallister, in North Woodward, and the Woodward, near the Campus Martius. A. J. Gillingham, of Detroit, manager of the General Film Company branch, and owner of the Empire theater, in Detroit, owns a chain of the leading theaters in Grand Rapids, Mich., while Col. W. S. Butterfield, with headquarters in Battle Creek, operates a chain of vaudeville and photoplay houses in Saginaw, Bay City, Jackson, Flint, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Muskegon and other cities. There are also a number of other companies operating a smaller number of theaters, all of which goes to prove that the chain plan is very successful in Michigan and that it is rapidly increasing.

L. E. FRANCONI TAKES CHARGE OF PATHE BRANCH.

L. E. Franconi, former special representative of the Pathe Freres Company, has come to Detroit to take charge of the local branch, which is being moved from the Peter Smith building to 40-42-44 East Larned street. Mr. Franconi is well known in the moving picture industry of this country, and is the man largely responsible for many of the novel features produced by the Pathe firm.

His coming to Detroit is an indication of the splendid organization being established by the Pathe as well as the increase in business which that concern has had during the past six months. Mr. Franconi declares that his company is "only starting" to give the exhibitors of this country a class of film that will be a credit to their houses and that will actually draw trade. Pathe comedies, Pathe travel pictures and Pathe features are being used by the leading Detroit theaters every week, and the demand is increasing.

Mr. Franconi expects to be comfortably located at the new quarters by the first week in September. L. E. Davis, former manager of the Detroit branch, will continue with the company and will be east side city salesman.

WANTS SCENARIO FOR LOCAL FILM.

Manager Moule of the Alhambra theater, Detroit, has issued a circular to his patrons with the following offer: "We have arranged with a prominent manufacturer to produce for us a one-reel comedy picture, scenes laid in the parks, streets and homes in the vicinity of the Alhambra theater and acted mostly by children of the neighborhood. We want a suitable story or scenario for the picture and will present a season's pass to the one sending in the best story. Conditions of the contest are: not over 500 words in story; write on one side of paper only; use typewriter, if possible, use large sheet of paper and fold neatly; enclosed stamped envelope and addressed envelope if you wish your story returned; sign clearly, your full name and address. Mail to Scenario Editor, Alhambra theater, 2206 Dime Bank building, Detroit, or hand to any attache of the theater. Contest closes Sept. 1, 1915." Mr. Moule reports that hundreds of scenarios are submitted and the young element particularly is manifesting a great interest in the contest.

ABE SEIGEL RESIGNS.

Abe Siegel has tendered his resignation as manager of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation in the Peter Smith building, and has been temporarily succeeded by William Burnstein, one of the company's special representatives. Mr. Burnstein will remain until a permanent manager is appointed. William Alexander, also special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been spending a few weeks at Detroit, was called to St. Louis this week on account of the illness of the manager in that city.

Portland Measure Tabled

Proposed Fire Ordinance Aimed at Film Exchanges Again Meets Opposition—Compliance by Small Houses Nearly Impossible—Though Not Favored, It Is Not Strongly Opposed by Larger Exchanges, If Applied to New Buildings.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE proposed fire ordinance detailed in last week's issue of the World was submitted to the exchange men of Portland and met with nearly as much opposition as the ordinance drafted a few months ago. The city commissioners promised the film men they would look over the situation personally and the passage of the ordinance was deferred. The matter has in the past been left in the hands of the fire marshal and his assistants, but the city administration feels that in view of the opposition, they should take it personally in hand.

Most of the opposition comes from the small exchanges using one room for all the branches of the business; these will be the hardest hit by the clause of the ordinance requiring fireproof division walls. At the time the building housing the majority of the exchanges in Portland was erected, the city authorities were consulted and the owners of the building have the city's consent in writing to the method of construction used. For this reason, while the film men believe the ordinance is fair as a fire protective measure to new buildings, and are willing to comply with those parts of it relative to the operating of their exchanges, they do not feel that they should be called upon to remodel their buildings.

NEW MANAGER FOR THE COLUMBIA.

E. J. Myrick has assumed the managerial reins of the Columbia theater, and Mr. Jensen, of Jenson & Von Herberg, the lessees, has returned to Seattle to manage the Alhambra theater there and also the Mission theater temporarily in the absence of Mr. Von Herberg, on his vacation. Mr. Myrick was manager of the Alhambra for two years, coming to Seattle from Montana, where he was also engaged in theatrical enterprises.

TO BE EXPECTED.

Heralding "The Birth of a Nation," billed to show at the Heilig theater three weeks, commencing August 29, comes the usual protest by the negro population of Portland and the G. A. R., the colored people having petitioned to the Mayor and a committee from the George Wright Post, G. A. R., are contemplating like action. Mrs. Edward D. Cannady, secretary of one of the leading colored people's clubs, advises that the members of her organization have made a continuous fight against the picture ever since there was any possibility of its showing in Portland.

GROMBACHER RETURNS.

G. A. Grombacher, vice-president of Metro and the Portland head of the firm of Grombacher & Bailey, recently returned from New York City, where he has been in conference with the officials of that company. Mr. Grombacher tells of added famous stars to the Metro standards, a big publicity campaign and other good news of the company's expansion.

HIGHER PRICE A SUCCESS.

W. M. Rogers, assistant manager of the Majestic theater, reports that his house, the first in Portland to raise the admission to 15 cents, has had three of the biggest days in its history, notwithstanding the hot weather. With Charles Chaplin in "The Bank" and Madam Jomelli singing four performances daily, the increased price venture is an unlooked for success.

A new ventilating system has been installed and a permanent stage set with lighting effects completes the theater's renovating for this season.

OUTCOME UNCERTAIN.

With new complications arising every day, the musicians and the exhibitors are still at outs and non-union music is still playing at the larger houses here. A rumor circulating at the time of this writing that the Moving Picture Operators' Union had affiliated itself with the musicians and that a general walk-out would result before nightfall, was suppressed after a meeting between the employers of music and a committee from the Central Labor Council at the Pantages theater, and after the meeting every one concerned expressed a mutual feeling of relief that the operators were still behind the calciums. A strike by the operators would involve the other branches of the theater mechanics, who, it is understood, are not anxious to strike at this time.

"There is no basis for a walk-out on the part of the operators," said J. R. Cummock of the Peoples Amusement Company. "A friendly feeling exists between the managers and the operators and the outcome of our meeting today and the fact that another conference has been called with the Labor Council indicates that an amicable adjustment is desired by all parties and will in all probabilities be effected."

Capitalizing the fact that the union musicians are out of the larger houses, some of the smaller ones are advertising union music as a drawing card and one house has a union band in its lobby.

NATIONAL CHANGES POLICY AND MANAGERS.

Commencing Sept. 5, the National theater heretofore showing pictures exclusively, will discontinue the celluloid drama temporarily and run musical comedies, the Frank Rick Musical Comedy Company having been engaged for a short season. This action is taken by the representatives of the stockholders for the reason that while the house is one suitable only to first runs, it has been unable to obtain this class of pictures. Orton E. Goodwin, formerly engaged in publicity and amusement enterprises in Portland, will take over the management of the house under the new policy.

PORTLAND PERSONALS.

C. B. Pumphries, associated with W. A. Stone in the Service Film Company, recently journeyed to San Francisco to see the exposition to even the score with Mr. Stone, who has been making numerous trips to Mt. Hood, where they say the fishing is fine.

F. S. Felton, of the Paramount Company, was a recent visitor in Portland, as was F. A. Quimby, of Pathe, who stopped over for a few hours en route to Seattle.

Washington visitors in Portland this week were J. D. Jameson, Kleine Features; E. R. Redlick, Fox Films, both with headquarters in Seattle, and F. T. Bailey, of the Liberty theater, Spokane.

Other Portland visitors were: B. L. Henkle, Isis theater, Independence, Ore., and J. Shea, Electric theater, Hood River, Ore.

The Service Film Company reports the sale of two Power 6A machines, one to Pacious & Sommers, Prosser, Wash., and the other to M. H. Klaus, Vollmer, Idaho.

G. A. Metzger, manager of the Film Supply Company, of Oregon, has just returned from a trip to Denver, where he has been in conference with M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges for the Universal Company and other Universal representatives west of the Rocky Mountains.

NO FRANK FILMS IN SPOKANE.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMMISSIONER Samuel Glasgow, local censor of amusements, to-day announced that he would not permit scenes connected with the lynching of Leo M. Frank shown in Spokane. He said: "I am not concerned with the merit of the lynching or its demerits nor the guilt or innocence of Frank. I am convinced that such pictures must be gruesome. I am ready to stop their presentation, in Spokane, on that score alone. I can't imagine how any person would have any desire to see them."

PICTURES WILL SHOW HOW FIRES START.

Due to the fact that several threshing machines have burned in the Washington wheat belt this season and last and that smut fires have caused similar damages in various sections of the country, the government is making investigations and bringing the moving picture camera into play as a demonstrator to point out the troubles and urge the diminishing of such losses.

In line with this a series of lectures on smut explosions in threshing machines will be started within the next few days at Rosalia, Washington, by Engineer D. J. Price, detailed by the government to investigate the thresher explosions. The lectures will be given throughout the Palouse country and will be illustrated by moving pictures, which are the first of their kind ever shown in the United States, according to reports made here. They depict actual explosions from pulverized sugar, starch, flour, sulphur and coal dust. These are materials which have not, heretofore, been given much attention by investigators. The films were made in Pittsburg, Pa., and have just arrived in Spokane.

Engineer Price states that the purpose of the lectures is largely to secure cooperation of the threshing men in investigating the causes of explosions.

RECENT SPOKANE ATTRACTIONS

Spokane has been exceptionally well favored during the past few days by extraordinary productions which the managers of the several theaters report have been excellent drawing cards. Pauline Frederick in "Sold" closed an engagement at the Clemmer; Myrtle Tannehill in "The Barnstormers" ran for two days at the Class A, and Theda Bara proved a good drawing attraction at the Casino for three days in "The Devil's Daughter."

Additional to this, Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow appearing in "The Second In Command," were declared by the Liberty management to be among the best drawing cards, from a box office standpoint, of any picture recently shown. Miss Snow was advertised in half-page ads as Mrs. James Cruze, owing to Mr. Cruze recently appearing at the Liberty in person. In blackface type the following appeared in the same ad in the three daily papers: "July 15 was Metro Day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. In a keen competition, in which all the big features film manufacturers were represented, the Metro Pictures Corporation was awarded the first prize medal for the best picture submitted. Their entry was 'The Second In Command,' featuring Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow. In front of the Tower of Jewels 70,000 people witnessed a scene from the play, enacted by the principals, on a specially constructed stage. In the evening at an official banquet in his honor, Francis X. Bushman was proclaimed the greatest of all picture stars. This is the greatest tribute ever paid a motion picture manufacturer and star."

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

The work of redecorating the Majestic theater, rearranging the lights and installing 200 leather upholstered opera seats has been completed. The management reports that Hughie Mack in "Rector's at Seven," featuring Lillian Gish and Kathlyn Williams in a Selig wild animal picture have been profitable attractions.

Charles Chaplin in "Those Love Pangs," and William S. Hart in "Mr. Silent Hawkins," were witnessed by large audiences at the Lyric for a two days' run. Lottie Pickford in "The Diamond from the Sky," is proving a good attraction for this house.

Both the Class A and the Lyric management report the Chaplin pictures among their best drawers.

Sidney Olcott and Valentine Grant in "All For Ireland," were witnessed by many moving picture fans.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

HEARD IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has sent the feature "The Inside of the White Slave Traffic," to Honolulu, for an extensive run on the islands.

Morris L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange, has returned from a business trip to Denver, Col.

The Unique theater, on Market street, has been featuring Charles Chaplin in "The Bank" in a unique manner the past week. Money sacks bearing the imprint of the Union Trust Company were filled with sand and stacked in the lobby around a cut-out of the comedian holding a bag full of money. Manager Joe Huff states that the run here during the week has been like a run on a bank.

The Portola theater recently enjoyed a splendid week's run on the Aylesworth animal pictures and installed a very attractive lobby display to attract attention. This consisted of a large collection of mounted heads, including mountain sheep, deer, moose and walrus.

The Poppy theater, on 16th street, near Mission, has been purchased by a Mr. Johnson.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., was in San Francisco this week, accompanied by his wife, two sons and two daughters, together with the two daughters of John R. Freuler. The trip from Santa Barbara was made by automobile, the first night's stop being made at Paso Robles, and the second at Del Monte. After spending a few days at the Exposition the party will return to Santa Barbara and will then leave for Chicago.

TRIANGLE FILM COMPANY TO OPEN EXCHANGE.

C. Mel. Simmons, Pacific Coast manager for the Triangle Film Company, has been in San Francisco during the past week looking over the local field for an exchange site and will shortly establish coast headquarters here. Tentative arrangements have been made to take over the quarters on Golden Gate avenue, formerly occupied by the Kriterion Film Exchange, but it is possible that an upstairs location on Market street will be chosen. A decision will be arrived at shortly and the new exchange will be opened at the earliest possible date.

Censors File Report

San Francisco Film Viewers Say Public Taste on Coast Is Improving—Few White Slave Films—Exchanges Have Willingly Pruned Objectionable Scenes from Offerings—Membership of the Board—Trouble Over War Films Recalled.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture exhibitors of San Francisco, and the general public, have been reminded during the past week of the fact that an official board of censorship exists here by the filing of a report at the City Hall by its secretary, Mary Ashe Miller, 1595 Clay street. This report contains the information that a great improvement has taken place of late in the quality of moving pictures shown here and that the general public is demanding a better class of films. The report goes on to state that films depicting the "white slave traffic" and other unpleasant subjects are disappearing and more wholesome themes are taking their place.

Attention is called to the fact that no trouble has been experienced here in a long time regarding the presentation of any picture and a reason for this is given in the statement that the various film exchanges have co-operated with the board to the extent of giving private views of doubtful films and of making such changes as the censors suggest. The last occasion on which there was any trouble regarding the showing of films in this city was about a year ago, when a ban was placed on the presentation of war subjects. The Board of Censorship was not directly concerned in this, however, the order to stop the displaying of war subjects coming from the chief of police. This order has not been revoked, as far as is known, but the police department was restrained from interference, it being shown that it had no jurisdiction in such matters.

The local Board of Censorship consists of W. P. Wobber, president, 1325 Sixth avenue; Mary Ashe Miller, sercetary, 1595 Clay street; E. M. Hecht, Kohl Building, and Corporal Peter Peshon, of the police department. Most of the work of viewing films, especially in the theaters, devolves upon Corporal Peshon.

CALIFORNIA MOTION PICTURE CO. MOVES ITS OFFICES.

The offices of the California Motion Picture Corporation have been removed from the New Call building, back of the Palace hotel, where they have been located for several months, to San Rafael, where the producing company has a large studio. Considerable confusion has resulted in the past through having the studio in one place and the administration offices in another, and this has been done away with by combining them. The full office staff is now settled at San Rafael and preparations are being made for engaging in work there on a large scale. Beatriz Michelena, star of this producing concern, is now in New York, visiting friends and relatives, but will shortly return to the coast.

EDUCATORS ENDORSE PICTURES.

On Aug. 18 a special meeting of the National Kindergarten Association, in session in San Francisco, was held in Number Two Simplex theater, Palace of Education, on the Exposition grounds. Delegates and others interested in educational work filled the theater to overflowing and enthusiastically viewed several films showing the activities of Pratt Institute and the Froebel League, of New York. After this meeting a committee of fifty members, headed by the president of the association and accompanied by Alvin E. Pope, chief of the departments of education and social economy, of the Exposition, visited the exhibit of the precision Machine Company. All expressed their interest in the subject of visual instruction as applied to their particular branch of education, stress being laid on the remarkable results to be obtained by using moving pictures in connection with story telling and nature work. Not a few of the teachers present took a deep interest in the mechanical construction of the Simplex, the elimination of the fire hazard coming in for special attention.

SEATTLE MAN FOR LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE.

E. D. Tate, manager of the Seattle office of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., up to the time of the transfer of this branch to M. Rosenberg, has been placed in charge of the Los Angeles branch of this film concern to succeed E. H. Emmick, who has left to engage in business on his own account. Mr. Tate, is an experienced film man and was very popular in Seattle, his departure causing general regret. It was expected that he would remain in San Francisco for a time, but the new opening was found for him shortly after his arrival here.

FORMER SAN FRANCISCO FILM MAN LAUNCHES TRADE ORGAN.

The first issues of the "V-L-S-E Pals," a four-page weekly publication circulated among the exchanges and exhibitors in the Pacific Northwest handling Big Four features, have been received by some of the San Francisco pals of Tom North, so well known here through his former connection with George Kleine. Mr. North went to Seattle recently to become manager for the V-L-S-E in the Northwest, and from all accounts is meeting with great success. The publication just launched is serving as a medium of exchange of ideas regarding advertising, business methods and the like, and is being enthusiastically received. To stimulate interest a gold watch, suitably inscribed, is to be presented to the person submitting the best idea for advertising a Big Four feature, the contest to close on December 15. Tom North has not forgotten the Pals organization, of which he was a member while at San Francisco, and every exhibitor and person affiliated with the V-L-S-E exchanges is referred to in the publication as pal, instead of Mr. or Mrs.

STATE HOSPITAL HAS THEATER.

A moving picture theater has been fitted up at the State Hospital for the Insane at Patton, Cal., and will be operated as a possible cure for insanity. A careful selection of films will be made and it is believed that much good will be accomplished through the use of pictures. While moving pictures have been shown occasionally in institutions of this kind it is believed that this is the first permanent theater to be attached to a hospital on the coast.

EXPOSITION CITY JOTTINGS.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Kehrlein, proprietors of the Kinema theater, of Fresno, Cal., have been spending two months here to escape the warm weather and to enjoy the beauties of the Exposition. They returned home last week.

Work is being rushed on the fitting up of the new Chutes theater, on Fillmore street and this house will be opened at an early date under the direction of Charles Cole. Two late model Motiographs are to be supplied by Edward H. Kemp.

EDMONTON, B. C., THEATER HAS TROUBLE WITH UNION.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FRICTION which has for some time been manifest between the management of Pantages theater at Edmonton and its stage employees, members of Local No. 210, I. A. T. S. E., has finally resulted in a definite break. The present trouble, which is over the multiplicity of tie-on drops carried by a dancing act playing at the theater, may have the ultimate result of putting an end to the vaudeville policy at this house and at the Grand theater (playing Pantages acts) in Calgary, and the conversion of the two theaters to a straight picture policy. As the statements of both parties agree as to the essential facts, the matter seems to resolve itself into a question of whether the constitution of a local shall conflict with that of the international body.

Acting under instructions from E. J. Wolfe, business agent of the Edmonton local, the Pantages stage carpenter refused to hang more than two of the six special drops carried by the act in question, claiming that any additional work required called for the employment of another stage hand. However, after a talk with M. A. Milligan, manager of the theater, Mr. Wolfe receded from his position and ordered that the six drops should be hung. At this point Manager Milligan discharged the carpenter, who was also the stage manager, and who, it is stated, created quite a disturbance. The whole crew, consisting of electrician, property man, and moving picture operators, walked out with him, and the show proceeded with Mr. Milligan, his brother, C. G. Milligan, manager of the Pantages vaudeville in the Grand theater in Calgary, who happened to be visiting in Edmonton, and George Brown, one of the owners of the Pantages block, doing the work of the striking employees. The regular moving picture operator and electrician were on their vacation when the strike occurred, and it was announced that their positions were still open to them if they cared to return.

"The union," said Business Agent Wolfe, "will stand behind the discharged carpenter. He either had to hang the six drops and take a chance of losing his union card, or obey the union and take a chance of losing his job."

There is considerable feeling on both sides and the outcome is awaited with interest.

ALF BLOOM WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Alf Bloom, formerly with the United Film Company, at Calgary, is now with the Famous Players Film Service. The United, or Warner's, as the company was sometimes known, have closed their offices in Calgary and Winnipeg. Mr. Schlater, the Calgary manager, has left for Chicago, while Abe Weinfield, who was in charge at Winnipeg, is now in Montreal.

NOTICE, EXHIBITORS.

All exhibitors in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Yukon Territory are cordially invited to send items of interest to the Vancouver correspondent of the World, 821 Rogers Building. Your co-operation in helping us to cover the ground thoroughly will be very much appreciated.

CENSORS' WIDE SWATH.

In looking over a back number of the World the Vancouver correspondent came across a statement to the effect that out of 418 subjects submitted to the Portland (Ore.) censors in June, two were rejected—and there was no appeal. Were the situation not so serious in British Columbia one would be tempted to smile In a single week in August, of the twenty-three reels submitted to the censor by the local Universal exchange (all one and two-reel subjects) thirteen were rejected. Of the first eleven reels submitted, ten were rejected. And this was by no means an accumulated collection of questionable reels, either, but the regular releases on the Universal program. And from these decisions there was no appeal; requests for repeal boards have been met with flat refusals. Evidently, however, the censor is not particularly proud of his work, because when the World man requested a copy of the public records containing statistics concerning the censor's work during last year, he was informed that the figures were "not available." When these are secured (which will be soon) they should make interesting reading. The above figures, by the way, take no note of cuts; all are straight rejections.

NO TROUBLE WITH UNION.

We are informed by G. E. Nutty, secretary of the Musicians' Mutual Protective Union of Regina, Sask., that we were in error in our issue of Aug. 7, page 1036, when stating that the Rex and Rose theaters were having trouble with the union. Mr. Nutty says that both have always been union houses.

PICTURE MEN VISITORS.

A. Johnson, of the Rex, Cranbrook, B. C., has just returned from a trip to the United States. C. G. Bowker was in Calgary recently, en route to Pincher Creek. Mr. Miley, of the Daylight theater, Saskatoon, Sask., has been to Chicago, and reports a pleasant trip. Sam Sternberg, accountant of the Famous Players' exchange in Calgary, has been in Edmonton for a rest. William Findlay, of the Monarch theater, at Medicine Hat, Alberta, was in Calgary recently. Bill is a fine chap, and is known and liked by everybody in the business. Joseph Leonard, of the Dreamland theater, Medicine Hat, was also in the city. He reports business rather quiet, but expects a great improvement in the fall.

VANCOUVER NOTES.

The Empress theater, Prince Albert, Sask., will soon be opened under new management.

Ben Cronk, manager of the Allen theater, Calgary, entertained the children on a recent Saturday by giving each child who entered the theater an ice cream cone.

A. Reich has reopened the Royal theater in Calgary.

The Johnson-Willard fight pictures played four days at the Monarch theater, Edmonton, to good business. Admission was 25 cents.

John Hazza, manager of the Empress theater, Edmonton, was in charge of the games and sports at a big picnic enjoyed by members of the Favorite Musical Company of the Bijou (Edmonton) at Cooking Lake.

Morris Gesner has sold his interest in the Opera House at Kamloops, B. C., to his partner, W. A. Wilkinson, who is now in full charge. Six reels of pictures and one act of vaudeville are used at 15 and 20 cents.

Through the courtesy of Ben Soskin a number of friends had had not seen the Johnson-Willard pictures were given an opportunity of viewing the film after the regular evening performance at the Strand.

D. Freeman and J. Levine, of the local Universal exchange, have returned from an auto trip across the line, as the guests of C. E. Bailey, of Esquimalt.

J. D. Jameson, of the Kleine office in Seattle, was a visitor in Vancouver with a view to a possible showing of the Kleine-Edison features in this territory. No deal was made, but it is considered likely that the matter will be taken up again later, possibly on a different basis.

The Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of George Walsh, has proved a distinct success in J. R. Muir's Dominion theater. Mr. Muir states that his receipts have jumped twenty dollars per day since its advent. Good music undoubtedly pays.

Manager J. Pilling is brightening up the Orpheum in preparation for the fall season. The latest improvement is the entire redecoration of the ornate lobby.

It is very likely that there will be no theater for road attractions in Edmonton next winter, as the Empire, on 103rd street, which has been used for these shows for many years, was struck by lightning two weeks ago, and has been condemned.

E. L. Drew has been in Calgary representing the Johnson-Willard pictures for Jack Curley and Lawrence L. Weber.

John Pollard has reopened the Bijou theater at Strathcona, Alberta, and is using Paramount service, filling in with Mutual.

H. B. Wright, of the World Film Corporation, was a recent visitor to Edmonton.

BRYSON IN QUARTERS NO. 5.

Manager of Laemmle Film Service in Minneapolis in Nine Years Has Seen Four Offices Outgrown—Other Western News.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Laemmle Film Service, J. V. Bryson, manager, at Minneapolis, held open house August 20 at the new exchange at 717-719 Hennepin avenue. Managers, operators and their families and the general public were invited. The new exchange has 8,000 feet of space and has capacious projection room, storage vault, repair and poster departments and executive offices. A big freight elevator has been installed into which a motor truck can be driven and raised to the second floor for loading or unloading. These are the fifth quarters occupied by the Laemmle exchange since is started nine years ago. Incidentally, Manager Bryson has been with it from the start.

The city council at New Ulm is contemplating fixing a license fee for moving picture houses. Acting Mayor F. H. Retzlaff approves the plan because it will give the city authorities a lever for the regulation of the character of pictures shown.

Leslie Dane and James Moudry have purchased the Montgomery theater at Montgomery.

E. T. Sandberg is remodeling and redecorating the Elco theater at Aurora.

Earl Peabody has sold the Grand theater at Redwood Falls to C. F. Martin, until recently a laundryman of that city.

Melvin Sherman, manager of the Victor theater at Little Falls, and Billy B. Watson, of Detroit, have taken a lease on the Victor and will alternate pictures and road shows.

A. A. Graves, of Willard, Col., was in Luverne to film the unusual wheat harvest for the Gaumont Company. He also secured a film of ravages of insect pests in corn fields which will be put out as "King Corn and His Destructive Enemies."

A moving picture theater has been opened at Rollingstone.

The Garden Theater company, at Minneapolis, has been incorporated with capital stock of $500,000. C. C. Taft is president and E. C. Moratin is secretary.

The H. & H. Motion Picture Film Producing company, of Winona, plans to erect a small studio in that city. The organizers are considering incorporating. The latest production is a rural comedy staged at the Galesville county fair. Another recent production, "His Wife's New Dress," staged at Winona, is described as a Chaplinette and abounds in trick photography.

IN MONTANA.

CHARLES BISE is interested in a project to establish a moving picture producing company at Harlowton. It is planned to organize a $100,000 corporation. The Chamber of Commerce will donate a site for the plant.

William Haight, manager of the Orpheum and Alcazar theaters in Livingston, recently took a vacation which he spent in making an auto tour of Yellowstone Park.

Ed Phillips has sold the moving picture theater at Terry to E. G. Gagion of Miles City, who will operate it.

The Liberty theater at Helena did a good business with the two reels made by Pathe at the big stampede in the neighboring city of Missoula.

Dr. G. E. Condra of the University of Nebraska and his family are touring Yellowstone park in an auto. Doctor Condra, whose motion picture work at the Nebraska school has attracted considerable attention, is carrying his camera and expects to get some different films.

The new moving picture theater in Culbertson, which has been opened by F. E. Hoskin and G. G. Arnett, with Charles Holsten as manager, will be known as the Princess.

IN DAKOTA.

Roy Heckman has opened a moving picture theater in the Odd Fellows block at Cando, N. D. The theater seats 300.

A new opera house is being erected at Platte, S. D.

L. C. Darling has sold the Electric theater at Ambrose, N. D., to Peter Tamsen, who will assume charge above October 1.

M. Berry has opened a moving picture show in the Starland Opera House at Alexander, N. D.

W. A. KNOTTS VISITS DENVER.

Mr. W. A. Knotts, western division manager of the World Film Corporation, is stopping off in Denver for a few days, greeting his friends and also attending to business. It will be remembered that Mr. Knotts was manager of the World Film Exchange here for several months, and that he was promoted to the position of division manager a few weeks ago. His headquarters are now in San Francisco and he oversees the offices at Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Mr. Knotts has just been to New York, where he attended the meeting of the division managers of the World and Equitable Film companies. The World corporation handles or markets the pictures that the Equitable people put out. On the side, the division managers had a fine time.

Mr. Knotts expressed much enthusiasm and much assurance over the new pictures that the World is going to put out. He says they are going to be much finer than any before, and that is saying a great deal. For example, Mr. Knotts explained that the pictures the Equitable people put out are turned into the World eight weeks before they are released or given to the exhibitors to run. This enables the World people to thoroughly go over the film, and if in any way it is not as good as it should be then there is time to discard it, and another can be made in its place. This is only an instance of the care that the World is adopting to insure that they shall have the very best pictures.

Mr. Knotts will probably be here until Thursday, and, while he likes his new work immensely, he says it seems mighty good to be back, and that he wishes his stay were not to be so short.

W. L. LEDOUX VISITS.

W. L. Ledoux, the general manager of the Starland Circuit of moving pictures, which extends through Canada and also St. Paul, Minn., was in town Monday visiting his old friend, Mr. Frank Harris, who is the manager of the V-L-S-E exchange here. Mr. Ledoux is one of the proprietors of the Empress Vaudeville house of Omaha, and it was there that Mr. Harris and he were associated in business, prior to Mr. Harris' work with the V-L-S-E company. Mr. Ledoux was astonished that despite the great number of moving picture houses that Denver has there are more building. He is on his way to the Pacific coast and merely stopped off here for the day, but with what he saw of Denver he is much impressed with it.

Denver's New Strand

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new Strand theater, which has been in the course of construction for the past six months, and which is built on the site of the old Isis, on Curtis street, was opened early in September. It is to be under the management of Mr. F. A. Mahagan, of late of the Lyric theater, on Sixteenth street, and will surely prove a splendid addition to Denver's moving picture houses.

The management has attempted to consider the public in every detail. There is a beautiful little parlor upstairs, finished in ivory and blue, where the women can go and rest. It will be furnished in ivory wicker and will be draped with blue. The whole will prove a delightful and attractive nook.

Close by is a play room, or nursery, with a matron, and a competent nurse in charge, where mothers can leave their children, and where the children will be well cared for, and be amused at the same time.

Nor have the men been forgotten. There is a comfy smoking room downstairs for them, where they can smoke, and smoke to their heart's content.

The entire building, which has been in the course of construction for the past six months, is fireproof. Even the stages are of cement. Its construction is most enthusiastically endorsed by the fire chief. The aisles and stairs are unusually wide, so that the building may be cleared quickly and easily. The lighting system is also arranged to safeguard in case of fire. Of course, the operator's booth is of fireproof material. Usually, the control of the lights for the interior are in this booth, but in the Strand a different arrangement has been made. Besides the switch in the booth, there is one, also, in the ticket booth downstairs, which, in case of emergency can be switched on, and which will govern the lights independent of the operator's switch.

The seating capacity of the house is 1,250, and the seats are designed with the thought of making them as comfortable as possible. They are twenty inches wide, and between every seat in the house there is thirty inches space. This insures comfort.

There are three balconies—the first, second and third. But from every seat, a good view of the screen may be had. The grade of the balconies, too, is remarkably easy. In this theater, a permanent vacuum system has been installed. Each day everything in the house will be gone over by this cleaner. This will do much toward keeping the theater sanitary. Another thing so vital is the ventilation system. In the Strand the air will be changed every five minutes.

The theater is going to be one of the prettiest in town. An unusual feature of the exterior architecture is that it has a proscenium arch, with the shell entrance back of it. There will be three immense sunbursts on the front, which will make the place a blaze of light, and which will form a novel form of lighting system. On the outside of this building, alone, there will be 58,000 candlepower of light used. The entrance of the theater is attractive in tile work; in fact, it is the largest piece of tile on the exterior of any building in town.

The interior proves very attractive, with its color scheme of sea blue and gold, relieved by a touch of ivory. The hangings are to be of blue velvet, decorated with gold S's and fleur-de-lis. The indirect lighting system is to be used throughout in the interior, employing 15,000 candlepower of light. The ceiling of this theater is singularly beautiful. A graceful, simple classic design is employed, and the effect is charming. Seldom is such a beautiful ceiling seen in any theater building.

The projection booth is unusually well fitted up, and safeguarded in every way possible against fire. The screen, which plays so important a part, in the clearness of the pictures, is unusually large. It measures 19 by 23 feet, and it is guaranteed that you can see as well in the front seat as any place in the building.

The theater will have an eight-piece orchestra, which formerly played in the Isis theater, and which is one of the best theater orchestras in town. It will run the Metro and the Kleine-Edison pictures. The pictures will consist entirely of features, with a weekly news picture and a comedy. This will invariably be the program. The house will open at ten in the mornings and will close at eleven at night. Every seat in the house will be ten cents and there will be absolutely no variation to this rule. There will be three changes of program weekly and it will be the rule of the management to secure the best possible pictures for the pleasure of its patrons.

DENVER GIRL TO JOIN FOX FORCES EARLY IN OCTOBER.

Edna Epstein, a girl, who, up to nine months ago had always lived in Denver, is going to go into moving pictures in October with the Fox Film Corporation.

She left Denver about nine months ago, with "Hanky Panky." She worked with them on one night stands, until they got to Chicago, where they stayed for a week or more. When they got to New York, Miss Epstein, or Edna Waddell, as she is known on the stage, at once secured work, playing at the Winter Garden, as their star show girl. She has been back in Denver for two weeks, visiting her mother and friends, but she will leave early in September and go back to New York. There she will open with the Winter Garden, but after about two weeks she will go to the Fox studios and begin work.

At the same time Miss Waddell made a picture for the Hearst-Selig people out at one of the parks, and Miss Waddell said this was one of the most nerve racking experiences that she ever hopes to have, and, because it was real, she said it made a fine picture. This was taken on horseback, too. She and another policeman were to let their horses run, so that it would give the appearance that her horse was running away, and the policeman was rescuing her. She, however, had the wrong sort of a bridle on her horse, and when he got to running she really was unable to stop him. So she jumped from her mount into the arms of the policeman, and by this time he had also lost control of his animal. She said she could feel herself slipping inch by inch and every moment thought that she would fall and be trampled under the horse's feet, but, at that moment another policeman came up and caught her. She said the camera man ahead in the automobile came up to her, after it was all over and congratulated her with the realism with which she had acted, and it was not until she told him that he knew that her fright was real.

Miss Waddell is anxious to start in with her new work, for she feels she has so many things she wants to accomplish in it. She is of the vivacious and piquant type that is sure to take well. She is a young woman of determination, as well, and one who is not afraid of hard work and difficulties. It is safe to predict that she will make good.

Passengers With Films

New Jersey Moving Picture Exhibitors Will Make Vigorous Protest Against the New Film Rules of the Railroads—Danger in Films on Passenger Cars Overrated—Situation to Be Referred to Commerce Commission.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

MOVING PICTURE men throughout the entire State of New Jersey are incensed with the railroads and express companies over the latest rule to be promulgated by these common carriers and some of them are very candid in expressing opinions in complaining of what they describe as an unnecessary and uncalled for hardship on the business.

The rule, which has already gone into effect, declares that all reels must be shipped by express or carried in the baggage cars of railroad trains. Any person endeavoring to board a passenger vehicle with a moving picture film in his possession will be ejected from the train, according to notices being spread broadcast by the railroads.

The principal reason forwarded in explaining this new system is the time-honored expression of "conducive to public safety" not to have an explosive film in a car crowded with passengers, because the danger that might arise therefrom. Officials of the railroads quote many instances, such as a boy dropping a lighted cigarette alongside of a reel of film that was wrapped in a newspaper, thereby setting fire to the reel.

It has been decided to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, although that body has already expressed itself as viewing the new measure in a most satisfactory light.

According to Howard Peck, of the law firm of Liew and Peck, Newark, N. J., prompt action will be taken by his house in behalf of a number of large moving picture establishments to test the new ruling. Mr. Peck stated that it did not seem possible that the facts could have been before the Interstate Commerce Commission when they made their ruling. While the films are inflammable, he said, they are not subject to spontaneous combustion and their inflammability would not make them any more dangerous when carried in a passenger coach than when carried by express or in a baggage car.

ELSIE BARTELLE MARRIED IN WILMINGTON.

Announcement was recently made of the wedding of Miss Elsie L. Bartels, charming and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred T. Bartels, 23 North Twenty-third street, Mt. Penn, Pa., to James J. O'Connor, a Boston business man. The wedding, which is quite a surprise to many friends, took place in Wilmington, Del., on Aug. 14, and was of a most quiet nature. Mrs. O'Connor, who spent the last several weeks at the home of her parents, after having completed a three months' engagement at Atlantic City, where she was starred by the Acme Moving Picture Producing Company, of Absecon, N. J., left recently for Chicago to join her husband. Miss Bartels has been connected with pictures for a number of years under the name of Elsie Bartelle, and has met with continued success. Mr. O'Connor was recently with the Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Company, but has lately taken a position with the Lorillard Tobacco Company, with headquarters in Chicago.

FIVE REELS FOR A PENNY.

Advertisements have been recently posted throughout the city of Harrisburg stating that one and two-cent motion picture shows will be exhibited at that theater in the near future. This theater, which is located at Third and Delaware streets, and has a seating capacity of fifteen hundred persons, has been closed for the greater part of the summer.

When asked to explain how he could afford to run shows at such a price and still make a profit, Mr. Roumford, proprietor of the theater, said: "The theater, being one of the largest in the city, has a seating capacity of from fourteen to fifteen hundred persons, and as almost every show is well attended I believe it possible to operate at a low rate all season and still make a good profit." He further stated that the size of the shows will not be curtailed and will consist of four or five reels, with four shows daily, two in the afternoon and two at night.

PICTURES SHOCKED LADIES OF BEVERLY, N. J.

A group of prominent women in the neighborhood of Beverly, N. J., are up in arms against what they term the very lax moving picture censorship existing at the present time in the State of Pennsylvania. It appears that this gathering of "learned" women recently ran a moving picture show in Beverly, the proceeds of which were to be used for some charitable purpose. Invitations were extended to the very select and altogether it was a very de luxe gathering which assembled to view the exhibition.

Now comes the trouble. As the pictures were run off the crowd began to get smaller and smaller, and about half an hour after the show commenced the house was nearly empty. All of which was caused by the degrading nature of the films exposed to view. The first picture exhibited and which was called "The Inevitable Retribution," caused murmurings throughout the audience. The second picture dealt with the subject of a silly flirtation between a waiter in a cheap restaurant and a cash girl. The final picture, which caused the wholesale exit of the attentive society folks, portrayed a gentleman being thrown into a den of wild and bloodthirsty brutes all because he refused to solicit the illicit love of a married woman.

HEARD IN PHILADELPHIA.

Members of the Junior Civic League of East Stroudsburg will be the most envied persons in that vicinity on a certain afternoon in the near future, when they will be the guests at a splendid moving picture show in the Plaza theater.

"Our Navy in 1915," a series of films of great educational value for every patriotic American citizen, is the principal feature of the Lyman H. Howe motion picture travel festival which recently opened at the Garrick. The pictures are in color, and they give a vivid impression of the fighting strength of the sea that could be mustered by the United States in time of need.

M. John Smith, manager of the Liberty theater, Philadelphia, has recently installed a Baird motor-driven machine in his moving picture theater. This is the first Baird machine to be placed in a local theater and was purchased from the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street.

Messrs. Corson and Amsterdam, of the Amsterdam Feature Company, have leased the Amber theater, Amber and Front streets, with a seating capacity of 1,100 persons, and also the West Allegheny theater, Twenty-fifth and Allegheny avenue, with a seating capacity of 900 persons.

The Avoce theater, Sixteenth and McKean streets, was recently placed in the hands of receivers, owing to a dispute among the partners. Mr. Doyle, proprietor of the Comique theater, has taken temporary charge of the theater and will run the house until all disputes have been settled.

Mr. S. Steifel, well known New York moving picture exhibitor, has recently leased the Southern theater, Broad and Reed streets, and is preparing to gain the respect of the people living in the vicinity of this photoplay house by running nothing but first class shows.

Fred Bubeck, proprietor of the Lehigh theater, Twenty-fifth street and Lehigh avenue, reports business as being of a most satisfactory nature and declares that keen competition in the neighborhood has failed to influence his attendance. There are five theaters within several squares of the Lehigh theater and one proprietor has shown as high as twelve reels in order to obtain the crowd, but met with dismal results.

Harry Berman, part owner of many theaters in Philadelphia, has recently leased the Panama theater, Fourth and Dickenson streets. The theater will be thoroughly overhauled and many new improvements added. It is expected that this photoplay house will be ready for business in several weeks and when opened it will be known as the Penn theater.

Jack Delmar, manager of the Jefferson theater, Twenty-ninth and Jefferson streets, continues to meet with great success. This theater had changed hands many times before being taken over by Mr. Delmar and was known about town as a very poor location. However, after Jack took the reins it was an entirely different story and the theater has played to capacity houses for some time past and there is every indication that this will be the case for some time to come.

Mrs. E. Smith has leased the Victor theater at Eleventh and McKean streets and declares that it is her intention to exhibit nothing but first calibre shows.

M. Morganstein, formerly of the Bell theater, has taken charge of the Spruce theater, Sixtieth and Spruce streets and expects to play to large houses during the winter months.

Work has been started by Ketcham & McQuade on a one-story moving picture theater for Gouker & Son, at the Northeast corner of Fifty-sixth and Pine streets. The structure will be 45.6 by 140 feet and will cost in the neighborhood of $37,000. The plans were drawn by W. W. Sharpley.

Assessed at $20,000, the one-story brick motion picture theater at 456 to 460 North Sixtieth street, was recently conveyed by Israel G. Wasman to Rose Kenin, subject to mortgages of $18,400. It occupies a lot 479 by 100 feet.

LYNCHBURG NEWS LETTER.

By Julian T. Baber, Lynchburg Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LYNCHBURG, VA.—The contract has been let by Manager Guy Barrett, of the Belvedere for the enlargement of this house, which is located in the heart of the business district. Increasing patronage is the reason for the changes that will be made, and in addition to providing extra seating arrangements the interior of the theater is to be decorated anew and other alterations are being considered with a view of converting the old house into one of the prettiest in the city.

Notwithstanding the fact that arrangements were made recently by the Trenton theater to abandon the straight picture program for vaudeville, Manager Trent, after giving vaudeville a try-out for one week, has decided to return to pictures and secured the Paramount pictures as his attraction. A new orchestra began work during the week of August 23, the musicians coming from New York.

A. Luther Chocklett, of Roanoke, representative in that city of the Mutual Weekly, accompanied several hundred merchants to Natural Bridge a few days ago when the allied commercial organizations of Lynchburg operated an excursion train to the bridge to entertain the visiting retail dealers who were in the city from all sections of the South. The cameraman exposed two hundred feet of film and the best scenes will be included in the Mutual Weekly. Views of Natural Bridge have never been shown on the screen.

David W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," is booked to be shown at the Academy of Music for three days, commencing Nov. 4.

The Orpheum theater at Fond du Lac celebrated its eighth anniversary by having a special program all week.

It is reported in Milwaukee building circles that Saxe Brothers contemplate erecting a moving picture theater on Third street, just north of the Hotel Wisconsin in Milwaukee.

J. E. Wardman has reopened the Parlor theater at Superior after increasing the seating capacity from 250 to 400 and making other improvements.

Hamilton & Grover opened the new Marinuka theater at Galesville August 18.

The Myers theater at Janesville has been trying out the Renfax Musical motion pictures.

The new Savoy at Superior has a new policy of a five-reel show with a five-piece orchestra.

IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Daniel J. O'Brien, formerly manager of an exchange in this city, but now in charge of the Buckeye Film Exchange branch in Charleston, W. Va., spent several days in this city last week renewing old acquaintances. During his stay in Washington, Mr. O'Brien made a host of friends and it was with regret that they parted with him when he went to assume his present position. Mr. O'Brien declares business in his territory to be improving and that he is well pleased with present events. He will visit Philadelphia and New York before returning to Charleston.

Abe H. Kaufman, of Memphis, Tenn., and Robert M. Savini, of Atlanta, Ga., manager of offices of the United Film Service in the places named, were visitors at the local office last week.

Harry Moorehead, formerly manager of the Apollo theater, is reported to have associated himself with Dr. Coblentz and will open the Truxton theater at North Capitol street and Florida avenue.

FILM EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

During the month of June there was imported into the United States from foreign countries 4,287,633 feet of sensitized motion picture film valued at $52,795. The figures for June, 1914, are 3,356,004 feet imported with value given at $67,-297. Of positive films there was imported in June of this year only 961,417 feet valued at $25,467, as against 1,937,848 feet valued at $82,551 in June, 1914. During the twelve months ending in June, 1915, our importations of positive films amounted to 10,789,439 feet valued at $411,999, as against double that amount for the twelve months ending in June, 1914, when we brought over 20,057,144 feet valued at $1,009,469.

During the month of June, 1915, our exportations of 20,542,442 feet of unexposed, valued at $512,123, greatly exceeded our exportations of June of the previous year, for then we exported but 9,044,123 feet valued at $268,800. Our exportations of exposed film fell off slightly, for in June, 1914, we sent over the ocean 2,433,950 feet, valued at $162,825, as against June, 1914, shipments of 2,732,918 feet valued at $210,239. Our total exportations for the twelve months ending June, 1915, were: Unexposed film, 115,067,-424 feet valued at $2,591,444, and exposed film, 35,987,460 feet valued at $2,498,504; for the twelve months ending June, 1914, unexposed film, 155,359,550 feet valued at $4,264,722 and exposed film 32,690,104 feet valued at $2,282,924.

Censors in the Capital

Washington (D. C.) Truth Society Agitates for Local Censorship of Motion Pictures—Committees Appointed to Take Matter Up with Next Congress—No Need for Additional Supervision of Film in the City.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MEETING of the Washington Truth Society, held here last week, developed additional agitation for censorship of motion pictures. At this meeting there was discussed the compilation of a "white list" of motion picture houses in this city, and the members scored the tendency of so-called "fly-by-night" producers to circulate improper photoplays.

The question of the possibility of a motion picture censorship board for the National Capital was also discussed and committees were instructed to take this matter up with Congress when it reassembles in December. It was pointed out that Chicago and Boston have local boards of censors and the hope was expressed that committees of this association, of the Anti-Defamation League of America and the Young Men's Christian Associations may have a hand in bringing about a similar board for Washington.

The members of this organization took exception to a paragraph in the recent report presented to the general committee of the National Board of Censorship, reading as follows:

"The national board has never denied that infidelity and sex problem plays are legitimate subjects for the motion picture, but has insisted that they be treated with seriousness and reserve. Infidelity to marriage ties must not be treated improperly or suggestively as a comedy theme. Humorous films which emphasize loose marriage relations will be condemned. Where it is necessary to show immoral advances between the sexes these should be indicated rather than exposed in detail. Immoral advances between the sexes bound by close blood relationship will be condemned. The board insists in all cases that there be a minimum of intimate and sensual detail."

That there is no need for censorship of motion pictures in the District of Columbia was pointed out by several of the more prominent members of the local league. The present police system is amply effective and added thereto is the desire of the exhibitors to co-operate to the fullest degree in preventing the exhibition of films that will have a tendency to corrupt public morals. They feel that the censorship question should be left with the general public.

CRANDALL BUYS THE APOLLO.

Considerable surprise was occasioned last week by the announcement that Harry Crandall, president of the Crandall Amusement Company, had secured control of the Apollo theater, 624-634 H street, Northeast, through the purchase of the interest of the Apollo Amusement Company in that house. The Apollo is one of the handsomest theaters of the city. Its construction is modern in every particular with a very attractive front of ornamental face brick and stone. It occupies a plot of ground more than 60 feet wide and 140 feet in depth and has a seating capacity of about 800. Connected with it is a large open-air park which also has a large seating capacity.

In making public his future plans for the operation of his new acquisition, Mr. Crandall states that the same policies which are followed at his downtown theater will be carried out here. Country stores, amateur nights and similar events will have no place on the Apollo program. In their stead will be offered first-class photoplay productions, probably representing one large feature and two single reels and good orchestral music. The admission on all nights will be ten cents, although all of the other houses in that neighborhood charge but half that amount.

Gilbert McDonald, who has been in the employ of Mr. Crandall for several years, will be installed as manager. Mr. McDonald started in as an usher in the first venture of Mr. Crandall, the LaGrand Photoplay Park, at North Capital street and New York avenue, and went to the theater at Ninth and E streets to take entire charge of the floor. In the latter capacity he has made a lot of friends and his promotion has been well earned.

COST OF LIGHTING CURRENT.

The motion picture exhibitors of Washington are greatly interested in the investigation recently conducted into the affairs of the local electric light company which, it is stated, will without doubt result in cheaper rates for current. There has been more or less complaint of late of the high cost of electric light power and the investigation developed that the company had been furnishing current to one of the street car lines for which it received no remuneration. This has amounted to many thousands of dollars and it is believed that the utilities commission will take this into consideration when ordering a change in existing rates.

Because of the high cost of current a number of the exhibitors looked into the feasibility of installing generating plants of their own. Catalogues were procured and estimates considered, when it occurred to one of them that it might be well to look into the city ordinances referring to electrical installation. Much to his surprise, he found that the law required that a man be kept in constant attendance on the plant and the requirements demanded of such an employe would necessitate the employment of one who was almost an electrical expert and who could command a salary about equal to double the cost of the current used. At a recent meeting of the Screen Club of Washington tentative plans were discussed for bringing this condition to the attention of Congress. It was hinted at that time that it looked very much as though the power company had volunteered some little advice when the law was under consideration, for it blocks all efforts looking to individual competition.

CAPITAL CITY GOSSIP.

Ira Moore, of the Masonic Auditorium, while endeavoring to give an exhibition as a speed king and master of a motorcycle, crashed into the fence which incloses the race track at the Laurel course and sustained a compound fracture of one of his legs which will keep him confined to the hospital for several months. Mr. Moore, in company with a half dozen operators, was traveling, it is said, at about forty-five miles an hour when the accident occurred. When the motorcycle on which he was riding hit the fencing it tore up the earth for a distance of about twenty feet. The others came to his aid and rushed him to the Emergency Hospital here by train. Mr. Moore is the fourth operator victim of motorcycle accidents to be admitted to the local hospitals within the past few weeks.

F. C. Jackson, who has previously been in the hotel business, has purchased the interests of W. J. Quinn in the Alhambra theater, at 519 Seventh street, northwest. Billie Airey, who has been connected with this house on and off for the past several years, will act as manager. Mr. Quinn has decided to sever his connections with the motion picture business to succeed his father in the real estate business.

Lose Fight Film Case

Johnson-Willard Film Case at Portland, Maine, Decided Adversely by Federal Judge Hale—Kalisthenic Company Tried to Get Film Through for Private Exhibitions—Case May be Carried to Higher Courts.

By John H. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ADMITTANCE to this country of the moving picture films of the Johnson-Willard fight at Havana last April, was forbidden by a decree made by Federal Judge Clarence Hale, at Portland, last week. The complaint of the Kalisthenic Exhibition Co., of New York, against Willis T. Emmons, collector of the port of Portland, who held up the films upon their arrival from Montreal, was dismissed.

The case had been hard fought in the U. S. Court here, U. S. District Attorney Merrill and his assistant, Arthur Chapman, representing the government, while the plaintiffs were represented by Loucks & Alexander of New York, Taylor, Corneau & Ames of Boston, and Woodman & Whitehouse of Portland, the active conduct of the case falling to Robert Treat Whitehouse, of the latter firm.

It is understood that the plaintiff company will enter an appeal, and in event of this the appeal will be heard in the United States Court of Appeals at the October term in Boston.

CASCO THEATER, PORTLAND, LEASED.

Richard Webb, one of the trustees of the Jose estate, announces that the Casco theater, Portland, Maine, which for several years was recognized as one of the leading photoplay theaters of New England, and which was the first motion picture theater in Portland, has been leased for a term of years to New York theatrical people, who will conduct the house on the highest and most approved plans, presenting the latest and best masterpieces. The house will be thoroughly renovated, an elaborate stage setting, similar to that in the New York Strand, will be installed, together with a magnificent electric fountain, while additional stage decoration will be afforded by palms and potted plants.

The formal opening will take place just as soon as the improvements have been completed and it is believed that the New Casco will again enjoy the exclusive patronage which it had for three years it was operated by the original management. Certainly no theater is better arranged for the proper exhibitions of photo plays, and with the complete equipment which will be installed, it will be one of the prettiest and most comfortable playhouses in Maine.

The new management is said to be associated in the operation of some of the largest and best known photoplay theaters in the East, which is taken as assurance that the Casco will be operated on a thoroughly up-to-date basis.

MAINE SHORTER ITEMS.

Mr. F. C. Leavitt, proprietor of the Leavitt theater, Sanford, is finding business very good through the summer months. Mr. Leavitt believes in advertising and keeps his own covered with paper all the time. He uses a combination of Pathe, Paramount and Phoenix service.

The play of Rupert Hughes, the story of which is laid in a small Maine village, has been produced in pictures and is now being booked in this state by Earle B. Tinker. The name is "All For a Girl," and Renee Kelly is the star.

Work has begun in razing the old building on Elm street, Portland, that is located on the site where the new moving picture theater is to be built. The construction of the new ground floor theater will be watched with universal interest, as it is the purpose of the gentlemen behind the enterprise to utilize every modern convenience and safeguard.

Manager Kelleher, of the City Opera house, Waterville, gave the many patrons of the house a surprise party last week when he presented for their approval Pullen's orchestra of six pieces. The new orchestra is a first-class one in every particular and adds much to the pleasure of the performances at the house.

At one of the social events held weekly by Bar Harbor's Four Hundred, the single reel picture, "Dances of Today," from the Phoenix offices, was the hit of the evening. Miss Grace Field and Mr. Baldwin Sloane perform the difficult steps, and both these artists are well known in Bar Harbor.

The lease of the Jefferson theater, Portland, one of the largest in Maine, is reported to be on the market and will be sold to the highest bidder. There have been many rumors, one that the Jefferson would be turned into a moving picture house, another that it would be made into a burlesque show.

That the Moving Picture World is the leading trade paper, is claimed by Earle B. Tinker, of Ellsworth, who says that the review in this paper is what decides the quantity of bookings on big attractions. Tinker claims that, without exception, exhibitors he meets accept the endorsement of the World as being final.

The Mortimer Amusement Co., of Freeport, Me., shipped out 97,000 film cleaners in the two weeks ending Aug. 23, the proprietor, F. E. Mortimer, being on the job 18 hours a day. Mr. Mortimer informs us that he has been elected a member of the board of trade and says, "Now look out for some hustling board of trade." He is going to boost his home town for all it is worth and intends to erect a ground floor moving picture theater for the first move. The plans have all been drawn up, but Mr. Mortimer has not decided which of two locations he will select. The house will be 75 by 50 feet, stage 20 by 10 feet, and a dancing floor 40 by 30 feet. Two film machines will be installed. The floor will be elevated and will have a seating capacity of 500. He hopes to have it ready to open about Oct. 4. An invitation to attend has been received by the World correspondent, for which many thanks.

The photodrama, "Creation," which is being sent out through the country by the International Bible Students' Association and Pastor Russell, with a view to instructing non-churchgoers in things religious, was shown at the Pythian Temple, Portland, last week.

Music Hall, Lewiston, has started the Paramount travel series to run Fridays and Saturdays.

FRED B. MURPHY PREPARES FOR BRISK CAMPAIGN.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ACTIVE preparations for the opening of a fall campaign are being made by Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service of New England. During the past week Mr. Murphy, with George O'Brien and Charles Barolet, managers of the Springfield and Bangor offices.

During the trip Mr. Murphy purchased fifty thousand feet of film, which will be supplied to his customers in their regular service. The party visited Willard's studios and laboratories. They were entertained at a dinner by Charles Kessel, of the New York Motion Picture Company.

Mr. Murphy is pleased to report that business in the New England territory is booming very fast. Sam Moscow, assistant manager of the Boston office of the United, was in charge.

TALK OF COMING EXHIBITORS' BALL.

Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Sam Grant returned this week from New York. While in the metropolis, they met "K. Jake" Wilk, formerly publicity director of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Wilk's first question was concerning the annual ball of the League, which last year proved to be the greatest social success ever held in Boston. He stated that the World players who attended with him were looking forward to this year's affair. He quotes Clara Kimball Young as saying that she had such a glorious time here last year that she has made up her mind to attend this year's function, whether or not she receives an invitation. That speaks well for the work of Sam Grant, who headed the committee in charge.

TRUNK LINE ACCEPTS FILMS AS BAGGAGE.

It was announced at Memphis, Tenn., that on September 15 a new ruling will go into effect on the lines in Trunk Line association territory, whereby these lines will acept motion picture films as baggage upon payment of the excess baggage rate, if the films accompany a passenger holding a first-class ticket. The films must be packed securely in metal cases, but can not be taken into passenger coaches. It is thought that the same rule will probably be adopted by other passenger associations.

A NEW RECTIFIER PLEASES.

A new rectifier, which was invented by T. J. Murphy of Rochester, N. Y., is running on test in Aleus hall at Bayside, Mass. It is showing remarkable efficiency. The apparatus permits of its installation in the booth, thereby dispensing with the many drawbacks inherent in all other systems or methods for obtaining direct electric currents. The advantage of A. C. over D. C. electricity for picture projection is well known, but the almost universal distribution by A. C. electricity necessitates its use unless a cumbersome motor generator set or delicate mercury arc rectifier is installed at great expense. Mr. Murphy figures that the first cost of his new invention will be considerably less than a motor generator of like capacity, while the maintenance is practically nothing. The only rotating part weighs but fourteen pounds.

Its power factor will make it especially welcome to the central stations. Owing to the fact that no self-inductors are used for rotation, two arcs can be run simultaneously for considerable time. This new rectifier is sixteen inches in diameter and thirty-five inches in height.

FREE CHARITABLE SHOWS.

Two free charitable shows were donated during the past week by Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service. The Rev. Father Devlin of Boston College arranged for a picture show which was given to 1,500 nuns in the college hall. Ninety per cent. of the audience had never before seen a moving picture and all expressed great surprise at the wonderful work. E. V. Connolly of the United Office directed the performance.

Free shows were also given to the children of Milford, Uxbridge and Mendon, Mass., in the theater at Nipmuck Park, which is owned by the Milford and Uxbridge Railway Company. As this was the last week of the park season, the shows were the extra added attraction.

NEW ENGLAND GOSSIP.

"The Birth of a Nation" closed its run in Boston during the past week. The Griffith spectacle is now showing in Providence, R. I., Brockton and New Bedford. It is meeting with the same success in those cities as it did in the Hub.

Chandos St. J. Brenon and Manager Harry F. Campbell of the New England office of the Fox Film Corporation enjoyed a smelt fishing trip in Boston Harbor last Sunday. Both are dyed-in-the-wool sportsmen and never miss an opportunity to display their angling abilities.

Joseph Mack, manager of the new Onset theater at Onset, Mass., was recently surprised by a number of his friends on the occasion of his birthday. William Davis, proprietor of the New Onset hotel, presented him with a large floral tribute during the evening performance. Mr. Mack responded with a few words.

Gordon Rider, manager of Poli's Palace theater, Springfield, Mass., was awakened by the ringing of his home telephone in the wee small hours of one morning during the past week. He answered and a voice at the other end of the line informed him that he was a police official and demanded his presence at the station immediately. When asked for a reason, he was told that the safe in the theater had been robbed. Gordon thought it impossible because he is a subscriber to a burglar alarm service. As he was dressing, preparing for the trip, the telephone rang again and he was informed that he need not come to the station, as the police had discovered that the safe was in the Plaza theater and not in the Palace.

Anthony "Buck" Stein, formerly manager of the Allen Film Exchange, Boston, is now connected with the New York office of the Pathe Exchange.

Manager Michael Sheedy of the Holyoke opera house has announced that pictures will replace stock productions in his playhouse in the near future.

Manager John Hudson of the Hudson theater, Springfield, intends to reopen his playhouse next month. He will use United Film Service.

The Royal Amusement Company, proprietors of the Royal theater, Worcester, Mass., has signed a long lease of the Milford opera house, Milford, Mass., with the privilege of purchasing the property. This playhouse is located on the main street of the city. Extensive alterations have been started, in which the theater will be renovated inside and out. A new choralcello, which has made a tremendous hit in the Royal, will be installed. The house will open next month with high-class features.

Gordon Rider, manager of Poli's Palace theater, Springfield, celebrated the tenth anniversary of his marriage during the past week. His many friends presented him with a beautiful bedroom set.

Charles Riva, proprietor of the Pastime theater, Tilton, N. H., was a Boston visitor during the past week. During the visit, he called on Sam Moscow of the United Film Service and signed a contract for United program.

A ten-piece orchestra will be installed in the Shawmut theater, Roxbury, on the first of September. This house has undergone many renovations during the past few weeks. Serials, features and General Film Service, which General Manager J. Lourie holds in the highest regard, are used. Herman Sivovolos, formerly manager of the De Dreamland theater, Boston, is now the house manager.

The Strand theater, Haverhill, Mass., will be opened on Sept. 6, under the management of Harry Norton and Benjamin Kaplan. This house was built during the summer and is one of the most modern and up-to-date picture playhouses in the New England states. It has a seating capacity of 1,500.

W. J. Lynch, traveling representative of the Essanay Film Company, called on Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England office of the General Film Company during the past week. He made his visit on runoff day and was introduced to the leading exhibitors of New England.

Sam Hasse of the General Film Company is progressing rapidly in the World's Series contest of the Boston American. Sam is in fourth position and everything indicates that he will be one of the party of twenty-five to see the baseball series this fall.

EXHIBITOR TO SUMMER FOLKS.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (23 Victoria avenue), Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER FRANK HOPPER, who is also operator, of the Mountainvale Airdome at Pine Hill, in the Catskill Mountains, will close his regular summer shows on Sept. 15, there being little inducement after that date, at which time closes the resort's summer season. A World man recently found Exhibitor Hopper showing "Checkers" for ten cents, and needless to say his house was crowded. It is not regularly an airdome, but a Noah's ark-like structure roofed in, as the Catskill nights are apt to be fairly chilly. At the door there were posters announcing "Paid in Full" for the next night and "Arizona" for the following night, and both at ten cents. Mr. Hopper, who is an interesting talker and an able operator, is not over-enthusiastic over the season's profits. There are not always enough people in the village to support the kind of shows demanded at the price he can get for seats and he complains of a certain sameness in the program offerings that keeps him from working up any enthusiasm.

SHEA COMPANIES OF BUFFALO REORGANIZE.

A new organization of operating companies for the Shea theaters, Buffalo, has just been effected, without change in existing ownership or policy. Two new companies, the Shea Theater Co. and the Shea Hippodrome Co., have been incorporated, each with $10,000 capital. The incorporators are Pliny B. McNaughton, Joseph F. Wadsworth and Lester F. Gilbert. Papers have also been filed, showing an increase of capital stock from $200,000 to $700,000 of the Shea Amusement Co., the operating company of which Michael Shea is the active managing head.

LYRIC'S BIG ELECTRIC SIGN.

What is said to be the largest electric sign in Buffalo has been placed on the Lyric theater. The sign is forty feet high and requires 1,500 lights. The Lyric opens Labor Day under the management of Harold B. Franklin. He is introducing his new policy of "Three in One," which includes musical revues, vaudeville and moving pictures. The prices are ten cents at all matinees and ten and fifteen cents in the evening.

PAUL FENYVESSY TO MANAGE FAMILY THEATER.

Paul Fenyvessy has been appointed house manager of the Family theater, Buffalo, operated by the Rosedale Amusement Co., of which A. A. Fenyvessy is president. Musical comedies and moving pictures are the new policy of the Family. In regard to the moving picture programs at this theater Paul Fenyvessy said: "We show feature films during the supper hour, a regular service between shows and features on Sundays. We have two musical comedy shows in the afternoon and two in the evening. Our prices are ten and fifteen cents during the week and five and ten cents on Sundays." New scenery and a brilliant lighting system have been added to the Family stage.

HIGHLAND OPENS IN UTICA.

The Highland, a new fireproof moving picture theater in Utica, N. Y., was opened recently. The building is 40x95 feet, with pressed brick and tapestry front, and brick and stucco sides. The walls of the spacious lobby are tinted with soft greens. The seats are of sanitary pressed steel and there is no rail to accumulate dirt. The exit doors are equipped with the proper safety devices. The heating, ventilating and lighting systems are modern. From top to bottom the theater is complete in every detail.

BUFFALO BRIEFS.

Moving pictures showing how the idle lands of New York State are being reforested are featured at the Rochester, N. Y., Industrial Exposition, which closes Sept. 11.

At the Bender theater, Utica, N. Y., a new $10,000 symphony organ was heard for the first time last week. The organist is Paul Forrester, who also directs the orchestra.

A contract for the installation of a fountain, a feature of the interior of the new Regent theater in Elmira, has been let by the Harton Theater Co., owners of the building.

A new moving picture theater, known as the Milfred, was opened recently at Greene, N. Y. The house is owned by Fred E. Page, an attorney of that place. The opening production was "Neptune's Daughter" and music was furnished by a six-piece orchestra.

Ereon & Giles have opened a new moving picture theater in Wilson, N. Y.

James W. Elliott of Rochester, N. Y., has signed a contract with the Universal Company to produce a series of "Thought Talks."

T. D. Lewis has closed the Happy Hour theater in Fulton, N. Y.

William W. Hatch has been appointed manager of Proctor's Griswold theater in Troy, N. Y.

The Rosedale Amusement Co. has been incorporated in Buffalo. The concern will operate a moving picture house on a capital stock of $5,000. The directors are Raymond J. Kimball, James Maisel and David Ruslander.

The Alhambra moving picture theater, Utica, N. Y., has been renovated and redecorated. A new feature at this house is a musical instrument called the choralcelo or celestial choir, which combines the orchestra, piano and pipe organ. On the stage is an electric fountain from which spray and vari-colored lights issue at intervals between the pictures. Along the footlights shrubbery and canary birds in wicker cages appear. No expense has been spared to make this house one of the most elaborate in the State.

Ohio Referendum Fails

Many Signatures and Petitions Came Too Late to Be Used in Forcing Vote of People on State Censorship—Chairman Sawyer Makes Statement—200,000 Signatures Had Been Attached—Criticises Governor Willis.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SCORES of petitions and thousands of signatures failed to reach headquarters of the Motion Picture Referendum league in time to be of service, forced Ohio exhibitors to defer an attempt to force a fall election to oust the state board of censors. Opposition of Governor Willis and friends of the censors made it almost useless to continue the fight for a referendum election, according to Chairman Ben J. Sawyer, in spite of the fact that nearly 67,000 petitions had been signed.

"Our defeat is due primarily to the eleventh hour statement by Attorney General Edward C. Turner that censorship would remain, no matter how the people voted," said Mr. Sawyer. "That shows the spirit of those who opposed us. 'Let the people rule,' was the pre-election slogan of Governor Willis. This is the way the legislature lets the people rule. What will his friends think of the way the administration is going after all referendums, ours included? About the only time the people can rule is just before election.

"Nearly 200,000 signatures have been attached to the petitions. There were 20,000 in Cleveland alone and 4,000 in Toledo, to mention only two places. Returns have come in from fifty-seven counties, but after the statement of the attorney general and the disapproval of the governor, which was made perfectly clear to his friends, more than half of them failed to reach headquarters.

"The best thing to do was to acknowledge defeat, but the censors may rest assured that future action depends largely upon whether they are willing to accept our withdrawal in the chivalrous and generous spirit in which we give up the fight at this stage."

Mr. Sawyer has addressed a letter to the Ohio state board of censors, which reads in part:

"Yours is the victory, for after looking over petitions returned from fifty-seven counties and observing failure in a great many to sign in two places, I deem it unwise to part with signatures. Now, that the battle is over I feel it would not show the proper spirit to take it up. Let the dead past bury its dead. Let us put our hands to the plow and not look back."

"In the spirit of the foregoing I would close my letter but for the fact that one or two things have a reference to the future, to which I believe that, now that the fight is over, you will readily accept these facts:

"Your statement in the press that the national board of censors and exchange men started the referendum was an entire misstatement of fact. The impression you gave out that the manufacturers were spending a great deal of money in the fight was also a misstatement. I did not receive one penny for services I rendered in the work. I wish to say that I paid my own personal expenses. If there had been a fund to carry on a campaign we could have secured 200,000 signatures."

AMONG ST. LOUIS EXCHANGES.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, is at the Fox Exchange, at 3632 Olive street, for a two weeks' stay. Mr. Alexander has been out of the New York office six weeks, on a trip that includes a fortnight's stop in Philadelphia, Cleveland and Detroit, and he says that while his stay in St. Louis is supposed to cover the same period of time, the chances are that he will stay longer. In fact he says that he is so favorably impressed with St. Louis as a moving picture town, that he hopes he will be able to stop on here several weeks. Mr. Alexander disclosed the fact that St. Louis airdomes are the most beautiful and complete in the country, and says the out-of-door theaters in none of the eastern cities can compare with them. J. B. Baker, manager of the Fox Exchange, is away on a selling trip to out of town exhibitors, and Mr. Alexander is managing the local office during his absence.

Simon Libros, second assistant general manager of the Picture Playhouse Corporation, arrived in St. Louis on Aug. 25 and took charge of the exchange of the corporation at 3415 Olive street, when Alfred Buck, manager of the exchange, resigned. Mr. Libros has been in the Kansas territory and has much to say about Kansas censorship. He says the moving picture manufacturers are not awake to the true danger of censorship, and that if something is not done to check the censors their work will soon extend to newspapers, books and magazines, as well as moving pictures.

Frank Tabler has resigned as manager of the General Film Exchange at 3610 Olive street, and his place has been filled by H. P. Wolfberg.

A. S. Abeles, manager of the Pathe Exchange at 3210 Locust street, was recalled to the New York office of the Pathe Corporation on Aug. 21. M. J. Dunn, cashier of the exchange, is acting as manager temporarily. Mr. Dunn says that the Pathe Gold Rooster films are creating a fine advance impression, and that already several bookings have been made in some of the largest towns in the territory controlled by the St. Louis office.

I. Leon Klasky, recently connected with the Fox Film Corp., and as traveling representative of the Pathe Exchange, of St. Louis, has been appointed manager of the World Film offices in Chicago. Mr. Klasky is very well known, and has a host of friends and business associates in St. Louis.

BUSINESS MEN GIVE ENTERTAINMENT IN AIRDOME.

Moving pictures formed part of an entertainment given by the West End Business Men's Association at Delmar garden, on Aug. 24. The admission was free to the garden, but on account of the many sufferers from the recent flood in and about St. Louis and suburbs, it was decided to add a bazaar to sell the many articles donated by members and their friends, and make the picnic a charitable one as well as a pleasurable one. The Pure Milk and Free Ice Fund was also benefited by the generosity of the patrons of the entertainment, and after speeches were made by Governor Major of Missouri and Mayor Kiel of St. Louis, and a complimentary dinner given in honor of the orators, the crowd repaired to the Garden theater to listen to a concert of vocal and orchestral numbers, and to view an excellent program of moving pictures, which wound up the day's festivities.

THOMAS JAMES BUYS INTEREST IN PATHE AIRDOME.

G. K. Dubis has sold out his interest in the Pathe airdome on North 11th street, just off Franklin avenue, to Thomas James, who owns the Movie theater at 2351 Market street. The Movie will be closed for a few weeks so as to be remodeled and enlarged for the winter season. The ceiling is to be raised and the capacity will be increased one hundred by the alterations. Mr. James is probably the youngest exhibitor in St. Louis, having started in the business five years ago at the age of fifteen, as manager of the Brighton airdome at 16th and Chestnut streets, and the World's Dream theater, at 14th and Market streets. Mr. James now confines his activities to managing the Pathe airdome and the Movie theater.

ST. LOUIS NOTES.

Miss Tillie Schwartz, manager of the Famous theater, at Sixth street and Franklin avenue, was one of several women exhibitors of St. Louis who were given a special write-up in the Sunday Magazine of the Post Dispatch recently, and Miss Schwartz says that she has received five proposals of marriage in consequence, besides several requests for charitable help, one in particular from a woman who said she was saving money to buy a home, and because of lack of a few dollars her home was to be taken away from her. Miss Schwartz sent the letter to the chief of police of the city from which the letter was mailed, and got an answer that the investigation of the case disclosed the fact that the woman had a son who was earning four dollars a day, and her husband was regularly employed as a miner in the town, and that the house in which the family lived was a rented one. Miss Schwartz is financial secretary of the Exhibitors' League of St. Louis.

The O'Fallon Park theater and airdome, 5353 Florissant avenue, is specializing on big features this season, and as business and the weather have been so favorable, the house began its Saturday and Sunday afternoon matinees on Aug. 21 and 22. The matinees are regular performances on the schedule at the O'Fallon during the theatrical season.

The Columbia theater, 6th and St. Charles streets, opened for the fall and winter season on Aug. 30. In addition to the regular vaudeville program, the Columbia will run moving pictures in color this season. The Columbia was perhaps the first house to show moving pictures in St. Louis, and although it is not an exclusive picture theater, from one to three reels of film are shown at every performance. Harry D. Buckley is manager of the Columbia.

The Strand theater, next door to the Columbia, on Sixth street, an exclusive picture house, has given big features a thorough try-out, and Louis Arado, the manager, who was formerly in the box office at the Columbia, says that business is improving all the time, in spite of the fact that four and five-part features are not supposed to be popular in the downtown district. The program is changed only twice a week at the Strand, and one comedy is usually run in addition to the special feature.

At the Aubert garden, 4937 Easton avenue, a huge benefit was given on Aug. 23 for St. Timothy's Episcopal church. Manager Haley presented a minstrel tabloid in addition to his regular program of five reels of moving pictures for the occasion.

Beisbarth & Dickerson, managers of the De Soto airdome, at De Soto, Mo., announce that as the weather has been so uncertain the program that has been showing in the outdoor theater will be moved to the K. of P. hall, across the street from the post office. Large features are shown as well as the serial, the "Diamond from the Sky." De Soto has two moving picture shows, the other one being under the direction of Manager Walther, of the Jefferson opera house.

The name of the Delmar theater and airdome, at Aubert and Delmar avenues, has been changed to Rialto, under the new management which has gone into effect recently. Mrs. O. T. Crawford is now in charge of the theater, which is one of the largest and most up to date in the west end of the city.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

MAYOR COOPER of Greencastle, Ind., declined to act on a petition that he prohibit the appearance of "The Nigger" in Greencastle. Then the film failed to arrive on time and Manager Kelley had to postpone the appearance.

Frank L. Bridges, Adjutant General of the Indiana National Guard, wants to film the state troopers in action and make use of the pictures to train others and to enlist rookies. He has asked the attorney general of the state for an opinion, and the attorney general, Richard Milburn, has stated that it is a matter for Governor Ralston to determine. The matter is in the hands of Governor Ralston now, and in view of the military agitation now current, it is believed that Governor Ralston, if persuaded that the use of the film is practical, will authorize the work.

Many local people are in pictures being taken in Goshen, Ind., for "Woman's Winning Way" and "The Haunted House," two films to be produced in the Jefferson theater, Goshen, for the benefit of the Goshen Hospital Association.

The Terre Haute, Ind., exhibitors are planning to organize and stand together against the film exchanges. Manager Jensen of the Varieties is back of the movement, it is said, and is enlisting the interest of others.

The Pennsylvania Railroad efficiency car is in charge of Clifford Harrod, an Indianapolis man and a graduate of Purdue University at Lafayette, Ind. The pictures used in promoting efficiency are shown in a special car equipped for the purpose. Just how to shovel coal, to remove the insulation from wire, and every other operation by workmen, is shown in the pictures, and the best way is compared with a poor way.

The Missouri Pacific exhibit of pictures of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, is being shown in Terre Haute, and will touch other points in the state.

The Knox Democrat, Knox, Ind., is giving a ten-cent ticket to the Fairy theater, Knox, Ind., with every subscription dollar taken in at the circulation counter.

The Grace theater, Martinsville, Ind., in conjunction with the Martinsville Democrat, will put on a local play with local talent, the characters to be selected by a voting contest requiring attendance at the theater.

Manager Galligan, of the Nelson theater, Logansport, Ind., is giving away a great big beautiful doll, so-called, at each Saturday matinee to some child attending.

The Methodist camp meeting in Lenox, Ill., just across the state line, and including many Indiana pastors in its attendance, is to feature this year some instruction in the use of the picture machine. Rev. James O'May, pastor of the Aurora, Ill., church, has solved his Sunday night attendance problem with such a machine. He proposes to show pastors how to become operators, that seeming to be the only drawback to their more general use in churches.

"Shelby's Romance," a local film being produced by the Victoria Film Company, is soon to be put on at the Alhambra theater, Shelbyville, Ind.

E. R. Allen opened a newsstand in connection with his theater in Sullivan, Ind., and the third night out the cash register was robbed.

T. C. Mayberry and W. M. Metcalf, of St. Louis, are snapping Frankfort citizens in funny poses, caught on the sly, for the Palace theater.

The Amuzu theater, Oakland City, Ind., has been incorporated with $5,000 capital stock, and A. G. Troutman, Carl Spillman and Eunice Troutman as directors.

The stairways to the balcony of the Majestic theater, Seymour, Ind., are to be removed from the lobby and built outside, and the elevated part of the lobby lowered to the street level. The entire floor of the house is to be tiled, and the walls and ceiling redecorated. The house will reopen in September.

The Idle Hour, Newport, Ind., has added another reel and will start the evening show at seven.

The Gem, Clinton, Ind., is getting a new coat of paint.

Will Odle, of the Princess, Williamsport, Ind., has added a Saturday matinee.

Harry E. Troutman will manage the Grand, Bluffton, Ind., according to the statement of Smith & Tengeman, owners.

Pleak & Howard are building a theater in St. Paul, Ind., to seat 500. The house will be electrically equipped throughout, and a big Victrola and a player piano will furnish the music.

Heller & Jean are building a theater to seat 900 at South East street and Prospect, Indianapolis.

O. P. Fauchier will travel southeastern Indiana, and A. A. Plough, southwestern Indiana for the Pathe, out of Indianapolis.

The Park theater, East Tenth and Olney streets, managed by George Bryant, has been closed.

Charles C. Rhodes is building the Strand in West Lafayette, Ind.

Will W. Bond, for the past year and a half assistant manager of the Luna theater, has tendered his resignation to Manager Johnson, to become effective Saturday, Aug. 21. Mr. Bond during his year and a half at the popular photoplay house has made many friends and has won favor with the patrons of the house.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Mayor Bosse of Evansville, Ind., plans the establishment of a moving picture board of censorship and will ask the city council to pass the necessary ordinance.

J. M. Wigton and Sydney A. Beach will open the Wigton Opera House, LaGrange, Ind., with pictures, and will run films continuously except when the house is leased for a road show.

George Ebeck, a moving picture operator at Valparaiso, Ind., has invented a new carbon that will not burn down, but can be used a year without signs of wear. The Northwestern Company, he says, offered him $35,000 for the invention without the patent.

The Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania System will use motion pictures to instruct their men in the use of signal apparatus. The pictures are to be taken from the front end of the train, and will show actual service conditions. The time element involved in the quickness of decision can be obtained as well as the accuracy of vision and what aspect of the signaling must be observed for the next block. The company believes this method will far outdistance in practicability a permanent exhibit of sample signals. Both old and new equipment will be filmed.

McKee and Winning of Vincennes, Ind., will conduct the John Snap theater, Oaktown, Ind.

Prof. L. E. Wheeler resigned as superintendent of the Wolcott, Ind., schools and will open a moving picture theater near Vincennes. His daughter, Miss Edna Wheeler, who is an accomplished musician, will help her father.

"Hope" and "The Temple of Moloch," two films being shown by the Indiana Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, are being given right of way by Indiana exhibitors everywhere in their effort to aid the society in its educational work.

Mrs. Fleet Ager, of the Ideal theater, Kokomo, Ind., is well pleased with the voting contest just closed. The winner gets a trip to Panama-Pacific Exposition. Mrs. Marie Holzhamer was winner with 80,500 votes.

The Empire Amusement Company, Indianapolis, has been incorporated with $20,000 capital stock to operate moving picture houses, with Robery Heuck, C. H. Heuck and W. Heuck as directors.

W. M. Miller has been made manager of the Triangle Film Corporation for Indiana and Kentucky. H. A. Bandy, whom Miller succeeds, goes to Cleveland as manager for Ohio and Michigan.

Norman Dixon and Arthur T. Smith are now with the Mutual, traveling the Indiana and Kentucky territory. Dixon was formerly booking "Neptune's Daughter," the Annette Kellerman feature, and Smith was with the General Film Company, New York.

DUPUIS IN MONTREAL.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MR. CHARLES DUPUIS, vice-president of Pathe Preres, was in Montreal a few days ago looking over the Canadian moving picture situation, and during his brief sojourn had a conference with Mr. Leon Ouimet, Canadian Pathe representative. Mr. Dupuis visited a number of the leading moving picture houses, and called upon the French Consul and Sheriff Lemieux, chairman of the local censors.

He arranged to have cameras sent to each of Mr. Ouimet's offices in Canada, and in Montreal there will be apparatus to develop and print films, so that Pathe News will not be lacking in Canadian news.

"Neal of the Navy" will be released in Canada on Sept. 13. In Montreal it will be published daily in the Herald-Telegraph, and in French it will run in La Presse under the title of "Le Secret de l'Ile Perdue." Applications for bookings have been numerous.

CHARITY TAX STILL RUNNING.

The one-cent charity tax continues to be collected. In the meanwhile it is just as troublesome as ever. One paper terms it the greatest nuisance yet thrust on Montrealers, then another paper comes forward and points out the fine way the public money is being wasted.

It has been proposed among the aldermen that the law be amended so that the amount of the tax shall depend on the price of the ticket, and there is every likelihood that the coming session of the Provincial Legislature will witness more discussion on the matter. It may seem superfluous to say that the local exhibitors have not acted yet, but such is the case.

HEARD IN MONTREAL.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" has captured Montreal. It had first run at the Imperial, and played to extremely big houses during four days. The Midway showed it five days, and it was then screened at the Colonial for another four days. The Family theater had it four days.

S. H. Decker, of Allfeatures, has been away on business several weeks and reports big doings. Allfeatures is handling some Chaplin subjects.

It may be news to many to hear that down in the basement of the Imperial a fleet is being built and will proceed soon to storm the Dardanelles. This is just about the size of a new scenic stunt Mr. Conover is going to stage shortly at his theater.

Ground was broken on Aug. 23 for the Regent theater. The Independent Amusement, Ltd., has increased its stock $40,000, and the shares are selling fast.

Recent features at local houses were: Imperial theater, "Don Caesar de Bazan," General; Strand, "The Master Hand," World Film; Canada, "The Cub," World Film; Casino, "Under Two Flags," General; Moulin Rouge, "Kilmeny," Paramount; New Grand, "Rags," Paramount; "Judy Forgot," Universal, at the Mount Royal.

ATLANTIC CITY MUST PERMIT GRIFFITH FILM.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHANCELLOR WALKER permanently enjoined the City Commission of Atlantic City from further interfering with the production of Griffith's feature, "The Birth of a Nation." The order was signed by the Chancellor Tuesday at Trenton. The act is regarded by Jersey moving picture exhibitors as a great victory.

The Esplanade Amusement Company and the Epoch Producing Company were offering the photodrama at the New Nixon theater, and when objection was made to the film by the colored population, the management of the show house obtained a temporary restraining order on Aug. 14. Chancellor Walker said that the commissioners had no ground whatsoever for restraining the film.

METROPOLITAN NOW A PICTURE HOUSE.

The Metropolitan theater, Charlton and Montgomery streets, Newark, which formerly ran stock theatricals, will this year run moving pictures. Manager Sincoff has installed two 6A Powers projection machines and Jack Gold has been named chief operator, with Frank Bressman as assistant. Mr. Sincoff anticipates showing several of the higher class features. Only night performances will be given, but on Saturday a matinee performance will take place.

NEW THEATER FOR ARLINGTON.

A $75,000 moving picture theater will soon be erected at Kearny and Quincy avenues, Arlington. Plans for the proposed structure have already been received by John Thumm and Sons, of Arlington. The new show house will be one of the finest in the North Hudson district, and will have a seating capacity of 1,500. Work on the new building was started Wednesday, and it is expected that the playhouse will be completed by Jan. 1.

RAHWAY'S EMPIRE TO OPEN.

The Empire theater, under the managerial reins of Ned K. Miller, will open its regular season Labor Day, Sept. 6. The Empire is one of the finest playhouses in Rahway (N. J.). Four Paramount pictures a week will be shown, and vaudeville on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

EXPOSING GAMBLING.

As an extra attraction for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Manager Schesinger has booked John P. Quinn with his four big reels of moving pictures, "Why Gamblers Win," exposing crooked methods of gambling. The film created a sensation at its initial performance. Quinn was once a professional gambler himself, but reformed after the death of his child twenty-seven years ago. His main object is to get young men to sign an anti-gambling pledge. During his quarter of a century work, he says he has secured 600,000 names.

PATHE'S RUNNER RELEASED.

Samuel Kaiser, employed by the New Jersey branch of the Pathe Exchange, at 288 Market street, Newark, was last week released under suspended sentence. He had been previously arrested in New York City, while carrying films from the local branch to the Manhattan office of the company. Leo Singer, manager of Pathe's Jersey interests, stated yesterday that the local branch had purchased an automobile truck, which he found very satisfactory. He further stated to the World correspondent that he did not anticipate any more trouble with the railroads in regard to the transportation of films.

EARL WILLIAMS IN NEWARK.

Earl Williams, who takes the role of Thomas Bartley in Vitagraph's "The Goddess," was in Newark last Thursday, appearing in person at several places where the film is being shown. Mr. Williams made a brief curtain speech at each playhouse, speaking of his work on the legitimate stage, and the wonderful opportunity he had in the moving picture world.

Dispelling the rumor that he was soon to join the Metro forces, Mr. Williams took occasion to say that he had signed a new contract last week to continue in the service of the Vitagraph for two more years. Mr. Williams was enthusiastically received everywhere.

NEWARK SHORT ITEMS.

Residents of Linden (N. J.) are endeavoring to induce Benjamin Friedman, of Wood avenue, to give moving picture performances this winter at the Country Club.

A new moving picture program is being shown this week at the Franklin, Webster and Seventh avenue schools, under the auspices of the North End Community Boys' Work. The experiment has proved highly successful in the crowded Italian sections of the city. Between 10,000 and 15,000 people viewed the pictures last week. Educational and scenic pictures hold sway, and the crowds are greatly appreciative.

Manager Oscar A. Morgan of the Paramount theater, Newark, has announced that beginning with Labor Day and continuing for ten weeks, three first-run Paramount pictures will be shown there each week. Throughout the month of August, pictures featuring Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark were shown, thus using old subjects of these stars. Manager Morgan will, therefore, exhibit the August subjects, which were omitted, during the weekly programs in September.

"The Woman Next Door" is featured on the program for next Friday and Saturday at the Orpheum theater, Washington and Court streets, Newark. The production is from the George Kleine studios, and is the first to be released under the newly-organized Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service.

Loew's theater, Springfield avenue, Newark, announces that it will show Pathe's new serial, "Neal of the Navy," next week. This playhouse will thus be the first in Newark to exhibit the film. The author of the picture, William Hamilton Osborne, is a Newarker.

Ernest Grande, manager of the new Columbus theater, Bernardsville, has announced that the policy of the show house will be vaudeville and moving pictures. Last Saturday he gave the following program: Essanay, "His Night Out;" Lubin, "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," a three-reel feature, and a comedy entitled "Stage Money" by Vitagraph. The place was well patronized.

SOUTHWEST NOTES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

The Lone Star Film Company held a formal opening at its new studio at San Jose (Terrell Wells), Texas, on August 19.

Don Williams, who has the Arkansas and other southwestern rights for "The Christian," gave the Business Men's League a showing of that picture, the proceeds going to the organization. Manager Wilkerson donated the use of the Princess theater. In addition, Mr. Williams, who, by the way, is a brother of Earl Williams, the Vitagraph star, offered $20 for the best 500-word descriptive article on "The Christian," which he could use for advertising purposes.

Secrecy as to the leading characters aroused interest in a local three-reel photoplay which Manager Healey, of the Healey theater, in Fort Worth, Texas, had made as a part of a five days' trip of the Young Men's Business League of that city. A prize was offered for the scenario. The names of the actors were not known until the booster train pulled out and the production started. After showing at the Healey, the film will go to Temple, Austin, San Antonio, New Braunsfels and Corpus Christi.

Dee Lampton, of North Fort Worth, Texas, has joined the Keystone company.

J. C. Stevens, manager of the Bell airdome, at Austin, Tex., has leased the Lyric theater at Brownsville, Tex.

The Dime theater at Miami, Ariz., is to be remodeled and the seating capacity increased.

J. W. Graves has purchased the Broadway Opera house at Elk City, Okla., and will operate a moving picture show.

Ramsey & Hayter have opened the Imp theater at Hominy, Okla.

The Board of Education at Santa Fe, N. M., has purchased a Pathescope for use in the schools.

H. H. Jackson has purchased the Lyric airdome and theater at Harrison, Ark., from Whitesides & Maxwell.

The Grand theater at Durant, Okla., has installed a new Wurlitzer orchestrion.

TO THE MOVING PICTURE TRADE

The Moving Picture World is glad to print short accounts of happenings in the trade—Send your news items to the nearest correspondent

IN KANSAS CITY.

The Orpheum theater, Kansas City's newest playhouse, will open for the coming season Sept. 5. It will show high-class vaudeville and the Orpheum travel weekly pictures. The theater has always opened a little early in the evening and has devoted the first half an hour to the showing of these moving pictures. They made such a hit with the crowd last year that the same policy will hold, the theater crowds coming early to see the moving pictures. It is the only theater in the city showing these travel weeklies that has made a huge success of it.

The Empress theater at Paola, Kan., has changed its policy in regards to its program. The program has been changed to make Thursday night a big feature film night. "The Rosary," "The Spoilers," "The Island of Regeneration," "The Eternal City" and the "Birth of A Nation" will be shown in the near future. On these nights the seats will be reserved and the sale of the tickets will begin the first of each week. Owing to the length of the pictures the time of the opening has been changed from 7:30 o'clock to 8 o'clock and only one showing will be made.

Mr. Long, at Osceola, Mo., opened his airdome a few days sooner than he expected to. The Majestic theater as it is known has been well filled at every performance and the pictures that he has been showing there seem to attract attention from all the surrounding territory to the new airdome. The "Exploits of Elaine" are now being shown there and the drawing ability of these pictures are still being demonstrated for the benefit of those who said serial pictures were dead. The feature "Judy Forgot" packed the theater at the first night's showing.

Charles Scherer, general manager of the Navajo Film and Supply Co., has announced that his new projection room and his repair room for the repairing of moving picture machines will soon be completed. Mr. Scherer says that this is something that he has wanted for quite some time. The repair room will be in charge of E. H. Sperberg.

L. A. Sheridan, formerly a traveler for the Pathe Exchange at Kansas City, has recently been promoted. He was sent last week to take charge of the Des Moines office of the Pathe Exchange as manager.

Manager A. Durrin of the Twelfth Street theater, says that the business has been increasing nicely during the past few weeks. Since cutting the price of the pictures to five cents, the theater seems to fill up better at each showing. One good comedy is usually mixed with the program of other pictures.

The Benton theater is the most particular in the city in regard to the posters advertising the films that they are showing. The posters must be of the best type possible without a word or picture that is in the least suggestive. Simply because a small poster was a trifle suggestive the management last week refused to show a picture. It was a single reel comedy and a very clean one all the way through. But the management wants to advertise each picture with the posters and could not see their way clear on this one.

Gaskell and Hunt recently sold the Linwood Gardens, located at Linwood and Prospect, to B. R. Parker. The theater will continue operation without a hitch.

A. W. Bennett recently sold the Dale theater at Twenty-fourth and Troost avenue to J. T. Coleman. The theater is one of the most up-to-date ones in the city and is doing a mighty good business.

The Alamo theater at Thirty-fourth and Main streets, which has had considerable difficulty all year in a financial way, has changed its price of admission from ten to five cents. The theater is situated in an excellent location on the south side of the city, where the people could easily afford to pay ten cents admission.

Must Not Whoop in Shows

Kansas State Board of Health May Make Troublesome Regulation for Picture Exhibitors—Designed to Fight Spread of Whooping Cough—Showmen Not Expert on Stages of the Disease May Have Difficulty in Diagnosis.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

ANOTHER complication for Kansas! Probably now they will be requiring each moving picture exhibitor to employ a regularly licensed medical inspector to examine the patrons and report on the character of disease of which they show active or incipient symptoms. Or perhaps the state laws as to contagious diseases are to be altered, to read that no person suffering from a contagious disease shall enter a moving picture playhouse. This change will of course obviate the necessity for the officials maintaining any other quarantines; people may wander as they please through the streets, whatever their ailments, only providing that they do not enter a picture show—for evidently the picture show has become the origin of all that is evil, as well as the means of spreading it.

Ultimately, with this view, picture shows themselves may be quarantined. * * * But to mention the present situation: Dr. J. J. Sippy, state epimediologist for the Kansas state board of health, facing the possibility of an epidemic of whooping cough, has declared that the state should make a ruling prohibiting children with whooping cough from attending moving picture shows; and compelling the exhibitors to enforce the quarantine. Officials of the state board probably have had their own troubles with parents whose children cough, but who declare positively that they have not the whooping cough, or have been over it six weeks, or otherwise resist the impeachment. Evidently they would like to shove some of these troubles onto the exhibitors.

The latter always have done their best to eliminate any possibility of contagion from their theaters, and it is highly questionable whether "official" quarantine against whooping cough will give the exhibitors any more authority than they have now to send home affected children. Certainly the rule, if enforced by the state board, would seem to put an official responsibility upon the exhibitors, which might create many highly prejudicial and dangerous situations. It seems hardly fair to put upon the moving picture exhibitors the responsibility for the checking of epidemics.

An inference in Dr. Sippy's statement is also rather unfair to the exhibitors; when it says: "It is not only dangerous to others but to the child with the disease to go to a moving picture show. The child breathes the poisoned air of the crowd and the dust that the hundreds of feet stir up from the floor. That aggravates the case of whooping cough and makes the child suffer a great deal more." Few Kansas shows have dirt floors, and those with wood or cement floors are keeping them clean so that little dust is raised.

SPRINGFIELD THEATER LEASE RENEWED.

Proprietor S. E. Wilhoit, of the Jefferson theater at Springfield, Mo., for the past five years, recently signed a lease for another five years. The circumstances of the signing were significant of the success of this playhouse, which has given to the people of this city the best attractions produced by the film companies and the highest quality of environment in which to view them. The theater property was sold Aug. 21 by Jacob C. Schweitzer for $16,000 to H. S. Jewell. Mr. Jewell had taken a lease five years ago on the property, which was the old Auditorium skating rink building, his contract having an option for renewal of the lease or purchase.

The property is now valued at a much higher figure than the purchase price then agreed upon, and naturally Mr. Jewell took advantage of his opportunity. He immediately made a contract with Mr. Wilhoit, manager of the theater, and in that sense proprietor of the theater business, for the five-year term mentioned. At the same time the announcement was made that extensive improvements would be made in the near future, involving among other things the increase of the seating capacity by 400 seats, giving a capacity of 1,800.

THINKS PICTURE PLAYERS COULD HELP.

A Kansas City insurance man has made the suggestion that actors in moving pictures co-operate in the present widespread movement for "Safety First" by occasional pointed attention to the dictates of that policy. Children (and men and women!) are more and more inclined unconsciously to imitate the actions of the picture actors, and they are in fact creating the mannerisms of the growing generation. The actors can help to create habits that will tend to the prevention of fires and accidents, without interfering at all with the effectiveness of their plays.

The subject was brought up after witnessing a production in which the insurance man noted four different characters as many different times, light matches and throw the burning stubs somewhere —apparently against a curtain, or on the drawing room floor, or among papers scattered on a table, or even among the variegated goods piled in a corner of a store.

HEARD IN KANSAS CITY.

J. W. Hardacre, proprietor of the theater at Forty-eighth and Bell streets, Kansas City, recently gave a benefit performance for the Mercy Hospital. The entire proceeds were turned over to the hospital and Mr. Hardacre reserved nothing for himself. The young people in the neighborhood gave a program of several songs and readings, which was followed by the moving pictures, showing well the comparison of the life of the little poor cripples with that of the more fortunate. The moving picture shows all through this territory are doing a great deal to help the Mercy Hospital in raising funds.

Lloyd Long of La Cygne, Kan., recently purchased the moving picture theater known as the O. K. theater and the airdome at Paola, Kan., from C. A. Jewell. Mr. Long has moved his family from Paola to La Cygne and is now engaged in operating both shows on the same nights. This is something new in Paola as the former owner operated only one of the shows at a time. He used the airdome only when the weather permitted and when it did not he used the O. K. theater. Mr. Long, however, will operate the O. K. theater every night and the airdome on the nights that the weather permits the holding of outdoor showings.

James A. McDermeit, of Carthage, Mo., has sold the Photoplay theater, and the new owners are now in possession and active management. They are Ben B. Blackford and Porter Blackford of Paris, Mo. Ben Blackford has recently returned from the Philippines, where he was in the government service. They have a nice property, and they are planning to go aggressively after business.

ESSANAY.

HEARTS AND ROSES (Special—Three Parts—Aug. 24).—(The cast includes Darwin Karr, Beverly Bayne, Richardson Cotton, Herbert Haywood.) Ruth Willard scorns the honest affection of Dr. Norton, a respected friend of the family, and accepts the proposal of marriage made by a shallow, good-looking youth, John Baxter. Her father dies and leaves the girl poverty-stricken. Baxter then jilts her. Dr. Norton assumes the responsibilities of Willard's bank at his death and later pleads with the girl to marry him. She listlessly agrees. Time passes and the girl ignores the doctor's affections. Baxter returns and visits the girl while her husband is away. Dr. Norton learns of this and decides to go away. At the station an apparition of the dead father appears and Dr. Norton goes back. The girl has awakened to the fact that she loves the doctor when she finds he has gone away. When he returns she joyously throws herself in his arms.

CAUGHT (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 6).—(The cast includes Bryant Washburn, Edna Mayo, Richard Taber, Frederick Wood, Robert Russell, Thomas Commerford, F. A. Wade, Peggy Sweeney, Hugh E. Thompson.) A newspaper starts a campaign to ruin Governor-elect Winslow. In order to do this it tries to get hold of a document on a waterway contract which it hopes to twist into a scandal. A politician and star reporter learn that Richard Ware, the fiance of the governor's daughter, has forged his name to a check. They threaten him with exposure unless he gets the document they want. To save himself, he agrees. Edna Winslow, the governor's daughter, is really in love with her father's secretary, Bryant Gordon, her engagement to Ware having been largely a family arrangement. At the Winslow country estate Ware copies the combination of the safe in which the document is kept and mails it to the newspaper. Gordon discovers what Ware had done. He with Edna and a chauffeur bind and gag the mail clerk and get the letter. Gordon is arrested for robbing the mails. Before the chief justice the letter is opened and the combination is not found. However, Marie, the Winslow maid, who has been wronged by Ware, knows his secret. She shows how the combination had been written in with invisible ink. The intriguers are arrested while Gordon is set free. He and Edna then announce their betrothal.

HIS CRUCIBLE (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 7).—(The cast includes Nell Craig, John Cossar, Edmund F. Cobb, Betty Scott, Grant Foreman.) Edward Marsden, a wealthy widower, weds Helen Belden, a girl of twenty, after having promised his son, Alfred, who is older than she is, never to take a second wife. The son meets May Worthe, an adventuress, and agrees to go away with her. The father then disinherits his son. Mrs. Marsden takes up settlement work and when Alfred is arrested with May for trying to smuggle a string of pearls into the United States she obtains Alfred's release. He then becomes a settlement worker. May, threatens Alfred, but Mrs. Marsden saves him and proves to her husband that his son has reformed, and the family is reunited.

THE FABLE OF HAZEL'S TWO HUSBANDS AND WHAT BECAME OF THEM (Sept. 8).—(The cast includes Ruth Stonehouse, Charles J. Stine, Eugene Acker.) Once there was a nice high school graduate who debuted. Of course Hazel liked the frat boys, but she wasn't looking for a banjo. Therefore, when an elderly bachelor began to hang around, Hazel harkened to the voice of reason. So Hazel found herself in a swell shack on the drive. Husband would pike to the office at 7:30, while Hazel would have her coffee in bed about 10:30. At 6:30, when the money-getter showed after an all-day battle, he was a faded flower. But when Hazel sniffed the night air she was just as kittenish as a broncho. If the producer tried to lie down Hazel accused him of being a slobsterine. So papa trailed along. The only time any one paid any attention to him was when the check came. Papa wound up as the principal attraction of a daylight function, and as soon as Hazel settled the insurance, she picked out a handsome wretch of a good family who never worked. While traveling Hubby went out to buy cigarettes. He returned in three days. Sometimes he met his wife at dinner parties. When Hazel applied for a divorce, the officers had to hunt a long time before they found him. "What are you going to do next?" a sympathetic friend asked Hazel. "I'm going to buy a dog!" Hazel answered. Moral: It is often necessary to try two or three before the right kind is landed.

A QUIET LITTLE GAME (Sept. 9).—(The cast includes Harry Todd, Lloyd Bacon, Ben Turpin, Margaret Joslin, Eva Heaslett, Robert McKenzie.) Peter Fuss and Jack Henry, being invited to sit in a game of poker, write fake telegrams to their wives telling them they have been called out of the city. The undertaker is one of the members of the party and loses all his money. In the midst of the game the constable knocks at the door. All except Fuss and Henry leap out of the window. They climb up a chimney and flee to the undertaker's house, where, exhausted, they drop asleep in his bed. In the meantime the two wives have heard their husbands were killed in a wreck. They go to the undertaker's shop and he shows them their sleeping husbands all begrimed from their trip through the chimney. The wives pay the undertaker to care for the bodies. When the husbands return home they find crepe on their doors. They vow never to play again.

MIND OVER MOTOR (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast includes Camille D'Archy, Eugene Acker, June Keith, Edmund F. Cobb, Grant Foreman, Louise Crolius, Marion Skinner, Hugh Thompson. "Tish" Carberry is called upon to chaperone Bettina, a vivacious girl in love with Jasper. Lizzie and Aggie, of the quiet, home-spun variety, decide to go with her. After a harrowing automobile ride, with "Tish" at the wheel, they arrive at Bettina's, and "Tish" is arrested for speeding. A scene ensues in which Ellis, a crooked auto race promoter, comes to the rescue and wins "Tish's" friendship. He persuades her to back one of his bogus races. Lizzie and Aggie overhear, and wire Charlie Sands, "Tish's" nephew, who tries in vain to dissuade her. Jasper enters the race, while Charlie tells the sheriff the race is fixed. "Tish," at last convinced, fills the gas tanks of all the cars but Jasper's with sand. Jasper forges ahead as the other racers have trouble, but, hitting a bump, is thrown out. "Tish" leaps to his place, and, as her last opponent's car is disabled, wins the race. She is lifted to the shoulders of the crowd, while Jasper and Bettina embrace.

VITAGRAPH.

THE QUARREL (Sept. 1).—(The cast includes William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez, Jack Mower, Anne Schaefer, George Kunkel, Otto Lederer.) After being married some time, Mr. and Mrs. Jiggs have their first quarrel. Mrs. Jiggs finds a letter which she feels to be decidedly compromising, raises the dickens, and then both parties discover remarkable anger-provoking possibilities in each other. Hubby pretends sickness to avoid a visit from mother-in-law and he gets hold of a letter to his wife containing the suggestion that she put a little strychnine in his food! Not knowing it refers to the pet dog, he nearly has a fit. Arming himself, he sets out in search of his wife and the would-be despoiler of his home. Hennessey, the cop, and half the town join in the chase, which ends up by Mr. and Mrs. Jiggs being arrested. Frantic explanations prevent serious trouble, however.

THE FIRE-ESCAPE (Sept. 2).—(The cast includes Evart Overton, Lillian Walker, William Sellery, Edward Elkas, Harry Fisher.) On the floor below Jack Parker, lives Schwartz, lieutenant to Doyle, boss of the East Side Ward, and his pretty daughter, Minnie. Jack and the girl fall in love, but Doyle is also in love with her and Schwartz endeavors to force his daughter into a marriage with him. She refuses, and matters are at a deadlock until Krausmeyer, a saloonkeeper, sees Jack and Minnie making love on the fire-escape. He tells Doyle and Schwartz and an exciting chase follows, up and down the fire-escape and in and out of windows. Jack saves Harris, the wealthy politician, on the ground floor, from being robbed by Carlo, Doyle's tool, and Doyle is "sent up," while Jack is made Harris' secretary. Schwartz very gladly consents to the marriage of Jack and Minnie.

MR. AND MRS. DREW IN THEIR AGREEMENT (Sept. 3).—(The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and others.) Harold Keffe and his wife, Edna, possess dispositons of the most listless kind. Neither cares for anyone else or apparently very much about each other. Frank Evans, dashing man-about-town, suggests they adopt the one-night-out-a-week plan, and no questions asked. An agreement is drawn up to this effect and signed. Their first night out, both find they can be very jealous over nothing. Instead of going out as they pretend, both slam the front door and then sneak back into separate rooms. The evening is spent by both in deep misery imagining the other has gone out with Frank and his sporty friends. At midnight, Frank, the worse for wear, is admitted by Harold, who, in a towering rage demands to know where his wife is. Fortunately, at this moment, his wife appears, the mutual confessions result in the destruction of the agreement and the restoration of happiness.

THE OFFENDING KISS (Special—two parts—Sept. 4).—(The cast includes William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez, Alfred Vosburgh, Otto Lederer, Geo. Stanley, Anne Schaefer, Marguerite Reid, Geo. Kunkel.) A remarkable instance of bravery and self-sacrifice is shown in the story of Kate, sister of a Western settler's wife. Kate's lover is Captain Haynes, stationed at a nearby Army post. She sees and misunderstands a kiss between Haynes and Milly Lee, and, heart-broken, joins her sister and husband in a long journey across the plains. Marauding Indians attack and capture Kate. The others carry the news to the Army post and Haynes heads a rescue party. He becomes separated from his men and is also captured. Kate saves him from the stake by theatening to drop the Indian Chief's child over a precipice, and Haynes brings up his troop. The Indians are driven off, but one hides near the wigwam where Kate is and attempts to stab her. Haynes sees this and just as the rascal is about to strike, pounces on him and kills him. On their way back to the fort, Haynes explains the kiss incident satisfactorily, and the lovers are joyfully reunited.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES NO. 18—MRS. JARR AND THE SOCIETY CIRCUS (Sept. 6).—(The cast includes Harry Davenport, Rose Tapley, Paul Kelly, Audrey Berry, Eulalie Jensen, Florence Natol, Charles Eldridge.) Mrs. Jarr and Mrs. Smith, on a vacation trip to Swank Springs, are outrageously snubbed by the petty aristocrats there and, to get even, send for Gertrude, the servant and pass her off as a Swedish Baroness. Gertie is received with open arms by the local "sassiety" and particularly a Swedish Baron. At the Society Circus given by the members of the local "400," Gertrude confesses her real identity and the Baron admits he is the real Baron's valet. Gertie becomes playful, and disliking the trapeze performer's work, jumps into the ring and shows the shocked audience some real acrobatics. Mrs. Jarr shrieks, scaring Gertie so she lets go of the trapeze and lands right in the kettle drum. The circus breaks up then and there.

THE KIDNAPPED STOCKBROKER (Special—two parts—Sept. 7).—(The cast includes Jay Dwiggins, Dorothy Kelly, Louise Beaudet, William Dunn.) Stockbroker, strangely missing, is found through clever girl's daring and young reporter's investigations. James MacLaren, wealthy stockbroker, mysteriously disappears after he has threatened Oldham, his partner, for misuse of the firm's money. The New York Trumpet puts Alan Hyde, a reporter, on the case, with orders to make good. Eileen MacLaren, the stockbroker's daughter, is a friend of Alan's, and through a clue furnished by her he locates the missing man in a Haunted House, but is himself nabbed by the crooks, acting under orders from Oldham, and locked in an upper room. Eileen brings help, but the crooks have escaped with the stockbroker. After a thrilling pursuit in autos and motorboats, the crooks are captured and father and daughter reunited. On their return the Haunted House is found blazing furiously, and Alan's rescue is effected with much difficulty. But he has made good and the city editor doesn't hesitate to tell him so. Oldham is arrested, and as MacLaren looks smilingly on, Alan takes Eileen in his arms, while she whispers, "And I think you've made good."

THE SIREN (Sept. 8).—(The cast includes Margaret Gibson, Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer, Gretchen Lederer.) Muriel, a little country girl, is in love with Lloyd, a dashing young city chap. He visits a fashionable cafe dansante and she follows him. He discovers her there, and, in a fatherly manner, leads her right home again. Realizing that he thinks her a mere child, Muriel decides to adopt modern Siren methods. She dolls up in a most outlandish costume and goes back to the cafe where she tries to look blase like the other women. Lloyd is not there as she expected, but she is not alone long. One of the habitues attempts to engage her in conversation, and an unpleasant scene is only avoided by the timely arrival of Lloyd, who promptly squelches the fellow. On their way home, Lloyd awakens to the fact that he is in love with Muriel, proposes and is accepted.

THE ROMANCE OF A HANDKERCHIEF (Sept. 9).—(The cast includes Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, Van Dyke Brooke.) John Harmon, in Kansas City, writes Effie, his wife, to meet him in Chicago. At the same time, Trixie, an actress, leaves Kansas City for Chicago to meet her fiance, John Courtney. On the train she hurts her finger opening the window and John Harmon binds it with his handkerchief. On arrival in Chicago, John engages rooms for himself and wife at the same hotel where Trixie puts up. Effie arrives to find her husband has been called back to Kansas City. She and Trixie become acquainted, and after the latter is called back to Kansas City by her fiance, Effie, liking her new friend's room better, moves into it and finds her husband's handkerchief, also a telegram signed simply "John." In a jealous rage, she starts for Kansas City and when she locates her husband there are some tall doings. They visit Trixie and Courtney, the handkerchief incident is finally explained, then all become good friends.

UNLUCKY LOUEY (Sept. 10).—(The cast includes Sidney Drew and others.) "That Cot! Those Eats! Them Classy Clothes! I'm going back!" Strange words for a man just out of jail, but Unlucky Louey figured that prison life was 100 per cent. more enjoyable than the bread line and sleeping in the park. To get back in jail again he steals bananas from a poor Italian, who reaps a rich harvest from sympathetic bystanders, then he kisses a woman on the street, but she is an old maid and almost strangles him with a return embrace. His effort at wallet-snatching also fails, and Louey gets rewarded for "finding" the pocketbook. He tries committing arson, but the Jew landlord kisses him on both cheeks for enabling him to collect the fire insurance. After accidentally capturing a noted outlaw, Louey is made a town official. and decides prison life is not for him, so he has bars put up on the house windows, dresses in striped suits, and sleeps on a hard cot, for old times' sake.

ONE PERFORMANCE ONLY (Broadway Star Features Special—Three Parts—Sept. 11).—(The cast includes Thomas R. Mills, Lionel Adams, Garry McGarry, Templer Saxe, Eulalie Jensen, Stanley Dark, Chas. Eldridge.) Daring theft of priceless necklace executed in broad daylight, in prominent jeweler's office. Dwight Orme, a clever crook, determines to gain possession of a very valuable pearl necklace worn by Mrs. Heldmayer, a wealthy jeweler's wife, and secures an interview with "The Great Valdo," an actor and impersonator. After "sounding" his man, Orme offers the actor $5,000 for one performance. Valdo's cupidity aroused, he consents to aid the crook. Orme calls on the jeweler at his office, renders him unconscious with the aid of a poisoned needle, then Valdo enters and quickly makes up to closely resemble the jeweler. The rest is easy. Jack Cheney, detective, is called into the case and after careful research, locates his men. He makes up as Heldmayer, then by the use of electrical effects, so frightens Valdo that he breaks down and confesses, implicating Orme. The pair are soon doing a "Double" at Sing Sing, on long-time engagement.

SONNY JIM AND THE AMUSEMENT CO., L'T'D (Sept. 13).—(The cast includes Bobby Connelly, Tefft Johnson, Mabel Kelly, Edwina Robbins, Geo. Stevens.) Sonny Jim is told by the Sunday school teacher he cannot go to the School Picnic because he brought a huge bullfrog to school and it jumped into her lap. Sonny retaliates by getting up "The Amusement Company, Limited," then getting all the boys to stay away from the picnic to attend the "10-Act Circus" to be given in his father's barn. Result: the only ones to attend the picnic are the girls, the Superintendent, Gerald Montague, the "goody-goody" boy and Teacher. "Goody" tells where the boys are and all troop over to the barn. No one has the heart to scold the boys, so all but teacher are soon enjoying the comical efforts of the little "Circus" performers to amuse.

WEST WIND (Special—Three Parts—Broadway Star Feature—Sept. 14).—(The cast includes Ned Finley, Harry Northrup, Eulalie Jensen, Eleanor Woodruff, Darwin Karr, Logan Paul, Lionel Belmore.) Soldiers, on punitive expedition against warring Sioux, find girl who had been abducted from her father's ranch. in hands of rascally half-breed cowboy. Amy Benham, known as "West Wind," daughter of John Benham, a ranch owner, is abducted by Girot, a half-breed cowboy, and her father is killed. Kennard, a young Army Captain, in love with Amy, and Sullivan, the ranch foreman, head a searching party, but Girot dares the rapids of White River in a canoe and brings the girl to the Sioux encampment. She is aided by Mahwissa, an Indian squaw, to escape and hide in a cave, where Sullivan finds them. Sullivan and the girls are attacked by Girot and his band. Kennard arrives in time to save the women and kill Girot, but Sullivan dies from wounds received. Kennard's party is surrounded by a large band of Indians under Crazy Horse, and comes near being wiped out, but Mahwissa brings up troops in time to prevent a massacre. The Indians defeated, Amy and Kennard are married.

SAVE THE COUPONS (Sept. 15).—The cast includes Lillian Walker, Evart Overton. Lillian wants Jack to give up smoking, until she finds that coupons are given with each pack of cigarettes. Therupon she demands he smoke more than ever. After nearly smoking himself to death and getting in bad at the office in his quest for more coupons, his pile, combined with Lillian's (who also had some trouble collecting), amounts to the required number for a gaudy vase. Lillian drags Jack to the premium store only to find the offer on that vase has expired. Lillian almost expires, too, but Jack finds another store, selling those same vases at 49 cents, so Lillian disgustedly throws away the coupons and buys a vase. Jack has smoked so many cigarettes he never wants to see another, so he swears off smoking, after which Lillian permits him to place an engagement ring on her finger.

THE SHADOW OF FEAR (Sept. 16).—The cast includes Carolyn Birch, Gladden James, Louise Beaudet, Harry Morey. Continually haunted by the knowledge that his parents both died in an insane asylum, John Sterling summons up all his courage and confesses to his sweetheart, Grace, that the newspaper statement concerning the cause of his parents' death is true. She, urged on by Randolph Polhemus, a rival suitor, tells John she cannot marry him; that she is afraid of the inheritance of insanity. Some months later she becomes engaged to Polhemus and John is in the depth of despair, until the girl's Aunt Mary comes forward with proof that John was only an adopted son, whose real parents were killed in a train wreck. After a complete readjustment of conditions, Grace breaks with Polhemus and finds happiness with John as her husband.

THE PROFESSIONAL DINER (Sept. 17).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Donald MacBride. In line for an English title, but flat broke, Gregory Buxtin, a handsome young Englishman, feels worried. He finally secures a position in the Hotel Astoria. It's a brand new specialty. He is to act as guest No. 14 at all suppers where there are 13 in the party, to avoid the popular superstition. At first it looks a snap, but he happens in to a regular run of 13 parties and has to resort to strategy to prevent trouble with his digestion. At one of these parties he meets Hortense, a charming lady, and they become most agreeable friends. He falls heir to the English title, proposes and is accepted by Hortense. Several years later, their Anniversary dinner lacks the fourteenth guest, but Gregory solves the puzzle by bringing in his son and heir to fill the place.

HIS GOLDEN GRAIN (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast includes William Duncan, Jack Mower, Myrtle Gonzales, George Kunkel, Alice Neice, George Stanley, Otto Lederer. John Hart, well-known bachelor-of-means, returns home to find his ward and secretary planning to secure his money after driving out the girl whom he had protected from her criminal companions and taken into his home. Elsie, the tool of crooks, had attempted to burglarize his home and he had caught her. Realizing her career was not of her own choosing, he had taken her into his home and, despite the efforts of his ward Julia and his secretary to drive her out, had believed in her. He escapes unhurt from a terrible railroad wreck, and without denying the report of his death, quietly returns home. There he overhears a crook trying to blackmail the secretary and Julia for trying to fasten a robbery on Elsie. Elsie enters at this moment and Hart bursts in the door. After a sharp fight, during which Elsie calls the police in time to save Hart's life, the crook and the secretary are subdued and arrested. Hart then orders Julia to leave his home forever, and asks Elsie to remain as his wife.

THE FALSE CLUE (Episode No. 7 of "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Two Parts—Sept. 1).—The cast includes True Boardman, Ollie Kirkby, Thomas Lingham, James W. Horne, Marin Sais. Shortly after his arrival at the Grand Hotel, Highcliff misses his wife's diamond rings. Having appeared in numerous detective roles upon the stage, the actor, confident of his sleuthing ability, accuses Jenkins, a bellboy, of having stolen the gems. Knowing Jenkins to be honest, Francis declines to believe him guilty. Instead, her suspicions are fastened upon Dorkins, the actor's valet. Circumstances confirm the house detective's suspicions and she follows Dorkins when he leaves the hotel that evening.

Later, Francis sees the man presenting a ring to his sweetheart. Sure of his guilt, the girl compels Dorkins to return to the hotel. She is dismayed, however, to discover that the ring really belongs to the valet. Sawdust scattered in a waste basket in the Highcliff suite, arouses Francis' curiosity and she learns that Mrs. Highcliff's gems disappeared immediately after they had been cleaned by Dorkins. At the house detective's request, the man places before her the basket containing the sawdust used to clean the gems. Groping about, Francis brings the missing jewels to light.

At this moment, Highcliff, battered and bruised as the result of his sleuthing efforts in the servants' quarters, enters the room. Filled with mortification, the actor-detective loses no time in departing from the Grand Hotel.

GANGSTERS OF THE HILLS (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast includes Al. Ernest Garcia, Seymour Hastings, Joseph J. Franz, Carolyn Higby, Lillian Hamilton. Sent to the hills for the purpose of locating the counterfeiters, who are flooding the countryside with spurious money, Deering makes his home with the Gordons. The Secret Service man falls in love with Elizabeth. Simpson, one of the counterfeiters, passes his product by posing as a Bible salesman. Gordon returns home, after serving a twenty-year sentence. Informed by his wife that their daughter knows nothing of his criminal career, the ex-convict consents to keep out of Elizabeth's sight.

Later, Gordon discovers Simpson in the act of victimizing his wife and daughter. The counterfeiter, however, cleverly assuages Gordon's anger and induces him to join the gang. At the same time, Deering, posing as an expert engraver, worms his way into the gang's confidence. The detective's identity is discovered by Gordon and the latter betrays him. The ex-convict then learns that the young man intends to make Elizabeth his wife. Determined that his daughter's happiness shall not be destroyed, Gordon allows Deering to escape.

The detective, enlisting the aid of the sheriff and his posse, surrounds the counterfeiters' den. A desperate battle ensues. It ends when the tackers' bullets strike a box containing dynamite. The resultant explosion kills every man in the cabin. Mrs. Gordon and Deering keep from Elizabeth the knowledge that her father was one of the victims.

THE BROKEN RAIL (Episode No. 43 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Sept. 4).—The cast includes Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, Robyn Adair, G. A. Williams. Spang, a tramp telegrapher, is knocked down by a freight car while walking up the siding near Lone Point. Helen witnesses the accident and by quick work saves him from being run over. The girl is later transferred to the Shops office and, due to her influence, Spang is given the berth at Lone Point. Failure to place his signal at danger before accepting a message for the oncoming freight, is attended with serious results. Perceiving the freight's peril, the man endeavors to set the signal, but stumbles before reaching the spot. As the result the freight is ditched.

Helen accompanies the wrecking crew which speeds toward the scene of the accident. Trow, the man in charge of the crane, loses control of his engine at a critical moment and, but for Helen's heroism, the men at work would have been crushed. This comes to the ears of Division Superintendent Markey and he dismisses both Trow and Spang for neglect of duty. Helen is ordered to return to Lone Point. Shortly afterward, Spang determines to rob the station. Overpowering Helen, the crook takes the money reposing in the safe. He then locks his victim up in the cabinet which stands against the wall. Trow enters the room. Helen, struggling to free herself, upsets the cabinet. Spang endeavors to escape, but is seized by Trow, whose suspicions have been aroused. The crook is overpowered and Helen is released. As the result of his work, Trow is reinstated.

THE VANDERHOFF AFFAIR (Broadway Favorites—Four Parts—Sept. 6).—The cast includes Hal Forde, Marguerite Courtot, Henry Hallam, T. J. Dow, Helen Lindroth, Robert G. Vignola. Lester, returning from Mexico, becomes interested in Helen, a girl whose life he had saved. Helen, according to her uncle, Vanderhoff, is insane. Dr. Luchow, Lester's friend, confirms Vanderhoff's statement. Upon returning home, the author finds that the Vanderhoff's have rented the adjoining cottage. The writer sees Helen drop a note. Picking it up, he finds the paper blank. Lester's window faces Helen's window. That night, the girl informs him in pantomime that the note contains a message written in milk. Scorching brings the message into view.

As the result, Lester learns that Helen is the victim of a foul plot on the part of her uncle who desires to obtain her fortune. The girl drops a note book which contains the details. The author is thus informed that Vanderhoff, by keeping his niece drugged with a loco weed preparation, succeeds in fooling the physicians who examine her. Lester breaks into the Vanderhoff house the following morning. He is discovered by Jose, who knocks the author unconscious and places him in the room above the dining room. Vanderhoff hastens his preparations to place Helen in the insane asylum. Dr. Luchow calls for the purpose of preparing the papers.

Lester, using the top of a ventilator, saws away at his bonds. The blood from his bruised hands drips down upon Luchow's paper and the doctor soon becomes aware of what is going on. Jose attacks Lester just as the latter gains his freedom, but Dr. Luchow's timely arrival saves his friend. The Mexican and Vanderhoff endeavor to make their get-away in an auto, but an explosion, which wrecks the machine, ends their villainous careers.

NEARLY A BRIDE (Sept. 7).—The cast includes Bud Duncan, Ethel Teare, Dave Morris, Charles Mulgro, H. Griffith, Myrta Sterling. Until Hercules decides that he'd like to tie up with Citronella for life, Amos Quito has a first mortgage upon the maid's affection. But since Hercules' father, Hezekiah, holds a first mortgage upon Citronella's home, her parents order her to forget Amos and marry Hercules. Although there isn't much to Amos, and, goodness knows, he isn't handsome, Citronella prefers him to lean and lanky Hercules, who would never learn how to make love, even though he rehearsed it forever and ever! The dawning of the wedding day finds the sweethearts broken-hearted.

Then Amos happens to remember that Hercules is an all-fired big coward. Forthwith an idea pops into his head. Communicating this idea to Citronella, Bud prepares to carry it into execution. The lovers get busy just as the wedding guests begin to arrive. A few minutes later, Hercules, entering the kitchen in search of a snack, finds Citronella apparently murdered. In his terror, the bridegroom forgets that catsup looks just like blood. Fearing lest he be accused of the crime, he carries Citronella outside and dumps her into a packing case.

When Hercules enters the house in fear and trembling, he finds Amos there. The latter accuses his rival of having done away with Citronella. Hercules breaks away and takes refuge in the box containing the girl. In an effort to make him come out of his hiding place, his pursuers shoot at the box, scaring Citronella to such an extent that she jumps out. The lover's plot is discovered and Amos flees for his life. As for Hercules, he declines to wed the girl who has scared him and wrecks all speed laws in dashing for home.

WHEN THIEVES FALL OUT (Episode No. 8 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Sept. 8).—The cast includes Frank Jonasson, Paul C. Hurst, Marin Sais, True Boardman. Kate, the brains of the Whalen gang, conceives a plot whereby the valuable exhibit at the jewelers' convention can be stolen. Accompanied by Whalen, the woman registers at the Grand Hotel where the convention is being held. An hour later, Whalen's trunk arrives. At his request, Hilton has the trunk placed in the strong room. With the detective's departure, the trunk opens from the side, revealing Benny Berg, Whalen's lieutenant. The crook forces open the other trunks in the room and places the most valuable portion of their contents into the space he has vacated.

Shortly afterwards, Whalen and Kate inform Hilton that they have received a message which calls them home. Upon entering the strong room for the purpose of getting Whalen's trunk, Hilton is knocked unconscious by Berg. The latter also attacks Whalen, whom he hates, and thrusts the man into the strong room together with Hilton. This done, Berg locks the door. Accomplices in waiting carry the trunk away. Hilton recovers and learns Whalen's real character. A phone hidden in the wall enables the detective to summon help. Whalen and Kate are placed under arrest. Furious at Berg's treachery, Kate betrays the gang.

The police raid the crook's den, but fail to capture the band. Hilton, made a prisoner, is carried away in a launch. The police continue the chase, which is brought to an end when Hilton succeeds in fouling the propeller of the Whalen gang's launch.

THE LITTLE SINGER (An Alice Joyce Re-Issue—Sept. 10).—The cast includes Adelaide Lawrence, Alice Joyce, Earle Foxe and Mayme Kelso. Papita, a little street singer, is orphaned when her father dies of heart failure. Karl, a young musician, is attracted by the child's remarkable voice and induces his mother to adopt Papita. The child's voice continues to improve with the passing years. Karl finally decides to take her to a famous vocal instructor. The marvelous quality of Papita's voice fills the teacher with delight and he accepts her as a pupil.

The girl is given an opportunity to sing at a concert which takes place in the home of a rich patron of music. Mrs. Burleigh, a woman of wealth, is in the audience. The society woman offers to give Papita a musical education abroad. After years of study in foreign lands, Papita returns to America where she is to appear at the Metropolitan Opera House. On the night of the prima donna's debut, Karl visits the opera and sends his card in to Papita. Mrs. Burleigh intercepts it, however, and informs Karl that Papita does not care to see him. Brooding over the girl's apparent ingratitude, Karl becomes ill. Although she scores a tremendous success, the operatic star misses Karl and his mother and goes in search of them. Arriving at the former home of her old friends, Papita learns that Karl had left the place shortly after his mother's death.

Deeply touched, Papita returns home. Shortly afterwards, the sound of a violin playing her favorite air, attracts the prima donna's attention. Turning towards the house from whence the music comes, she enters. A minute later, she confronts Karl and the latter learns that Papita's heart is true.

NERVES OF STEEL (Episode No. 44 of the "Hazards of Helen Railroad" Series—Sept 11).—The cast includes Helen Holmes, Robyn Adair and Rex Downs. Detective Strong is warned that an attempt will be made to free the crooks he is taking to the penitentiary. In spite of his vigilance, the prisoners escape when confederates start a gunfight on the train. Strong and his men scour the country-side for the fugitives. Helen, who has been warned, sees the convicts breaking into a box car. The girl gives the alarm, but before the detectives arrive, the crooks discover what has happened. Jumping from the car, the men overpower the crew of a locomotive, make them prisoners, and then start the engine down the track.

Realizing that he and his pals cannot hope to make good their escape by remaining on the engine, Bud Carson abandons the locomotive at the river and starts it running wild back towards Lone Point. The runaway is seen by a road hand and word is flashed to Helen. Believing the engine crew to be bound and gagged aboard the iron monster, Helen decides against derailing it. Instead, she induces the man in charge of the wrecking derrick to run his apparatus on the parallel track. This done, Helen seizes hold of the boom hook and is swung out over the track upon which the runaway is approaching.

Just as the wild engine flashes by, Helen drops from the hook, landing on the tender. Staggering into the cab, she brings the runaway to a halt just in time to save it from smashing into a chain of cars. Later, Helen accompanies Strong and his men in their chase after Bud Carson's gang. The pursuit ends when the outlaws perish in the quicksands along the river.

THE MAN SERVANT (Broadway Favorites—Three parts—Special—Sept. 13).—The cast includes Jack Henderson, Robert Ellis, Eve Prout and Belle Slaughter. Deeply interested in sociology, Sidney Rolfe decides to obtain a position as valet in an effort to study the servant problem at close range. An opportunity presents itself when Park's valet resigns after his employer strikes at the man in a drunken rage. Ignorant of the fact that Rolfe is a millionaire, Park engages him. The sociologist learns that the clubman neglects and mistreats his wife, Evelyn. As time passes, Evelyn and Rolfe fall in love with each other but keep what is in their hearts, secret.

On one of his nights off, the millionaire-valet visits his club. Park meets him and, struck by the likeness between the millionaire and the valet, becomes suspicious. The dissolute wretch pours his story into the ears of Georgette, an adventuress, who has ensnared him. The days which follow, find Park treating Evelyn more brutally than ever in an effort to provoke a protest from Rolfe. Shortly afterwards, the men again meet at the club. Intoxicated, the drunkard attempts to attack the millionaire, but friends intervene.

Fearing for Evelyn's safety, Rolfe returns to the Park home. Park, accompanied by Georgette, returns home and again attacks his valet. Evelyn, who endeavors to separate the men, is halted by Georgette, who threatens her with a pistol. In her agitation, the adventuress presses the trigger. The shot misses Evelyn, striking Park and killing him. Police, summoned by the frantic wife, place Georgette under arrest.

ROMANCE A LA CARTE (Sept. 14).—The cast includes Bud Duncan, Dave Morris, Ethel Teare, Martin Kinney and Margaret Keyes. So fierce waxes the rivalry between Bud and Garlico for Carmencita's hand, that the lives of the restaurant's patrons are menaced. As for the cause of the trouble, she basks in the delight of being loved by two men. Comes Eva, a vivacious blond, to assume her duties as cashier. Until Benedictine, the proprietor, saw Eve, he handled all the cash himself. Eva's soulful blue eyes, however, cause her to be added to the payroll.

Forthwith Bud and Garlico try to wish Carmencita upon each other. Both are equally determined to win the little blond. The cabaret singer views the change in her erstwhile lovers with dismay. Seizing a knife, Carmencita informs Eva of her intention to separate her from her breath. Eva, however, shows that she and fear are utter strangers. After a gentle hair-pulling match, the ladies agree to fight a duel. Bud, Garlico and Benedictine watch the fray from a distance. Swords proving to be too harmless, the girls make another try with pistols.

The first shots fired strike a couple of slumbering policemen. Seeing Bud and the cook, the officers chase the two into a lake. Carmencita and Eva witness the ducking. Their love for the hapless victims cools and when the waiter and the cook reach the bank, they find the objects of their affections strolling away with the limbs of the law!

UNDER OATH (Episode No. 9 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Sept. 15).—The cast includes True Boardman, Marin Sais, Thomas Lingham and Frank Jonasson. Ned Prentiss, returning to America on the Wauritania, falls in love with Celeste le Fevre. Although she returns his affection, Celeste tells him she cannot marry until she has performed a certain mission. Fabulo Orrin, on the same vessel, loses a ring which Prentiss finds just as the vessel docks. Orrin is taken critically ill. Prentiss, unable to find the owner of the ring, wears it. The American loses track of Celeste. The latter goes to the Grand Hotel where, after exchanging certain signs with Cuneo, the head barber, she is employed as manicurist. Prentiss registers at the hotel and is astounded when he meets the girl he loves. Celeste sees the ring on his hand. It causes her to regard the young man with hatred.

That evening, the girl breaks into Prentiss' room and ransacks his papers, returning unexpectedly, Ned catches her in the act. Again the sight of the ring on his hand agitates Celeste. Sensing something wrong, Prentiss informs her as to the manner in which the ring came into his possesion. Celeste tells her story. It appears that her father, a member of a secret political organization abroad, had been betrayed by Fabulo Orrin and shot. The girl thereupon joined the society and took a solemn oath to avenge his death. Although Celeste had never seen Orrin, the ring he wore was one of the identifying marks. When the girl's story is finished Prentiss informs her of Orrin's death. Breaking down, Celeste throws herself into her sweetheart's arms.

THE KEY TO POSSESION (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast includes Robert Ellis, Richard Purdon, Eve Prout and Steven Purdee. Until he meets Gwen, Tony leads a wild and dissolute life. The young man falls in love with the girl. The following night Gwen sees Tony roistering in a Broadway cabaret. The contempt in the eyes of the girl he loves causes the man-about-town to sober up. A vague desire to regain his place in Gwen's favor causes Tony to motor out to her home. Unable to sleep, Gwen strolls through her garden and finds her there and, rendered desperate by her refusal to listen to his pleas, kidnaps her. Morning brings to the man the realization of what he has done. Knowing that she has been hopelessly compromised, Gwen consents to become Tony's wife.

The ceremony over, Gwen informs her husband that she will live with him only upon the condition that he make no advances. As a further evidence of her distrust, the girl locks the door between their rooms. Unable to break down the barrier of his wife's reserve, Tony foolishly seeks the counsel of Denton, a friend. Gwen grows to love her husband, but pride prevents her from betraying it. Tony's story reveals to Denton a plan by which he can blackmail his friend's wife. The scoundrel attempts to put this plan into execution that night, but Gwen horrified, orders Denton from the house.

Tony comes home in time to hear his wife's call for help. Rushing to her assistance, he seizes Denton, thrashes the cur and kicks him out of the house. It is during the struggle between the men that Gwen realizes how great is her love for Tony . . . When the latter presently enters his room, he finds the key to the connecting door lying on his table.

A GIRL'S GRIT (Episode No. 45 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Sept. 18).—The cast includes Helen Holmes, Robyn Adair and E. Z. Roberts. After robbing the bank at Orlock, Cherry and Newton make their getaway. When on the outskirts of Lone Point, the men cut the telephone wires. Helen, however, learns of the robbery. Never suspecting that the crooks are headed for the station, the girl is taken by surprise when Newton and his pal hold her up. The men compel Helen to give them tickets for the Limited. This done, Newton and Cherry force the girl to climb into the attic. After locking the door, the men board the train. Just as the Limited is speeding past, the girl telegrapher smashes the tiny attic window, climps out upon the sloping station roof and leaps aboard the last car.

Crawling forward, Helen tells her story to the engine crew. Accompanied by the fireman, Helen hastens to the conductor who is also informed as to what has transpired. The train crew rush into the car where Newton and Cherry are congratulating themselves upon their escape. Realizing what has occurred, the thieves jump out of the window. Helen, however, is determined to bring the men to book and follows them off the speeding train. The Limited is halted and the train crew hasten to assist the girl, who is fighting both men. Newton and Cherry are overpowered by the trainmen and made prisoners.

to invest all his money in bucket shop investments. The stocks fall and Tom is asked for margins. Money given Tom by Mrs. Watson for furniture, money received from his mortgage, and money realized from the valuable papers of John Graham disappear into the coffers of the unscrupulous bucket shop proprietor. At the marriage altar, the face of John Graham comes before Tom, whose possessions were entrusted to Tom's care, then a cablegram is received, stating that he will soon be home. The young man then writes a letter to Bessie, saying "Dearest, I am taking the coward's way out, but I cannot live and have you know me for what I am—A Thief!"

And then the gun which Tom holds in his had suddenly dissolves into a crystal ball as Huri enters Tom's office. Into the crystal glass, Tom has been peering and also into the future of what might have been. He has been permitted to see what temptation he might have been led to. He refuses the importunities of the bucket shop promoter and he and his sweetheart select the furniture for their little home given them by Bessie's old mother.

NEVER AGAIN (Sept. 7).—Tom promises his sweetheart, Vicky, that he will stop drinking. He falls in with boon companions, however, and in a saloon brawl, he accidentally shoots Ned, his pal. The sheriff and Vicky's brother find that Ned was only stunned by the bullet. At a Rodeo, Tom meets the sheriff, who arrests Tom for the shooting of Ned.

The sheriff wires Vicky, explaining the ruse he is playing on Tom. When Tom and the sheriff arrive at the town jail, they encounter Vicky, accompanied by Ned. After Tom is joyfully surprised at seeing Ned alive and well, he solemnly promises never to drink again, and with this assurance Vicky rushes into Tom's arms.

'NEATH CAVALRY'S SHADOW (Special)—Three Parts (Sept. 9).—Anne Strong and brother, a young Episcopal rector, live together in the rectory of Calvary Parish. The rector is engaged to Marjorie, who does not share in her fiance's love for children. Marjorie's father forbids her marriage to Strong. Two days later Anne disappears. Later that year Strong finds a baby upon the doorstep of the parish and to the infant is pinned a slip asking Strong to rear and protect the child, Helen. Later Strong receives a note from Marjorie, telling him that because her father has not consented to her marriage that she has entered a convent.

Strong learns to love little Helen as she grows older and his explanation to the vestrymen fails to satisfy them, so Strong presents his resignation and takes charge of a mission at Goldfield, Nevada. As years go on, Strong falls in love with Imogene, the daughter of the mine owner. He requests Imogene to become his wife and her father wires to Strong's former parish for information regarding him. The answer is that Strong was compelled to resign his parish because he could not prove the identity of the child. Rushton exposes Strong to the miners. Harold Gordon, after Anne's disappearance in the East, also goes to Goldfield, Nevada, where he becomes superintendent of Rushton's mine. He also proposes for Imogene's hand, but Imogene still loves John Strong.

Gordon in a dance hall at San Francisco meets LaBelle Favorita. They quarrel; Gordon is later found dead while Favorita makes her escape. Helen, now a beautiful young girl, saves John Strong's life. Assisted by Imogene, Helen takes Strong to a farm house. Here LaBelle Favorita is now engaged as a maid. As Strong and Favorita recognize each other, the woman confesses that she is Anne Strong, his sister; that Gordon is the father of the foundling placed on John Strong's doorstep, 'neath Calvary's Shadow. At the end of Anne's story, Strong gives Helen, the foundling, to her mother and Imogene, now satisfied to whom the child belongs, begs Strong's forgiveness.

INTO THE DARK (Sept. 11).—Ruth leaves a note to her mother stating "I have left for the city with Mr. Clark, the man I love." Ruth's brother, when informed of Ruth's flight, goes in pursuit, but Ruth and the stranger make good their escape. Clark, the city man, when he arrives in the metropolis with Ruth is conscience-stricken. The girl is unaware of the man's true character.

In the meantime Ruth is attacked by a burglar and wounded. Ruth's mother and brother reach her bedside as the crisis approaches. The doctor tells them a transfusion of blood will save Ruth's life. Ruth's brother, believing her life not worth saving, refuses to submit to the operation. The man who tempted Ruth to the city, then resolves to make the sacrifice. Physicians tell him that he will probably die, but he says "It is her life or mine." Following the operation, Clark dies, but he saves the life of the girl who has returned to her mother and brother.

MAN'S LAW (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 13). Marion Wade is known as the "Squire" of the little fishing village. She is very fond of her foreman, Will Green, whom she believes is an up-right man. Green, however, is not all that she thinks he is, for when he is absent from her he makes love to Gertie, sister of Bill Robbins, one of the fishermen. One day the ocean adds another member to the colony, when Joe Lane, a beach comber, is washed up on the shore. He is cared for by Marion and Robbins and soon recovers his health.

While watching from the rocks a short time later, Gertie hears Green propose an immediate marriage to Marion. It is then the simple little fisher girl realizes what this means to her. In terror she hurries to Green and begs him to save her honor, but he will not listen to her. The next day Green and Marion row away and are secretly married. Realizing that it will be easier to die than face what is to come, Gertie hurls herself from the cliffs. Her body is found by Joe and brought into the village. Bill immediately sets out to avenge his sister's death. Green escapes to the water and starts to swim away but Bill fires after him and the girl's betrayer goes down.

A year passes and Marion begins to forget the sorrow the event brought to her. She has discovered a greater happiness in the love of Joe. Certain that her husband is dead she consents to become the bride of the worthy man. One day a stranger comes into the village. He goes to Marion's home and finds her in Joe's arms. He asks her what right she has to have a lover when her husband is still alive. In the stranger, she recognized Green, who was merely wounded by Bill on the day of Gertie's death. Suddenly there is a rifle shot and Green falls to the ground, dead. Bill emerges from hiding and stands in triumph over the fallen man, for he has at last avenged his sister. Marion turns to Joe and he takes her in his arms, for nothing now stands between them and happiness.

WEARY GOES A WOOING (Sept. 14).—Miss Satterly, the new school teacher, is loved by all the cowboys of the "Flying U" ranch. Weary is shy and only makes the acquaintance of the pretty school teacher by main force on the part of his cowboy companions. Jack and Emmett write an invitation to Weary to go to a dance, and sign Miss Satterly's name thereto. Miss Satterly finds a rough draft of this note.

Weary's run-away horse brings him to Miss Satterly's home. They compare notes and the night of the dance, the cowboys are astounded to see Miss Satterly and Weary together at the dance where Weary is fed ice cream by the school teacher, while he tells her how much he loves her.

KICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

THE PURPLE NIGHT (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 15).—Carol, a young and attractive woman, is recognized as a great painter. Her life has been rather commonplace, particularly in light of the fact that she is of a nature that craves excitement and adventure. She tells her fiance that she is tired of the monotony of society life. She wishes a man for a husband, a man who can hold her by force. Their engagement is broken. Chance throws her in the way of a band of crooks. They hold her up for her pocketbook and she is stopped in her pursuit of them by their leader. Her anger toward him changes to interest as she recognizes in him a handsome specimen of manhood and realizes that he would make a wonderful subject for a painting. She persuades him to pose for her.

A young inventor is showing much progress with a new explosive. He discovers his Japanese servant about to steal his plans and discharges him. Meanwhile Carol has discovered a growing infatuation for this man of the slums. It frightens her, but she finds herself passionately drawn to him. He tells her of his life and she asks for a glimpse of it. He takes her to the slums (she disguished as a bowery tough), and the rough life fascinates her. She craves for it more and more and finally becomes a habitue of the lower world, always in company with this man.

One day she expresses her desire to see a real holdup. One is planned and the inventor's father is chosen as the victim. The police have been warned and in the fight that follows both the inventor's father and the crook are killed. Carol escapes in the taxi in which she came, changing from her disguise to her regular clothes while in the machine. She then jumps out, boards a car and thereby evades the police, who later find her discarded disguise and hold it as a clue.

Carol, for several months after the affair, is ill and, while convalescing, meets the inventor. Months before he had met her at a ball and, since that time, has been ardently in love with her. He now tells her of his love and she responds after a time. In going through his laboratory he explains to her his inventions and shows her a little switch which, if turned, would destroy the house and all in it. Wishing to keep no secret from her, he produces her old disguise and explains that the woman who wore it was the cause of killing his father. He has sworn that she shall suffer for her crime.

He is called to a neighbor's phone—his own being out of order. Carol is left alone in the house. The discharged Japanese servant has been watching and now sees his chance. He enters, points a revolver at Carol and starts to pick up the plans. She requests him to drop the papers. He refuses. She puts her hand on the switch and turns the power on. An explosion follows. The Jap meets instant death. Carol dying, points to the Jap. Her lover understands and she dies in his arms.

BIOGRAPH.

THE MAN WHO NEVER WAS CAUGHT (Sept. 13).—The cast includes Joseph McDermott, Mary Malatesta, Wm. J. Butler and Jack Drumeir.

Shifty Steve, the elusive crook, known in the underworld as "The Man Who Never Was Caught," enters a house to rob, and, reaching the bedroom of the young householder, chokes her into insensibility. A policeman on the beat, becoming suspicious, has trailed Steve to the house and followed him through the open window. Before proceeding with the night's business, Steve throttles him and hurls him through the window. On coming to, he blows his whistle, and a comrade arrives on the run. The householder gives information which puts the law on Steve's trail; but in a chase over housetops and down fire escapes he makes a daring getaway.

The next day's newspapers carry a story of the crime and also an interview with a social worker on conditions in the underworld. A girl reporter is assigned by her city editor to investigate dance halls for a Sunday feature story. In a low dive she meets a girl habitue who points out Shifty Steve. Steve speaks to the girl, who proudly introduces him to the reporter. A "sorehead" crook leads a gang attack on Steve, following which the place is raided by the police. Steve gets away in company with the reporter, who tells him that she will admit him to the house where she is employed as maid. The trap is laid in the newspaper owner's home, and Steve is captured. But on the way to the station house he effects a daring escape.

THE REHEARSAL (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 14).—The cast includes Vera Sisson, Jose Ruben, Kate Bruce, Irma Dawkins, Madge Kirby, G. Raymond Nye.

Cecil King, a young playwright, sees a girl attacked by footpads and rescues her. She is an orphan, Evelyn Payne by name, the daughter of a former great actress. King takes her to his studio building in which he lives, and introduces her to Mabel Grey, his fiancee, an artist with a studio across the hall from his own. Mabel, with an ill grace, consents to take care of Evelyn for a few days. Cecil requests his mother and sister, who live in the country, to take the girl in, and when they consent Evelyn goes home with them. Cecil takes his play to a manager who reports that, while it has a good idea, it is not rightly constructed. On hearing of his disappointment, Mabel tells Cecil that she has no time for a failure; but he vows always to wear her picture, for the memory of her will inspire him to success. But success does not come, and he returns home.

Evelyn finds his discarded play in a waste basket, and is so moved by one of the scenes that she begins to enact the principal role. Cecil overhears her, and she encourages him to try again. Guided by her inherited dramatic instinct, he rewrites the play, and it is accepted. During his absence Mabel has an interview with Evelyn, in which she cruelly poisons her mind against Cecil. When he returns he suggests that they rehearse the big scene of the play. Maddened by jealousy, she plays the part of the avenging fury with such passion Cecil has to struggle for his life. At last he wrests the dagger from her and exclaims: "You meant to kill me!" Sobbing, she tells of the suspicions fostered by Mabel. "She said you carry her picture always. I couldn't bear the thought that you were false to me." Thereupon, Cecil draws from his pocket the picture which he treasures so jealously. It is the portrait of Evelyn, not of Mabel. For months he has carried it, ever since the day when he realized Evelyn's nobility and the shallowness of the girl he once thought he loved. Mabel, her scheme exposed, sees Evelyn happy in Cecil's love.

THE SOUL OF PIERRE (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast includes Franklin Ritchie, Clairette Clair, Vola Smith, Louise Vale, Gratchen Hartman, Kate Bruce, Charles H. Mailes, Hector V. Sarno and Jack Drumeir.

"Marie, I bequeath you my life and soul." With these words the artist Waldimir crowned his devotion to the invalid model whom he loved so dearly that at the bidding of the crystal gazer, he took poison and freed the spirit which would enter Marie's ailing body and renew her health. From that hour Marie grew stronger. Doctor Davidoff, the eminent scientist who had pronounced her case hopeless, was amazed. He told of the remarkable cure to Pierre Loriot, the artist whose bosom friend Jacques De-Vignes, was a victim of failing health. Pierre had come to that point in life where the will to live is ebbed. Clemence Villa, the actress renowned as a heartbreaker, had made him riotously happy for a few months until he discovered her faithlessness. Then wishing to die, he sought justification for suicide in the desire to benefit his friend.

He little thought that Juliette Jacques sister, loved him hopelessly. Scouting Waldimir's example, he threw himself into the sea. From that moment Jacques began to mend. Once more active in society, he met Clemence and fell victim to her wiles. When she demanded money he was shocked but even that did not cool his passion for her. At last he learned from her own lips that the bills which annoyed her had been paid by a foreign nobleman. It seemed to him, then, that the portrait of Pierre, who had given him his soul, rebuked him for his folly.

At this time Doctor Davidoff, traveling in Corsica, made a startling discovery. Pierre had been saved from the sea by fishermen. The doctor insisted that he return home. Juliette was overjoyed, but Jacques fell mortally ill on seeing Pierre. Too late, Clemence took ... and came to see her victim, but they would not permit her to profane his last moments. He was a ready dying. The soul of Pierre, which had sustained him, was the soul of Pierre ... and Pierre needed that soul with which to love Juliette.

A LASTING LESSON (Sept. 16).—The cast includes Edward Coxe, Kate Bruce, Claire McDowell and Vean Hale.

Because her father is addicted to drink, the girl will not marry her lover, as she deems it her duty to care for the weakling whose craving for liquor increases upon the death of his wife. The lover, disgusted by the other's weakness, reprimands him. Hot words follow, and in the heat of passion the drunkard strikes the young man down. His daughter is persuaded by her lover to try a desperate remedy, whereby the drunkard may be cured.

She agrees, and ... sters in her father's mind the delusion that he is a murderer. In despair, after a sleepless night, he goes to a hotel, whence he sends the girl a note telling her that she must hasten if she desires to see him alive. Her lover gets the note and hastens to the hotel, arriving before her. He bursts into the room as the would-be suicide places a pistol to his head. The shock of seeing his victim's ghost, as he believes, sobers the drunkard.

THE GIRL AND HER TRUST (Sept. 17).—Lubin Reissue No. 1... The cast includes Dorothy Bernard, Wilfred Lucas, Alfred Paget, Charles H. Mailes and Charles H. West.

The express agent receives a shipment of gold and leaves it in care of the girl operator at the lonely station while he goes to lunch. Two tramps drop off the train and, seeing the girl defenseless, attack the station. She barricades herself in the inner room and telegraphs for help. The tramps cut the wire, but a part of the message gets through and a special train is dispatched to the scene. The express box is in the outer room, but the girl has the key, so failing to effect an entrance the tramps determine to take the box away and open it at their leisure.

As they place it on a hand-car the girl, true to her trust, comes out and climbs to the car. They have no time to lose and make off at top speed, pursued by the special. Brought to bay at last, they are captured after a fight, and the plucky girl is rewarded with the express box intact.

HEART TROUBLE (Sept. 18).—The cast includes Vola Smith, Alan Hale and Charles Bennett.

The young novelist sees a beautiful girl and, badly smitten, follows her home, where, from the name plate on the door, he learns that she is the daughter of a famous specialist on heart diseases. Eager to meet the girl on any pretext he plans to become a patient of the doctor, and to that end deluges his system with strong coffee, to produce symptoms described in a book on affections of the heart. The scheme succeeds and the love affair develops rapidly.

But the doctor withholds consent to the marriage on the ground that the young man's heart is badly affected. The lovers run off and get married. Months later the doctor makes a discovery which sends him posthaste to the novelist's rooms with a pistol in his hand. A manister is summoned, but he laughs and says, "I married them months ago." Whereupon father capitulates and acknowledges that, though a specialist, he doesn't know everything about the heart.

THE FINEST GOLD (Sept. 9).—The cast includes M. McQuarrie, Arthur Moon, Hobe Buckhant. Scrooge McQuail is a miser. When his son Bruce marries against his wishes the old miser turns the young couple out of his ramshackle home. Bruce makes a gallant fight and after the arrival of a baby there is an added incentive for him to work. He makes a living working on some excavation works and longs for the time when he will be able to give his wife and baby a better home. The old miser, left alone, counts his gold for comfort, and one day finds a picture of Bruce when he was a small lad. The old man in a softened mood contrasts the glint of gold in the chi... hair with the glittering gold he has scrimped and saved and his heart softens. But day by day a moment's work is battling between the woman for taking his son away from him.

combined efforts of the cops to finally get them safely inside the hotel. Hiram and Arabella, seeking surcease from the tedious drudgery of the farm, arrive at the same beach, accompanied by the ever present carpet bag. Their arrival causes a disturbance in quite another way, for the cops have a hard time keeping them out of the way of people and vehicles.

Reggie and his wife in order not to be recognized array themselves as rubes. Rudolph, 'the Rat," sees them come out and sees Reggie put a roll of bills in the carpet bag which he carries. He follows them, determined to get the money at all hazards. Hiram and Arabella have such a hot time that they seek a place to cool off and wander into an ice cream parlor. They have set the carpet bag in the aisle and when the waiter brings the order he stumbles over it and kicks it beneath a nearby table. Reggie and his wife are enjoying the sights. "The Rat" has failed in every attempt he makes to get the grip and the couple finally take a ride in a "scoop," which ends in a runaway and Reggie is thrown into the lake.

Shivering with cold, they make their way to get something warm and enter the same place where Hiram and Arabella are. The waiter again stumbles over their grip, which is identical to the one Hiram and Arabella have, and kicks it beneath Hiram's table. When the latter leaves he takes the grip and the young millionaires at once grab him. Hiram is taken to the police station, but tells his tale and is allowed to go while the young couple are taken to the station as grip snatchers. In the excitement "the Rat" sneaks off with Hiram's bag, and going to a secluded spot, opens it, but instead of money, he finds a rooster and some eggs. Hiram, growing hungry, opens his grip for lunch and finds instead bundles of money. Arabella persuades him to keep it and they decide to sneak home with it. Meanwhile, at the station, the young couple have proven their identity and a cop is sent for Hiram. He and Arabella are caught and brought to the station. "The Rat" has been seen by two cops and after securing the grip he has cast aside they finally capture him and take him to the station. Hiram and Arabella are about to get into serious trouble when "the Rat" and his captors arrive and straighten matters out. Arbuckle then takes the rubes out for a time.

LAEMMLE.

THE LAST WORD (Sept. 12). The cast includes Daddy Manley, Walter Belasco, P. Machete, Gladys Appleby. "Dad" is the manager of the telegraph room of the Kripps News Service and for forty years has rendered them invaluable service. Everyone, from Moss, the resident manager down to the office boy, fairly swears by Dad. A new general manager, Harrison Cole is engaged and starts out on a tour of inspection of the various branches. He is a firm believer in young blood and as a consequence Moss is ordered to dispense with Dad's services. Moss cannot bring himself to the telling of the bad news to "Dad." He calls the employes about him and tells them the news. They are staggered, and a petition to demand the reinstatement of "Dad" is suggested. This is acted upon, but without result. A plan is then suggested by Moss to convey the impression that the company, in recognition of Dad's faithful service, has honorably discharged and pensioned him on a pension for the remainder of his days. The employes create a fund to which each subscribes a nominal sum to cover the supposed pension, which they are to deliver to Dad at the end of each week. So that Dad may not be entirely cut off from his beloved work and in a way be made to feel that he is still one of them, Moss installs a wire running from the telegraph room to Dad's little room and in their leisure moments they go up with Dad and every evening at the close of work they find him good night over the wire. Some time later the general manager makes another tour of inspection and Dad's learning of his arrival in town decides to personally thank him for his kindness. He calls on Cole at his hotel and there he finds, cast out, crushed and broken hearted, Dad returning to his post. Just as he leaves the usual evening flutter from the tracks of the odd beam to and fro. He is not thinking enough to answer one. The next, becoming alarmed as he does not respond to the incoming call, rushes to his room, and there they find him, cold in the embrace with a smile on his face. He had sent his last "Thirty."

BOTH SIDES OF LIFE (Three Parts, Sept. 6). The cast includes Ella Hall, W. Standing, Maud George, Allen Forrest, D. Mason, Miss Wright, Paul Thorne is a young theological student in a country town. He is half in love with Blanche, the belle of the village, although he finds it difficult to lay aside his rubes to give her his time. Blanche chafes at the apparent disinterestedness of the coming young minister. She feels the call of the city and after a quarrel the pair separate and Blanche soon loses herself in the whirl of the city. Young Thorne goes to the city to be given a parish. In the slums of the city, Larabie, a crook, has in his power a mere child, Ella, whom he controls through damaging knowledge he possesses relating to her father, a hopeless "dope fiend."

Blanche has married, but continues her butterfly existence. Her husband leaves upon an extended business trip, and she forthwith enters the social whirl stronger than before. Her maid having been taken ill, she finds it necessary to advertise for another. Ella is forced by the crook, who sees a chance for gain, to apply for the position and prepare the way for their later visit to the mansion. Her father dies, and, feeling the restraint lifted, she lays a trap by which her masters are captured.

Meanwhile, at a gay reception, Blanche meets the new parish minister. Thorne recognizes her, and he invites her, along with the others, to attend services at his church. Blanche promises. After the minister has left a discussion ensues, in which the hostess laughingly recalls Blanche's jesting boast that she could bring any man to her feet. Blanche, on a dare, says that she will bring even the new minister to her feet, if given time. She attends church next Sunday, accompanied by Ella, her maid. This being practically Ella's first visit to a meeting of this kind, she is deeply impressed with young Thorne's sermon. Blanche invites the minister to call, and exerts the power of her charms upon him. During the days which follow, an inward struggle takes place within the young minister's breast. Ella, a silent observer of all, is aghast at what impends. Blanche is at last on the verge of victory over the minister's better nature. Again the old temptation overcomes him, and he is on the verge of returning to Blanche's embrace. It is then the remembrance comes to him of the childish simplicity and faith of Ella, whom he first met when they attended his church together. Thorne, revengeful, goes to Blanche's home to rebuke the woman who would dare to lead him from the virtuous path.

Blanche becomes hysterical in her passion when she sees Thorne again enter her presence. She assures him she knew he would return. He says he has returned, but for a different purpose. Overcome with thoughts of revenge, he grabs a paper knife from the table and bends above her in a threatening attitude. It is then that the maid interferes, grabs the knife from his hand and recalls to him his religion. Blanche, weeping, appeals to him in her repentance, and is forgiven, while the heart of the minister goes out to the little maid.

AGNES KEMPLER'S SACRIFICE (Two Parts, Sept. 12). The cast includes Hobart Henley, Jean Hathaway, Cleo Madison, Hilda Sloman, Ray Hanford, Agnes Vernon, Baby French. Tom Wren is the pampered son of a wealthy mother. The Wren fortunes are at a low ebb on account of the poor management of the widow and her son. It is the mother's fond wish to replenish the family fortune by a marriage between Tom and a wealthy young heiress. Tom apparently agrees with this plan, but is really in love with Agnes Kempler, a model. He has furnished a house in anticipation of his marriage with the model, and one day, while his mother is shopping in the store in which the model works, he sends the girl a note that everything is ready for their marriage and to be at the house at four that evening. The young couple are married secretly and start on their new life full of hope.

Nearly all the fortune of the Wrens is invested in coal mines in West Virginia and, on the recommendation of an old family friend, Tom is sent to look after their interests. Tom meets John Ford, a mountaineer whom he formerly knew and his daughter, Ella. Tom is trying to figure a road out which is unfamiliar to him, when Ella offers to accompany him and they set out in the machine. An accident happens and they are forced to remain out all night. Her father has grown anxious over her absence overnight with a man and sets out to find them. He locates them and tells Tom he will either have to marry the girl or be killed. He is forced to marry her. Soon afterwards he leaves for home.

Time passes and Tom gets a note from his accountancy wife that she is in the hospital with a baby. He goes to his mother's house and she greets him with the news that all their fortune is gone and he will have to marry the heiress to save them from ruin. He shows her the note he has just received and tells her it is impossible. Tom arrives at his home and Agnes notices his pocket is torn and insists on fixing it. In running her hand in the pocket to sew it she finds the note. She is horror struck, but manages to keep him in ignorance of her knowledge. She goes to his mother's house to make herself known. there. Ford, the father of Ella, arrives, and Agnes, in the next room, hears him tell of the baby. She renounces her claims as a wife in favor of the wife and baby.

Time passes and Agnes has become an outcast. Ella has died and her child is left to comfort her husband. He has vainly tried to find Agnes. Ella's child is the pride of the household and has a great hold over her father. Agnes is brought into court on a charge of vagrancy. A society woman present, representative of an uplift league, takes her to the league, telling the judge she would like to try and reform her. In the room she meets Tom's mother, who is also a member of the society. Mrs. Wren overrides the girl's objections and takes her home with her. At his home Tom is playing in the garden with the little girl, when his mother sends him word to come at once. He complies and finds his long-looked-for wife. Explanations follow and there is a happy reunion.

SH-H' DON'T WAKE THE BABY (Sept. 7).—The cast includes Jos. J. Gerard, Ben Wilson, Dorothy Philips, Baby Rube. The Youngparent's baby is afflicted with insomnia. Launcelot Youngparent, coming home after a Fifth avenue "bus" ride in which he has been deprived of his watch by "Honest Bill," the burglar, is met by his wife with the pleasing information that the baby is asleep. Despite the dangers of a hand-organ and the songful canary, dinner is passing off silently and safely when the cook unfortunately drops a pile of plates and wakes the baby. She is dismissed. After two hours of strenuous effort on the part of the parents they succeed in putting the youngster to sleep by tangoing with him to the victrola, and depart to bed, tired but triumphant.

Enter Honest Bill through the nursery window. To his horror he sees that his entrance has awakened the baby, who is on the point of howling again. In desperation Bill walks the floor with the unruly infant, heats his milk over his bull's-eye lantern, and, after working to the point of exhaustion, is just easing the sleeping baby into his crib when Mrs. and Mr. Youngparent appear, suspecting the baby has awakened. Motioning them for silence, Bill finishes his nursemaid duties and proceeds to hold up the head of the house (in whispers) at the point of his pistol.

Mrs. Youngparent tiptoes to the phone and calls up the police station, begging for aid, and requesting that a policeman come, softly, as the baby is asleep. A policeman appears (on tiptoe), arrests Bill (in whispers) and searches him for dangerous weapons. The search results in the capture from his back pocket of a fearsome—milk bottle. As the Youngparents steal fearfully to the crib, the burglar having been removed, they find their young hopeful sleeping peacefully, and clutched tightly in the baby's hand is the very watch which Bill had removed from his father in the Fifth avenue "bus" a few hours before, and which the baby in turn had captured from Bill during the putting-to-sleep process.

IN THE SUNSET COUNTRY (Three Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast includes S. Bainbridge, W. Fogers, Jas. Bensen and Suella Maxime. Kal McCloud, a road agent and gunman, has a habit of holding up the Dragon stage. He is well known in Black Mesa and makes his headquarters at the Gulch saloon. Sims, the sheriff, has suspicions that he is the bandit, but so far has been unable to prove his theory. In the same place lives "Four-Ace Baker," known as one of the whitest and squarest of gamblers. The Rev. James Thorpe and his daughter, Nan, arrive. On the way the stage was held up, but the bandit was masked and no one recognized him. Thorpe comes to the saloon and pleads with Kal and "Four-Ace" to come to the meeting, as he realizes they are leaders, but they coldly decline to come. The next morning, after an all-night gambling session, they leave just as others are going to church.

In the ensuing week the two men again meet the preacher and his daughter, and during an interesting conversation accompany the latter home before they notice it. Thorpe invites them inside to dinner, and the two gunmen agree. The preacher again reminds them of the meeting the coming Sunday and begs them to come. They are undecided. The Sunday finally arrives. Kal starts to go to church, but his courage fails him at the door and he returns to the saloon, where he finds "Four-Ace," "Kid" Marion, a cow puncher from a neighboring town, makes the acquaintance of Nan, and finally one evening persuades her to go with him to a dance hall. Kal and "Four Ace," knowing the unsavory reputation of the cowboy, offer to take Nan home. Rather than make a choice between them, she asks both men to accompany her.

Later Thorpe enters the saloon and demands that Marion stay away from Nan. Marion, under the influence of liquor, abuses him, and finally draws his gun and deliberately shoots Thorpe as he is leaving. Both Kal and "Four-Ace" see this and shoot at the same time. The "Kid" is killed. Thorpe is carried home and found to be mortally wounded. He dies that night. Sunday comes. Kal comes into the saloon and asks all to be at the church, as he is to be master of ceremonies. All come, even "Four-Ace" taking a back seat. Kal does the best he can to make the meeting a success. Kal takes Nan to his own house and leaves her in charge of his housekeeper, while he moves his quarters to the hotel.

Nan is unable to choose between the two men. Kal hears of a large shipment of gold coming in on the stage and starts to hold the stage up, but realizes he is now one of the leading members of the church and foreswears his past. "Four-Ace" proposes to Nan and, although she loves Kal out of a sense of duty, she tells the former that she will give her answer in a letter mailed to him at Dragon. When Kal proposes she accepts him, but on the way to church she confesses that she really loves "Four-Ace," and that she has written him a letter to leave the country. Not wishing to mar the girl's life's happiness, Kal intercepts the coach carrying the mail, and destroys the letter to "Four-Ace" just before he dies of a wound inflicted by a bullet from the pursuing posse. Later Nan informs "Four Ace" why Kal held up the stage, and he at last realizes the worth of the bandit.

CRIME'S TRIANGLE (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast includes F. W. Smith, King Baggot, Edna Hunter, Wm. Bailey, John Small, assistant cashier of the Third National Bank, is married to an extravagant wife, whose only relative is a brother addicted to gambling. The story opens with John remonstrating with his wife at her extravagance. A quarrel ensues, and, after the husband leaves for work, the brother, Harold Briar, comes to her for money in order to continue his gambling. She tells him of the quarrel and he leaves. We now see John at work in the bank. Stephen Kopf has introduced him to a widow who wishes to become a depositor. She gives John her savings ($5,000), which John leaves on his desk when he is called to another part of the bank. Harold enters, and, seeing the money, puts it in his pocket and leaves. John returns, but, being preoccupied, does not miss the money until late in the afternoon, when, thinking over the events of the day, he remembers Harold's visit. John rushes to Harlod's apartment and accuses him of stealing the money. Harold confesses and tells him he has lost it at faro.

John, knowing the bank examiners are even then at work and that the loss of the money will fall on him, decides to end it all. He returns home with the intention and stops in his library to write his wife a letter of explanation. When the letter is finished he pours into a glass a dose of hydrocyanic acid and is about to drink it when he remembers that he has forgotten something of vital importance in his letter and returns to the library to add it to the note, leaving the poison in the whiskey glass on the dining room table. Stephen Kopf enters through the open French window, and, seeing John writing in the adjoining room, raises a revolver and is about to fire, but his hand shakes so much through nervousness he knows he will miss.

Seeing the whiskey on the table, he gulps it down and again raises the weapon, but before he can pull the trigger the poison overcomes him and he drops dead. John, hearing the noise, returns and sees the body on the floor. He is for the moment spellbound at the unexpected turn of events, and on closer inspection finds a note in the dead man's hand. He reads and discovers that Stephen had come there with the intention of killing him and making it appear that he (John) had defaulted to the extent of thirty thousand dollars so as to cover his own gambling losses on the stock exchange.

Stephen has forged John's writing, but has left the note unsigned. So John hides his own letter and the revolver. His wife, who has heard the fall of the body, rushes in and is shown the note. Then John tells her all that has taken place. John calls the police, and, as it is apparently a clear case of suicide, the latter leave after calling an ambulance for the removal of the body. John is promoted to the cashier's position, his wife repents of her extravagant living, gives up her jewels and servants and agrees to move into a less pretentious home. Harold, who has left the city, writes his sister that he is now serving his country in the Philippines. Subsequently John returns the five thousand dollars that caused all the unhappiness.

NESTOR.

THEIR HAPPY HONEYMOON (Sept. 6).—The cast includes Eddie Lyons, Dolly Ohnet, Lee Moran and Carmen Philips. Mr and Mrs. Newlywed arrive at Coranado Beach where they are to spend their honeymoon. Mr. Newlymarried and his wife arrive at the same hotel for their honeymoon. Newlymarried is in a bad humor, for on their escape from well-wishing friends he was hit on the head with a shoe.

In the tent city nearby four clerks are taking an outing, but there is a scarcity of girls about and each begins to bore the other. Some time later they see a fine figure in a bathing suit and the least one of the gang is elected to make her acquaintance, but when he arrives he finds she is a very dark colored lady. Harry disgustedly leaves the others and goes to the hotel. Here he meets Mrs. Newlywed, who is an old chum, and in the delight of seeing each other they embrace, just as hubby arrives on the scene. Harry tells her of their camp and invites her to come down and have a good time. He hastens back to the boys with the good news and they arrange for her reception. One of the other boys go to the hotel for an errand and runs into Mrs. Newlymarried, who was a chum of his, and her husband arrives in the midst of their effusive greetings. The boy invites his old chum to pay them a visit and hurries back to arrange for her reception.

Newlywed has given his wife a calling down for her actions, and she, being of the clinging sort, takes his rebuke weepingly. He disgustedly goes for a walk. Newlymarried tries to "pan" his wife, but she is a woman with a mind of her own and she proves to be the victor and leaves him in a huff. Mrs. Newlywed and Mrs. Newlymarried makes each other's acquaintance. Mrs. Newlymarried says she is going to the boys' camp, and the other reluctantly agrees. Just before they arrive, however, Mrs. Newlywed loses her courage and insists on returning, so Mrs. Newlymarried takes her back.

The two hubbies, too, have made each other's acquaintance, and, being companions in misery, tell their woes. They see the two wives and determine to follow them. Meanwhile, the boys forget all about the expected guests in getting into their bathing suits to go out to a raft where they see four girls. The two husbands see four men and girls on the raft and at once come to the conclusion that the women are their wives. They row out to the raft, only to find they are mistaken. Seeing that their husbands are bent on following them, each of the wives sends her spouse a note to the hotel to the effect that she has left him. The men kiss the missives and the wives, who have been in concealment nearby, observe them. This mark of affection effects a reconciliation with them.

HE FELL IN A CABARET (Sept. 10).—The cast includes Lee Moran, Jack Dillon, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry. Harold was a young divinity student. When his instructor assigned him to make an investigation of the cabarets he took it very seriously. He impressed his friend, Tom, as pilot amid the haunts of high life. The first night out he saw Mazie, the cabaret singer, and he became convinced she must be saved. Now Tom was broke, as young collegians often are. He got busy right away and wired Harold's father to come to the rescue of his son, who seemed likely to be led astray. The old man hiked for the city, followed by Harold's ma.

And it came to pass that Tom, after he had touched Harold's old man, thought he would take Mazie out and prove that she couldn't be saved. The whole affair untangled itself in the cabaret. Harold was watching Mazie. His dad was watching them both. Ma was watching the trio, and Tom was waiting for the family to get together so he could have Mazie to himself. Did he get her? He did not. Mazie invited Pa, Harold and Tom to meet her eight children. Whereupon the would-be saviors and her would-be affinity, in the person of the naughty Tom, did a dejected lock-step out of the cabaret.

SILK HOSE AND HIGH PRESSURE (Three Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast includes Billie Rhodes, Gene Rogers, Henry Bergman, Alic Howell, Louise Orth. A fire hose with 100 pounds pressure, some silk hose of summer weight, a theater, the police officer and two bachelors who flirted to excess, were the disturbing elements in the story. A new wife, who had been an actress and had too many callers, was the cause, and a man shooting up in the air on a stream of water was the effect. There were other effects just as striking and more numerous. It all started when the actress-wife gave a midnight party to her former associates and Bill and Mr. Jowlish tried to horn in on the revelry.

Her husband also thought he was going to have a quiet little party with Violet Vere de Vere, the soubrette, but she invited him to the same one his wife was giving. As is known, meetings like this lead to murder. The killing started with mere pistols, but rapidly branched out until fire hoses, silk hoses, cops, explosions, geysers and volcanoes were in the itinerary. Never since have the bachelors flirted, nor the wife given parties. And also never since has the police captain talked to actresses.

THE BROKEN COIN (Eleventh Episode—"The Clash of Arms"—Two Parts—Aug. 29). The cast includes Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Harry Schumm, Eddie Polo, Ernest Shields, Reese Gardner, W. C. Canfield, and Bert Wilson. At the end of the tenth episode, a story of which was published on page 1730 of issue of September 4, Count Frederick, who was following on horseback the train on which Kitty and Roleaux were riding, made a leap on to the last flat car. Kitty immediately sends a note to Count Sachio, who is in another coach, by the porter, telling him that his presence is desired in the last car and signing it with the signature of the Prime Minister of Grahoffen. When Kitty again reaches the last car she finds Frederick and Roleaux fighting. They notice Sachio and his escort coming through the train, and both realize that inasmuch as they are nearing the Principality of Grahoffen, the possesion of the coin will not do either one of them any good, as the King had the other half and his soldiers, who are near the railroad station, will take it from whoever has it. As Sachio approaches, all hide and suddenly Roleaux grabs him, and Frederick extracts the half of the coin from him. At Kitty's direction the coin is handed to Roleaux, and they leave the unconscious Sachio on the floor.

As the train slows down near the station, Kitty, Frederick and Roleaux manage to leave it unobserved and make their way back to Gretzhoffen. When the chief of police of Gretzhoffen is informed that Roleaux has escaped en route to the station house, he orders a thorough search made. Meanwhile the Prime Minister of Grahoffen and the King's soldiers have discovered the unconscious form of Sachio. They bring him to and learn how he had been knocked senseless. The search of the train for the culprits is about to be abandoned when one of the men look up the side of the neighboring mountain and see a woman and two men hurrying on. Soon a number of the soldiers are scurrying after them. Roleaux happens to espy them, and realizing that their escape would be cut off if the soldiers should cross a bridge, he sends a big boulder down the hill just as a few of the soldiers are about to cross the bridge. The boulder crashes into it and smashes it. Roleaux and the others then make for the only other means of escape—that of a narrow pass—and hold the soldiers in check with their guns.

Kitty gets the coin from Roleaux and manages to escape to Gretzhoffen for help. King Michael and his soldiers appear at the pass and put the others to route. Frederick is about to introduce Roleaux to the King when they discover that he has disappeared. Meanwhile Kitty, at at last finds the torture chamber she is in search of, and, upon opening the door, falls in a dead faint at the sight disclosed.

THE KNOCK-OUT (Sept. 17).—The cast includes George Ovey, Jefferson Osborne, Arthur Mund, Gordon MacGregor, Louis Fitzroy, Edith Ashton, Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully, Jerry strikes up a flirtation with Miss Smith who permits him to act as her escort. On a walk they meet Duke Earlton, her fiance, for whose company the girl dismisses Jerry. Stunned for the moment by her action, Jerry watches the chatting couple continue onward; then, recovering, he starts on a run after them. He attempts to induce the girl to desert her new found escort, but that individual, becoming annoyed, pushes Jerry aside. Picking up two boulders Jerry starts after his enemy but before he can use them in the desired way, the Duke takes the initiative and Jerry is sent sprawling into the street.

As he lays an automobile rushes over him. The occupant, Count O'Zowie, turns back. Finding Jerry unharmed he congratulates him on his fortunate escape, and gives him his card with an invitation to call. The card gives Jerry a happy idea. Armed with it he calls at the home of Dr. Gray, Miss Smith's uncle, whom she is visiting. Believing Miss Smith to be the doctor's daughter, he sends in his card for her. When he is ushered into the reception room he is dumfounded at the sight before him. Instead of Miss Smith, he sees a girl weighing only about two hundred pounds and whose form of diversion is boxing. Without much ado she captures Jerry, takes him to the gym, and in a few seconds knocks him out.

Jerry calls the Duke, who has just entered the house with Miss, Smith, and induces him to put on the gloves with the athletic girl, after putting horseshoes in the girl's gloves. Of course, one blow and the Duke is in dreamland. He then chlorotorms Miss Gray and places her on a chair beside the Duke with her arms about the unconscious man's shoulders. He then calls Miss Smith to the gym. Seeing the Duke in such a compromising position with Miss Gray, Miss Smith breaks her engagement and at Jerry's insistent urging consents to elope.

Meanwhile, the Duke has revived and, suspicious at Miss Smith's and Jerry's absence from the house, 'phones the police, who start in pursuit of the eloping couple. As they cross a shallow stream Jerry falls from the horse and the police, immediately in the rear, have no trouble in picking him up. Miss Smith continues on her ride, but Jerry is escorted away by the police.

FALSTAFF.

BIDDY BRADY'S BIRTHDAY (Sept. 3).—Biddy's husband, Patrick, was one of the most popular drivers in the Street Cleaning Department. His principal fault in Biddy's eyes was that he never cared to hurry off to work, and one morning she rebuked him bitterly. He partly mollified her by his explanation: "It is your birthday Biddy, dear, and I was thinking up a great surprise for you." Toward the close of that day, when Pat had dumped his cart at the place appointed, he stepped in the shade of the cart to light his pipe. He only had one match and that went out. While looking about his eyes happened to fall upon a bottle which was lying on the rubbish heap. He took it up and opened it—a cloud of smoke came out and from it emerged a genie. This apparition thanked him for his kindness and voluntarily offered to grant the next three wishes he might make, also the next three wishes of his wife. Pat wished that his pipe be lighted. This was accomplished without the aid of matches, and as he had no more commands for the genie at the time the visitor vanished after explaining that when Pat wanted him again he should clap his hands thrice. Pat proceeded on his homeward way. He went with a chum to a nearby saloon to get a glass of beer.

In the meantime, Biddy, not knowing that the gift of three granted wishes had been bestowed upon her, utilizes her wishes wastefully. She was washing clothes in the kitchen and, as it was warm, she wished that it would be cooler.

It immediately became so chilly she had to wrap herself in a shawl and naturally enough wished that it was warmer again. The third wish went into effect when she noticed by the clock that her husband was over due and she wished that if he was in Riley's saloon he would come out and start for home. This explained why Pat left the place very hastily and very much against his own wishes. Arriving at the outside of his home he happened to think it was his wife's birthday and he had entirely neglected a birthday surprise as he promised. He summoned the genie, explained the circumstances to him and the visitor from the other world after looking in the window of the house said loftily: "I can change that wretched room into an Egyptian Harem." The driver consented to the transformation, and it took place much to Biddy's surprise. Running outside she found her husband, and the two returned into the house. There Pat unwisely explained that the change was his little surprise for her and she became enraged. She rolled up her sleeves and prepared to chastise her husband, but he hid under a piece of furniture and before she could dislodge him had summoned the genei and withdrew his third and last wish.

"Put everything back as it was and beat it." This the genei did and the house at once resumed its former appearance. Biddy, believing that something unusual had occurred and doubting the evidence of her own eyes, questioned Pat and he craftily told her he had not seen any of the remarkable changes, adding, "I fear you have been drinking again, Biddy, darling, and on your birthday, too!" The crestfallen wife admitted the accusation, took the flask from the pocket of her apron, threw it out and promised never to give cause for offense again.

GAUMONT.

MAN AND THE LAW (Two Parts—Sept. 2).—The cast includes Norbert A Myles, Henry Stanley, Edna Payne and Harvey Schenck, George Benton, a popular young business man, whose character always had seemed above reproach, is brought to trial for his life for the murder of his sister's betrayer. While the sympathy of the court goes out to Benton, the presiding judge charges the jury to bring back a verdict of murder in the first degree. The heart-broken father, mother and sister of the prisoner wait, while the hours drag by, and behind locked doors the twelve men fail to reach an unanimous decision. Four times a vote is taken and four times the verdict stands eleven to one. At last, Will Harvey, the twelfth juror, rises and tells his reason for holding out for Benton's acquittal. Ten years before, Harvey, then a blacksmith in a small country community, had seen his sister, Blanche, deceived by an unscrupulous city fellow. The girl's elopement killed her father and mother. Then Harvey set out to find Tom Meade. In a wild chase across the train yards of a big city, Meade had dashed under the wheels of a locomotive and been crushed to death. Harvey ceases speaking. Every man in the room suddenly feels himself in the place of young Benton. The verdict is returned—unanimously, "Not Guilty!"

RIALTO.

THE UNSUSPECTED ISLES (Three Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast includes Fania Marinoff, T. Morse Keupal, John Reinhard, Havia Arcaro, Sydney Mason, Helen Ronan, James Levering and Phin W. Nares. An Indian Princess is decoyed by a New York tourist from a small isle in the South Atlantic to Broadway where she dances in native costume in a cafe. Castelene becomes the petted favorite of Claud Dixon, Ned Astor, his millionaire chum, and their gay crowd. From this life she is rescued by the old captain of the ship in which she made her flight from her native island. He takes the girl to a quiet sea town in New England, where her romance turns to tragedy. Castelene returns to the isle in the Far South and seeks Lisa, her native lover. She discovers that during her absence Lores, a native girl, has been trying to win Lisa away from her memory. Lores recently has been stricken with leprosy. She believes that this calamity has befallen her as a punishment for trying to steal away the love of another woman. Now she turns about and assists the princess in wreaking revenge upon her betrayer in New York.

RODEO.

A LEAP FOR LIFE (Sept. 9).—The cast includes Malcolm Blevins, Lillian Hamilton, Frederick Church, Walter L. Rodgers and Alberta Garcia. Williams, a millionaire, takes his daughter, Lillian, west, to see the country where he made his fortune. In the early days, Williams had procured a mine, then thought worthless, from Jose, a Mexican, who eagerly swapped his claim for a burro. A week later Williams struck it rich. Twenty years later, Jose is a keeper of a dance hall. He recognizes Williams on his return and swears to avenge what he now looks upon as an unfair trade. Jose is abetted by Carlotta, a dance-hall girl of the old type, formerly betrothed to Williams and then deserted. Jose determines to get even with the millionaire by harming his daughter. Frank Broadhurst, a young man from the east, rescues the girl from the Mexican's first attempt. A few days later, Jose overpowers Lillian and binds her to the seat of the empty stage coach. He then starts the driverless horses plunging down the steep pass. Williams comes hurrying to the spot, and Jose attacks him with his stiletto. Carlotta, overcome with horror, falls fainting on the railroad track. Frank Broadhurst, in an automobile, pursues the runaway stage. Meanwhile, Lillian has managed to break her bonds. The horses are headed for a broken bridge. She leaps into Broadhurst's car, narrowly escaping death. The lariat of a cow puncher pulls Carlotta from the path of an express train. Jose, afraid of his life, staggers over a cliff to his doom.

ECLAIR.

BRAND BLOTTERS (Two Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast includes Edna Payne, Norbert A. Myles and Henry Aldrich. Melissy Lee is loved by Jack Flatray, sheriff, and by Dunc Boone, secretly in league with the famous outlaw band, the brand blotters, captained by Black MacQueen. In a fit of jealousy, Boon disguises himself to look like Flatray and reburns the brand of one of John Lee's cows with the "F" of his rival. Melissy sees him—as he intends she shall. She accuses Flatray, and when he denies the charge she coolly refuses to have anything more to do with him. Later, MacQueen meets Melissy and falls in love with her. MacQueen, Sheriff Flatray and Bucky O'Connor, a police lieutenant, keep up a guerilla fight. The captain of the brand blotters reveals his identity to Melissy and kidnaps her. She is imprisoned in the mountains. Boone becomes jealous of his leader. He is shot by MacQueen. The latter informs Melissy that Flatray, also now is in his power, and that if he goes free it will be on condition that Melissy marries Black MacQueen. But the sheriff, himself, refuses to accept his life at such a price. Melissy pleads with MacQueen and he compromises by agreeing to lead Flatray to the edge of the town and see him into exile. Instead, he imprisons the sheriff in a deserted hut. At the point of a gun, MacQueen forces the parson to marry him and Melissy. He then takes the girl and starts to leave the country. But Flatray has struggled himself free. On the brink of a precipice the two men meet. They fight. Black MacQueen is forced over the edge. Melissy and Flattery watch his body fall into the seething waters below. It rises, floats, then it sinks. The lovers turn homeward.

KOMIC.

OVER AND BACK (Sept. 5).—The cast includes Fay Tincher, Frank Darien, Chester Withey and Max Davidson. Jake, rival for the hand of Fay, gets Ed, her accepted lover, into trouble with Fay's papa. Ed is warned not to dare visit Fay. A clothesline runs from Ed's window in the house next door over to Fay's window, and the resourceful Ed, by means of a pulley, contrives to waft himself across and meet his sweetheart in secret. Jake, however, soon is "on" to this. He changes the end of the line from Fay's window to papa's, and when Ed makes a second flight he finds himself mixed up with her stern parent. Not satisfied even with this, Jake monkeys with the other end of the line. Traveling back to his boarding-house, Ed lands in the room of a spinster, Fay's school-teacher, and there is discovered by Fay herself, supporting the fainting lady in his arms. Fay refuses to be consoled, and leaves in a huff. Ed hunts down Jake and sends him off on the clothesline for a little of his own medicine. Angry papa, at his window, unconsciously clutching the clothesline, also is jerked into mid-air by the clever Ed. Ed runs off with Fay to the minister, and papa and Jake are left dangling on the clothesline.

RELIANCE.

THE INDIAN TRAPPER'S VINDICATION (Sept. 6).—The cast includes Dark Cloud, Bert Hadley, Alice Pettus, Paul Willis, Mildred Harris, Art Ortego and Charles Gorman. Dark Cloud, an Indian trapper, is unjustly accused of robbing the trader's store. Winston King forces him to leave the country and warns him never to return. Arnold and Dorothy, the children of King, while canoeing, lose their paddle and drift toward the falls. Dark Cloud hears their cries for help. Leaping upon a log, he follows them. The Indian is just in time to save the children from the rapids. He brings them ashore. While Arnold and Dorothy are pleading with their rescuer to go home with them, a shot is heard. The children and Dark Cloud discover Petro, a half-breed, who has been shot by his Indian partner. Dying, Petro confesses that they had been quarreling about the division of the money they recently stole from the trader's store. The half-breed points out the direction his partner has taken, confiding to Dark Cloud that the Indian has the money.

Dark Cloud hunts down Hawkeye, the thief, captures him and brings him back to where Arnold and Dorothy are waiting with the wounded Pedro. By this time King, who has been warned of his children's danger, has reached the place. Dark Cloud takes the stolen money from Hawkeye's belt and hands it to the Major. Refusing to accept any reward, the Indian walks proudly away.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR (Sept. 8).—The cast includes G. M. Blue, Irene Hunt, Richard Cummings, A. D. Sears, William Moody and Adoni Fovieri. Osborne Peters is opposed to the marriage of his daughter, Alice, to Dr. John Montrose. Alice goes to live with her aunt, where her lover visits her frequently. Old Mr. Peters is taken seriously ill. The family physician, William McGrew is summoned. Knowing that Peters is very wealthy and that he has quarrelled with his daughter the unscrupulous doctor hypnotizes his patient into making over his will in favor of the nurse who has attended him. The doctor and the nurse have an understanding that they will marry and share the fortune. Then, to make results absolutely sure, McGrew administers to Peters an insidious poison. Alice returns with young Dr. Montrose to see her sick father. They find him, seemingly, dead. But Montrose detects still a glimmer of life. The young physician discovers traces of the poison. He gives Peters an antidote and revives him. Montrose then investigates McGrew's laboratory. The poison phial is found. A confession is wrung from the terrified nurse, and McGrew is placed under arrest. When Peters is himself again and able to understand all that has happened, he gives Montrose and Alice his blessing.

THE FATHER (Two Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast includes Ralph Lewis, William H. Brown, Chandler House and Francelia Billington. Bill Kenare, second-story man, is sent to jail for seven years, by Charles Spaulding, a wealthy manufacturer. Spaulding takes pity on Kenare's wife and child. He adopts Henry, two years old, and employs the mother as nurse. Kenare escapes before his time and joins a band of gypsy kidnappers. Anxious to get even with the man who sent him to prison, Kenare agrees to steal the rich manufacturer's little son, as he supposes Henry to be. In the guise of a blind vagabond, he meets the child and beguiles him with wonderful stories of a gypsy's adventures. On the day set for Henry's capture, Kenare chances upon his wife on the Spaulding grounds. He learns the boy's identity. Overcome by the realization of his own son's narrow escape, Kenare returns to serve out his term.

A DARK HORSE (Sept. 13).—The cast includes Bobby Fuehrer, Fred Burns, Margie Wilson, Ben Lewis and William Rhyno. Bobby, a newsboy, protects a cripple from being tormented by the other boys, and is rewarded with a position in Wil Haverley's racing stables. Bobby is allowed to exercise "Old Ironsides," Haverley's favorite horse, which holds the track record. The young groom sees a handbill announcing $1,000 in prizes for trotting races at the county fair. He determines to take chances on winning enough money to send his sick mother to the country. At the entrance to the fair, Bobby discovers a runaway monkey. He makes the monkey perform for the crowd, and takes in enough cash to pay his admission fee. But just here a constable interferes. The monkey has stolen a watch. Bobby is made responsible for the theft, and both he and the simian are locked up. However, they escape and return to the track. Bobby has entered "Old Ironsides," on whom he has bet all his money. The horse wins. Haverley himself is in the crowd. Furious, because his stable boy has entered his horse without permission, Haverley threatens to discharge Bob. The constable complicates matters by coming to re-arrest Bob and the monkey. The man who lost his watch, however, testifies to the boy's innocence, and Bob, freed, pleads with Haverley to go with him to see his mother. He does so. Touched, yet wishing to teach Bob a lesson, Haverley takes from him all his winnings and sends him back to the stables with the trainer. Then he gives the money to Bob's sick mother. The following day she is sent to the country, and Haverley keeps her there until she is well.

MAJESTIC.

HER OATH OF VENGEANCE (Two Parts—Sept. 5).—The cast includes Teddy Sampson, Charles West, Wilbur Higby, Frank Bennett, Joseph Henabery and Elinor Stone. Sergius, a fugitive from Russia, works in a California cannery. His daughter, Sophia, is put to picking fruit in the orchard. Soon, Ivan, the overseer, offers Sergius $500 for his daughter, Sergius agrees to the bargain. He knows that Sophia and young Nicholas are in love, but Ivan possesses the secret of Sergius' political record. Ivan attempts to take advantage of Sophia. Mrs. Gray, the owner's wife, protects the girl, and the overseer is discharged. Ivan compels Sergius to incite a strike and force the owner, by threatening to blow up the cannery, to pay higher wages. Nicholas disposes of the bomb in time to save the cannery, but Ivan is killed. In the excitement, Sergius is shot by Mr. Gray and Sophia, believing her father dead, goes to the owner's house to avenge the deed. There the sight of Mrs. Gray with her baby, looking strangely like the Holy Mother, stays the hand of the very religious girl. Nicholas comes to take Sophia to her wounded father, and Sergius blesses their love.

FOR LOVE OF MARY ELLEN (Sept. 7).—The cast includes George Stone, Adoni Fovieri, Carmen De Rue, Elsie De Wolf, James Cosgrave, Violet Radcliff, Charles Gorman and Jack Hull. Little Rex McKnight, the precocious son of snobbish parents, does not like to play with the children of his mama's rich friends. Every chance he gets he runs away to enjoy life with little Mary Ellen Rafferty, whose widowed mother keeps the newsstand and tobacco shop at the corner. Mrs. Rafferty's bills for food, fuel and rent accumulate faster than the profits of the shop. Her creditors become insistent. Mrs. Rafferty falls ill. At last, Mary Ellen pours their woes into the sympathetic ear of her playmate, Rex McKnight. Rex racks his brain to think of some way to earn money for those who are in danger any hour of being thrown out on the street. An old blind woman gives Rex his inspiration. He gets the grocer's boy to paint him a sign, reading, "Pity a Blind Widow With Six Children." This he hangs about his neck, and taking a tomato can to catch the bounty, he stations himself in a busy street. A few coins and much laughter come to Rex's share—until Chief Justice Jones happens along. The justice wins from the small boy with the "Blind Widow" sign the whole story of the Rafferty's distress. Judge Jones visits the sick mother of Mary Ellen. He arranges to satisfy her creditors and give her a new start in business. Meanwhile, Mrs. McKnight is in hysterics over Rex's disappearance. But Judge Jones makes that all right too.

HIS GUIDING ANGEL (Two Parts—Sept. 12).—The cast includes Charles Clary, Gladys Brockwell, Jack Dillon and Bert Hadley. Alaric Neal, notorious "bad man" of the West, sees beautiful Vivian Gray play "Parthenia." He idealizes the actress, and she becomes his guiding angel. Chance brings to Neal's door Jack Gray, Vivian's reckless brother. Neal saves the boy, and goes with him to New York. Vivian, a heartless woman of the world and no angel in real life, meets Alaric, the reformed outlaw. His feeling for her awakens a kindred emotion in herself. For the first time, both are really in love. A former paramour of the actress's, Fred Ainsworth, threatens to give away her past unless she borrows money for him from Alaric. She fearfully agrees. Neal falls into the trap, but discovers the ruse in time. Ainsworth, foiled in his attempt to get the money, turns informant. His stories are substantiated by Vivian's confession. Neal remembers his own wild career before love of Vivian chastened him. He asks the woman to forgive him, even as he forgives her, and wins from her the promise to begin live over again with him.

THE LITTLE LIFE GUARD (Sept. 14).—The cast includes Violet Radcliff, George Stone, Carmen De Rue and Porter Strong. Dan, the boaster, wins Anita away from Adrian, her devoted sweetheart. Adrian, wandering disconsolate on the sands, overhears the beach life guard telling an admiring bevy of bathing beauties stories of his bravery in winning many medals. Adrian consults the good natured guard on how to be a hero. Larry gives the youngster lessons in how to deport himself so as to make the biggest hit with the little girls, covers his diminutive bathing-suit with medals, and sends him back to recover his lost love. Dan and Adrian come to blows over their respective claims to bravery, and Anita, thinking to test the mettle of the rivals, pretends to be drowning. She ventures out too far and finds herself sinking in earnest. Adrian, determined to live up to his medals and his ideal of heroism, dares all to save Anita. The two children are swept far out by the surf, and are barely rescued by Larry, the life guard.

THANHOUSER.

A CALL FROM THE DEAD (Sept. 5).—(The cast includes Ethyle Cooke, Justus Barnes, Boyd Marshall and Thomas Curren.) A convict escaped from a penitentiary, eluded pursuit and found a place of hiding near the river bank just outside a small town. The problem that confronted him was how to dispose of his striped uniform. A well dressed man happened to come along and the convict attacked him. Later, when he had donned his victim's clothes, he found with satisfaction that the dead man was the son of an English nobleman who had come to America on financial business and brought with him a letter to the local banker. The convict weighted the body and threw it into the river. He then took his stripes and prison shoes, wrapped them up in a bundle, weighted it and hurled them also into the stream. He then departed. The next day the convict called at the bank, gave his name as that of the victim and from the city banker's letter he had found was enabled to forge his victim's signature and open an account without any fear of being suspected. The weeks went by and the imposter and the banker became more friendly. The imposter was attracted by the banker's daughter and the father noticed this with interest and approval, for it flattered his vanity to think his daughter might join the ranks of the aristocrats.

One afternoon when the imposter called at the banker's home the latter was looking over his mail; he turned from his guest to answer the telephone and the imposter picked up an illustrated London paper his host had been looking at. In it he saw the picture of his victim and knew that his crime could not long be concealed. The thing that troubled him was whether or not the banker had seen the picture, and from his conversation over the 'phone on an entirely different matter, the criminal was convinced that he was known. Desperately he determined to postpone the inevitable, and asked the banker to accompany him to see some property which he, the imposter, was thinking of buying. Before doing this, however, he had carefully torn up the incriminating picture and thrown it into the waste basket, torn up in little pieces. His host's daughter witnessed this action and her suspicions were aroused. She pieced the scraps together and learned the truth.

The young man to whom she was engaged happened to call at this time and she told him her suspicions, and the two hurried out believing the banker was in danger. They found the two men at the river front, the banker weakly struggling against the convict's attacks. The girl and her sweetheart arrived in time, and her companion sprang upon the convict. The latter wounded his assailant and was escaping along the river when a number of other men attracted by the sound of the combat appeared and cut off his escape. With pursuers in front of him and behind him, the only way left for him was to plunge into the river. He did this, and was getting away when those on the bank saw him look down, shriek with terror, and cry, "It is he, he is calling me," and then he sank beneath the water.

They dragged the river for the body later, and discovered it. The net which brought him up also disclosed the skeleton of a man's body, the arms fastened about the convict's neck, and a bundle containing a suit of convict clothes.

WM. BONELLI

William Bonelli, in "AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN," is every inch the American gentleman, under circumstances as irksome as ever man faced.

Through five engrossing, fascinating reels, he boldly wends his courtly way down the chivalrous path of gallant young manhood, fighting all the trying while the schemes, the crimes and the cunning stratagems of as unscrupulous a band of wandering rogues as ever silhouetted a caravan against the golden setting sun at eventide.

"AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN" is a photo-play that leaves a pleasant flavor and an appetite for more. In a word, it makes good.

The price, as you know, is considerably less than what you pay for similar high class Star Features.

Then there are the Armenonville pond with its luxuriant lily growths, the Longchamp Meadow, the Chateau of Madrid, and other sights of unfailing interest to every audience.

THROUGH THE SIERRA NEVADAS (Spain—Globe -On Same Reel as Foregoing).—The rugged and picturesque Sierra Nevada mountain range of southwestern Spain offers scenes of wonderful and startling grandeur. Primitive methods of transportation on account of the dearth of good roads are still in use, the arid condition of the country as a result of the lack of rain and the blistering heat makes an ideal place for the growth of cactus, little villages nestle at the foot of these silent, hovering sentinels of the valley, and all go toward making this an interesting and instructive subject.

A RINGER FOR MAX (Punch—Two Parts—Aug. 23).—Albert Obry, a gentleman who lives by his wits, is down to his last jitney and his room rent is due. He is at a loss as to his next move when a friend writes him advising that he make up like Max Linder, since he looks so much like the great comedian, and pass off as Max. He finds a picture of his double and determines to follow his friend's advice. Accordingly, he rushes into the apartment of Max and starts to change his clothes for some of the fine raiment of the comedian. The valet of the real Max is somewhat put out, but the remark "I was hit by an auto," and the fact that his boss sometimes changes his clothes many times a day, makes it appear all right to the servant.

But the return of Max makes it necessary for the imposter to connive to get him out of the way again. He does this by sending a telegram saying that his mother is ill, and advising him to come at once. The real Max goes at once to the side of his "sick" mother, and is dumbfounded when he learns that she is well. While away, the suprious Max again takes possession of the apartment of his more fortunate double, and receives an invitation to tea at the home of the real Max's sweetheart. He accepts and is there eating his fill when Linder comes on the scene. The faker again makes his getaway.

Some remarks made by the valet lead Max to suspect something is wrong and it worries him. But to cap the climax the impostor answers a note from Pathe Freres telling Max to come and call for his quarterly check. So perfect is the likeness that the cashier of the motion picture concern pays the fake Max the money. However, even the best laid plans go astray sometimes, and finally the two Maxes come together, head-on. A battle ensues and they are arrested. But the fake Max makes such a fuss and so indignantly denounces the comedian that the authorities hold the real one. At the trial Max is about to be condemned when he suggests that he be allowed to do his famous boxing act which he did for Pathe in the film "Max Has the Boxing Fever." This is a "scream" and it was easy to see which is the real comedian. The imitation is then taken off to jail and Max is acclaimed a free man.

TERRIBLY STUCK UP (Phunphilms—Aug. 28).—Tanglefoot Tom was born under an unlucky star. He gets into trouble with his landlady and a cop, but covers them both with flypaper and succeeds in making his escape. He takes refuge in a flour barrel in the bakery of his father-in-law-to-be and is passed unnoticed.

Dotty Dough, the sweetheart, thinks Tom is the ideal of her dreams as handed down by her favorite authors, but goes out with Samson Strong, the village "roughneck," just the same. Tom succeeds in throwing them both in the water as they cross a rather shaky bridge on their travels, and rescues the fair one from Mr. Strong's clutches. He and Dotty then stroll to the river-front and are standing on a wharf, Tom telling what a hero he is, when the cry "woman overboard" is raised. Tanglefoot demurs at going after her, but Samson, who has followed, throws him into the deep. He has to be fished out with the aid of bystanders, however. One of the helpers is a pedler who has left his fruit cart alone, and just as Tanglefoot rescues the "woman," who proves to be the leg of a department store dummy, and is safely on the dock once more, the cart starts down the slope and again throws him into the deep, and Dotty is left for Samson.

THE FALLEN STANDARD (Balboa—Two Parts—Sept. 6).—Dick Brent, intelligent, cultured, handsome, descendant of "blue-bloods," was narrowly limited in one direction: he considered ancestry as a thing more important than aught else in the world. He felt that a human born of highly-bred parents could not help being fine in every way, while he, whose birth was humble, try as he might, could never be a gentleman. He was a bit taken back when Rose Gray, whose social position in life was not quite his, refused his offer of marriage, preferring to gratify her literary ambitions. She loved Dick, and promised to come back within a year to be his wife. So she went to the city, where she finally won her literary spurs, and returned to Dick, carrying with her the abandoned infant she had found and taken care of. But Dick, overcome by his precious pride, scented something "irregular" in the adoption of Rose's ward, and couldn't bring himself to the promised alliance.

Broken hearted, Rose returned to the city, there to bury herself again in her work. Dick, later, married Helen Morgan, daughter of the banker, John Morgan. In the city, success follows success in Rose's literary endeavors. Robert the waif she adopted, fell into bad company, however, and drifted from the straight and narrow path. It was in the home of Dick Brent and his wife he was finally caught in an attempt at burglary. It is later proved that Robert is the son of the woman whom he tried to rob.

JOCKO, THE LOVESICK MONK (Pathe—Sept. 13—Bray Cartoon).—Little Willie Squirrel, from his vantage point on a high wall, flings that ancient destroyer, the banana peel, directly in the path of Jocko, the lovesick monk. Poor Jocko has all he can do now to bear up under the crushing weight of the huge box of sweetmeats for his lady love. And there, directly in his path, lies that treacherous peel! His heel touches it——! "Slide goeth before a fall" chirps Willie and frisks off.

Jocko recovers and presents the huge box of chocolates to his baby doll, Ella Fant, who daintily swallows box and all in one scoop. Then follows an arduous few minutes in which Jocko has his lap full trying to protect his love. He is crushed by something more than the realization that Ella is a bit too much of a good thing, and has an awful time of it fighting his way from under his burden of love when a mouse makes its appearance. Here follow the adventures of Birdie Caws with a lucious worm, and the irrepressible Jocko with his new light o' love, a coy and shrinking hippo.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (Part 7—On Same Reel As Foregoing).—The carrier pigeon is shown here performing its "life's mission." From time immemorial, the carrier pigeon has been used as a messenger, owing to its powers of endurance, flight and speed. Here is shown a closeup view of a message being attached to a bird. The start of a pigeon race is also shown, each contestant being numbered in the conventional way. When a large number of pigeons are entered for a contest, they are merely let loose. Here 6,000 pigeons start. By automatic checking, each pigeon is given due credit for the time of its flight. The end of the film shows a close view of a carrier pigeon that flew from Saragossa to Paris in 9¼ hours—an average speed of 100 miles an hour!

VIA WIRELESS (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Sept. 18).—Adapted from the play of the same name by Paul Armstrong and Winchell Smith, featuring Gail Kane and Bruce McRae. Marsh, a draughtsman in the gun factory of John Durant, is swindled by Edward Pinkney, Durant's general manager, out of the huge royalty to be paid should a gun of Marsh's invention prove a success. Pinkney loves Maisie, but is far outrivalled by Lieut. Somers, U. S. N. Somers also has invented a gun which he gives to be cast by the Durant Iron Works, and which, if successful, will do Pinkney out of his expected graft on the Marsh invention. Pinkney takes good care that the Somers gun is "killed" in the making. He then misrepresents Somers to Maisie and her father, and, though Maisie loves the Lieutenant, she feels she must give him up.

Accompanied by her mother and Pinkney, she goes in the Durant yacht for a cruise in Turkish waters, formally engaging herself to Pinkney. The Durant yacht hits a mine, and in the rush to save her Marsie is trapped in the wireless room. With the water surging up about her shoulders, and every means of escape barred, she sends out the S. O. S. signal taught her by Lieut. Somers. The lieutenant, aboard a U. S. cruiser, protecting American interests in Turkey, gets the signal, and arrives at the side of the doomed ship just in time to make a sensational rescue. Here follow a mass of complications as the plot gradually resolves itself to its end.

THE IMPOSTOR (Brady) Sir Anthony Gregson, Bart., a wealthy mine owner, is unpopular with his employees, because of his unreasonable temper and lack of sympathy. Sir Anthony has one son, Aubrey, a lovable young man, who has angered his father by refusing to follow the latter's dictation in the matter of his marriage. Sir Anthony also has a twin brother, whom he has not seen for years. The brother, who has humble associates, is known among them as "Blink." Blink is married to a gypsy girl, known as "The Tearer."

Sir Anthony makes a sea trip to benefit his health. By chance the yacht anchors off the coast where Blink has his hut. Sir Anthony accepts his brother's invitation to call on him; and while at Blink's hut, he has a stroke of paralysis, and dies. Blink changes clothes with Sir Anthony and, taking advantage of his striking likeness to the other man, impersonates him. He proceeds to the yacht, taking "The Tearer" with him, pretending she is Miss Gibson, his trained nurse. Blink, as Sir Anthony, sails homeward with his "trained nurse." The first thing he does is to call on Mary Priestly with Miss Gibson. Miss Gibson tells Mary that she wishes to marry Sir Anthony, but will not take this step without first getting the consent of Aubrey. Sir Anthony (Blink) is apparently reconciled to his son and gives him his consent to marry Mary. Aubrey, of course, gives his consent in return.

The troubles in the mines have reached a climax. The men have struck because of small wages and unsafe equipment. The men are enraged against Sir Anthony. To quell the disturbance, Blink, as Sir Anthony, agrees to look over the mines and investigate. This he does, taking Aubrey and Miss Gibson with him. After he investigates, he orders that new and safe equipment shall be bought, and that the miners' wages shall be raised. All this while Gouger, the friend of Blink in his former life, has been trying to see the man he thinks is Sir Anthony. Having found Sir Anthony dead in Blink's hut, he thinks that Sir Anthony has killed Blink and eloped with "The Tearer." Gouger is eager for revenge. He finds "The Tearer" and says that he wishes to have an interview with Sir Anthony. "The Tearer" (Miss Gibson), frightened for Blink's life, keeps putting Gouger off. At last, however, Blink (Sir Anthony) agrees to see him. Aubrey, Mary and Miss Gibson are in the room. To satisfy Gouger it is necessary for Blink to disclose his identity before Aubrey. This, of course, satisfies Gouger. Aubrey does not mind, as he has grown to love Blink. Blink again marries "The Tearer" for appearance's sake, and Aubrey marries Mary Priestly.

MORTMAIN (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Sept. 6).—The cast includes Robert Edeson, Donald Hall, Edward Elkas, Joseph Weber, Muriel Ostriche, Karin Norman, James Morrison, J. Herbert Frank, Claude James, Roland Osborne and Helen Pillsbury. Surgeon Crisp announces to his student doctors and friends that he has solved the problem of limb-grafting, and shows proofs. Among those deeply interested is Mortmain, a friend of Dr. Crisp's. Mortmain is a gentleman of leisure and collector of rare art sujects and is heavily in debt to his friend, Gordon Russell. He is warned of that debt by Russell's lawyer, a friend of Mortmain's. While Russell at first has no desire to call in the loans, when the two men become rivals for the affections of Russel's ward, Bella Forsythe, things change. Knowing the weakness of her brother, Tom, Russell gives the latter a chance to fall into trouble, hoping to turn that fall into his own advantage. Tom falls into the trap and Russell uses this fall against Bella, who has become engaged to Mortmain. Meanwhile, Mortmain is told he is completely ruined by Flynt, Russell's lawyer. He curses Russell and his declaration that he would like to kill the man is overheard by Flaggs, the clerk of Flynt.

Mortmain is informed of the murder of Russell, also that the police are after Tom Forsythe. Mortmain faints and in falling injures his hand terribly. Dr. Crisp informs him he must lose his hand and suggests he get another man's hand to graft upon the stump. He consents and Crisp finds a man who will give his hand, it is Tom Forsythe. During the operation Tom dies. Dr. Crisp has recognized Tom and keeps the news from Bella. Mortmain regaining consciousness after the operation, sees an uncanny vision of Flaggs and learns that Tom Forsythe, who gave him his hand died in the operation. He finally awakens from his terrible dream to learn that Tom is alive and well, and that the real murderer was Flaggs' while Mortmain's hand is his own.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 18 Two Parts Aug. 30).—Quabba, in the rowboat by the bottom of the yacht's companionway, heard the struggle upon the deck between Blair and Luke and the scream of Esther as, to escape them both, she plunged over the side. She clutched the rail of the rowboat, and Quabba drew her in. Like maddened beasts Blair and Luke tore at one another. They fell against the stanchions, which broke like frail wood, and the two men tumbled overboard. As a friend of the owner of the yacht Blair had the assistance of the sailors, while Luke swam strongly to the shore.

Meanwhile, Quabba proved himself an inexperienced oarsman and the boat was overturned. Quabba and Esther swam to shore. Quabba hired a carriage to bring Esther to her hotel. After getting into dry garments, she sent a telegram to "John Powell," president of the Good Hope Oil Company, Los Angeles. "Came here to see you urgent. Wire instructions." Within an hour she received an answer. "Replying to your wire, Mr. Powell left for mines seeking you. No way of communicating with him, as he is en route in auto. E. Gray, Secretary." Esther divined what had happened. The miners at the Lady Veronica works doubtless had learned of the hold-up in the buckboard. Perhaps the injured driver had recovered from the attack, and told the story., Then the foreman had some way got word to Arthur. Half an hour later, Esther and Quabba took train to the nearest station to the mountain mine, and, hiring horses, proceeded on.

On board the yacht, Blair found time lying heavy on his hands. Deeming from his telegrams that he was in a chastened frame of mind, Vivian thought the hour propitious to have Blair come to Los Angeles and meet Durand, the king of diamonds, and his accomplice, the dapper Count de Vaux. Blair came. Sullenly at times, and again with some show of fellowship, he accepted his new associates. Alone with Vivian, however, he muttered his protests. "But the diamond," she insisted sweetly—"we'll fight for that when it is found. I fancy my dear that you and I will be a match for our clever friends when it comes to the question of who will get the diamond." Blair grinned appreciatively. And seemingly he worked with "the pack" from that on.

PARAMOUNT.

THE INCORRIGIBLE DUKANE (Five Parts Sept 2).—The incorrigible Dukane, more familiarly known as Jimmy, has been leading the gay life of a millionaire's son, Dukane, Sr., being the wealthy owner of a concrete construction company. But his frivolity has finally drawn upon him the parental wrath and ended his allowance. So it becomes necessary for Jimmy to go to work.

He is sent out to the West, where his father's company is building a dam. Jimmy expects to be superintendent, but en route to the West a tramp steals his clothes, leaving his own discarded clothes. Clad in this sad uniform, Dukane arrives at the scene of the dam and tells the burly superintendent that he is Dukane, Jr., and has some to manage the job. The superintendent politely tells him to go to work with a pick and shovel at $2.00 a day. The surprises and adventures that ensue from this point, the development of the romance between himself, in the guise of a stone-cutter, and the daughter of the ranch owner who is fighting his father's company from building on his land, and his ultimate triumph in exposing the treacherous engineer who is cheating his father by substituting a cheap product for concrete, make a lively and very enjoyable photoplay.

Not "Just As Good" But "What You Want"

That's the kind of service we offer to our patrons. We furnish our patrons "WHAT THEY WANT" and do not undertake to impose by recommending something "JUST AS GOOD" or "BETTER" for the sake of extra profit, or to satisfy some other whim.

That, together with other good service accounts for the rapid growth of our business.

We have a proposition to offer to all Moving Picture Theatre Owners and Managers to increase their receipts by buying a new machine on the Instalment Plan at less than $1.00 per day.

Drop us a line for our proposition and Catalog.

Use the Best Lens to Make Performance Equal Promise

The banners outside your theatre promise wonderful pictures. Are you delivering the goods on the screen? You cannot be unless you are using the standard of the moving picture world.

Our objectives and condensers are unequalled in giving the even, sharp-cut brilliancy that reproduces vividly to the corners of the screen. Exacting operators do not fear for results when our lenses are used —then, too, they bring more money to the box-office.

You will find Bausch and Lomb lenses supplied as regular equipment with Edison and Nicholas Power Machines. Procurable by you through any film exchange.

THE CALL OF THE DANCE

His desire to have Yancsi Dolly and her sister dance for his guests at his Newport home caused Cornelius Vanderbilt to pay $15,000 for a special presentation of "The Merry Countess," in which they were the headliners, and which had just opened at the Casino Theatre. Miss Dolly is undoubtedly the most popular danseuse in the East and among her Broadway appearances were such successes as "The Honeymoon Express," Winter Garden; the "Follies," New York Roof, etc. Said Lynde Denig in last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "'The Call of the Dance' is delightfully free from padding and among the pictures that can be highly recommended!".

BEGINS Where Other Animal Pictures End

Released — — Sept. 15th

"Joe Martin Turns 'em Loose"

Produced at the famous Universal City Zoo

Two reels of animal picture that makes you wish it were ten. Two reels of breathless, hair-raising interest, with comedy and near-tragedy so closely knit you don't know whether to laugh or yell a warning at the dozen or more actors who seem to be taking their lives in their hands for your amusement or entertainment. Absolutely unlike any animal picture ever filmed. Our own critics are pretty hardened, and mighty hard to please, but they one and all agree that "Joe Martin Turns 'em Loose" is

THE MOST WONDERFUL — DIFFICULT AND FASCINATING ANIMAL PICTURE EVER MADE

Don't Forget—

"Joe Martin Turns 'em Loose"

Is extraordinary—meaning "very much out of the ordinary." It was produced by Paul Bourgeois, the noted Holland animal trainer, late with Pathe Freres, France, and as one great critic said, "It begins where other animal pictures leave off." No fake jungle stuff; no caged or toothless wild beasts. On the contrary the picture includes all the "man-eating" lions, tigers, jaguars, leopards, as well as the bears, elephants, camels, and a few wild cats from the costly and justly famous Universal City Zoo. And they are released from their cages by a gorilla, "Joe Martin," on a circus day. They chase the crowds, enter homes, stores, etc., and the fun is fast and furious, although you are expecting a tragedy every minute. THIS IS NOT PRODUCED BY TRICK PHOTOGRAPHY. REMEMBER THAT. Wire or write your Exchange for booking date if you want a picture that you can boost to the skies and draw satisfied crowds. Greatest wild animal comedy ever filmed.

TWELFTH PRIZE RELEASE

Released Sept. 27

THE GREAT BROADWAY FAVORITE, MISS JULIA DEAN, IN

"Judge Not, or The Woman of Mona Diggings"

DIRECTION OF ROBERT LEONARD

Direct from her remarkable dramatic triumph, "The Law of the Land," which ran for months at the 48th Street Theatre, New York City, Miss Dean made her screen bow in this very worthy play. The great gift of pantomime is surely Julia Dean's, and her thousands of admirers will the better understand her power on the spoken stage after seeing her in this silent drama. "Judge Not" is from the pen of that powerful writer, Peter B. Kyne, and never was his force and strength more subtly presented than in this film drama of six swiftly moving acts. The scenes are laid first, in a Montana mining camp, where, as an orphaned waif, she accepts an offer of marriage made by Lee Kirk, dance hall proprietor and gambler. In ignorance of their false marriage, Molly remains true to her marriage vows, and when the burning of the entire camp at Mona Diggings—(a most spectacular scene, by the way), with Kirk apparently trapped in the flames, sets her free, she goes East, there to renew a friendship with the hero, Miles Rand, a strong character, finely portrayed by Harry D. Carey. In the many strong situations, where Molly's past balks her way to happiness, Miss Dean shows herself a truly great artist. This play will make a sure appeal to every movie patron. The theme is big; the play is big; it is produced and acted in a big way—and the Universal is proud to put it, Miss Dean, and her capable company among the best features produced anywhere—The Broadway Universal Features.

HERBERT RAWLINSON IN

"Her Prey"

DIRECTED BY WM. WORTHINGTON

Everyone has heard of the picturesque beauties of Avalon, Catalina Island, just out of San Francisco Harbor. The Gold Seal Company, including its star, the popular Herbert Rawlinson, was taken to these rugged shores by Director Worthington for the purpose of filming scenes typical of the South Seas for the wonderful picture, "Her Prey." Some remarkable scenes of the surf and beach; wonderful diving and swimming in the dangerous shark infested waters of the bay. Mr. Rawlinson is a remarkable swimmer and in the story he is in search of sunken treasure. The picture includes some wonderful film taken from glass-bottomed boats. The scenic beauties and deeds of daring added to a strong plot make this a particularly notable feature.

THE POPULAR UNIVERSAL STAR KING BAGGOT IN

"An All Around Mistake"

DIRECTION OF GEO. LESSEY

Farce comedy is never more delightful than when played by a finished actor, who though usually seen in serious drama, has the true comedy touch. King Baggot's work in both serious and light dramas is so well known that the mere announcement of his appearance ensures a treat. In this clever and sparkling photoplay comedy Mr. Baggot is surrounded by all the favorites of the Imp Company, including Arline Pretty, Ned Reardon, Frank Smith, and the fun is fast and furious. Mr. Baggot in the lead has a part that shows his versatility, and the whole is staged with the realistic detail that marks all of Director Lessey's productions.

"The Sheriff of Red Rock Gulch"

With MURDOCK MacQUARRIE AND A STRONG CAST.

PRODUCED BY MURDOCK MacQUARRIE

A fact that is surely driven home by this fine picture is that the word "Western" is not sufficient to fully describe "Western" plays as produced by the Universal. They are "Western," to be sure; but they are always much more than that. The "Western" atmosphere and settings are there, but in human appeal; in the gripping stories they tell; in the depiction and portrayal of human passions and emotions, they are confined to no section. The unusual story, and the gripping climax will hold any audience in breathless interest to the finish. In the words of the "Colonel," you'll be "de-e-lighted," because it's a "bully" play.

"The Wolf of Debt"

With WILLIAM GARWOOD and VIOLET MERSEREAU.

Here is a splendid production—one that would go on its wonderful settings and photography alone—BUT—there is a lot more to it than that. To be sure, one of the big punches is accomplished by means of night photography in a rain-storm, but the story is there with a punch all the time. Handsome Billy Garwood, as the deserted husband of pretty Violet, shows himself very much of a man and will win your applause and that of every fan in your neighborhood when he chases the runaway wife and her lover on foot through a terrible storm. He is big enough and man enough to bring matters to the right conclusion with one of the most effective climaxes ever seen on the screen. Don't be afraid to go after business STRONG with this smashing three-reeler. It's a whale.

"The Ghost Wagon"

With EDITH STERLING and SHERMAN BAINBRIDGE.

Every movie fan loves a Western story on the screen if it's good. And the fan knows when he sees good Western stuff, too. He is educated—principally by Universal pictures—to know what good riding is. Some of the bunko stuff put out as Western drama would make a horse laugh. But Universal actors must know how to ride, and so there is a real thrill in "The Ghost Wagon" for every foot of film. The Western atmosphere is real, because this picture was made at Universal City, Cal. The story, which carries one back to the Pioneer days, is very strong, with a particularly effective climax. "The Ghost Wagon," which appears as a warning of death, is cleverly introduced, and adds greatly to the interest. This fine picture is worth boosting strong because it will please you and your patrons.

Prize Heart Interest Drama

Laemmle—3 Reels.

Released Oct. 3

"Her Three Mothers"

With AGNES VERNON, WM. QUINN and ADELE FARRINGTON.

In this home life drama Agnes Vernon gives a most sympathetic portrayal of a child, happy with the mother she loves; of her life when her mother is gone with a typical step-mother, and how happiness returned to her when she found real mother love in the home of a sweet woman who adopted her. The story has remarkable continuity, and the realistic scenes and settings are perfect. Slender as the story is, it fully justifies its length in the absorbing interest, the realism of the every-day life it portrays, and in the splendid acting of the entire company. The sentiment is sweet and true; there is not a mawkish scene or incident in the play, and in this regard at least it is vastly different from other plays of its type. It is bound to please any audience, and will prove a bright spot on the evening's program.

WARNING!

OWING to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays, many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution or every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

It leads back to the wilds of the great North Woods where men bulk big and life looms large.

There, untrammeled by convention, the primitive passions hold sway.

Men laugh and drink together, or battle hand to hand for life and love.

Boisterously they play, or grimly fight to the death.

Life is a gamble and risked on the throw of a die.

This great six act photoplay, adapted from the recently published novel by Henry Oyen, throbs with life and action. It holds the spectator with gripping intensity.

Paramount Convention

There has just been held in Chicago a great get-together convention of the managers and salesmen from Paramount offices throughout the United States, the eastern contingent of which occupied two special cars attached to the 20th Century.

The purpose of this meeting was twofold:

1st—To become better acquainted with each other and strengthen the bond of Paramount unity.

2nd—To adopt ways and means and inaugurate a campaign to help exhibitors secure the fullest benefit from the unparalleled Paramount National Advertising Campaign just launched—a campaign that will surely bring many thousands of new patrons into the theatres of Paramount Exhibitors everywhere. That means increased box office receipts.

If you are an exhibitor not using Paramount Service you should write our nearest exchange for particulars.

CHAPIN

from the other Entertainment Folks

Mr. Chapin spent much more than $100,000 in developing the material for the Lincoln Cycle before the Charter Features Corporation began to produce it in moving pictures. This is significant of the popularity that may be expected for the Cycle, and also of the financial success of Mr. Chapin's previous Lincoln work.

As a Lincoln Entertainer

Here we might quote from a thousand authorities. Mr. Chapin has received fees for several years, ranging from $150 to $500 per day, for his Lincoln monologue portrayal, the largest fees ever paid for this line of work.

As a Vaudeville Headliner

Thousands will remember the great popular hit made by Chapin as a high-figure headliner in vaudeville. He wrote, produced, directed and acted the title part in a series of one-act vaudeville productions.

As an Educational Factor

Chapin began his educational interests by teaching country school in his own district in Ohio when a boy of sixteen. For the past fifteen years he has been in demand at the greatest educational conventions, associations, universities and colleges. His time permits the acceptance of only a few of these engagements. He has appeared in Lincoln interpretations in the capital cities of thirty-six States of the Union at the highest fees.

As an Impersonator

This came both as a natural gift and as a result of Chapin's work. He has appeared in some kind of Lincoln impersonation—play, sketch or monologues—in nearly every State—nearly every town and city in the Union.

As an Actor

Some idea of what the critics of America have had to say of Chapin as a Lincoln actor can be gained from the fact that hundreds of newspapers have given full pages to describing his art.

As a Dramatist

Chapin is a dramatist, both by training and by instinct. He has always written his own plays, sketches and monologues. But not until the moving pictures came into vogue has he had ample outlet for this side of his Lincoln genius.

Chapin is known in every hamlet throughout these United States and what these other entertainers offer Chapin is ample evidence of the drawing power Chapin's Lincoln will have in the moving picture theatres which show

"HER HAPPINESS"

In 3 Happy Acts

"The Sweetest Girl on the Screen"

Harry Beaumont, screen-artful as actor and director, and with day-to-day study of this little girl to help him to know her better, wrote "Her Happiness" to let your public know the real Viola Dana better—to make them love her the more.

This feature is just Viola Dana, wholesomely sweet, living in a real story of life that we all have met. It's a simple theme but strong with situations, to sketch forth a sincerely convincing section of life.

Judged by the hodge-podge of "thrillers," by train-wrecking, automobile-smashing "dramas,"—"Her Happiness" stands out with a refreshing difference. It brings back memories of our own school and dream days, and somehow makes us feel better for the seeing it. Briefly, it's a "Viola Dana play." Your patrons will tell you—after the play.

Facts and Comments

A FILM bearing the title "As God Made It" was recently displayed before the audience of a motion picture theater in an Ohio town. Immediately following this title was the official legend: "Approved by the Board of Ohio Censors." Question: Has J. Louis Breitinger and his staff of Catonian sages approved it?

A NEWSPAPER in Iowa, where the exhibitors defeated a proposed censorship at the session of the legislature, speaks of a "powerful lobby" in the pay of the film interests and of a vast fund to influence legislation. We wish there were some truth in what our esteemed contemporary says. The film interests ought to maintain a legitimate agitation against legalized censorship and they ought to foot the expense incident thereto. So far the film interests have been somewhat lax in their opposition. Individual producers and individual exhibitors have co-operated with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in fighting the censorship evils, but there is a lot of work ahead of us all. As far as we know there certainly has been no attempt at corruption. On the contrary, the fight has been waged on proper lines and has been clean all the way through. We wonder where our e. c. obtained its information; we who ought to know have never seen any trace of either a powerful lobby or a corruption fund. Indeed, funds have been conspicuous by their absence.

PICTURES exploiting the sensational lynching of a man who had been condemned to death and whose sentence had been commuted have aroused the local authorities of many cities and there is talk of censorship in places where no censorship exists today. We believe that the exhibition of such pictures is an unmixed evil, but these pictures and others of a similar nature can be reached by proper legislation. Censorship is not the remedy. A law can be passed prohibiting in terms the exhibition of any such pictures. Such a course will prevent the making of such pictures. If the producer knows that the law distinctly forbids the exhibition of such films he will not care to make them. Censors often are subject to moral and immoral suasion and their judgment may be bad. There is always the possibility of "getting by."

RETALIATION is threatened by the exhibitors of a town in the Northwest in answer to a clergyman's threat to close up the motion picture houses on Sunday. At present the down-town section is open on Sundays, while the up-town section is closed tight. Both sections are of course under the same jurisdiction and under the same laws. The up-town exhibitors vow to close up everything and to put a stop to the Sunday excursions on the river if they are not permitted to open. As a rule Sunday opening seems to be regulated by public opinion rather than by statute, but it rarely happens that there are two varieties of public opinion in the same city.

FREE motion picture shows" given by churches and social institutions do not longer alarm the exhibitor as they did some years ago. The fact is that these "free" shows are such in name only. The "silver offering" really makes a general admission of ten cents. Nothing seems quite as successful as the motion picture entertainment in helping to pay off the mortgage on the church.

WE ARE very glad to note that the big producers who often need "supers" for mob-scenes, etc., are determined to protect these men and women against rapacious booking agencies who take as much as fifty per cent. "commission." The law allows a commission of five per cent., and no more. One of these supers, a good man temporarily in hard luck, almost fainted with hunger while under the eye of his director. There was an inquiry and an investigation showed the existence of the abuses mentioned. Hereafter the supers will, in all likelihood, be paid by the producers directly.

A SOLDIER who had lost his sense of hearing and his power of speech is reported to have recovered both faculties in a flash while viewing a screen comedy. The humor in the film was said to be overwhelming and the soldier felt he must either burst or laugh. He laughed and the miracle followed. Sorry the title of the film has been omitted in the newspaper reports. The advertising value of the story will not be overlooked very long.

Interpolation by Directors*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a kind of director who might, as a matter of discrimination, be called "Hotspur"—he was formerly engaged in producing the "ten-twenty-and-thirty" class of melodrama. It is not difficult to pick him out at the studio. He appears to be engrossed with matters so weighty that one wonders how his brain can carry what is crowded into its convolutions. Almost wholly unconscious of his immediate surroundings, he has a far-away look in his eye, as if trying to recall where he left his umbrella. How impressive he is during rehearsal! How mindful of his changing moods are those unfortunate performers who are called upon to interpret what has never been successfully explained to them! Their mobile faces light up when he smiles. They shudder with apprehension when his massive brow is occasionally corrugated in a violent attempt to think.

Carpenters and scene painters have been hard at work. A number of shaky canvas flats have been set up to represent the solid walls of an ordinary room which has, by a delicate sense of the perspective, been given a depth little less than a hundred feet. The property man has supplied a retired rug and some weary-looking furniture. Lights are turned on and off, and all is ready during several hours that salaries cease not and patient ladies and gentlemen in ghostly make-up linger near in attitudes of philosophic expectancy, still Hotspur is lost in meditation. Either he is unable to grasp what the author meant by the scene in hand or he is intent on interpolating a little something of his own. He decides to go to lunch. Hotspur must have time to achieve a sense of completeness with the least possible expenditure of that rare article known as grey matter.

Perhaps there is a scene of mental suffering to be shown, during which a character transformation is taking place that is intended to affect the audience—the outcome of that suffering is not only a regeneration of the character but an influence exerted upon those looking on. Hotspur can see no reason for all such fuss. Better bring on the village maidens fresh from the hairdresser to dance on three-inch heels—give the people what they want. Why blame Hotspur for adhering to the theatrical convention and commonplace with which his ingrowing soul has been imbued—can he help it? Besides, he came into the game of producing moving pictures at a time when they were not accorded serious attention by men capable of giving adequate expression to what was really worth while through the new and wonderful medium. Hotspur helped to bridge a period between rank crudity and the beginning of artistic production, but his day is over,—there is a revolution going on.

Critics should have led the revolution, but few of them did more than point the way. The revolt against what is false, stale, flat, weak and meaningless in moving pictures has grown out of an access of sanity on the part of producers themselves. The advent of screen stories of strong purpose, of powerful indictment, of prophetic enlightenment, arousing a gripping interest by intelligent portrayal of our joys, sorrows, hopes, struggles and aspirations, has stirred the people and through them the producer until he is making a struggle that is little short of frantic towards leadership in the movement for fewer and better plays, those bearing the marks of creative genius and artistic treatment.

In view of the general aim to improve quality, TO WHAT EXTENT SHOULD A DIRECTOR INTERPOLATE? Live question of today, and even of tomorrow, it need not be clouded by the fact that a few authors can write plays which need not be changed to any material extent, nor by the fact that a few directors can evolve a finished statue from very common clay. The concrete problem is one involving the average good story and the average good director. Shall he follow script? Shall he edit? Shall he amplify? The answer would be easy if his judgment was infallible, his good taste assured and his imagination exhaustless, and even then the fact that the larger part of his time and his energy must be given to the arduous duties of interpretation adds a complication seldom considered. Another easy answer is to have author and director get together and thrash it out between them before the work of production is undertaken, but that is not always possible.

Admitting that a harmony of action and a completeness of understanding between author and director make strongly for perfection in any production where both are big factors, admitting also that painfully few authors know how to prepare a story so that it can be successfully visualized without a lot of interpolation, is there any rule, or set of rules, by which an experienced and capable director can be guided when called upon to materially change the form of a script having intrinsic merit in the story it tells? Merely by way of suggestion, he might read the script until he has so fully grasped its main purpose that he can feel the mood of the author. In sympathy with that mood, that purpose deeply impressed, he may at least avoid some serious and destructive errors of treatment.

When interpolation becomes necessary, the director's function becomes that of furthering the effect intended by the author by any and all unobtrusive means. Whether there is elimination or amplification to be done, keep in mind the keynote of the composition and its theme. Then bring all instruments, types, action and setting, into harmony with the composer's purpose and with the mood of his creation. The ability of an orchestra leader does not lie entirely in the length of his hair, nor even in his impressive manner, but partly in that sympathetic intelligence which enables him to augment the beauty of a composition without impairing its consistency.

Any changes of structure that kill suspense mean disaster. Be guarded about introducing a moment of action that distracts from the main line, and remember that obtrusive backgrounds may scatter interest in the story—they are apt to be obtrusive if out of accord with those introduced by the author. Examples and incidents intended to reveal character may be intensified, and even multiplied to a limited extent, and there is opportunity for some fine directorial interpolation in the high scenes, where the author has indicated an outburst of feeling. Before that outburst there might well be shown a period of suppression, a lull before the storm. To be comprehensive, we may go back to dear old Aristotle and apply his "unities" to interpolation, though they may no longer be exacted in creative work. Do not shift the scene from where the author has laid it. Do not remove added events from the time in which he has placed his own. Do not interpolate action, characterization and scenes of any kind or description which are irrelevant to the development of his plot.

The Postmaster General on Moving Pictures.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE editor of a semi-monthly publication which is read by many clergymen and others interested in social improvement calls our attention to some suggestions made by Postmaster General Burleson and relating to methods of regulating the motion picture. The Postmaster General has spent many years in the public service of the nation. He enjoys a well deserved reputation for statesmanlike qualities for fairness and for legal knowledge. It seems that the editor of the publication had written a letter to Mr. Burleson questioning him as to the "desirability of further regulation of the motion picture industry." Mr. Burleson wrote this reply which deserves to be reproduced in full:

Except possibly with respect to the transmission of moving picture advertising matter through the mails, a postal question is not involved. Being explosive, films are now excluded from the parcel post and move chiefly by express. Still it is quite within the power of the Federal Government to deal with the matter. Doubtless you know of the Act of July 31, 1912, prohibiting the importation or transmission in interstate commerce of moving pictures or other pictorial representations of "prize fights or encounters of pugilists under whatever name." That law has been upheld in the lower federal courts and seems certain to be upheld in the higher courts. This statute could be expanded to include other objectionable films—and considerably more objectionable some of them are! I think it very probable that the Government's complete control in the field of interstate commerce would be adequate to debar from interstate commerce films held to menace public morals.

State laws now reach obscene or sexually indecent representations both upon the screen and the stage proper. The principle is that embraced in Section 211 of the Federal Criminal Code which excludes from the mails publications containing "obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy or indecent" matter. Federal legislation along this line under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, which would embrace matter handled by express companies as well as matter passing through the mails, might be enacted to supplement State Legislation which would assist in breaking up traffic in films of obviously indecent character.

However, such laws strike at the mere filth which appeals to thoroughly degraded or perverted minds. To draw a legal line which will prohibit not only that which is thoroughly vicious but also that which is unwholesome is exceedingly difficult. Certainly it would be folly to attempt to legislate against bad art. A law against ultra-sensationalism in moving picture plays might also reach ultra-sensationalism in all media which reach the public, including the newspapers. Coarseness and vulgarity are not confined to the moving picture industry.

These are facts to be remembered in legislation. Still there is reason to differentiate the moving picture industry which, to some extent at least, justifies what may be termed a curtailment of its artistic liberties. I am thinking of the children. Moving pictures begin their appeal to children even before they learn to read or write. A real glorifying crime will exalt the criminal in the imagination of a child of tender years. Here lies, to my mind, a proper field for legislation, Federal and State. Let the law cast out summarily the objectionable play or film; then provide, with caution, such further machinery as may be needed for the protection of youth; and, lastly, leave the regulation of those further refinements which peculiarly belong in the field of art to the court of public opinion.

I think I have noted a gradual improvement in the type of offering at the average moving picture theater.

Mr. Burleson sounds the true note of American statesmanship. Nowhere does he advocate censorship but he strikes the nail on the head by recommending the enactment of special laws against special kinds of pictures. He realizes that the "mere filth appeals only to thoroughly degraded or perverted minds" and he recognizes the great improvement in the films. This improvement has come about without the aid of censorship. What Mr. Burleson says about children is true, they must not be offended, but to say that all films must be made first, last and all the time for children is, of course, absurd. There are books and plays and even sermons which we keep from our children. Unaccompanied children below a certain age should not be admitted indiscriminately to all shows and in the case of a child in control of parent or guardian we are entitled to assume that the parent or guardian is gifted with ordinary discretion and an average sense of responsibility.

Now is The Time.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE new President of the National League, F. J. Herrington, writes to The Moving Picture World that he intends to make a tour of the East, starting about the 15th or 20th of September. The object of the tour is the furtherance of organization. We earnestly hope that Mr. Herrington will have the intelligent cooperation of all exhibitors.

As we have had occasion to point out scores of times, the main strength of the league must always consist of numerous and representative state organizations. Unless there is a decided improvement along these lines the National League will never wield that power and influence which the exhibitor ought to wield in the councils of the industry. We believe that the most influential exhibitors in their respective states ought to be members of the organization. The man who has a substantial investment and who has standing and experience is exactly the man whom the organization needs. It needs his counsel and his support. There are altogether too many of these enlightened and progressive exhibitors who do not belong to the organization, much to their own detriment as well as to the hurt of the organization. A special and determined effort to win these men for the league will no doubt be made by the new president. The organization is the place both for the little and the big exhibitor and both must be expected to do their proportionate share toward improving conditions for all exhibitors.

Personal solicitation is by far the most effective way of getting new and valuable members. Reams of literature are worth but little unless reinforced by the personal work of a capable organizer. The new president has been an apostle and prophet of organization as early as 1907, and he is eminently fitted by reason of his eloquence and his enthusiasm in promoting the cause of organization. In his letter to The Moving Picture World he says that "no business needs organization as badly as we exhibitors need it." He goes on to repeat the ancient but often disregarded truism: "If you do not protect your business yourself you cannot expect others to protect it for you. It may be the other fellow today but tomorrow it may be your turn."

There is ample room for the work of a capable organizer here in the East. New York and New Jersey will have sessions of the state legislature and there are ominous clouds on the horizon of both states. New York escaped censorship only by a narrow margin and the agitation in New Jersey has by no means died out. Nor is censorship the only matter which ought to make organization imperative.

The "locals" no doubt will receive the attention of President Herrington. There are hundreds of towns and cities where petty jealousies and ruinous competition have put the motion picture business on the decline. What a field for effective missionary work. Common sense and fair play will often remedy the worst conditions. A man like Herrington who has been "through the mill" battling with all the ills the exhibitor is "heir to" ought to be sure of a hearing when he comes to make peace or to submit practical suggestions for the benefit of all concerned

Convention of Paramount Pictures Corporation

Held at La Salle Hotel, Chicago, September 2, 3, and 4, with Every Department of the Organization's Business Represented.

By James S. McQuade.

THE first annual convention of the Paramount Pictures Corporation was held in the La Salle Hotel, Chicago, on September 2, 3 and 4, with a notable gathering in attendance. All departments of the organization were well represented, as will be seen by glancing at the printed list at the close of this article.

The convention was opened by President W. W. Hodkinson on Thursday morning, about 11 o'clock, and he explained the purpose of the convention as follows:

The purpose of the meeting is to get closer together, and to get better acquainted with each other and with the Paramount proposition. I think that we will accomplish a great deal by coming in contact with each other during the three days that we will be here, so I will not take up your time or the time allotted to the producers any further than to ask that, beginning on my right, the first gentleman will stand up and give his name and the exchange that he is connected with. In this way you will all learn each other's identity quicker than in any other way that I can think of. It will serve as a general introduction.

Mr. Hodkinson then announced that, owing to pressure of business at the Famous Players Film Company's studio, Adolph Zukor, president of that company; B. P. Schulberg, advertising and publicity manager, and Albert Weinberg, auditor, who had fully intended to be present at the convention, were prevented at the last moment. The following telegram from Mr. Zukor was then read:

I am very sorry, indeed, that unforeseen conditions prevent me from attending the Paramount convention, but I wish to take this means of communicating to you and all others present my congratulations upon the splendid results you have obtained during the first Paramount year, my great admiration for the effective manner in which you have overcome the numerous obstacles that beset you in the distributing branch of the industry, and my sincere hope that your future activities in this direction will secure even greater and more complete success. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to publicly commend the untiring and ceaseless personal endeavors of W. W. Hodkinson and Raymond Pawley toward the constant advancement of the Paramount program. Their devoted labors, combined with the efforts of Messrs Hiram Abrams, William L. Sherry and James A. Steele, and aided by the unusually efficient and loyal membership of the Paramount organization, have given the industry an example of achievement in national film distribution unsurpassed in all the annals of the screen, and have created a distribution system that may not only never be excelled, but that may never be equaled. It is the earnest desire and the determined purpose of the Famous Players Film Company to bend every effort and exert every power within our possession to co-operate most fully and in every direction with the Paramount Pictures Corporation and to produce only subjects of such unquestionable merit as to further facilitate their distribution. With the plays which we now have in course of preparation and production, and the long list of favorite stars under exclusive contract with us, we are certain to continue a standard consistent with the highest ideals of the Paramount program. We have recently purchased a large tract of ground in Upper Manhattan upon which we will erect the most complete groups of studio and laboratory buildings ever devoted to the production of motion pictures. In order that we may produce Paramount pictures under the most favorable conditions and with the greatest advantages that can be secured at all times and in every manner, you can depend upon the whole-hearted and earnest support and co-operation of myself and associates, Messrs. Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter.

Mr. Hodkinson then called on Samuel G. Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, whose speech is given in part as follows:

I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity of being present here today to congratulate you in person on the great work you have done for the first year of Paramount's existence. Not only am I proud, but I feel that every one of you gentlemen should be as proud as I am, and, believe me, if you are, you will be "some proud" of your organization, not only in New York City, but all over the United States. It is quite different today from what it was a year ago. I will be perfectly frank with you. I must admit that I, myself, had no more faith in you than some of the exhibitors had, throughout the United States. I thought your ideas were not quite what they ought to be, and I did not believe the thing was going to work out in the way it actually has proven.

To give you an example just how exhibitors throughout the United States talked to us, as producers, some time ago, I met Mr. Marcus Loew and, honestly, he was the worst knocker you had in any part of the country. He thought Paramount was wrong, its officers were wrong, and its pictures were wrong, and its policies the worst that ever come into the picture business. He used to say to me: "It is perfectly ridiculous to think that you can revolutionize this business in a day. Your policies are too drastic. Who is going to pay four weeks in advance?" He would not play the pictures.

The other day Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, Mr. DeMille and myself had lunch with him at the Knickerbocker Hotel, just after he had signed the contract for forty-two solid days' booking. He is one of the biggest exhibitors in the country. I said to him: "What do you think of the program?" He replied: "I will tell you frankly I don't have to look at it. If the Paramount will accept my booking, I will take what they give me, and I want to tell you, if your pictures were 25 per cent. worse than any others in the country, we would book through the Paramount." I looked at him and said: "Don't let friendship interfere in this thing." He answered: "No, it is not friendship, but it is their method of doing business. It is their reliability. We can take their word for whatever they say."

Now, I want to say, gentlemen, that ninety-nine per cent. of the exhibitors that I have been talking to recently—and Mr. Lasky has just returned from California, and Mr. DeMille reports from the Coast—ninety-nine per cent. of the exhibitors throughout the United States feel that way about Paramount. They feel that they can take your word for what you say, and I want to say to you that when you have a foundation like that, fifty per cent. of your battle is won, and the other fifty per cent. you have got to give in pictures. If you can make good to that extent, you can do twenty-five per cent. worse today than the other fellow does and still retain every exhibitor you have, because they have confidence in you.

No matter how good a producer tries to make his pictures, he cannot make them too good when he realizes that he has a distributing organization like yours, and I want to say to you that you look good to me, and I love to see the spirit which has been manifested by everyone present here today. Every one of you gentlemen looks like a fighter, and I want to tell you that you have got to be some fighter to measure up to what you have in New York at the executive end.

Mr. Hodkinson, Mr Pawley and I have had some tough fights. I did not always agree with their methods. I did not always believe in the things he did. There were times when I thought he was a little bit—well, I didn't think he was all there. (Laughter.) But I want to say to you gentlemen that I consider him the greatest man in the motion picture industry today. (Loud applause.)

Jesse L. Lasky, in the course of an interesting address, said:

Now, we think that we are the greatest producers in the world, because thinking that makes us work all the harder. One thing we lack, however, is individual, honest criticism.

We don't want praise. We will get plenty of praise, but what we want are suggestions or criticisms, and if every one of you will make some suggestion, make notes of your suggestions now and then and let us have them, it will be invaluable. You gentlemen have come from California, Portland, and the far corners of various states, and from Canada, and if you will only make one suggestion and the suggestion comes to us and we can carry it out, just see what you gentlemen will be doing. We want your help. My own view is that they want modern drama with as much action and vim and punch as can be put into it, and we are producing our plays accordingly.

Now every one of you gentlemen, as Mr. Goldfish has said, seems to be a fighter, and after having met you, when we go back to the studio, to the grind, I think we will go gack with new vigor. We have met you and know you, and you know us, and now we will try and show you what we can do. Whatever we have done in the past is well enough, but we want to do much better, and we have got to make good. We feel that men of your type demand something better, and we are going to try and give it to you.

In the afternoon session of the opening day, able addresses were made by Cecil B. DeMille, art director of the Lasky Company; Howard E. Spaulding, advertising counsel of Paramount, and Tarleton Winchester, Paramount publicity manager.

A paragraph from Mr. Spaulding's speech regarding publicity for Paramount, follows:

We are going to acquaint more people with Paramount pictures, induce them to go see them and in this way co-operate with the exhibitor and render a more efficient service to every exhibitor showing Paramount pictures through advertising in the Saturday Evening Post, thirty-four of the strongest newspapers in the United States, The Ladies' Home Journal, The American Sunday Monthly Magazine, Woman's Home Companion, The Ladies' World, twenty-four sheet posters, ready prepared advertisements for exhibitors' use, glass slides and other forms of publicity.

On Thursday evening the members of the convention attended a private presentation of "Carmen," the famous Geraldine Farrar subject, at the Auditorium.

On Friday evening an informal dinner was given in the spacious banquet hall of the La Salle Hotel, for the purpose of bringing the members closer together and to get away from the serious discussion of business. Only one speech was made, and that in tone and substance was in the nature of a brotherly talk by President Hodkinson. During the dinner it was announced that Paramount will henceforth release two comedies, of one reel each, weekly. In connection with travel pictures these comedies will make up an entire program. Another announcement that was received with much applause referred to the weekly issue, by Paramount, of a special magazine for salesmen.

All sessions of the convention were held behind closed doors. Adjournment was made at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The following officers of the Paramount Pictures Corporation were present: W. W. Hodkinson, president; James Steele, vice president; Raymond Pawley, secretary and treasurer; Wm. L. Sherry and Hiram Abrams, directors; Frank D. Sniffen, general sales manager; Geo. R. Meeker, manager of the re-booking department; Tarleton Winchester, publicity manager, and Charles E. Moyer, assistant; Howard E. Spaulding, advertising counsel; Louis E. Loeb, statistician; Jack Eaton, manager of the travel series department, and H. I. Day, assistant editor of the Paramount Press.

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. was represented by Jesse L. Lasky, president; Samuel G. Goldfish, treasurer and general manager; Cecil B. De Mille, director general, and John C. Flinn, publicity manager.

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., and the Palace Pictures Inc., were represented by Carl H. Pierce, special representative.

The Paramount exchanges throughout the country were represented as follows: Hiram Abrams and Harry Asher, Boston; Henry Scully, New Haven, Conn.; Wm. L. Sherry and N. J. Sennott, New York City; Wm. E. Smith, Raymond Pawley and H. W. Given, Philadelphia, Pa.; George M. Mann and V. P. Whitaker, Washington, D. C.; James Steele and W. C. Bachmeyer, Pittsburgh, Pa.; F. M. Brockell, Chicago; R. O. Laws, Cincinnati; D. L. Dennison, Detroit; Albert D. Flintom, Kansas City; C. Libeau, Des Moines; Geo. E. McKean, St. Louis; Bert Barnett, Minneapolis; C. E. Tandy, Atlanta; E. C. Kirkpatrick, New Orleans; L. Marcus and Geo. E. Carpenter, Salt Lake City; Milton H. Cohn, Denver; Herman Wobber, San Francisco, and Myron H. Lewis, Los Angeles.

R. H. BLAND NOW ENGLISH OFFICER.

R. Henderson Bland, whose portrayal of the Savior in the well known Kalem production of "From the Manger to the Cross," has received such high praise, and who recently toured the United States in "Kitty Mackaye." is now a second lieutenant in the eleventh battalion of the Gloucestershires of England's new army. Mr. Bland, who has several brothers in the English service, is undergoing a course of training preparatory to departure for the front. His career will be followed with deep inteest by the many friends he made on this side of the water during his stay here.

Goulden to Produce in Milwaukee

LOUIS B. GOULDEN has secured an option from Messrs. Lex Brothers, architects and builders, to buy or lease for a long term of years a building which they are erecting and which will be one of the most modern film plants in the country. The building is located at 510-512 Edison avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

The property is 40 by 20 feet. The old building, which is 40 by 50 feet, is being remodeled into beautiful offices and spacious dressing rooms. The new building, which is now in course of construction, will be 40 by 70 feet, and three stories in height, fireproof in every respect, no wood or nails being used in the entire structure.

Louis B. Goulden.

The first floor of the new addition will be to house cars, machinery, etc.; the second floor will be used for developing, printing and drying, and also to store scenery; the entire third floor will be used for studio purposes only. The studio proper where the photoplays will be produced will have a floor space of 2,800 square feet, 18 feet high, seven windows on each side of the building and a large skylight roof, so as to give plenty of light and therefore no artificial light will have to be used during a day when pictures are being made.

Mr. Goulden came to New York August 23 to make final arrangements with two Eastern capitalists who will be associated with him in this undertaking, which will be capitalized at $200,000.

Although Mr. Goulden is but twenty-five years of age, nevertheless he has had considerable experience in the exhibiting and exchange business, his first venture being in 1910 when he opened the Orpheum theater at Jefferson, Wis. From then on he organized the Goulden & Koppel Theater Circuit, the Goulden Hess Amusement Company, the Goulden Exhibit Company, the Northern Feature Film Exchange, Chicago; the Federal Feature Film and Supply Corporation; Chicago, and the Imperial Films Corporation, Milwaukee, but has since then severed his connections with the above mentioned companies and will devote his entire time to the management of the film producing company.

SELIG'S "ROSARY" POPULAR.

"The Rosary," the seven-reel Selig Red Seal play released through V-L-S-E is proving so popular that the Selig Polyscope Company has been forced to make many extra prints of the production. Manager Irwin of the central V-L-S-E office had calls for extra prints from certain branch managers and wired other branches to see if they could spare enough to fill the want. The reply in every case was that the branch was itself short of "Rosary" prints and could make use of several more. Mr. Irwin then took the matter up with the Selig Polyscope Company and this firm at once set its factory at work turning out the extra prints. All over the country "The Rosary" is proving one of the biggest successes in recent years. Because of its beautiful theme and the artistic manner in which it is developed, it appeals to all classes.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF IN "WEST WIND."

Eleanor Woodruff will be seen in her first big Vitagraph feature when "West Wind" is released Tuesday, September 14th. "West Wind" is a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's story of the same name and was produced in Texas by a company of Vitagraph Players including besides Miss Woodruff, Eulalie Jensen, Darwin Karr, Harry Northrup, Ned Finley and Logan Paul. The story is made realistic by the introduction of regular United States Army troops and a band of Indians. Miss Woodruff will be seen as Amy Benham, known as "West Wind," a rancher's danghter, who is abducted by Indians.

"Spartacus" at Chautauqua

Kleine's Big Feature Subject Fills Great Auditorium at Popular New York State Resort.

WHAT is probably the largest gathering that ever witnessed a moving picture performance was the monster crowd that packed the great amphitheater at Chautauqua, N. Y., last week to see George Kleine's "Spartacus."

The production was the biggest event in the season of Chautauqua. The great drama of Roman life thrilled the immense audience to enthusiasm, assuring a continuation of the innovation of motion pictures in this famous center of art and learning.

One of the interesting features of the performance was the incidental music. Modest Altschuler, who originally arranged the score for George Kleine shortly after the subject reached America and who with his marvelous symphony orchestra of fifty startled Chicago critics when the film was given its initial presentation at the Chicago Auditorium at that time, was engaged by the Chautauqua. Altschuler at all times held his orchestra under an expressive direction and rendered what the Baltimore American terms "the greatest accompaniment any motion picture ever had." The crowd ran into the thousands. Long before the overture every seat had been taken and hundreds were in line four deep in the aisles and standing spaces.

Says the Baltimore American: "The film itself is one of the triumphs of motion picture photography. Many familiar Roman settings were seen including the circus Maximus, the Appian Way, the hills above Rome and the senate chamber, all accurate with respect to furnishings and detail.

"Mr. Altschuler rendered a beautiful score. In the first act a beautiful love motive for Spartacus and Narona rose to passionate heights. Pompous military marches for the Roman soldiers, wild dances for the feasting and drinking scenes, and a wonderfully worked-up climax motivating the rebellion of Spartacus and the gladiators thrilled the great audience to its feet.

"During the second act there was spirited dramatic incidental music as the gladiators climbed over the cliffs and stirring marches for the victors after the battle. In the last act came a new theme indicating the despair of Spartacus when accused of the death of Crassus, another expressive death scene and funeral march, wierdly affected music for the conspirators, all working into a final climax at the end of the picture. So well did the orchestra play this music that it was like grand opera, lacking only the voices. If motion picture dramas are to be rated as high art it will be such music as Mr. Altschuler gave last night that will make such a thing possible."

FORM SECOND MUSTANG COMPANY.

Despatches from the Western studios of the Mustang Company announce the forming of a second company for the making of the two reel releases of that brand for the Mutual program. The first of these releases will feature Helene Rosson, William Stowell and Jack Richardson. Richardson has been lined up with the Mustang for a long series of snappy Western plays. He will be cast for "the heavy," a role which eminently fits his handsome and impressive bearing and personality. The title and release date of this first of the Mustang Banner Features for the regular program are yet to be announced.

The next of the two reelers of the Mustang brand will feature Anna Little and E. Forrest Taylor as leads, and Mr. Richardson will appear in the cast in his favorite role of picturesque villainy. These photoplays carry stories strong with dramatic situations and will be in modern Western settings, with plenty of thrills and strong passages. "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," is the title of the first of the Mustang Star Features, three reel productions for the Mutual's regular program. This is the first of the "Buck Parvin in the Movies" series, scenarios by Charles E. Van Loan, baseball fiction writer.

The preliminaries of this production have already been begun at the Mustang studio under the general supervision of Mr. Van Loan. In this first three-reeler Art Acord, famous cowboy actor, and Miss Anna Little, the feminine star of the series, are featured. They have reported at the studio and the work has begun. It is announced that "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" will be ready for release Oct. 2.

LLOYD ROBINSON JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Lloyd Robinson, who for the past two years has acted as editor of the motion picture department of the New York Telegraph, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company as a member of its publicity and advertising departments.

SAVAGE GETS DAMAGES.

Ten thousand dollars damages have been awarded to the Henry W. Savage, Inc., against William C. Karrer for the putting out of a motion picture film entitled "Magda," a modern Madame X, which destroyed considerably the rights of Savage in the original Madame X. The award was made by Warren W. Foster, referee appointed by the New York Supreme Court to take testimony in the case and submit his findings to the court.

During his long editorial connection with the Morning Telegraph, Mr. Robinson has displayed a wide knowledge of the motion picture industry and its various phases, a broad sympathy with every forward trend of the trade, and a keen mastery of editorial principles as connected with the motion picture. That should make him a valuable acquisition to the exploitation department of the Famous Players.

Mr. Robinson is a graduate of Williams College, and previous to his engagement by the New York Telegraph served a long term of competent activity in the publicity and advertising departments of the Edison Company. This former practical affiliation with a producing company, combined with the journalistic experience he has subsequently acquired, have placed in his possession a truthful degree of proportion, as related to the association of producer and exhibitor, and the advertising requirements of both.

BRING SUIT FOR ECLAIR CONTROL.

An action has been brought in the Supreme Court of New York by the Societe Francaise des Films et Cinematographes Eclair against the Pine Holding Company and others seeking to regain control of the several defendant companies which it is alleged have been improperly transferred. The plaintiff company is better known here as the Eclair Company of Paris, of which Charles Jourjon is president and Marcel Vandal vice-president. When the European war broke out both these men were summoned to join their comrades and are now in the trenches. Before departing for France Mr. Jourjon and his associates gave power of attorney to Alfred W. Varian. It is now alleged that Mr. Varian exceeded his powers in disposing of the company's assets and stock in order to liquidate its obligations. The action is brought to recover control of the company. The individual defendants are Donald McLean Somers and Henry Calder as trustees, Emil Offeman, Arthur C. Rieger, Alfred W. Varian, Frederick W. Rowelle, George E. Van Vorst and others.

What Vitagraph is Doing

An Air of Unusual Activity at Its Studios Both East and West—Many Productions Under Way.

THE Vitagraph Company at its Flatbush Studios, and the Western Company at Santa Monica, California, has begun active preparations for a program of fall and winter releases that will surpass anything heretofore turned out by this company. The program will include one and two-part comedies and dramas from the pens of the best short story writers, three-part Broadway Star Features, and Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features bearing the V-L-S-E trade mark. The majority of the Blue Ribbon Features have been picturized from books by well-known authors, books that have run through several editions, and consequently a visualization of the story will be doubly attractive on the screen. Another feature of the Big Vitagraph releases is in the fact that they are being produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, heads of the Vitagraph Company.

Taking the directors in alphabetical order the pictures now in course of production include "On the Trail," a two-part drama being directed by George D. Baker, with a cast including Edith Storey, Evart Overton, Ned Finley and Arthur Cozine. "The Gods Redeem," in two parts on which Van Dyke Booke is at work with Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Mary Maurice. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are producing "A Case of Eugenics, a typical Drew comedy, which will be one of the regular Friday (Drew Day) releases. "The Woman in the Box," which Harry Davenport is directing, will introduce Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, George Cooper and Peggy Blake in the principal characters.

"The Conquest of Constantia," a one-part comedy, is now nearing completion under the direction of Courtlandt J. Van Deusen employing the services of Flora Finch, Kate Price, Rose Tapley and Florence Natol. Ralph W. Ince has just started work on a four-part Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "My Lady's Slipper," in which Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, supported by an all-star Vitagraph cast, will be seen. Tefft Johnson is producing one of the Famous Sonny Jim Series, "One Plus One Equals One," in which Bobby Connelly is featured. Director Theodore Marston has a five-part picturization of Archibald Clavering Gunter's "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," well under way and has in his cast the distinguished actor, Charles Richman, supported by Arline Pretty, Leo Delaney, Charles Eldridge, William Dunn, Edward Elkas, Ethel Corcoran and other Vitagraph Players.

Wilfrid North is directing a production of A. E. W. Mason's delightful comedy, "Green Stockings," a five-part picturization of Margaret Anglin's successful starring vehicle in which Stanley Dark, Lillian Walker, Louise Beaudet, Charles Brown, John T. Kelly and Charles Wellesley, will portray the principal characters. S. Rankin Drew is producing "Thou Art the Man," picturized in five parts from the original manuscript, by George Cameron, with a cast including Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper. The latest addition to the Vitagraph directing forces, Paul Scardon, is at work on another Brady story, "The Island of Surprise," with William Courtenay, Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent, Anders Randolf and Julia Swayne Gordon. Wally Van is directing the production of a two-part comedy, featuring Hughie Mack, Dorothy Kelly and Donald MacBride, and C. Jay Williams with a cast including Jewel Hunt and James Morrison, is working on a one-part comedy, "The Little Trespasser."

These are the most important productions now under way in the East, while at Santa Monica Director Rollin S. Sturgeon is at work on still another Brady feature picture, "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer." Ulysses Davis is finishing a Broadway Star Feature, "Cal Marvin's Wife," in which Mary Anderson is playing the lead.

FORTY ARTISTS' MODELS IN AMERICAN FEATURE.

Forty artists' models appear in the four-part Mutual Master Picture, "The House of a Thousand Scandals," produced by the American Film Company. In this story, which centers around the activities of a Greek cult, these girls wear the flowing garb of the ancient Greeks, the same being the reason why artists' models were elected to do the wearing. The result is one of the most beautiful scenes the screen has given the public. The wondrously musical dances of the Greeks, the graceful and delightful movements all are shown in this picture, making an intensely artistic setting for the dramatic action carried through the story by Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

Burr McIntosh in Pathe's "Wallingford"

ACTOR, author, photographer, publisher, lecturer and coal mine magnate, here is a list of activities any one of which is sufficient to engage an ordinary man his whole life, but Burr McIntosh is no ordinary man. That's why he has been signed for the Wharton production of Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." George Randolph Chester said Mr. McIntosh was the one man to play "Wallingford," and his advice has been followed.

Mr. McIntosh was a classmate at Princeton University with the Hon. Job Hughes, Senator Pomerene of Ohio, Hon. John Harlan of Chicago, Wm. Stewart Tod, the philanthropic millionaire, the late "Alec" Moffat, and others, and he is by no means the least famous of that famous group. Look at the height and width of him and you will readily believe that back in his college days he held the 100-yard intercollegiate championship and played on the varsity baseball and football teams.

On leaving college he went back to his home in Pittsburgh where his father was president of the largest bituminous mining company in the country. Our college athlete at once jumped into both business and politics forming the "Six Foot Republican Marching Club" of 150 men, each of whom was six feet or over in his stocking feet. Pittsburgh still speaks with pride of that remarkable organization.

Burr McIntosh.

Tiring of the coal business, Mr. McIntosh left to become a journalist in Philadelphia, and got a job at $10 a week on the Philadelphia News. Within five weeks he had a full page expose of the most notorious thieves' resort in the city. The proprietor of the dive, James Kane, was starting for the News office with a gun in his pocket when he ran into McIntosh's brother Andy, and killed him instead.

Having sufficiently proven his versatility in business and reporting, Mr. McIntosh went on the stage, making his debut in Bartley Campbell's play, "Paquita," at the Fourteenth Street Theater. Some of the parts which he made famous are "Colonel Moberley" in "Alabama," "Jo Vernon" in "In Mizzoura," "Joe," the cowboy in "The Cowboy and the Lady," and other Southern character parts. His best work, perhaps, was as "Puddin'head Wilson" as "Senator Langdon" in "The Gentleman from Mississippi," "Col. Watterson Blossom" in "Cordelia Blossom" and "Taffy" in "Trilby."

The Burr McIntosh Monthly is everywhere admitted to have been the most perfect pictorial publication of its time, and it was Mr. McIntosh's own product. As a photographer he won the Grand Prize (1000 francs) in the Paris Figaro contest of art and beauty with a portrait of Maude Fealy. In 1905 he was the official photographer of the Taft trip to the Philippines. He also secured some wonderful photographs in the Spanish-American war. His experience in these two trips he made into the lectures "With Secretary Taft in the Orient," and "The United States and Its Menaces," which he has given before hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. McIntosh as may be seen, has done many things and done them all well. It is safe to prophesy a splendid interpretation of "Wallingford" by him in this new Pathe series.

HERBERT J. DAISS DEAD.

Herbert J. Daiss, formerly of the General Film Company, and more recently of the Cleveland Pathe Exchange, Inc., selling organization, died September 1st at his home in Indiana Township, Pennsylvania, and was buried at Dorseyville Saturday, September 4th. Mr. Daiss had many friends in the moving picture business throughout the Ohio territory and while connected with Pathe Exchange, Cleveland, established a reputation for himself as being a Class A salesman.

Garner Organizes African Expedition

Many of America's Foremost Scientific and Financial Men Interested in the Project—Some of the Stock Will Be Sold to the Public.

PROFESSOR R. L. GARNER, whose life has been devoted to scientific research, and whose work in the study of anthropoid apes in Africa has made him famous the world over, has organized a company which will finance an expedition into Africa. The principal object of this expedition is to record in films the native life of Africa, the flora and the fauna of that continent, paying special attention to the field in which Professor Garner is the greatest living expert.

The company has in its official staff and in its membership some of the best-known names in the scientific world of America. Hudson Maxim is connected with the enterprise, as is Professor Ditmars and many prominent men in the New York Zoological Society. Among the financial men interested is Colonel A. Kuser, of Newark, one of New Jersey's foremost public men and financiers.

"There had been offers to me," said Professor Garner to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "from some moving picture concerns to back this expedition, but they wanted it featured as a sort of freak undertaking and I would not stoop to that level. I cannot forecast our work in every detail, but you know there is no white man living who enjoys the confidence of the aborigines in the way I do. I have been admitted to their inner circles and to their most secret religious and social rites. There is an aspect to this religious and social life of the natives which has never been described and made known to white men and which the kinematograph is pre-eminently fitted to record for the enlightenment and instruction of all mankind. With my experience, the cost of the expedition will be reduced to the lowest possible minimum, while the results I hope to obtain will be invaluable not only from a scientific point of view but as an entertainment as well."

Professor Garner is an old Confederate soldier, a man inured to hardships and more familiar with the dark continent than any man living. He is known as a man who gets results. His reference is practically any and every man of note in the scientific world. The work he has done for the New York Zoological Society in providing rare apes is historic. He brought Dinah, the gorilla who died lately, to this country, and under his instructions the animal lasted longer in captivity than any other of her race, with one exception, has ever done before.

Professor Garner's company has just been incorporated, and the expedition will get under way in a short time. Professor Garner will sell some of the stock in the company to the general public and may be addressed at the Hotel York, in this city.

David Keen Closes Contracts

Treasurer of the Associated Film Sales Corporation Returns from Successful Trip.

DAVID KEEN, treasurer and assistant to General Manager Arthur Bard, of the Associated Film Sales Corporation, has just returned to New York from a trip through the Middle West. He signed up the Kriterion Exchange of Detroit, and film has already been shipped. Mr. Keen also, with Joseph Hopp, settled matters that were in abeyance, and film has already gone forward to Mr. Hopp. Contracts with the Standard Film Service, of Cleveland, will be signed this week. Mr. Keen closed a five-year contract with Lee-Jones, Inc., of Chicago, to place national advertising for the Associated. The sum involved will approximate $50,000 a year.

On the Pacific Coast the Associated will be represented by an exchange the principals of which are well-known film men and the identity of whom will be disclosed as soon as incorporation papers are completed.

Mr. Keen was first identified with the moving picture business in 1906 with Siegmund Lubin in Philadelphia. He had an interest in the first moving picture house installed in that city, the Circle, on Eighth, near Race street, and has ever since been connected with the industry.

FLAMINGO SUES WORLD FILM.

For an alleged failure to perform the conditions of a contract to market its productions the Flamingo Film Company has commenced suit against the World Film Corporation in the Supreme Court of New York. Damages to the amount of $25,000 is claimed.

Open Booking Plan Succeeds

Manager Irwin of V-L-S-E Declares That Five Months' Trial Proves That Exhibitors Should Have What They Want.

GENERAL Manager W. W. Irwin of the V-L-S-E declares that "At the end of the first five months of the V-L-S-E, we have proved to our entire satisfaction that the system of permitting the exhibitor to book the particular feature he wants, when he wants it, for as long a time as he wants it, without tying him up in a contract that makes it obligatory to take features he does not want; therefore, limiting the run of each feature, is the only correct policy in the booking of feature films.

"There has never been a feature—a strong feature—exhibited long enough to give everybody interested an opportunity to see it," he very correctly asserts. "This means that the manufacturers of these strong features have probably lost hundreds of thousands of dollars, all owing to the faulty methods of booking. The main trouble with the booking arrangements, and one that has been overcome in the V-L-S-E, is the system of renting features on cast-iron yearly contracts.

"To live up to that contract, an exhibitor cannot re-book and re-run those features that score big hits. He is compelled, after showing a feature that has aroused enthusiasm and engendered a large volume of 'word-to-mouth' advertising, to let it pass on, in order to make a place for the next feature released on the program.

"Through the V-L-S-E policy of allowing exhibitors to pick and choose their features, and re-run them as long as the public demands, exhibitors may take full advantage of the 'word-to-mouth' advertising created by the exceptional merit of the production."

Harry Harvey

HARRY HARVEY, the Balboa director who has charge of the production of "Neal of the Navy," the big patriotic serial photoplay released by Pathe, comes of a well-known English theatrical family. His inherited footlight tendency asserted itself in Kansas City, Mo., when he was yet a boy. In the old Dime Museum, he operated the curtain when Fred Stone was a stage hand and Bert Williams danced for nickels.

Harry Harvey.

Harvey's interpretation of the bellboy in Hoyt's "Bunch of Keys," fifteen years ago, has become stage tradition, and many of the stunts he originated are still in use. For a decade, he played all sorts of parts in all sorts of plays, East, West, North and South, finally landing in the motion picture business, after having helped Uncle Sam to trounce Spain.

The old Federal Mutoscope Company in Boston was Harry Harvey's first engagement in pictures. He found the work novel and soon joined the Idoloscope Company in New York at the time when such men as Wallace McCutcheon, Joseph Golden, Eddie Dillon, "Billy" Bitzer and G. P. Hamilton were pioneering in the new art, which then had little or no standing.

The next few years were spent with the Biograph, Gaumont and the New York Motion Picture Company. Then, Harvey came West and filmed "The Life of Sitting Bull," for the War Department. In 1913, he joined the Balboa studio soon after its opening and has been there almost continuously. As a Balboa director, he has made many notable productions. His favorite is the "Who Pays" series, in which Ruth Roland and Henry King starred.

Right now, Harvey is working on the 28-reel "Neal of the Navy," which promises to outshine all his former efforts. For leads he has Lillian Lorraine, William Conklin and a supporting company of notable Balboa players.

Kalem Idea Endorsed

Many Letters Received Commending the Utterances of William Wright, Officer of That Company.

"The average exhibitor is of the opinion that the ideal program is that which consists of one, two, three or four-reel features; he does not care for productions which run longer than four reels; he has almost invariably found that longer features have failed to justify the extra expense they entailed," says William Wright, one of the Kalem Company officials, "and coincides with my views as set forth in the Moving Picture World a few weeks ago.

"The surprising unanimity of sentiment expressed in the mass of letters with which Kalem Company has been deluged since the publication of the interview would be a revelation and an education to whomsoever has been inclined to disagree with us, if these letters were but allowed to escape from the Kalem files. Almost two thousand have already been received and in practically every instance the writer endorses the Kalem viewpoint.

"The letter written by Thomas D. Goldberg, proprietor of the Goldberg theater, one of the highest class houses in Baltimore, Md., is typical of many others. The writer says:"

I read the remarks of your Mr. William Wright in the Moving Picture world with great pleasure. As the proprietor of one of the best picture theaters in Baltimore, I wish to say that it seems as though Mr. Wright certainly knows and appreciates conditions.

I feel confident from conversations with the leading exhibitors of this city, that he is absolutely right when he tells you to put your efforts into the one, two, three and four-reel subjects. Mr. Manufacturer, I, as one exhibitor, believe in the short program and am booked up with the General Film Company, which distributes your products. Speaking for my patrons, I know from what they tell me that they are always pleased when a Kalem production is shown at my theater—and I receive one of your big features, the Hazards of Helen and a "Ham" comedy each week. Only yesterday I had one of your features, and let me assure you that the comments were such as would do credit to any company and to my house.

"J. M. Lenney owns the 'Grand,' and the 'Lenney Photoplay' theaters, both of which are representative of the best in motion picture theaters at Harrisburg, Pa. Mr. Lenney is among the wide-awake exhibitors who believe in studying their patrons and thus accurately judging their preferences. His letter, which follows, is therefore of particular interest:"

I heartily agree with your Mr. Wright on the subject of long reels of so-called features. I study my audiences and know pretty well what they want. Few of them care for the many-reel subjects and, had I shown releases of this nature continually, I would have gone out of business long ago.

I have both large houses in the best residential section and have used the whole output of the General Film Company since I opened them several years ago. As a whole, I find the people prefer one and two-reel subjects. They want variety, and if I put on a long subject and only one or two single reels, I invariably receive complaints on the score that I have shown but two, or three, pictures, as the case may be. It may be all right for exhibitors who are situated in the heart of the business sections to pay the unreasonable prices demanded for big features, but we who rely mainly upon our night trade cannot—and I, for one, would not even think of trying it.

"Changes about to go into effect," Mr. Wright explained, "will undoubtedly raise the Kalem weekly program of releases to the highest quality point ever achieved by that organization. One of the most important of these changes will be the release of 'The Ventures of Marguerite,' a series of one-reel dramas featuring Marguerite Courtot. This series will be issued on Fridays commencing October 22, in place of the Alice Joyce reissues and the alternating two-reel dramas. Another of the changes will be the release on Wednesdays of "Stingaree," a series of twelve two-act productions based upon the book of the same name, written by E. W. Hornung, author of 'Raffles,' while still another will be the appearance of Miss Helen Gibson, in the stellar role of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series."

ZIEGFELD FILMS CORPORATION FORMED.

A new company has been organized to make pictures by W. K. Ziegfeld, and will be known as the Ziegfeld Films Corporation. Mr. Ziegfeld is president and has associated with him W. E. Koch, a manufacturer and importer of surgical instruments, as vice-president, and Irwin B. Cochran, a Brooklyn lawyer, as secretary and treasurer. The corporation's capital is stated as $100,000.

DAVIS LOSES INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS.

Justice Shearn, of the New York Supreme Court, had denied the petition for an injunction against the Epoch Producing Corporation, owners of "The Birth of a Nation," asked by George W. Davis, of the Alcazar theater, San Francisco, Cal., who alleged that his claim was based upon a series of telegrams which passed between himself and D. W. Griffith, vice-president of the corporation.

While Justice Shearn conceded that he thought the plaintiff had been unfairly dealt with, still he could not find that there was any binding contract between the plaintiff and the defendant company.

Kalem to Produce the "Black Crook"

Star Cast and Many Novelties to Be Seen in Revival of Old Extravaganza.

IN announcing their forthcoming production of "The Black Crook," the famous old sensation of the stage, it is apparent that the Kalem Company is about to add another success to their long record of novelties. The revival of this extravaganza also revives a wealth of memories.

If you were asked to name the three most famous stage successes, what would you indicate after mentioning "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "The Old Homestead"? A little reflection would undoubtedly suggest "The Black Crook." Produced at the celebrated Niblo's Garden in 1866, "The Black Crook" has been presented innumerable times in every city—and in every hamlet which boasts an "opera house."

Robert G. Vignola.

Perhaps you recall the time you visited the city and upon your return told your confidential friends in a whisper that you saw "The Black Crook." And it is not likely that you have forgotten how the visit of "The Black Crook" to your town was sometimes mentioned in an undertone. Nowadays the broadened public taste accepts the "ballet" as an essential to successful operas and musical comedies; but the introduction of "The Corps of Seventy Ladies" created a furore when "The Black Crook" was first produced.

Nothing could be more wholesome than the fairy story of "The Black Crook" which Kalem is now adapting for the screen. Abounding in spectacular effects, it offers extraordinary opportunities for the motion picture to outrival the memorable triumphs of the early scenic artists.

Kalem has planned many novelties which will have the effect of "modernizing" "The Black Crook." A star cast is being assembled and the production will be directed by Mr. Robert Vignola, whose wide experience admirably equips him for the difficult task.

VALLI VALLI IN "THE WOMAN PAYS."

Valli Valli, who became a Metro star when she appeared in John W. Noble's very successful picture, "The High Road," one of the earlier Rolfe offerings, has been placed under contract with B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., for a new production for early autumn release. The feature picture will be in five acts and Edgar Jones, whose picture, "An Enemy to Society," the George Bronson Howard play, is soon to be seen publicly, will direct it. Mr. Jones has begun casting and has assembled an exceptional supporting company. The script has been done by Harry Chandlee, of the Metro scenario division, from the play by Florence Gerald, "The Woman Pays."

MRS. YOUNG WILL RETURN.

Mrs. Martha Hamilton Young, whose maiden name is Roegnerut, and who is a distinguished actress, after a stay in New York to study theatrical conditions in the United States, has just sailed on the S. S. Bergensfjord back to Christiana to visit her mother, who is also prominent in theatrical circles in Norway.

Mrs. Young has so far only occasionally devoted her talents to the motion pictures, but it is her intention to return to the United States shortly and to take up active motion picture work as has lately been done by many of the stars of the stage.

Mrs. Young is a distinct blond type peculiar to her nativity and is a young woman of many noted athletic accomplishments such as tennis champion, and also ski champion. She is a long-distance swimmer and a skilled horsewoman, which should make her services of great value in the motion picture field.

Universal Issues Warning.

Big Film Producers Disclaim Any Endorsement of the Cruze School of Acting.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company wishes to make disclaimer of any intention of "endorsing" the school of photoplay acting conducted by James Cruze and associated in Chicago. It has issued the following statement:

"The Universal Film Manufacturing Company wishes to announce that it has not recommended the school of photoplay acting conducted by the "Movie Actors' Assn., 1327 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, Ill., James Cruze, Director of Instruction, Mr. Wendell Walker, Scenario Writing, Mabel Bishop Wilson, Music for the Movies; Mr. John Bobeng, Picture Theater Management."

Together with some other very lurid and highly illustrated printed matter, the "Movie Actors' Assn." sends out to prospective and actual "students" a letter of recommendation from a wig maker and one from "Don Meaney, Business Manager, Universal Film Mfg. Co." Mr. Meaney's letter was issued without the authority or knowledge of the Universal, and that company wishes to state that his letter did not and does not now express the attitude of the officials of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. toward the "Movie Actors' Assn."

Recently the Universal on the strength of their testimonials, has received a number of letters from would-be moving picture actors and actresses in various parts of the country. The following is a sample of such letters:

Kiowa

Kan

The "Movie Actors' Assn." sent the young lady in question the following letter on June 4, 1915:

Dear Friend:—

The answers to our examination questions which were sent in have been gone over very carefully and we are delighted to see that you have done so well. The rating of 89% that you received shows that you are able to learn Mr. Cruze's instructions successfully and the test given you has undoubtedly given you confidence in your own talent.

The Association is glad you were so frank in telling them just why you could not enroll, so we are going to allow you to enroll upon the easy terms you suggested of $5.00 down and the balance in four $5.00 installments.

Knowing that you will wish to show your appreciation of Mr. Cruze's generosity, we are enclosing an enrollment blank for you to fill out and return without delay.

Yours very truly,

WW/Ef Movie Actors' Ass'n.

In short, the "Movie Actors' Assn." was willing to accept the trifling sum of $25 as an instance of the Kiowa, Kan., aspirant's "appreciation of Mr. Cruze's generosity" in return for the complete course and a membership card in the "Movie Actors' Association," entitling the bearer to the full benefits of that association for the period of one full year.

The Universal wishes to state emphatically that it does not recommend the "Movie Actors' Association, James Cruze, Director of Instruction."

The Cruze school was planned during the run of Zudora and was launched with a flourish of trumpets immediately at the close of his connection with the Thanhouser Company. The usual methods of the correspondence schools was followed with letters alluringly setting forth the advantages to be derived from a course and telling the recipient that Mr. Cruze was personally interested in his application and was willing to make a cut. Had the correspondent of the Universal waited a little, she could have registered for a three-dollar fee, because Cruze, in looking over the files had noticed that she had not yet enrolled and rightly guessed that she could not afford the five dollar registration.

Apparently the acting division was more immediately profitable for little seems to have been done in promoting the other divisions of the school, though enrollment in the division of photoplay writing was offered, for a time at least, for twenty-five cents.

Mr. Cruze is by no means the first professor of photoplay acting, but he is the most aggressive in his advertising and follow-up schemes.

Beauty Contestant Wins Her Wish.

WHEN Governor Henderson of Alabama crowned Miss Lois Wilson of Birmingham the beauty Queen of his State, the little lady had just one other honor in view, to be selected from amongst the beauties of all the states as a member of the acting staff at Universal City. It was indeed glorious to have the chief executive of your state tell you that you were the prettiest girl of your state—but to be a moving picture actress at Universal City, that was a greater achievement still! But Miss Purcell of Washington, D. C., was decided the particular beauty for moving picture honors and little Lois Wilson of Birmingham, dabbed her eyes and went—not home.

Lois Wilson.

She went to Chicago where she had an aunt, for she felt that she wanted to reconcile herself to her defeat and get her sunny Southern smile back before she said "Hello" to her friends in Birmingham again.

Enter the Smalleys and a company from Universal City, to do some scenes in Chicago of their Pavlowa feature — Mme. Pavlowa was handy, dancing through the month of July at the Midway Gardens, one of the great summer amusement places of the Windy City. The Smalleys required girls for a mob in one of the scenes and word went through Chicago about it. Little Miss Wilson heard and went out to the temporary studio alongside the Midway Gardens. She was put into a costume and "made up." The natural beauty that had compelled an Alabama Governor to say kind things to her, made Miss Wilson stand out in the great mob. She was given a regular part, and, whisper it, the part carries her through all the scenes at Universal City so little Lois Wilson has after all been gratified in her supreme wish to be a moving picture actress at Universal City.

EDISON COMPANY IN BERLIN, N. Y.

The Edison Company, including the well-known performers of that organization—Viola Dana, Robert Connis, Jessie Stevens, Pat. O'Malley, Charles Sutton and others—in number about fifteen, have been for the past week in the village of Berlin, N. Y., about fifteen miles from Hoosick Falls, making a new feature picture play. The company is working and the pictures are being taken in the famous gladiola fields owned by Mr. Cowee, in the town of Berlin, and are the largest and best known in this country. The mountain and valley scenery between Hoosick Falls and Berlin is considered equal to any in the United States, and is historically known as the Old Mohawk Trail. No better location could be selected by the Edison Company for the filming of a feature.

On Saturday evening, August 28, the whole company, including Mr. Collins, director; Mr. Van Buren, photographer, and Mr. Kelley, assistant director, upon the invitation of Chas. A. McCarthy, one of the proprietors, and manager of the New theater at Hoosick Falls, N. Y., motored to Hoosick Falls, where they were entertained by Mr. McCarthy at dinner at the Phoenix Hotel, later going to the New theater, where the company was entertained with one of Edison's latest feature plays in which the company had been the principals.

After the exhibition of the picture, the different members of the company appeared on the stage of the theater and were introduced to the large audience present by Mr. McCarthy. Each person was loudly applauded, and every member certainly received a warm greeting from the audience. Miss Viola Dana and members of her company at once made themselves favorites with the Hoosick Falls people.

At the close of the entertainment at the theater all the members of the company were entertained at luncheon at the residence of Derrick L. Hall, editor and proprietor of the Hoosick Falls Standard, a large number of the leading citizens of the city were present to help entertain the guests.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

PICTURE THEATER INFORMATION.

Philadelphia Exhibitors' League Compiles Statistics for Enlightenment of Investors.

THE secretary of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia has compiled his report for the opening of the new season. It includes a list of moving picture theaters that have changed hands or have been closed during the past ten or twelve months. The theaters are graded into four classes, excellent, good, possible and impossible. The latter class undergoes a gradual diminution, but there are still about fifteen such theaters in this vicinity, which are constantly in the hands of the brokers and provide wonderful bait for unsuspecting purchasers. Part of the activities of the Exhibitors' League consists in advising prospective purchasers of moving picture theaters, where and how to place their investment. Many of these persons are unsuspecting business men absolutely ignorant as to the qualifications of a first class moving picture theater. For illustration a Philadelphia business man recently paid $5,500 for the good will and fixtures of a theater which had never made good and, after losing a weekly sum of from $40 to $60 for a period of six months, he was very lucky to get a return of $2,000 and retire from the moving picture game. In another instance a shoe repairer paid $2,000 for the good will and fixtures of a theater to a party who immediately disappeared, leaving no end of debts and judgments behind him. The Sheriff attached the first Saturday's receipts and the shoe-rapairer vacated the following week, a heavy loser. The theater is being boomed at the present time as a huge profit maker for the next victim. Needless to say these gentlemen never sought the advice of the independent officials of the league, preferring of course to pay for their experience.

The following moving picture theaters in Philadelphia have been sold at sheriff's sale during the past year: Alma, Kensington avenue; Bell, N. Fifth street; Brunswick, Frankford avenue; Cariola Hall; Ideal, Sixth and Jackson streets; Liberty, Fourth and Moore streets; Lincoln, S. Fifth street; Lancaster, Lancaster avenue; Panama, S. Fourth street; Royal, N. Fourth street; Spruce, Spruce street, and the Aramingo, located on Miller street.

The following Philadelphia moving picture theaters are now closed: Apollo, N. Fifty-second street; Arcade, Baltimore avenue; Broadway, 1424 Kensington avenue; Berks, Twenty-second street; Crystal Palace, N. Fifth street; Casino, Market street; Central, Market street; Crystal Palace, S. Seventh street; Casino, Frankford avenue; Crosskey, Crosskey street; Family, Ridge avenue; Glen, Glenwood avenue; Grand, 5178 Richmond street; Ideal, Germantown avenue; Ideal, Sixth and Jackson streets; Lincoln, S. Fifth street; Liberty, Moore street; Luzerne, Old York Road; Musee, 3064 Richmond street; Owl, N. Fifth street; Vernon, 5704 Germantown avenue; Woodland, S. Forty-ninth street; Star, 2023 N. Seventeenth street; Scenic, Fifty-fifth and Vine streets; Star, Passayunk avenue; and motion picture houses at Twenty-ninth and Dauphin; Second and Willow; Stenton and Sprague; 628 Moore street; 728 Girard avenue; 1619 South street; 2042 N. Front street; 1426 South street; Twenty-first and South; 7250 Woodland avenue.

Following Philadelphia moving picture theaters have changed hands from September, 1914, to September, 1915: Belgrade, Bridesburg, Baltimore (2), Bartram (2), Auditorium, Chelten avenue (4), Auditorium, N. Second street (2); Amber, Crystal Palace, South street; Crystal Palace, N. Fifth street (4); Crystal Palace, S. Seventh street (3); Cariola Hall, Century, Columbia, N. Third street; Casino, Frankford avenue; Dazzleland (3), Eureka, Fortieth and Market streets; Eureka, Hunting Park avenue (3); Fycent, Franklin, N. Fifty-second street (3); Frolic (3), Fairmount, Forrest (3), Family, N. Eighth street; Gladstone, Grays Ferry Palace, Great Northern, Germantown, Globe, Fifty-ninth and Market streets; Globe, 1315 Market street; Glen (2), Holmesburg, Hippodrome, Lehigh and Salmon (4); Haverford, Hoffman, Italian, Ideal, S. Twentieth street (3); Ideal, Columbia avenue; Imperial, S. Sixtieth street; Keystone, Morris street (2); Keystone, Belgrade street (5); Keystone, E. Dauphin street; Knickerbocker, Little Grand (3); Lyceum, Manayunk; Lincoln, Forty-ninth street; Lincoln, S. Fifth street; Lancaster (2); Model; National, S. Fifth street (3); Olympia, Orthodox, Oxford (3), Plaza, Point Breeze, Panama, Park, Pike, Peoples, Rittenhouse, Royal, N. Fourth street (4); Star, Passayunk avenue (2); Southern, S. Broad street (2); Somerset, N. Twenty-sixth street (3); Spruce (2), South Penn, N. Tenth street (3); Tulpehocken, Victor, McKean street (2); Wayne, Wayne avenue; West Allegheny (3); Wissahickon, Windsor (3), and the Walton theater.

PITTSBURGH PICTURE MEN GET TOGETHER.

League and Screen Club Hold Joint Meeting and Plan to Work in Harmony.

A JOINT meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, Local No. 1, and the Pittsburgh Screen Club, with a banquet, was held at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, Sunday, August 29. H. B. Kester, president of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, called the meeting to order at 2 P. M. At 5 P. M. the meeting adjourned and dinner was served, to which everyone did justice to a well laid table. Close to 125 people were in attendance. After the banquet was served, the meeting again went into session and did not close until 8:15 P. M.

Many of Pittsburgh's prominent citizens attended the meeting through invitations sent out by the Pittsburgh motion picture interests. The following city and county officials and prospective candidates for city and county offices were present and delivered some very interesting addresses in which they stated their views on the motion picture industry: Samuel Jamison, Allegheny County coroner; Dr. Kerr, city councilman; Addison C. Gumbert, candidate for county commissioner; Frank J. Harris, candidate for reelection for county commissioner; Jacob Soffel, candidate for city councilman; Mr. Malone, candidate for city councilman; Mr. Blaney, candidate for prothonotary. The lecturers were all favorable to the motion picture interests. At this meeting the following resolution was read and adopted:

"Whereas, the banquet now being held under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, directed by its board of governors, and invitations sent to the various department of the film industries through the Pittsburgh Motion Picture Bulletin;

"Whereas, there will be a general discussion for its best interest; we recognize the fact of two separate organizations being asked to participate in its deliberations in order that the combined efforts may be for its best interest;

"Therefore be it Resolved, that this meeting be a joint meeting of the Pittsburgh Screen Club and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania;

"Resolved, further, that all actions taken or measures passed shall be made subject to the approval of both organizations, and that joint committees be appointed by the chairman or elected to work out such plan or plans of campaign that will be of material effect and for general good."

A committee of ten was appointed, five by the president of the Pittsburgh Screen Club and five by the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania.

The object of the committee is to devise ways of consolidating two organizations under one head whereby it would be at all times prepared to work in conjunction for the best interest of the motion picture industry; also to investigate the various candidates for city and county offices as to their intentions, principles, etc., for the purpose of considering those whom the organizations combined shall indorse and advertise through the mediums of the screens of the city of Pittsburgh and the county of Allegheny.

National President Fred J. Harrington delivered a highly interesting address on the evils of censorship and it was received by everyone present with renewed enthusiasm.

Addresses were also delivered by many other prominent speakers, including G. W. Sahner, president of Local No. 1.

H. B. Miller was toastmaster and did his part in making the meeting a great success and a pleasant one throughout.

PRESIDENT HERRINGTON WILL TOUR THE EAST.

The new president of the National Exhibitors' League, F. J. Herrington, is about to make a special tour for organizing purposes, beginning about the middle or latter part of September. He will visit all the Eastern states and make personal calls upon as many officials and exhibitors as possible. Mr. Herrington is full of hope and enthusiasm for the future of the league and says that his real work has only just begun. He will urge harmony organization and cooperation among exhibitors. He is a powerful and convincing speaker and there is every reason to believe that his tour will be highly successful.

PRESIDENT HERRINGTON'S MOTHER DEAD.

Fred E. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has been called to New Castle, Pa., on account of the death of his mother. Mr. Herrington accompanied the remains to Cleveland, Ohio, where burial was made. Mrs. Herrington was seventy-four years of age.

Garry McGarry.

"GARRY McGARRY is one of those 'Little Big Men,' like Davy Garrick, who carry one hundred and twenty pounds of steam and use only eighty. Garry McGarry wins by the powder he never explodes."—Elbert Hubbard.

Garry McGarry is one of the younger juvenile players of the Vitagraph Stock Company. He was born in Franklin, Pa., October 17, 1889, and rose to the position he now holds as a well-liked clever portrayer of silent drama roles through individual effort, fighting his way up from a renter of opera glasses in his home town theater. His father, James S. McGarry, was born in Mount Savage, Maryland, and is a descendant of the titled founder of the town of McGarry in Ireland, the "Mc" meaning "son of."

Garry McGarry.

During his school days, when he attended the Sacred Heart Academy at Franklin, Pa., and the Canisus College in Buffalo, N. Y., he earned money after school hours by selling papers. Possessing a voice of rare quality and exceptional range, he began the study of music and naturally drifted to the stage. His first theatrical engagement was with the Boston Ideal Opera Company, singing Pippo in "The Mascot." Here he found work best suited to his talent, and he decided to remain in the profession. The important theatrical companies and stars with which Mr. McGarry has been connected includes: "The Soul Kiss," "The Waltz Dream," "The Confession," two seasons with Tom Terris and a season each with Frank Keenan and Mme. Dore in vaudeville.

It was during an engagement with Mr. Keenan in "Vindication" that his work and appearance attracted the attention of Van Dyke Brooke, one of the Vitagraph directors, who invited him to call on the heads of the Vitagraph Company in regard to playing in pictures; and it was through Mr. Brooke's intercession that Mr. McGarry became a member of the famous Vitagraph Stock Company. His work in pictures vindicated Mr. Brooke's judgment and his appearance in such popular photodramas as "The Daughter of Israel," "A Question of Clothes," "The Capitulation of the Major," "The Wrong Girl," "Hearts Ablaze," "The Tigress," "The Esterbrook Case," "One Performance Only," etc., established him as one of the most popular of juvenile leads.

Julian Reed, Edison Actor, Married.

JULIAN REED, versatile Edison character man, rode into the West—so far even as Jersey City—Sunday and staged a little drama all his own, cast himself and his lot as bridegroom, and picked for the bride Mrs. Mary Darcy Goodwin of Washington, D. C. In other words Julian took unto himself, in all reality, a wife, and he received a rousing welcome at the Edison studio when the news spread.

Julian Reed narrowly escaped being born on the stage, so long have so many of his family been identified with the stage. Springing from one of the oldest and most famous theatrical families of the American stage, his uncle was the great comedian, Roland Reed, it was most natural that he blinked at the footlights in a most friendly way when first carried on as a baby in an old farce called "The Foundling." When he was able to find tongue to his youthful emotions, he appeared as the child in an old play, "The Sea of Ice," and for some years afterward was popular as a clever child dancer until he became associated with the elder Thomas Jefferson.

Julian Reed.

With that actor he spent three years playing the boy and the dwarf in "Rip Van Winkle," and in Philadelphia, where he was born, played long in the old Walnut Street Theater. Mr. Reed has traveled with Kiralfy Brothers, Gus Williams, and "The Romany Rye," in the same company with the late Charles Klein, the author, then an actor.

Five years with the Proctor Stock Company in New York City and Albany passed, then as "Sphinxus" with De Wolf Hopper, when the possibilities of motion pictures for a versatile actor won him over to Edison five years ago.

PICTURE NIGHT ON MANDALAY.

With nearly one hundred prominent screen players as the center of attraction, the two thousand people that took the trip up the Hudson on the Mandalay on Wednesday evening, September 8, enjoyed a unique entertainment. It was motion picture night of the Mandalay carnival week and members of the Vitagraph, World Film and Universal companies combined in making it an unusual affair.

Most of the picture celebrities took part in the impersonation contest, appearing in the characterizations for which they are best known on the screen, and later competed in the dancing contest. Silver cups were awarded the winners.

Among those present were King Baggot, Rosemary Theby, William Garwood, Violet Mersereau, Harry Benham, Leah Baird, Lillian Walker, Hughie Mack, Flora Finch, Wally Van, Tefft Johnson, Kate Price, Arline Pretty, John Hines, Mollie King, Charles Richman, Madge Evans, Vivian Martin, Dorothy Phillips, Theodore Marston, Edna Hunter, Harry Myers, Ben Wilson, Allan Holubur, Brinsley Shaw, Audrey Berry, Belle Bruce, Zena Keefe, Vic Smith, Garry McGarry and Douglas McLean.

KLEINE OPENS OFFICE IN NEW ORLEANS.

Increasing business throughout the middle south and in particular in the immediate neighborhood of New Orleans, has made necessary the establishment of a George Kleine office in that city. Therefore, this territory, which up to the present has been handled by the Atlanta branch, will be in charge of Mr. Howard Gail, with offices at 103 Nola Building.

CORT TO PRODUCE "TRIUMPH OF VENUS."

The Cort Film Corporation has commenced work on the production of "The Triumph of Venus" in seven or eight reels, from a scenario written by Edwin Bower Hesser. The picture will be staged principally in the White Mountains under the supervision of the author. It embraces the best known legends of Venus, goddess of love and beauty.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Pioneer of the Film Industry on the Pacific Coast.

IN the July number of "The Script," the official organ of the Photoplay Authors League, Inc., published in Los Angeles, an editorial advocates the starting of a campaign by the members of the League to raise funds for a suitable memorial to Francis Boggs, "pioneer of the film industry on the Pacific Coast." The movement originated in a letter on the subject, written by Hobart Bosworth.

In addition to the words appearing above within quotation marks, the editorial also contains the two following paragraphs:

"Frank Boggs was the pioneer in the Western field. He set up the first camera and built the first studio on the Pacific Coast. He was a veritable giant in the industry and led the way where vast armies have followed.

"Not only the state of California, but practically all manufacturers have benefited by the film colonization here. They were led to Elysian fields by the discoverer, Boggs."

I had the pleasure to meet Francis Boggs in January, 1911, while he was on a visit, in Chicago, to consult with William N. Selig on important business connected with Selig's western plant. I interviewed Mr. Boggs for the old Film Index, and the article appeared in my Chicago Letter, in the issue of February 4, 1911. Following are several excerpts from it:

"It is the first visit made by Mr. Boggs since January, 1909, and in the interim many changes have been wrought and great advances made for the production of Selig negatives in Southern California.

"When last in Chicago Mr. Boggs took charge of a large company that proceeded from this point direct to New Orleans. After finishing up the work there, the company was taken to California, in the vicinity of Los Angeles, where Mr. Boggs has been engaged ever since. The facilities at the outset were of a primitive character, interior work being done under a canopy. Now all that has been changed, and the Pacific Coast branch at Ebendale, a suburb of Los Angeles, has the best modern facilities for handling subjects of all kinds.

"The plant of the Selig Pacific Coast branch is of much more imposing scope than many might suppose. * * * It is a lasting and powerful advertisement for the Selig Polyscope Company, as tourists are attracted by its Mission atmosphere, and go away surprised that moving pictures are born within its borders.* * *

"Mr. Boggs let me into the secret that the Selig Polyscope Company has purchased the exclusive rights for moving pictures from the missions in Santa Barbara, San Gabriel and San Juan Capastrano, in southern California."

It was in 1909 that Mr. Boggs first met William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company. He was then seeking an engagement in some capacity, in the production of moving pictures. Mr. Selig, knowing his ability, gave him a trial. Mr. Boggs "made good," and soon requested that he be sent to New Orleans with a company. Mr. Selig assented. Mr. Boggs was not quite satisfied with the result of his stay in New Orleans and wrote to Mr. Selig about coming back to Chicago, but received a letter advising him to go out to California. So, on Mr. Selig's suggestion and at Mr. Selig's expense, Mr. Boggs went there. From the time he was engaged in Chicago by Mr. Selig until the day he was shot down by a Japanese assassin, Mr. Boggs had been in the service of the Selig Polyscope Company, without the lapse of a single day. On the orders of Mr. Selig, Mr. Boggs established the first moving picture studio in California, all bills being paid from the Chicago office.

Mr. Boggs, were he alive, would be the first to disclaim that he was "the pioneer of the film industry on the Pacific Coast," or that he "built the first studio on the Pacific Coast," or that all who followed him "were led into Elysian fields by the discoverer, Boggs."

Mr. Selig in his "show" days had seen every nook and corner of California, and when the time came, years afterwards, his full knowledge of the State and its climate caused him to instruct Mr. Boggs to go out to Los Angeles. Mr. Selig is unquestionably the pioneer, and his own money has built the splendid edifices devoted to moving pictures in Los Angeles.

Francis Boggs was a man beloved by Mr. Selig, no less for his high principle and singleness of heart than for his fine ability. No one is more desirous than Mr. Selig to have a fitting memorial tablet erected to the memory of Francis Boggs, and he is ready and willing to pay the entire cost himself; but he knows that Mr. Boggs, if he were alive, would be the last man to claim that such a memorial would establish his right to the title of "pioneer of the film industry on the Pacific Coast."

There is only one, and his name is William N. Selig.

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. O. Nielsen has made arrangements with Alfred Hamburger for first run in Chicago of the five-reel feature "Just Out of College," which will open at the Fine Arts theater Saturday, September 25th, for an indefinite run. After the close of this run the feature will be booked at Hamburger's Willard theater for one week, and afterwards will be presented, in succession, at eight more of the leading houses on the Hamburger circuit. Mr. Nielsen advises me that country bookings of this subject are being signed rapidly, and that the demand is steadily growing. "Just Out of College" is a high class comedy written by George Ade. It has already been reviewed in the columns of the World.

H. Grossman, sales manager of the Charter Features Corporation, New York City, arrived in Chicago Wednesday, September 1st, and made the return trip Sunday, September 5th. Mr. Grossman stated that the purpose of his visit was to give information to inquiring exchanges as to the manner in which the Chapin-Lincoln Cycle can be secured for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

G. P. Hamilton, vice-president and general manager of the National Film Corporation, Los Angeles, stopped over in this city on his way to New York last week. The object of Mr. Hamilton's visits to Chicago and New York is to consummate a proposed connection between the National Film Corporation and a body of Chicago and Milwaukee capitalists, so that arrangements can be made for the putting out of an entire program in Chicago. Affiliation will be made with a well-known and old-line corporation of New York City. William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, and Mr. Hamilton are perfecting the plan.

Paul C. Henry, who purchased the state rights last week of "Guarding Old Glory" for the state of Ohio, called last week. Mr. Henry is owner of the Grand theater in Crestline, O., and has been a subscriber to the World for the last five years. Mr. Henry is an enthusiastic admirer of F. O. Nielsen's patriotic film, and believes that he will have great success with it in Ohio.

Maurice A. Salkin, owner and manager of the Speedway theatre, 4710 Indiana avenue, this city, called at the World office last week, and subscribed for the paper. Mr. Salkin stated that when he purchased the Speedway, about six weeks ago, business was very poor, but that he is now doing very fine business. The Speedway, formerly known as the Admiral, was purchased from the May Amusement Co. The theater seats 800 people and charges an admission of 10 cents for programs consisting of seven reels, of features, exclusively. The products of the V. L. S. E., Inc., Mutual masterpieces, etc., are used. A ten-piece orchestra accompanies the pictures. "The Blindness of Virtue" and "The House of a Thousand Candles" were shown at this theater to crowded audiences. The Salkin enterprises own and operate, in addition to the Speedway, the States theater, 35th and State, the Lincoln, 31st and State, and the Ray, 39th and Grand Blvd., with seating capacities of 800, 400 and 300, respectively. Features, exclusively, are shown at these houses, at 10 cents admission. Large orchestras accompany the presentations of the pictures.

Harold A. Hill, owner of the Star theater, 1434 Fullerton Ave., this city, called last week and renewed his subscription. The Star seats 300 and charges an admission of five cents for four reels of Universal and Mutual service. Mr. Hill stated that he is doing excellent business.

One of the big enterprises now under way at the Selig studios on the Pacific Coast is the preparation of Rex Beach's vigorous Alaskan play, "The Spoilers," for re-release in its original length of twelve reels. Lanier Bartlett has been remodeling and expanding the screen play from the abridged form in which it was originally shown.

"Guarding Old Glory" is making fine headway just now at the Chicago and New York offices. Mr. Nielsen tells me that state rights are in big demand. Last week the Chicago offices sold the state rights for California, Nevada and Arizona to Sol Lesser, of San Francisco; William Cutts, of Butte, Mont., has purchased the rights for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, and Paul C. Henry, the rights for Ohio. The New York office has sold the state rights of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, North and South Carolina and Tennessee, to the Southern Feature Film Co.; the rights of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, to Reese & Samois, of Westminster, Md., and the rights of Greater New York have been purchased by the Greene Photoplay Company of that city. Negotiations for quite a number of other states are well under way, at the time of writing, in the Chicago and New York offices.

At a pastors' convention, called the Congress of Church Efficiency, held recently in Hammond, Ind., it was declared that moving pictures are the best medium for vitalizing the "go-to-church-movement," and initial steps were taken for the promotion of a moving picture campaign along that line. The pastors of Bloomington, Ill., who are unitedly opposed to the opening of moving picture theatres on Sundays, would do well to consider the movement advocated by the convention of pastors at Hammond. Church intolerance will not gain many supporters in this enlightened age. Moving pictures, if rightly treated, cannot fail to prove an invaluable aid to the betterment of Christianity.

On Saturday evening, September 4th, the Aschler Brothers opened their beautiful new moving picture theater, the Lakeside, on Sheridan road and Lakeside place. Selig's V-L-S-E feature, "The House of a Thousand Candles," was offered, and the house was packed to the doors. The Lakeside seats 1,000 people and represents an outlay of $150,000.

The cast in "Just Out of College" is headed by Eugene O'Brien, who, at the time of the beginning of the production of this subject, had just closed an engagement in "The Celebrated Case," for which an all star cast had been engaged by the late Charles Frohman. Mr. O'Brien's dramatic career includes many successful engagements. In addition to being a clever comedian, he is considered one of the most handsome juveniles on the American stage.

With one million and a half German Americans in Chicago, it was only natural to expect that the Studebaker would be far too small to accommodate the remarkable crowd that flocked there last week to see the Tribune's German war pictures. So popular were these pictures, it was necessary to continue their presentation for a second week, before taking them out to the Bismarck Garden, on the north side. Edwin F. Weigle's lecture, which accompanies the exhibition of these pictures, is most interesting.

Burton Holmes, the famous travalogue lecturer, has telegraphed his manager that he will be back in Chicago shortly, after a six months' tour of the United States. During his travels, Mr. Holmes secured material for his coming travelogue series, entitled "Our Own United States—at Least."

Orchestra Hall, under the direction of the Strand Theater Co., has completed its eighteenth successful week in the presentation of moving picture programs. The moving picture subjects presented at this house have been marked by careful selection, and the symphony music given in accompaniment has greatly enhanced the artistic value of the presentations. Orchestra Hall has a large following among the best circles of people in Chicago, and the programs offered by Managing Director E. Q. Cordner have done much to raise the value of the moving picture in the estimation of the better class of people.

"Billie" Burke and her husband, Flo Ziegfeld, stopped over in Chicago on Wednesday, September 1st, on their way to Los Angeles, where Miss Burke will take part in the production of an eight-reel feature under the direction of Thomas Ince. Miss Burke expects that her work there will occupy about five weeks, when she will engage in the rehearsal of her new play under Mr. Ziegfeld's management. "I am not with the Frohmans any more," said Miss Burke, while here, to an interviewer. "We had a row. Did I break my contract? Well, my contract was broken when representatives of the management made premature statements concerning my right to go into pictures. This was after Mr. Charles Frohman's death."

It is said that Charlie Chaplin recently received word from England that he ranked first in a moving picture popularity contest held there, receiving 300,000 votes over his next opponent.

The bookings for "The Diamond From the Sky," at the present time, total $850,000. That is surely "going some" for a period of four months.

William Sheehan, of the Fox Film Co., New York City, was in the city last week. Mr. Sheehan announced that Herbert Brenon, the producer of "Neptune's Daughter," is now in Kingston, Jamaica, with Annette Kellermann and a host of dancing girls from the Ziegfeld show at the Winter Garden, New York City, making a ten-reel picture for the Fox Company. He also announced that Mr. Fox was so much interested in this new Kellermann picture that he had joined Mr. Brenon on his trip to the West Indies.

Tarleton Winchester, publicity manager of Paramount, was kept as busy as a nailer during his stay in the city, at the recent convention. He got out two issues of the Paramount Convention News in four pages, which was eagerly seized by all the members in attendance. The last issue was very cleverly illustrated with caricatures of prominent personages present, by Aylesbury, cartoonist of the Chicago Examiner.

The Central Film Co. has sent out invitations to the press, professors, students and exhibitors to attend a private presentation of a feature picture entitled "At the Bottom of the Sea," at the La Salle theater, Friday afternoon, September 10th.

Alice Nielsen, beloved of hundreds of thousands in this country, arrived in Chicago Saturday, September 4th. The following Sunday night she saw "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial. "It is the most wonderful thing I have ever seen," said Miss Nielsen afterwards. "I couldn't help crying. I had no idea there was such a picture in the world. Little Mae Marsh does some of the best work I have ever seen. She is a dear little thing and has captured me completely. Has she ever been on the stage? Why have I never heard of her?" When Miss Nielsen was told that Miss Marsh had never been on the stage and had received all her experience in acting in front of the camera, she replied: "It seems incredible. I have never seen better acting on any stage." It is understood that the Triangle Film Corporation is endeavoring to secure the services of Miss Nielsen for a forthcoming big feature. Miss Nielsen, however, who is at present on a concert tour of the country, is non-commital.

Arline Hackett, who will be leading woman next season in stage productions with William Faversham, has been specially engaged by Essanay to play the part of Dolores Mendoza, the heroine of "In the Palace of the King," which is now being filmed at the Essanay studios. Richard C. Travers will play Don Juan, the lead.

HOSPITAL FUND GROWING.

Contributions to the Motion Picture Hospital Fund are coming in steadily to the offices of the various trade publications. This fund, the scope of which will be determined by a permanent board as soon as it is selected, is designed primarily to aid in securing hospital treatment for those connected with the industry who may be in need of treatment and who otherwise might be unable to secure it. There will be a meeting of the temporary committee on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Screen Club, at which time it is probable a treasurer will be chosen and arrangements made for public acknowledgment of the subscriptions so far sent in, as well as for an active campaign.

SCREENERS NAME BALL COMMITTEES.

At a meeting of the Board of Governors of the Screen Club on the evening of Tuesday, September 7, King Baggot was named as chairman of the committee of arrangements for the annual ball of the organization, which will be held in the grand ballroom at the Hotel Astor on the Saturday evening before Thanksgiving. Mr. Baggot was authorized to make his own selections as to the committee to aid him.

President James Kirkwood appointed as a press committee for the big event Arthur Leslie, chairman; J. H. Gerhardt, William A. Johnston, George Blaisdell, Fred Beecroft, Harry Innes, Robert Welsh, Hanford C. Judson, Wen Milligan, and Luke Severens. Jule Burnstein will be in charge of the sale of boxes.

To confer with the temporary committee on the Motion Picture Hospital Fund and to aid it in any manner possible President Kirwood appointed Dave Wall and Billy Quirk.

LOS ANGELES LETTER

Keystone Company to Build $100,000 Studio.

MACK SENNETT, managing director of the Keystone Film Company, has made the announcement this week that his company has decided to build an entirely new plant, which will cover more than twice the present area. At least $100,000 will be spent on the buildings and the equipment exclusive of the ground site.

This is rather surprising news, as an extensive re-construction of the Keystone Studio has just recently been completed. The Keystone Company's present large establishment on Allesandro street is, like most studios out here, of what we might call the temporary kind; structures of wood and plaster. These structures will now be removed and replaced with modern, attractive buildings of reinforced concrete, hollow tile and brick—absolutely fireproof. One of the first buildings to be erected will be a two-story administration building to house the executive and business offices. A glass-covered indoor studio with the very latest lighting equipment will be provided for work during the rainy season. Among other structures planned might be mentioned a large cafeteria for the sole use of the players; property and construction shops, hospital, laundry, barber shop, dressing rooms with tub and shower baths, garage and aeroplane hangars with latest models monoplanes and biplanes. The stage space, of course, will be considerably increased and will be large enough to allow 12 companies occupying an average of four sets each, to work at one time. Space for many buildings that are not as yet needed is being reserved for the future. The preliminary work on this magnificent plant will begin within a week or two, drawings and estimates now being in the hands of local architects.

An event of considerable interest at the Keystone Studios this week was the arrival of Joe Weber and Lew Fields. The well-known comedians will fulfill an engagement of indefinite length with the Keystone Film Company, and will be starred in feature comedy productions to be released by the Triangle Film Corporation. Mack Sennett, Hampton Del Ruth and the entire scenario staff of the Keystone Film Company have collaborated on the scenario of the first production to feature the world-famous comedy stars.

Scenario Department, Keystone Film Company.

The scenario staff of the Keystone Film Company is a unique combination of representative writers in widely different lines. Harry Williams, the man to the extreme left in our picture, is a song writer and the author of three of the most popular songs ever published in this country: "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "I Am Afraid to Go Home in the Dark" and "It's a Long Way to Tipperary." Jean Havoz, the fifth in the row, is a well-known writer of vaudeville sketches and plays. Vincent Bryan, the second to the right, is a song sketch writer and Charles "Chuck Riessner," to the extreme right, is a vaudeville sketch artist. Hampton Del Ruth, seated at the table, is the Managing Editor of the Scenario Department, and Frederick Palmer, the man with the bow tie, is the capable and wide-awake publicity manager of the Keystone Film Company, author of many scenarios and much publicity. The combined efforts of such a cosmopolite aggregation of talented writers should produce unusual comedy productions for the Keystone Film Company. The scenario department also includes a musical staff, headed by Jean Schwartz, the well-known composer, who will compose and arrange the music for the Keystone brand of Triangle pictures.

Building Activities at Universal City.

In connection with the Nestor Studios, a structure that has been completed this week at Universal City is an observation platform for visitors. It is built over a new row of dressing rooms, which were erected for the players last month. The platform has a big awning and will probably later be equipped with benches so visitors can sit down, cool and comfortable, and watch at leisure the interesting activities on the big stage. This platform also serves the excellent purpose of keeping the public out of the way; a place where they cannot interfere with the work going on. It is estimated that as many as a thousand people a day visit Universal City.

Scream Club Exhumed.

The club, made up of correspondents for the various trade publications, and the publicity men for the progressive studios of the colony, came to life with a bang a few nights ago. A new policy was adopted. The club will have no officers. A chairman will be named for each meeting. A prominent producer, who is a publicity man, will be invited as the club's guest at its twice-a-month meeting. The first name drawn from the hat was Thomas H. Ince. The dinner will be under the direction of Prince O'Hara, of Inceville, at a beach cafe. The idea of the members is to draw the writers into closer friendship and to get the big producers more interested in their publicity departments and to bring the correspondents, writers and producers together.

The funeral services of William H. West, whose death was announced in last week's issue, were held Monday under the auspices of the Elks Lodge, of which Mr. West was the first Esteemed Leading Knight.

George Stanley has started directing at the western Vitagraph studio. He is doing "He Got Himself A Wife," which features charming little Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell who, by the way, has left the American for the big "U."

"The Clansman" is now in his twentieth week at the Auditorium theater here and the prospects are favorable for several more weeks of good houses. The picture is worth seeing more than once, and many people are doing that.

James Horne is working on the "Mansion of Despair," a four-reel Kalem production, adapted from the novel by Howard Irving Young. Marin Sais is playing the lead with True Boardman opposite. Tom Lingham, who got "all beaten up" in the last episode of the "Grand Hotel Series," is playing the heavy part. Lingham is a player who likes to take desperate chances and scornfully refuses any substitute. In this picture he jumps 50 feet from a bridge in the water and in another scene falls backwards from a second story balcony.

Paul Hurst, the mechanical designer of the Kalem Company, has rebuilt the magnificent hotel lobby scene in the "Grand Hotel" series to a regular Monte Carlo Casino. The gambling paraphernalia is very complete and includes a complete set of roulette wheels, faro layouts, and other gaming devices. It was loaned to the Kalem Company under bond, by the U. S. Government, which had confiscated these devices.

Helen Gibson, the new Kalem railroad girl, is "considerable" a horse woman. She holds the honors for a number of Rodeos in California and Texas, and won the highest honors of any woman rider in the Los Angeles rodeo last May.

Henry Otto, ex-Balboa director, and more lately with the American at Santa Barbara, has joined the Universal and has started directing Hobart Henley in a three-reel feature entitled "The Measure of Leon Dubray," written for the screen by Harvey Gates. Mr. Otto is a well-known and popular director and will be welcomed back "home."

Mabel Van Buren has left Balboa and is hovering about Los Angeles on a vacation before accepting another engagement.

De Wolf Hopper is working like the Dickens at Griffith's studio in the role of Mr. Pickwick. Fay Tincher has abandoned the optical illusion striped dress and the pair of forehead curls and will play opposite Mr. Hopper in this big picture under the direction of Eddie Dillon. The script was prepared by S. Chester Withey.

William H. Thompson has arrived at Inceville to take up his duties as a Triangle actor under the direction of Mr. Ince. He will be seen in the Billie Burke picture.

Sadie Lindblom, who heads her own company at San Mateo, likes this sunny state and is to remain here even if she has just received a flattering offer from her own country, Sweden. They want her to "come home" with the company and make pictures there in a studio which will be furnished free.

E. H. Calvert is coming west to direct Francis X. Bushman. Calvert is a character and heavy as well as a director. He will have charge of the feature company which will star Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne, who arrived here last Sunday with the old Essanay star.

Norman Hackett has arrived at Inceville, where he will be assigned to an important part in support of one of the noted legitimate stars now at work in the canyon plant. He is a well-known stock star and ought to make good on the canvas.

E. D. Horkeimer made a speed trip from the Balboa studios to his "Neal of the Navy" players, who were down the coast at La Jolla without a foot of "raw stock." He did the stunt in his big "Simp" and broke the speedometer. But he saved about a day's expenses by making the flying trip.

Joseph Franz and his Big U players have gone south to San Diego for a two weeks' filming expedition. They will use the Hopi Indian village in the exposition.

At the American, Tom Ricketts is finishing a picture, all of which is made at sea. He cruised up and down Santa Barbara Bay and out to Santa Cruz Island. Harold Lockwood and May Allison are featured. A shipwreck on the island and the blowing up of a big buoy made the film a thriller.

Inceville' motor trucks are buzzing up and down the beach road hauling many carloads of lumber to the mountain studio for use in building the monster new sets which will be used in the first Frank Keenan feature. Reginald Barker will have charge of the direction. Some of the sets are so huge that they will have to be built out in the open on the mesa overlooking the city.

Jesse L. Lasky has completed "The Chorus Lady," with winsome Cleo Ridgley in the title role. She is admirably suited to this part and has done some good work in this picture. The theater scenes are exceptionally good and to one who saw the picture in the making the inside of some big playhouse might have been moved right onto the big stage, it was so real.

H. M. Horkheimer, Balboa's president, is on his way to New York, via San Francisco. He will see the exposition before going east on his fall business tour.

Joseph M. Goldstein

JOSEPH M. GOLDSTEIN, who is thirty-four years old, and has had varied success during these years, is now the sole owner of the Exclusive Features, Inc., 71 West 23d street. At the age of fifteen, he entered the employ of Messrs. Grosshut & Company, as assistant architect. From there he started out as a builder for himself, finally building theaters of his own. He was the first one to build a motion picture theater, below 14th street, New York.

Joseph M. Goldstein.

Seeing the opportunity of becoming a film magnate in 1912, he organized the Exclusive Features, Inc., and was elected president. Associated with him were Harry A. Samwick and Joseph Weinberg. Mr. Goldstein has since acquired the interests of both Weinberg and Samwick, and has opened branch offices for the Exclusive Features at the Eckel Theater Bldg., Syracuse, N. Y., and at the Academy Theater Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

As Goldstein wants to become a producer on a large scale, he has appointed general manager Moe Streimer, whom he told to go ahead and buy the best plays that can be procured. Streimer is now negotiating with some of the best directors to produce some of the plays that he has bought. The names of the plays will be announced through the Moving Picture World.

KLEINE FINISHES "THE SENTIMENTAL LADY."

Kleine players returned last week from Lake Saranac, where the finishing touches were added to "The Sentimental Lady." This production, which features Irene Fenwick, marks the last subject in which that dainty artiste will appear prior to her road tour with "The Song of Songs." "The Sentimental Lady" is one of Owen Davis' best dramas. It is a story of big business and fashionable summer hotels. Miss Fenwick handles the role of "the sentimental lady," a part admirably suited to her petite stature and unusual abilities in roles of that character.

TRIANGLE MAY HAVE NEW OFFICES.

It is rumored that the New York general offices of Triangle Film Corporation will be consolidated. Many thousand feet of space in one of the largest skyscrapers devoted to film managerial offices are being contracted for. At present the executive offices are on the 17th floor of the Masonic Temple building, while the publicity department is in the Longacre building. A decided innovation is that very little office space will be used in the Knickerbocker theater, which will be the first one of the model theaters to open on or about September 23d. Every particle of available space in that historic playhouse will be utilized for the comfort and convenience of the patrons.

GEORGE VERBECK IN TOWN.

George Verbeck, of Buffalo, manager of the Empire Kriterion Film Exchange, was a visitor to the film center during the past week. Mr. Verbeck was looking over the general situation and taking up matters of concern to his exchange. He reported business in Buffalo and its vicinity to be in good shape.

RECORDING HISTORY.

Preserving the Annals of Iowa in Moving Picture Film—Product of Superior Film Co.

THE Historical Department of Iowa has hit upon a practical plan in preserving historical records of the state of Iowa. Records which will be able to deliver to future generations the important details of the evolution of the various influences, scientific and otherwise, that have had a bearing on the history of the state of Iowa. This is to be done chiefly by means of moving picture films.

The Department has entered into an agreement with the Superior Film Company of Des Moines to furnish some fifty thousand feet of negative film made of Iowa scenes and persons during the years 1913 and 1914, the Superior Film Company reserving the right to the commercial use of these films for a reasonable period.

The negatives are filed away in the library of the department much in the same manner in which manuscripts are handled, the airtight tin retainer, sealed with adhesive tape, being regarded as the cover or binding, and carrying such library marks as would be found upon or within the binding of an ordinary book. There is a possibility that at some future time in the classification of subjects, it will be necessary to subdivide various negatives, cutting the films into separate parts.

The importance of this move by the Historical Department of Iowa will easily be recognized, encompassing as it does by necessity of association, much more than merely the history of Iowa, including much that has a bearing on the continental history of the period.

A NEW FISH PICTURE.

AN INTERESTING picture has just been released by the Pharos Film Company in conjunction with the New York Globe showing their fishing boat "Heroine" engaged in deep sea fishing off the Grand Banks.

Every phase of the activities of the "Heroine" are shown, especially the industry of deep sea fishing, from the mending of nets to the catch of several thousands of pounds of valuable market fish.

Scene from "The Globe's Fishing Boat" (Pharos).

The film is as instructive as it is interesting and illustrates the commercial side of deep sea fishes as handled by A. W. McCann, whose duty it is to see that only pure food reaches the New Yorker's table and the impure or unfit finds its way to more useful purposes as a fertilizer.

C. A. Kracht, of the Globe, is handling this attractive film and has already booked it for all the Loew houses after Mr. Loew had personally reviewed the film. Proctor's and other houses are also in line for its exhibition.

OFFICIAL WAR FILMS.

The Prime Minister of England has announced in the British Parliament that the government is doing that which also the French government is doing: "allowing kinematograph records to be taken of suitable scenes at the front and along the lines of communication." These films will be available for exhibition in the picture houses throughout the country, and, as they are produced under official supervision, the public will have the satisfaction of seeing for themselves some of the real phases of the war. The experiment in which the French government took the initiative will stimulate public interest in the campaign west to a greater degree than word descriptions can possibly do.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS GROWTH.

The use of moving pictures is now working in three distinct directions apart from the regular picture theatre; they are Municipal, Scholastic and Religious.

Municipal control of pictures is growing in purpose varying from those in the public playground to those for hygienic purposes. This summer Boston and Cleveland have been giving special attention to these outdoor advantages, using films of educational, health and civic subjects. Boston has perhaps gone into greater detail than many other cities, their films portraying the evils of unsanitary conditions, neglect of children, and other similar subjects under the supervision of the State Health Department.

Sometimes lectures add to the interest and value of the pictures; so successful has been the experiment that after the summer campaign is over an indoor winter series will be organized. Omaha wishes to claim precedence, in that their municipal pictures have been in use for several years. The matter is now of sufficient importance to become so general that no one or more central city can claim distinction. Is not the time very near when every municipality will have its organized board of public instruction through the means of the motion pictures?

In the scholastic world we are now accustomed to the daily appearance of "—— School is going to introduce the moving pictures." The latest recorded is that of a State Normal Training School in Kansas where the moving picture is to have a distinct place in visual teaching. "How to teach" by aid of kinematography is going to become a part of normal training. In the Wisconsin State Industrial School the authorities find that "work goes a little easier and play goes a little more gaily" when the boys know that pictures are the reward for good conduct.

In church circles the field of opportunity for use of the motion picture is constantly enlarging, and the number of those taking advantage of the opportunities are constantly increasing; because of this, prejudices and difficulties are rapidly disappearing and the "old order" is giving way to the "new order," so much so that in Chicago the "St. Paul Pioneer," a church paper, says, "The Sunday evening problem is solved."

Broader conceptions, aims and ideals are assured and larger congregations are proofs of the larger purposes for which the church stands. Perhaps nowhere has the church question been more tested and contested than in Elgin, Ill., the result being that the pictures have been overwhelmingly approved so that a circuit plan is being adopted to secure that satisfaction which a permanent use demands. A most prominent clergyman declared that the church was "tired of the bare apology for an evening audience," and if the moving picture would answer the purpose of the scriptural injunction, "Go out into the highways and compel them to come in that my house may be filled," it was an expedient worthy of being tried. No less an authority than Mr. Capen, president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, has declared that the church with which he is connected in Boston has doubled its every department, from children to adults, and results have proved that the moving picture is both filling the churches as well as filling a long felt want in the lives of those attending the churches.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Playing the High Brow Stuff for Pictures.

MR. FRANK H. ANDERSON, organist of the Rose Garden, Venice, Cal., sends the following, which he terms: "Playing the High Brow Stuff for Pictures."

Being a constant reader of this department, I find many suggestions that prove of great help to me. While the argument of playing old popular songs to fit various scenes is all very well in its place (and I use quite a few of them myself), I make a practice of using plenty of high class music from operas for the various scenes.

In a very pathetic scene I improvise plaintively on the vox, or play "Mimi's Farewell" or "Solo de Mimi" from La Boheme, or "The Stars Are Shining" from La Tosca. These numbers if played slowly and softly will give a beautiful effect. In a scene of a husband deserting his wife for another I play "Vesta la Guibba" from Pagliacci, which is identical with the same situation. Another beautiful number I play in the event of a girl awaiting the return of her lover is the "Waiting Motif" from Madame Butterfly, or "Some Day He'll Come" from the same opera. In playing for "The Tragedy of Old Japan" (Domino) I played the whole selection of Madame Butterfly, repeating at times the above mentioned numbers for plaintive scenes, interspersed with some real Japanese music which I learned in the Jap colony in Honolulu. I am very partial to Puccini's music on account of the beautiful harmony he derives through use of minor chords.

Owing to the fact that these numbers are not generally well known to moving picture patrons, it does not tire them so quickly as the time worn "Hearts and Flowers," etc. The curiosity of the hearers is often aroused—in fact, I often receive inquiries from music lovers as to the names of pieces I play. But do not misunderstand me by thinking I am saying anything detrimental to the old familiar tunes. As I said before, I use them where it is necessary.

I am playing on a Style K Wurlitzer, and when I get to improvising on the Vox I don't care "whether school keeps or not." I always follow the picture, but would not play "I Hear You Calling Me" every time the hero answers the telephone. Hardly.

Here is a program from a Wurlitzer manipulator:

The "Avenging Conscience" (Griffith).

(Musical suggestions by Jack Welch.)

1—Open with plaintive till change; then:
2—Poet and Peasant (Suppe) until "Day of the Party."
3—Knights and Ladies waltz until: "Music hath no charms."
4—Valse Oriental "Thais" (Stern) until: "Their Last Farewell."
5—Good-bye (Tosti), then surge into
6—Perfect Day (Jacobs) until girl prays.
7—Berceuse Tendre (Stein) until: "Uncle May Return Unseen."
8—Long Semi-mysterious (Orpheum Collection), "Give Me Money."
9—Fast hurry (follow action) until: "He Buys Silence."
10—Mysterious. Until: "Artful Inquiry."
11—Mona Liza (Doyle) until "Congratulations."
12—Play the "Ghost." Repeat No. 11 until Ghost appears in bedroom.
13—Ghost music (pizzicato) until end of scene.
14—After Vespers until "Avenging Conscience."
15—Very fast Agitato until Christ appears.
16—"Nearer My God to Thee" (vox humana and chimes) until detective places men.
17—Long, mysterious and agitated scene. (Tapping, owl-hoot and clock tick). Play until: "Neither Man, Woman," etc.
18—Weird and fast hurry; follow action—until he blows police whistle.
19—Very long fast hurry. (Shots, whistle, etc.) until he hangs himself. Then:
20—Berceuse (Jocelyn) until he wakes up.
21—Moderato until "I Can Hear Pan," etc.
22—Morning Mood (Greig) flute solo until end.

Just one more. The "one man" (or one woman—as the case may be), picture accompanist has the floor for a brief season. You orchestra fellows look out for your laurels. Mr. Rosenthal doesn't say what particular kind of instrument he favors, but he says this program received so many pleasing comments that he felt constrained to send it to the department on the chance that it might be helpful to others:

"The Hypocrites."

(Musical suggestions by Adolph Rosenthal, Palace Theater, San Francisco, California.)

"Moonlight Sail to the Isle of Love" for introduction of characters until Gabriel the Ascetic. Then: Prayer from Lohengrin.

First Episode.

"With Prayer and Feasting," etc.—Rosary (Nevin) until Monastery scene; then: Oh Divine Redeemer (Gounod) until appearance of Nun. Ave Marie (from Cavalera Rusticana) until: "Let Us See This Work."
"Oh Livine Redeemer" again until festival scene.
Military March (Schubert) until appearance of Gabriel.
First few bars of prayer from Lohengrin.
Resume March until appearance of Nuns; then: Ave Marie (Luzzi) until: "The Abbot Himself, etc.," then: first movement of Sonata (B minor) Op. 35 Chopin.
(The performer will find that with this number he can follow the action of the picture very closely.) Continue until: "The robe of mourning envelops her."
Lamentoso from the fourth movement of Tschaisky's.
Pathetic Symphony until scene inside church.
Chorus from "The Palms" until picture passes from preacher to altar, then:
Chorus from Calvary until choir sings; then:
Handel's Largo with Vox Humana until leader: "Ask for his resignation"—then: Elevation (by Florsheim) until vision; then: Ave Marie (Gounod) until Struggling up narrow path, then: Kamennoi Ostrow (by Rubenstein) until "Truth is ever elusive," then Callirhoe (Chaminade) until "Since my people will not come to Thee," then Prayer from Lohengrin until Political scene; then Tipperary March until appearance of Gabriel; then first bars of Lohengrin until he leaves stand, then return to Tipperary until leader "Society."
"Nights of Gladness" waltz until appearance of dancers, then Entertainers Rag until leader "Truth is Welcome, if Clothed in Our Ideas."
O Salutaris Hostia meditation (by Morrison) until beach scene, then By the Sea. At appearance of Gabriel play a few bars of Lohengrin, then return to "By the Sea" until "Home" (death scene of child), then Cavatina by Raff until death of Gabriel; then "Nearer, My God, to Thee" and Chopins Funeral March to end of picture.

Mr. Rosenthal has chosen a very dignified and musicianly program in the main. It seems too bad, though, to inject "Tipperary March" and "Entertainers Rag" into such good company. I know the pieces in question fit the scenes well enough, but they are cheap and tawdy in comparison with the balance of the program. Couldn't some light, lively music have been chosen which would have answered the purpose without such vivid contrast? And the number "By the Sea." Is that the popular song of that title or Schuberts "Am Meer?" Trivial popular stuff is good in its place, but when sandwiched between the "Prayer from Lohengrin" and "Raffs Cavatina" it is apt to jar on a refined sensibility.

Save Your Musical Programs.

Some time ago some one wrote in for the musical suggestions for "Home Sweet Home." The Mutual Film Corporation issued a suggestion for the musical accompaniment to this picture, a copy of which was given in the Moving Picture World, page 422 July 18, 1914. Another wanted a program for a still older release—"Judith of Bethulia." Several suggestions for music to this picture were given in this department last year, one being in the issue of July 11, page 292. Scarcely a week goes by without an inquiry from some one regarding programs in back numbers of this publication. Why wouldn't it be a good idea to save all the musical programs? You may not care for them today, yet you may want them tomorrow. It will be no more trouble to save them now than to write for them after awhile, and think of the time you save. Here are suggestions for some of the feature pictures which have appeared in these pages, together with date of publication:

"Antony and Cleopatra" Aug. 29, 1914 (page 1225).
"The Christian" Oct. 17, 1914 (page 339).
"Damon and Pythias"—Jan. 2, 1915 (page 62).
"Damon and Pythias"—Jan. 23, 1915 (page 505).
"Neptune's Daughter"—Feb. 27, 1915 (page 1303).
"Neptune's Daughter"—May 1, 1915 (page 717).
"The Hypocrites" July 3, 1915 (page 53).
"The Hypocrites"—(This issue and page).
"Du Barry"—March 27, 1915 (page 1917).
"The Dancing Girl"—July 31, 1915 (page 827).

It might be a good idea to cut this out and paste it in your hat.

Seeburg Motion Picture Player.

J. P. Seeburg, whose "Style R" combination pipe-organ, piano and orchestra is so well known, is in the market with an improvement in the shape of a new model which he calls "Style R. P. The Wonder of Them All." This instrument has a separate manual (or key-board) for the organ attachment, and one octave of pedals. (I was told that they were being made with a larger range of pedal notes.) There are seven sets of organ pipes, consisting of 4 foot, 8 foot and 16 foot pipes.

A coupler attachment can be made to include the piano and organ together or each instrument separately. Besides the "traps" and sound effects there is a set of chimes and an xylophone.

The pipe-organ can be played at the same time or separately. It can also be played from music rolls, and these can be had from J. P. Seeburg Piano Co. containing ten different selections on one roll. These rolls are made especially for the Seeburg Motion-Picture-Player, and can be adjusted while playing to go forward or back to any part of the roll. The performer can also cut in the vox humana organ stop while playing from the roll. The chimes and xylophone can likewise be switched in to use with the roll. A small motor is in lower compartment of piano for the sole purpose of running the music roll. The "Kinetic Blower" is equipped with a one and one-half horse power motor of 3,500 revolutions; either direct or alternating current 110 or 230 volt. This is furnished with the instrument. The instrumentation of the player is given as follows:

Violin, flute, piccolo, cello, saxophone, bass melodia, echo clarinet, vox humana, cathedral chimes, organ swell, tremolo, bag-pipe effect, bass drum, small drum, kettle drum, cymbal, triangle, crash cymbal, xylophone castinets, tambourine, mandolin, tom-tom, steamboat whistle, bird whistle, baby-cry, wind siren, door and telephone bells, fire gong, horse trot, locomotive and tugboat exhausts, auto horn, cuckoo, pig grunt and human voice.

British Notes

THE BARKER COMPANY, whose studios are at Ealing, have been fortunate enough to secure the first services of Lewis Waller, an international star of the "legitimate" stage, in a picturized version of a sparkling play entitled "Brigadier Gerravel," from the pen of Sir A. Conan Doyle. The work is already in an advanced stage and in addition to numerous presentations of minor celebrities of the footlights affords ample scope for the histrionic attainments of Miss Madge Titheradge.

Alex. M. Pyke, managing director of the Cambridge Circus Kinema, London, and well known in the trade as the controller of a former circuit of theaters, has, along with his chief engineer, been committed to trial for manslaughter. The charge arose out of a fire at the theater a short time ago in which a workman named Powley was burned to death. It was stated at the time that a ton of old films were improperly stored at the theater and that their ignition was mainly responsible for Powley's death.

The advent of every new production of merit inspires some elated prophet to declare that the zenith of the kinema is surely at hand. In 1910, when the Itala Company astonished the growing industry with "The Fall of Troy," it was heralded around as the last word in kinemacraft, if readers will excuse this, our newest hybrid. To-day the same stereotyped allusions is being applied to "Cabiria" by the same company, released initially in this country in Manchester (London does occasionally play second fiddle in "first nights"), but despite the respective magnificence of both productions, which in rotation overtaxed the superlative exuberance of the synopsis writer, a little philosophic comparison cannot do otherwise but prove the motographic millennium remoter than ever. As a typical case in point, take Pathe's serial, also imported this last week from the U. S. A., a film in which some of the most advanced, complicated researches of modern science and survey are subjected to the fancies of the producer. I use this term discriminately because at a private view of the film in company with an M. D. from the local University. I simply had to be convinced upon authority I could not question that certain of these incidents could never be actualities. Personally, I should have enjoyed the film immensely had my friend considerately withheld his painfully technical criticisms, amongst other things of the correct way to administer the semi-anesthetic, Scopolomin, as against the way the producr employed. I reasoned with him that the producer's aim was a realistic picture-story, not an authentic medical treatise. "Then," replied the Doc, " to be successful he must maintain his realism down to the last notch by calling in the assistance of a specialist in the particulr faculty he employs as a medium." There is no contradicting the logic of this cynicism. Famous scholars and eminent men in the world of art, science and letters are now regular patrons of the moving picture and the producer who makes excursions into their domains must do so with a tolerable respect for reality. Perhaps the day is dawning when the manufacturer of motion pictures will call in a qualified medical practitioner to advise in the setting of hospital or operation scenes. Who knows but what we may soon see, after the title—"scenario by H. G. Wells, in collaboration with Thos. A. Edison and Sir Oliver Lodge?" It is perhaps a long look into the future, but in this age of specialization not impracticable. And even that would not be the zenith of the filmic art.

The London "Globe" bitterly resents the continued use of certain words and phrases which constitute the nomenclature of the kinema industry. "American slang at its best is so terse and picturesque that none but a pedantic purist would wish to raise a barrier against it on this side of the Atlantic. But English as she is spoken in the Tenderloin district is an imported article we can do without and for this reason we regret the tendency to eke out the picture-play by explanations and synopses in U. S. A. English." The particular expressions which have stuck in the gills of the writer are "released" and "featured." Without dogmatizing on the point, there does seem to be some ground for the objection, but the overworking of these words is by no means an American monopoly. Ever since films were first exhibited both here and in the States star players have, with a cast-iron rigidity, been "featured" and films invariably "released." Never once do I remember having seen or heard the equally descriptive and synonymous alternative whereby a player could be expatiated or a film liberated. The countless hybrids evolved to designate moving-picture theaters absolutely excuse the exhibiting side of the industry from terminological procrastination. The manufacturer with his unshakable faith in "features" and "releases," along with a handful of moss-grown adjectives reminiscent of the early days of kinema craft, is more at fault. His science has gone forward in leaps and bounds, but some of the terms in his vocabulary badly need revision.

It may astonish—although stagger would be the more appropriate word to those who do not realize the limitations of the fact—many people on the Western shore of the Atlantic, to know that at the present moment the city of London, the hub of the universe, is motion pictureless. The Bishopsgate Picture Palace in Bishopsgate near the eastern boundary of the city itself, closed down a fortnight ago. The reason for the noticeable absence from the city area of the ubiquitous kinema show is, of course, owing to it being given over entirely to business premises and warehouses and quite deserted after five in the evenings. Despite the fact that land in the city is sold by the inch the atmosphere of the district does not appear to lend itself successfully to exploitation by any form of entertainment. Still, it is the veritable City of London, and with the closing of the Bishopsgate theater, the one and only, the domain of the Lord Mayor will remain flickerless.

The Essanay Company's new arrangement for renting direct has precipitated trouble. Quite a large number of exhibitors are vowing right and left to dispense entirely with the firm's wares. In one provincial city with a population of over a million an exhibitors' meeting the other day resolved to show no more Essanay films until the new arrangement be cancelled or modified. The bone of contention is undoubtedly the embargo upon Chaplin films. After October 31st next to obtain a Chaplin film at the normal price the exhibitor in Britain must take 3,000 feet of film from the Essanay program in addition. Chaplin's popularity throughout Great Britain at the present moment has never been equalled, even in the wildest dreams of stars of the spoken stage, but I am under no delusion in stating there is a strong feeling rife that Chaplin's phenomenal record is being conserved as an instrument of coersion. As mentioned in previous letters, a formidable resistance to these methods is already in being.

The World Film Company's drama "Hearts in Exile" has been prohibited from public exhibition by the Government. This decision was arrived at after a conference between the Home Secretary and the Russian Consul-General.

The Cunard Film Company is probably the most preoccupied studio in England at the time of writing. A notable production nearly complete bears the title "A Cruel Revenge" and contains a remarkably truthful reproduction of the galleries of the Royal Academy. Players from Wyndham's, the Alhambra and the Ambassador's theaters figure in the play, which is characterized by a few vivid portrayals of life in the East End of London.

Red Wing, the well-known Indian actress, has left Mutual to join the Mission players at San Gabriel. She will play the leading Indian part in the historical drama of California.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Houses.

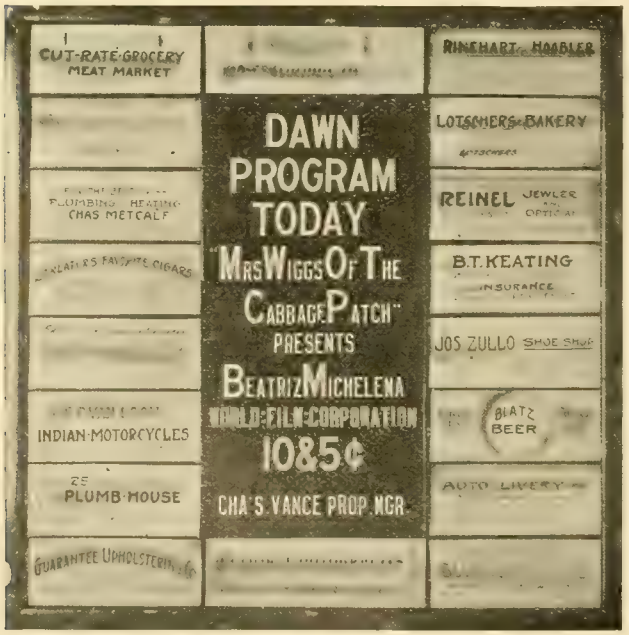
SPEAKING of a certain house in Philadelphia the other day, one of the townsmen said: "They send us tickets each week, and generally some one goes. My sister was in there last night. There were sixteen people in the audience and more than that in the orchestra. One of the musicians was 'called' by the leader, so he got the leader by the collar and dragged him into the lobby where he beat him up and brought him back to his chair." The house closed for the summer the same week. Possibly the men knew this and were a bit playful, but it is perhaps more likely that the house failed to do business, even with passes, because it was run in such a rowdy fashion. The same man who gave the passes to his sister regularly attends, on purchased tickets, another house where the management is good, not consciously because it is better managed, but because he says he likes the place. Houses where the double bass or the clarinet player can use the lobby for a prize ring are mercifully few, but there are many houses where a lack of discipline less pronounced more than offsets the heavy investment in film rentals. It is not merely the film that is shown that counts. It is the atmosphere of the house in general. Some houses welcome a patron. Others almost seem to dare the visitor to have a good time. A large orchestra will not bring the crowd where discipline does not prevail and in spite of the salary list the management does not get what it is paying for because the element of true management is wholly lacking.

Bubbling Over.

A well known and inexhaustible source of brimstone and steam heat seems to be bubbling over in Grand Junction, Colorado. The local paper ran the press dispatches of the sinking of the British battleship Majestic. Charles Decker of the local Majestic theater, got out an extra of his own publication, The Movie Fan, stating that the report was not true and that the Majestic was still able to keep afloat. Then the News came out with a shot that makes the siege guns sound like toy pistols and is going to sue the theater. It may be a double advertising stunt, but advertisement based on the misfortunes of war is about as safe to handle as frozen dynamite. It's good to keep away from.

Has a Scheme.

Charles Vance, of the Dawn, Streator, Ill., sends in a photograph of an advertising frame that is common enough around the smaller hotels, but which we do not recall having seen used in connection with theater work. No details accompany the photgraph, but we presume that Mr.



Vance arranges to place these frames in places of public resort, paying for location in cash or tickets and collecting enough from the other advertisers to make the scheme self supporting. The idea is of value only when, as in the present instance, the signs are neatly lettered or printed. Properly done, it is a source of revenue as well as publicity.

Mr Vance also contributes a photograph of a freakish automobile with placards for the Vanderbilt cup races. He wisely used comparatively small placards and used the car itself as an attractor. It is an even more freakish affair than Brother Richardson's much press-agented go-devil.

A car like that scouting through the streets will attract more attention than the conventional float. It is different and so will make more of an impression on the mind than a straight advertisement. The value of an advertisement is not measured in square inches of display but by the novelty of the idea and the sensation it creates.

No Pun?

The Orpheum, Gardiner, Mass., comes out with the Orpheum Breezelet advertising Edmund Breese. Wonder if they are punning. One good paragraph is this:

PLEASE

Take Me home with you and put Me in a convenient place and I shall be glad at any time to refresh your memory on just what pictures are being shown at THE ORPHEUM and the dates for the same

We think that a slightly more orderly arrangement of the contents would be advantageous. There is part of the program on each of three of the pages, but it looks more like display advertising than program. It seems to have been the printer's idea to use the largest possible type for the space and get it full up. A smaller face; a more sightly face (which does not necessarily mean a less legible face) and some white space would help. It would also help to run the program in the center of each page with six point rule above and below and the reading matter top and bottom.

Some theaters would profit by using this line and living up to it:

Remember

Our programs of pictures are built up to a standard and not down to a price.

That conveys a better idea of excellence than "Best show in town," or similar lines. It means something definite.

Two Novel Stunts.

Charles J. Giegerich, of the V-L-S-E sends in an account of two stunts that were worked with the four letter features. One of these was sprung by the Palace theater, Manchester, N. H., when they had "The Rosary." A special stage setting was built, showing the choir loft of a church and in this worked a prima donna, a tenor, a choir of twenty voices and a special organ. "The Rosary" could have stood by itself, but the addition of the scenic and vocal feature, while not improving the film, most assuredly placed the audience in the most receptive mood and made possible the fullest effect.

The Orpheum theater, Eau Claire, Wis., made use of a small island situated in the river about a hundred feet from a passenger bridge, for "The Island of Regeneration." Cut outs of Miss Storey and Mr. Moreno were placed on the bank as though waiting for the boat while a large banner announced the showing of the feature at the Orpheum. There have been a number of "Island" stories put out lately following the "Island of Regeneration," and if you have any of these and a handy island, it is a capital scheme that may be inexpensively worked. The scheme can be worked in other ways. If there is a foot bridge near a dam (and generally there is) put a Chaplin or Ham cut one on a float, attach the two rear corners to strong lines and float the figure down to the very crest of the dam before tying up. Two lines are needed to keep the figure square with the bridge, but if this is done the effect will be startling, the figure being seen before the advertisement is.

Good Because It Works.

Most Exhibitors have trouble because films arrive late and the earlier the house opens the more frequent is the annoyance. Proctor's Griswold, Troy, N. Y., opens at eleven in the morning and H. R. Emde writes:

PROCTOR'S GRISWOLD
TROY, N. Y.

_____ 1915

Manager Booking Department:

Dear Sir:

Ship _____ which we play _____ to arrive, not later than 9 A. M., date of playing. We reserve the right to deduct a reasonable amount from cost of feature in event of late arrival.

Manager Proctor's Griswold.

NOTE.—The continued late arrival of features has forced us to take the above action.

> Most feature pictures used at the Griswold are shipped from out of town film companies. On the average of once a week we were forced to fill in our show with some other feature, owing to late arrival of ours on that day.
> In order to protect ourselves, we are using the enclosed postal card, mailed in advance of playing date. The film company receives the card the day of shipment of feature to us.
> After a two months' trial, it has proved successful. I have only had to deduct on two features for late arrival. In each case a reasonable amount was deducted.

The card is a government postal shown in the reproduction that accompanies this. It might be well, where the scheme is used, to specify, in making the booking that the films shall be in the house in time for the opening. Then the sending of this card just before the date of playing will not only jog the memory of the shipping clerk but probably "throw a scare into him."

Mr. Emde has planned his card well and it should serve as a model for others.

Sensible.

This is not an advertisement for Metro films, but since it is lifted from the house sheet of the American Feature Film Co., of Boston, we leave it in:

> MR. EXHIBITOR:
> Are You Realizing that Your Greatest Expense is Your Empty Seats?
> The money that you lose every day in empty seats, proves that the pulling power of your theater has not been strong enough to have kept those seats filled. Your own neighborhood trade, you can count upon, because of the convenience of your theater to their homes; but the empty seats prove that you must draw from other neighborhoods, outside that zone of convenience, or get the same people in your own neighborhood to come oftener
> To pull people five, ten and fifteen streets away, with other theaters nearer, requires a much stronger attraction. To add this "stronger attraction" you need not add more film. Film beyond a limited number of reels becomes tiresome. You must add a certain something that will make the number of pictures that you do run, more entertaining. That "something" is possessed by METRO PICTURES.

That's just about the idea. You save wear and tear on the chairs, but no patron is apt to wear a chair out ten cents' worth, so try and have the seats filled. It can be done because it is being done, but not with ten reels thirty days old and looking twice that age.

Saying Something Real.

In a recent Real Reels George E. Carpenter is moved to remark in en editorial on poor proofreading. He does not like to see "Barrymore" read Barrysore" or "The Love Route" called "The Love Rut." He says:

> It is all very well to cuss the proofreader and demand his blood after the damage is done, but the dear old public recks not of the mechanical department of a newspaper—you and your theater are the ones to suffer, while the supercilious and the knowing ones sneer at your ignorance and ask, "what license has he to be in the moving picture business?"

It may be the pot calling the kettle black, for now and then the proofreader has a lot of fun with us that we do not in the least enjoy, but there is no excuse if you can see proof, and you always can see proof when you are paying for the job.

Mr. Carpenter might have added that Picture Theater Advertising, which is now ready, tells all about the preparation of printers' copy, proofreading and the rest. It costs only $2.00, and it surely will gain more than that much in new patronage for you, so it is more than cheap at the price.

We might remark in passing that George E. has just remembered about the wall-paper announcement and says: "It made quite a flutter at the time (two years ago) and we have been waiting for somebody to spring it since."

My! If we had known he has been waiting all this time, we would have sent him a few samples. It is being used every little while by live wires who keep the back issues of this department.

Yes. That's in Picture Theater Advertising, too, along with the Public Health Notice, the one-piece coat hanger and all the rest of the good things that some of you have forgotten.

And lastly we are afraid George Editor is writing poetry again. No one man can do everything. And he blames it on the office boy!

Welcome.

The Movie News, published by the Piedmont Amusement Co., Lynchburg, Va., comes in with its third number. It is well done: exceptionally well done. Will they please send a copy to R. C. Wilby, Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala. It is what he is asking for. The News (we do not like that "Movie") is working on the right plan of getting out some good local stuff to boom the circulation. They give full synopses, which is not a very good plan. The last couple of paragraphs should be omitted and a tag written that will pique curiosity but not satisfy. Instead of saying that they were married and lived happily ever after, cut off at the point where the situation suggests that she will enter a nunnery and that he will enlist with the Allies and then add something like this:

> We are not going to spoil the story for you by telling how it came out, but the climax is thrilling and novel.

Now they can come to the theater and still be interested in the outcome. Perhaps, for that matter, they will come because they have been interested, but if they know beforehand just how everything came out, they will not care much for the story and think the program dull.

We are willing to contribute two bits to the subscription for a wreath of immortelles for some Lynchburg proofreader, though. Just look at this:

> W. A. M.—What has become of Floreboe Lawerance.
> Answer.—Miss Lawrance is at her home in Long Island. She is not playing in pictures at present.

It occurs in an Answer Department and surely a proofreader with only one eye should at least have spelled the name the same way both times. We have seen only one of the issues. We will appreciate it if the management will place our name on the mailing list.

W. R. Wilkinson, the resident manager, is the Editor.

New and Good.

Considerable thought seems to have been given the opening of the roof of the Soledad theater, San Antonio, Texas. The announcement is a four page folder 5½ by 7 inches. On one side is the advertisement. One of the pages of the other side is printed up "The South's largest theater invites as its guest ——— and one." This is done in imitation handwriting. Where the dash occurs is a blank for the name and address of the recipient. This space is so laid that the address appears on the back of the pass printed on the other side and which is to be torn out and presented. This makes for a real mailing list check.

With a house seating 2,000 and a room with a capacity for 1,800 they can afford to do things nicely, but it does not always follow that money means brains. In this case brains go with the money, for a restrained use of red ink, a nice eye for type faces and sobriety and convincingness of phrasing all go together. Presumably it is the work of W. J. Lytle, the manager.

Better.

J. F. Parks, of the Morris Grand, Hot Springs, Ark., sends in a four page folder for comment. It is better than his earlier efforts, but we are sorry to see that he gives a generous half of the front page to an outside advertiser. As a result the house program is crowded and lost. It would be better to trust to the inside pages for the program and put one or two punchy lines in the space. The program is detailed in the inside pages and does not need recapitulation on the front page. It would be better to pull up there just one film and not try to say too much about that in the inch and a half space.

Of the two programs sent, the green of that shade is better than the shade of yellow used, though usually a yellow shows better than a green.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., New York

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Comedy Action.

ONE correspondent wastes three whole pages telling about comedy action only to show he does not know what comedy action is. The gist of his remarks is that comedy action seems to be slapstick and that is not comedy. "We laugh at certain comedians," he sagely observes," but we laugh with others." Just so. And we laugh with those others because they are performing comedy in action and not solely in idea. That is where he fails to make his point. Slapstick is comedy action of a pronounced sort. Straight comedy is action of another sort, but it has not dawned on his comprehension what action is, so he does not fill three pages of discussion acceptably.

Comedy action may be hitting another man and knocking him down. It does not have to be. Sydney Drew is one of the best comedy actors in pictures. He does not use the seltzer bottle or the blown bladder, but he makes his audiences laugh with a look or a gesture that emphasizes the idea of the scene. That also is comedy action.

We will suppose that Smith and Jones are deadly enemies and that their children wish to marry. That may be comedy of idea. This comedy of idea may be told in almost straight action, gotten over with the aid of leaders, or it may be told in comedy action, if you know what comedy action is. Let us suppose that the parents discover the children in a love affair. In idea alone we would get this:

> 16—Garden Jim and Sally flirting. Smith and Jones enter from opposite sides—threaten each other—drag the children off.

There is action to this, it is amusing in a very mild way, deriving the comedy from the idea. Now, suppose that an intelligent writer sees that he needs action to strengthen the idea. We might get:

> 16—Garden Jim and Sally making love—Smith enters at rear discovers them—comes down threatening Jim with cane—Jim and Sally spring up Jones enters sees Smith about to strike Jim—hurries front—parries blow with cane, fencing fashion—how does Smith dare strike a Jones?—Jones is so angry he almost chokes—for answer Smith shows Jones Jim's ring on Sallie's engagement finger Jones turns on Jim himself—how dare he make love to a Smith—turns on Sallie—calls her a fortune hunter and a minx—Smith interposes himself between Jones and Sallie—if Jones has anything to say, let him say it to her father—Sallie and Jim exchange despairing glances—try to pull their parents out of striking distance each parent turns on his child—wrangles—Jim and Sallie edge them around so that the young people are in the center Sallie drops her handkerchief—asks her father to pick it up—he stoops to do so—at the same time Jim points off—Jones turns to look—Jim and Sallie kiss and run off in opposite directions—the fathers follow, stopping at the edge of the lines to exchange threats.

That is in no sense slapstick. It is not written for slapstick and will not play as slapstick if the director adheres to the script. It will be amusing; therefore it is comedy action.

But perhaps the director wants a slapstick comedy. He wants the exaggerated action. He may reconstruct to get this:

This may be what the correspondent calls "the coarse and lowbrow comedies that stir up the brutal and barbaric passions inherited from our ancestors," but there seems to be enough persons with the b. and b. passions to make low comedy profitable, though we are glad to note an upward tendency of late.

But the main thing to be remembered is that comedy action is not slapstick unless slapstick is aimed at and that a play that depends almost wholly upon its leaders for laughter is not a play but an illustrated anecdote and should not be cited as a model and an example. In straight comedy the action should spring from the idea, but the action must supplement as well as expose the idea.

Happy Endings.

Here it comes again? A Washington correspondent writes:

> Is the happy ending essential to the success of a motion picture?
> This question isn't as foolish as it may sound, for I am well aware that a number of features have been released with an artistically unhappy conclusion. But what I mean is this—is the catch-as-catch-can bout between the hero and heroine far more in demand at the end of a picture than the logical ending of some stories which demand that the principals do not live happily ever after?
> I have in mind two pictures, the stories of which were absolutely spoiled by the sentimental endings attached to them by someone.

And from The Writers' Monthly, which the same used to be The Photoplay Author, we clip from E. M. Wickes analysis of Irving Berlin, the song writer:

> Berlin realized that songs were meant for places of amusement and entertainment, and as a result did not try to drag in wrecks, or anything with a morbid atmosphere. His melodies and rhythmical phrases have helped thousands to sing and dance away the blues; and in his own way he is just as beneficial to the public as Charles Chaplin.

The average man or woman does not go to the theater to be made to weep. They want a little respite from the worries of this vale of tears. They want their emotions to be touched, but they want the tear to be chased by a smile and they want to come away feeling that this is not such a bad old world after all.

There are certain types of stories to which the happy ending is an inartistic and indecent crime. Now and then one of these will leave us more appreciative of the joy ending, but they should be used sparingly, as the Romans used assafoetida in their poultry dressings; not to get the taste, but to make the other ingredients taste better.

Some of the newspaper fiction syndicates will positvely not purchase sob stories. If this correspondent's recollection will take him back to the days when Wilson Barrett toured the country, he may remember that "Ben ma Chree" was left utterly inartistic with a happy ending the second time round the circuit, but it made more money. Other dramas have been saved from financial decrepitude by the same expedient.

We are not saying that there is no place in the scheme of things for the sob ending. We do declare that there is a very limited market. Touch the fount of tears, but do not leave the water running.

Changed.

The old Photoplay Author has been changed to the Writers' Monthly and is now under the direct editorial management of Dr. J. Berg Esenwein. Fiction authors will welcome the new and very helpful magazine, but we of the photoplay will regret the passing of the one organ for photoplay writers that had never an axe to grind, even though it was conducted by a correspondence school. There is, of course, still some helpful photoplay stuff by Arthur Leeds and others, but the photoplay end is made to share the space with the song and fiction writing articles and gets just a little bit the worst of it.

Kicks.

A photoplay editor lists this catalogue of kicks:

Scripts sent to the office instead of the studio address.
Handwriting (sometimes in lead pencil) unreadable.
Postage due on improperly weighed letters.
No postage for return.
No address for return.
Long letters with scripts.
Letter and stamp in one envelope and script in another.
Scripts addressed to editor or director personally.

He wants to know why it is that these breaks are still made when such complete information is available.

The reason is simple. The authors forget all save that they want to earn a check. They either never learn or do not stop to think. They read a school advertisement to the effect that anyone can write a script. They do not even take the school course. They start right in.

And the Editor adds that he has a script he would like to buy, but the author sent in no address. That happens often.

Aligning Continuity.

Alice C. Brown expresses very simply one of the facts that new writers seldom appreciate. She says:

> I'm afraid I'm a good deal like a young mother over baby's first tooth—she never knew babies get teeth until hers did—so I may be inclined to think that nobody knows a point because I happen to learn it unexpectedly. But here's something I did discover on the continuity business; it sometimes helps the connection to change the setting, instead of merely juggling the same settings. I had a story that in a certain place would not move straight; leaders wouldn't help; nothing seemed to smooth out the crinkle—until I suddenly discovered that the action of one scene could be played just as well in a different set, and the whole trouble vanished; simple, but I hadn't realized it before. Maybe others don't.

Lining up the action is much like putting together one of those old jig saw puzzles. You must get each piece in its proper place or the blocks will not fit properly. It does not follow that because you first think that a certain scene should play in a library that the best location for that scene will be the library. It may show better in the hall or on the street. Instead of trying to force the action into a certain set, try to find where the action will play best. This does not mean writing in a new set; perhaps a set already planned may be used. It does mean, though, that if the action cannot be played to advantage in an existing set, it is better to call for another set than to hurt the play. There is always one "best" alignment of scenes, but the first layout does not necessarily have to be the best.

Not Just That.

Recently Roy McCardell wrote in this paper that only about half a dozen manufacturers were "on the level" with the authors. Mr. McCardell meant in their desire to get good scripts at a good price, but right away the timid, who, for some occult reason, "just know" that their ideas are stolen, decided that Mr. McCardell means that most production companies are thieves. Mr. McCardell did not say this. Mr. McCardell means that few of those who advertise that they will pay the highest prices for good scripts mean what they say. His list is too small, but more than one company makes that announcement and regards twenty-five dollars a reel as a a high price.

Not the Way.

Lately a man announced that he had "done" more than a hundred scripts and had sold none. Later it developed that he told an editor his ideas verbally, and if the editor said no, he did not write it, "because it was too much trouble." He has access to one studio, comes in there, tells his incomplete idea of a yarn, is told that it is not wanted, and goes away again.

That is no way to learn to write. Get them out in full action, if only to see what is the matter with them. Men such as this one are those who complain that there is no chance for the outsider. For "outsider," substitute "loafer," and the statement would be more nearly right.

Visioning Back.

A correspondent writes that he is working on a three-reel story in which he wishes to jump three years with a time leader, cause his heroine to kill her seducer and then vision in her explanation of the action. He wants to know if this will be permissible.

Anything is permissible, but this is not good technique. A crime, which seems to be the main theme of the story is committed. This probably forms one of the chief crises of the play. Immediately the action, instead of advancing to the next higher development, stops while the lady sits down and tells the story of her past life. Interest in the murder will be lost while the plot interest is retarded by the history.

It can be done, but it is not good practice.

Child Pictures.

One reader complains that he sends a story using a child not knowing what studio uses children. He thinks it would be nice to have this department run a list of studios using children and all the rest. It would be nice, but the "dope" is very simple. Certain companies, such as the Mutual, make child stories with children. All the rest can get child players if the story is sufficiently strong to interest the director. It is not a case of having the child; it is a case of writing a story strong enough to repay the bother of using children.

It is the same way with railroad wrecks or trained dogs. If the story will repay the trouble the work can be done. No company regularly maintains an acting monkey, but two companies have recently made stories with monkeys in them and had little trouble in getting the monkeys once they had the story. The trouble is that most of the time the monkey or the train wreck is put in to bolster up a weak story and it needs plot and not a performing goose to bolster up weakness.

Penny Wise.

The other day a company advertised for an editor. A man who wanted a hundred was told that they had had several applicants who would take $20 or $25. One of these got the job. What chance has

The company,
The Editor,
The author?

There is no prize for the first correct reply to this.

Letters to the Editor.

Nothing is more foolish than the practice of writing to editors. Good wine needs no bush and all the touting in the world cannot help a poor manuscript. Real authors know this and one of the signs of the veteran is the absence of the script letter. But the beginner seems eager to advertise his or her inexperience. Somehow the beginner seems to feel that a plea for sympathy will help. It doesn't. It is the editor's business to pick good scripts, and a soft heart is not one of the requisites of the job. To the contrary, his judgment must rise superior to his personal inclinations. But even the sympathetic editor will not be moved by this appeal:

> As a graduate of the Chicago Photoplaywright College, I submit the enclosed scenario. The writing was interesting, it being original, based on facts. Hoping it will be available to you.

Being "based on facts," the story is not original. Neither was it interesting or in good form. Two other letters in one week's mail state that the writer is a pupil of the same school. Both were below standard, according to the editor who received them.

Another writer seems to have attended school very little. He writes:

> I am a new scenario writer, just begin about six weeks ago.
> I am sending you one of my five part Adventures', which takened me over a month to finish.
> The Adventure has never been offered to any other Film Co.
> I picked out the ——— Co. to be my favorite Film Co.
> This Adventure is my greatest success, but I am not very old in scenario writeing.
> I may make greater success than this.
> I have not had much education.
> All the education I have had is "The third edition how to write Photoplays," containing a one reel Model Scenario, cost only (35c) thirty-five cents.
> Dear Editor,
> I dont think you can believe this, it is true. I am a young man, nearly 22 years old. All the teaching I have had in the public schools is only 3 weeks when I was in the primmer, and one year when I was 19 years old, I went through the 6th Grade and that makes only one year and 3 weeks of my school life. I think I could do most anything.
> I am an honest young man and God is with me and helps me in all I do, he helped me write this Adventure I am sending herewith.
> I remain.
> Your friend.

Another ingenuous writer pleads:

> I am sending you a "Moving Picture Play." It is my "First" story, and if you would please take a few spare moments and read it over I would be very much obliged.
> P. S. Please write in the next litter what you think it worth.

Another writer submits a script for "judicious judgment," and one writer explains that he wishes to state that he does not think his script "as good, perhaps, as most of your plays," and so is willing to take fifteen dollars. And lastly a woman adds this postscript to an already long letter:

> As an amateur writer I have failed to signify where the scenes are to be devided only the first reel (or part one) as I have that yet to learn. yet It may show dullness of painstaking while I hope to impress you that as a beginner I have used every care to perfect my work as I possibly could. not being financially able to have It revised. and If you find my work lacking of technic. please consider that one forgets many little things during 38 years of married Life taking the rough side of life as one's lot. Am 55 years old am the mother of nine children which provides a wide field of material for writing. was raised by a step mother who married my father for money and I needn't tell you that she ruined us all. but I assure you that all Ideas in this story are original only brought in in scenes form for the screen. So please read It.

Manuscript editors are not interested in personal history, nor yet in crude synopses. If you have something to sell that grades up to their wants, they will buy. They will not buy on the strength of a hard luck or "poor mouth" story.

Charting the Course.

No mariner sets out on a voyage without charts and compass. He wants to know where he is going and how to get there. An author's scenario is his chart, and here scenario is used in its proper sense of outline of action. A real scenario is the story of the story; the sketch of the developments. Stating the facts on paper is helpful to the beginner. The more practiced writer can keep the developments in his mind sufficiently well, but in any case the man who would write a well balanced story must know in a general way how the story is to run. In the case of four and five reel story, even the old hand will make a scenario to work from that the most orderly array of incident can be planned in advance. It is only in this way that cause can be associated with effect, that the story can be motivated.

The real writer knows that his story is always susceptible of change and improvement until it is mailed to a company. He makes his scenario not a rigid guide but merely a suggestion of what he wants. He can change as he goes along or even throw out a large part of the idea and get something better, but in a general way he wants to know how the story is going to run before he writes it. If he does not write his story immediately, the scenario is the best form of memorandum. The simplest form of scenario makes each development a separate paragraph.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 102.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

How often should the condensing lenses be cleaned, and what is the best method of cleaning them? If you were purchasing condensing lenses how would you judge of their quality? What is the advantage of a carefully polished lens surface as against a rough, uneven surface? What is a plano-convex lens? A meniscus? A bi-convex? A positive lens? A negative lens?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 96.

The Roll of Honor on Question 96 consists of Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; A. T. Weiss New Orleans, Louisiana; Vernon Kidd, Victoria, British Columbia; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana; Harold Wegmann, Tampa, Florida; William A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada. (This is an especially good reply, but came too late for publication.) I have selected the reply of Brother Burnett for publication.

Reply to Question No. 96.

By Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa.

The Question:

What, in detail, is the effect of your projector optical system being out of line, and how would you proceed to line it? Illustrate your reply by sketch, if necessary.

The Answer:

If the optical system of your objective is out of line it will make a difference on your screen, the amount of difference depending on how bad the condition is. This by reason of the fact that if your condenser and both ends of your objective are all exactly in line, but your aperture plate is out of line with these two, then the tendency would be to prevent you from securing a clear field; moreover, there would be loss of light which might amount to considerable if the condition was bad. Under these conditions you might have a ghost in the picture, the location of which would be either at center, top, bottom or sides, according to the way the aperture plate sets with relation to the other lenses. However, as a matter of fact, the exact effect would depend upon conditions. If the condenser aperture and rear lens of the objective were all in line, but the objective itself did not set straight (a condition hardly possible with modern projectors) the tendency would be to put a strain on the optical powers of the objective lens, and I believe to slightly distort the picture; also it might cause ghost. In fact the possible conditions are so varied that it is difficult to set forth all the possible results with any degree of confidence, but the answer is, line up your objective system, and this may best be done as follows:

Procure some fine wire. Ordinary sewing thread will do, but wire is better, as it can be stretched more tighter. First, having removed the condenser lens and the objective lens combinations, leaving the lens barrel in place, however, loop the wire or thread around the carbons of the arc lamp near the crater, and pass the other end through the condenser opening, the machien aperture (with the machine gate open, of course), and the barrel of the objective lens. Having done all this, procure a piece of ordinary wooden lath, bore a small hole through it, pass the wire or thread through the hole with the lath on the outside of the operating room, lying across the lens port opening. Now pull the wire up snugly and wrap it two or three times around the lath and fasten it. You can now stretch the wire or thread as tightly as it will stand without breaking, by pulling the arc lamp back with its forward and back adjustment screw—the lamp should be set as close to the condensers as it will go before you start.

You are now ready to line the system. First, using an inside calliper, center the wire or thread exactly in the front end of the objective lens barrel by shifting the lath to proper position. Then, again using an inside calliper, center the thread exactly in the condenser opening by moving the lamp up, down or sidewise. Having accomplished this you will probably find that the front end is now out, and will be obliged to recenter it. In fact, you may have to center these two openings several times before you get them just right. Having gotten the front end of the objective and the condenser opening centered, try the rear end of the objective. If it is out, the method of getting it into line will vary with different machines. Next try your aperture plate with a calliper, and if the wire or thread does not pass precisely through the center of the aperture, move the machine head on its base slightly until it does. If the wire or thread is too high or too low in the aperture you can remedy the condition by putting metal shims under the front or back edge of the mechanism base, or possibly you might be able to shift the aperture plate slightly up or down.

A Book On Moving Pictures.

The J. B. Lippincott Company, publishers, Philadelphia, have sent a copy of "Moving Pictures, How They Are Made and Worked," by F. A Talbot. The work comprises 331 pages of text matter and illustrations; is very completely indexed and comprehensively illustrated. It is a book which will no doubt be of much interest to the general public, in that it tells exactly how moving pictures are taken, how trick pictures are made, how pictures are projected, the process of the making of the film, and gives a complete explanation of many other points concerning the moving picture art

The writer was particularly interested in a photograph of Mr. Edison's first Kinetoscope, which appears on page 32. On the opposite side of the leaf is an excellent photograph of an Edison film made about 1891, and one made in 1911. These two photographs offer striking illustration of the enormous advance made in the art of cinematographic photography during that time.

Mr. Talbot's book is one which can be heartily recommended to the public. Purchasers will find it both interesting and instructive. It makes no pretence to being a work of instruction for either theater managers or operators.

Probable Voltage Drop.

R. J. Wiggans, Tahlequah, Oklhoma, is in the exact geographical center of the following trouble. He says:

> I was using 110 volts A. C., through a Fort Wayne conpensarc on the 40 ampere position, but am now compelled to use the 60 ampere position to get the same result I did on the 40. Before I was unable to use 60 amperes at all, on account of the carbons flaming, but now I have the same spot and as good a light as I did before. What am I going to do if this happens again? Am using ⅝ inch cored carbons top and bottom, and have had the light company test the voltage and find it is 101 to 104 when using 60 amperes, and 105 to 109 on 40 amperes. Have changed cables and cleaned all contacts, but still have to run on 60. I use a half jack knife set on carbons. What do you suggest is the possible trouble? Have tested for shorts and leaks but find none, and the compensarc only heats the usual amount.

The only possible explanation I can see is voltage drop due to overload. The fact that there is a drop of several volts when you switch on the 60 is unmistakable proof of overload somewhere. Possibly your outside transformer, if there is one, is carrying more load than it used to, and you now only get 40 amperes when using the 60 ampere contact, by reason of voltage drop caused by overload in the outside transformer. It is also possible that the street lines are now overloaded, and that is causing excessive drop. Anyhow the answer seems to be overload somewhere. If it was loose connections or anything of that sort you would meet the same trouble no matter what contact you were running on.

Interesting Letter.

C. B. Pitts, Collbran, Colorado, says:

> I read your interesting and valuable department as often as possible—which, I regret to say, is only once a week. I most emphatically would not be without it, although only operating Saturday evening shows in a one-horse town, remote from the railroad, in a western range district. I was inveigled into lending my assistance to the local movies because of the fact that I happened to be an "ingenious cuss," and it was out of the question for the boss to afford a skilled operator. Incidentally, I am a country editor, and in my youth was an artist at turning a grindstone. These facts, together with the further fact that I once assisted an amateur showman to poke the slides in a magic lantern, very naturally made me feel that I was not altogether unqualified for the job of operator in the local picture palace. The fact that I have made good is due equally to your excellent Handbook—of which I possess a treasured and much-thumbed copy—and the streak of inventive ingenuity before mentioned. And when I say "made good" I mean it. We certainly hand those broncho busters some classy projection; as good, I am sure, as one could find anywhere in the state. We get our juice from a gas engine, 60-volt dynamo having a capacity of 35 amperes D. C. The screen is only 14 feet wide, so you may imagine we get a brilliant picture. (Nope. Not "brilliant," old man. Nowadays the modern large city theaters are, many of them, pumping 50 to 60 amperes D. C. into a 14-foot picture. Your picture is doubtless very brilliant for a small town show, but not brilliant in the modern city sense. Ed.) I have, of course, run up against all manner of difficulties, but am not the kind to rush off seeking help as long as there is a chance to dope out the cause, and remedy the trouble myself. With the help of the Handbook I have been able to keep ahead of the game thus far.

The Right Spirit

Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana, says:

The questions concerning lenses and condensers are beyond me, but I will not get anywhere without trying, therefore find enclosed answers which no doubt you will find to be quite crude.

This is the right spirit. The brother is absolutely correct when he says he won't get anywhere without making a trial. If there were more like him we would all be better off.

A Very Complete Equipment.

The Walstad Projection Stand is the product of a Tacoma, Washington manufacturer. It is a very complete piece of apparatus, designed to allow the driving of both machines and the re-wind with one motor, and also to allow the operator to handle both projectors when seated or standing between the two machines.

Fig. 1 gives a very good idea of the equipment. 1-1 are the bases upon which is mounted the projector mechanism; 2-2 are the bases upon which is mounted the lamphouse; 3 is the motor which drives both machines; 4-4 are clutches with which the machines are handled; 5 is the re-wind drive; 6 is a glass with a lamp underneath for making patches; 7-7 are the machine control handles; 8-8 shows the method of adjustment for pitch, there being a similar arrangement on the rear legs; 9-9 are lamp sockets designed to hold an incandescent lamp which swings in front of the lens for threading.

Fig. 2 is a view of the driving friction which, it will be observed, is very substantial. Where this apparatus is installed the theater will, of course, only purchase the mechanisms and lamphouses, including magazines. This particular arrangement is very substantial and solid and has much to commend it. It has been in use for quite some time out on the Pacific Coast, and is no longer an experiment. In Fig. 3 we see a top view of the apparatus showing the machine control lever and the re-winding table. It will be observed that the machine switches both point toward the inside, the magazines on the right hand machine being reversed, so that the threading is done from the left hand side of the machine.

I have never worked with one of these tables, but have talked with operators who have used them and they, without exception, speak highly of the equipment.

Fig. 4 is a view of the "power section" which is mounted on the front of the table as in Fig. 1. The controlling arrangement is very clearly shown in this photograph.

To Operate Stand.

Place the framing light so as to show through aperture in left hand head. Thread film in usual way. Remove left hand framing light. The motor having been started, all that is required to start machine is to drop the lever into operating position. If the speed of machine is not satisfactory, move control lever toward the motor to decrease speed and away from motor to increase speed. Having gotten left hand head under way at the proper speed, proceed to thread right hand head by putting its framing light in proper position. Thread as usual. Withdraw framing light and the right hand head is ready to start, the only requirement to start it being to drop the operating lever into operation position. In running two and three-reel subjects the film may be run through this machine until the beginning of the first scene or title. The head is then stopped until the film in the left hand head has reached the last scene; then the right hand head is put into operation by dropping the handle into the operating position. This having been done, allow the left hand head to run until the tail end of film has been run through. In changing from one reel to another, no attention need be paid to the speed of the machines, unless it is desirable because of the action in the picture. Re-winding of film is done in the usual way. If it is desired to run the show to schedule, it can be done by observing the location of the lever, according to the marks on its segment, or it can be varied from time to time by moving its lever up and down to suit speed desired.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part I.

IN the first place, let me say that I am approaching the task of dictating this article in no very enviable frame of mind. It is by long odds the hardest single thing that I have undertaken to do in all the years I have handled this department.

The thing is not only difficult in itself, but it consists of so many different items which seem almost impossible to link together in a smooth, orderly fashion. That is to say I cannot, for instance, deal with condensers without also dragging in the objective, and this notwithstanding the fact that the objective has got to be treated of further on. Possibly after I have the matter in print in the department I may be able to get it into shape before it goes into book form. I certainly hope so. I make this explanation because I am firmly convinced that in this first publication, while the facts are all there, they will not be exactly in the shape I want them, although the good Lord knows I have worked hard trying to get it straightened out.

Right in the beginning let it be understood there are several men entitled to credit, as well as to the gratitude of operators and managers for the work they have done in connection with the work which has finally culminated in what I believe to be a very satisfactory result. W. S. James, formerly of Camden, N. J., was the man who originally "started something" by contributing to the projection department a series of articles, illustrated by drawings and photographs forming the original basis upon which the whole structure has been built. By this I mean that, while Brother James' articles, viewed in the light of present knowledge, are in error in many particulars, still he was the man who first set the ball rolling, and let be said that his idea of the action of light rays through the objective lens was, in the main, absolutely correct.

I might add to this, however, by saying that John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., had an article in ahead of the original James' article, but by reason of the fact that the James' article was illustrated with photographs and drawings, and Griffith's was not, it, the James' article, was chosen for publication. As a matter of fact, however, both Brothers James and Griffiths at that time were only partly correct in their theories and conclusions.

Following the James' article Griffith shied his hat into the ring, and Professor Wall of Syracuse University proceeded to upset considerable of the James' theory. Wall, however, due to the fact that the editor had the temerity to comment on his articles, withdrew later, leaving the field to James and Griffiths, and those two gentlemen had things to themselves for quite a while, except for the criticisms of L. C. La Grow of Albany, N. Y., who later crawled back into his hole and pulled the hole carefully in after him. Along about this time Simon Arkin, New York City, entered the lists. His articles aroused considerable interest, and were of distinct value.

About that time we received some exceedingly excellent calculations and drawings from one C. D. Armstrong, Ashland, Wis., and, later, one of the most complete articles this department has ever received, accompanied by at least a dozen splendid drawings made on tracing linen. There were thirty pages of manuscript in this article. Still later Brother Armstrong sent in a supplementary article containing eighteen pages of manuscript. The trouble with the Armstrong articles, however, was that they were in such form that to the ordinary operator they would have been as so much Greek.

Light action is one of the most difficult things in the world to explain intelligently. The writer has had a fairly wide experience in literary work, particularly as applied to "explaining things," yet he feels that this task is very nearly beyond his power, therefore it is not to be wondered at that Friend Armstrong was unable to produce a publishable article, even though the work itself was excellent, and entitles him to a whole wagon load of credit.

While all this was going on the editor sat tight and watched the scrap. Frankly, he did not know who was right or who was wrong, but gradually made up his mind that, by the jumping jingo, he was going to find out, if the thing was findoutable. And the only way to determine a matter of this kind was, so far as he could see, by a series of actual, practical experiments.

Friend Griffiths meanwhile had evolved a certain theory, which he had arrived at largely by calculation and such experiments as he was able to make with his projection machine in the Pastime theater, Ansonia, Conn.

Brother Armstrong, of Ashland, Wis., also, working with a smoke-box, had evolved a theory and arrived at a definite conclusion, and here is the remarkable part: the conclusions of both of these gentlemen were received by the editor of this department at approximately the same time. The men were more than a thousand miles apart. Neither knew what the other was doing, and, while in some minor details Griffiths and Armstrong differed, in the main their theories were identical, and their final conclusions were the same.

This is rather a remarkable thing, and, to the mind of the editor, goes a long ways toward proving that the theory of these gentlemen is very nearly correct, and that their conclusions are correct.

Arkin is an optician. He views the thing purely from the optician's standpoint, and his theory of light ray action through a projection system is somewhat different from that of Griffiths and Armstrong. I have every respect for Brother Arkin's knowledge, but the fact remains that he lacks in practical experience with projection, and I believe his superior scientific knowledge is more than offset by the knowledge and practical experience possessed by Griffiths and Armstrong.

And now to sum this whole matter up: I believe that, in the end, the credit for what has been accomplished is due very largely to three men, viz.: Brothers Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., and C. D. Armstrong, Ashland, Wis., who have both given the matter deep and continuous study, made experiments and arrived at a conclusion which harmonizes geometrical optics with that actually seems to take place in the projection system of a projector, and to the editor of this department who has brought these various things together, and made possible the reaching of the final conclusion by comparing the work of different men, preparing the means for the series of experiments just made, and putting the whole thing into at least fairly understandable form.

By this I don't wish to be understood as saying that no one else is entitled to credit. I wish to give Brothers James, Arkins, La Grow, and Professor Wall all possible recognition for the part they have taken. In fact I feel that Professor Wall, particularly, might have been of very great benefit had he continued in the discussion. Also it must not be forgotten that the Moving Picture World has paid out a very substantial sum in cash to cover the cost of the experiments.

The various experiments were conducted by the use of a 50 ampere mercury arc rectifier, loaned to us by the General Electric Company, a standard Simplex lamphouse and lamp, loaned us by the Precision Machine Company, an optical bench made by the Nicholas Power Company, and a home-made smoke-box by means of which the action of light rays was made visible to the eye. One-half of an ordinary objective lens tube was cut away, so that by the use of smoke the action of the light ray inside the lens could be observed and photographed. Brother Griffiths came down from Ansonia, and for two weeks worked continuously, experimenting and figuring during the day, and in the evening assisting the editor, who took photographs, so far as was possible, of the things observed in the smoke-box.

After the matter was in type and photographs and cuts made, I had twelve proofs made and sent them out to twelve different men in different sections of the country, asking them to make such tests as they wished, and to criticise freely.

Brother James, formerly of Camden, N. J., who started the whole matter in the first place, made a number of experiments in matching up different lens systems by the tables. In some instances the results were excellent, in others they were not. Friend James concluded that (a) the tables did not go far enough; (b) equipment would not always permit of meeting the conditions demanded by the tables.

Brother Armstrong of Ashland, Wis., did not seem to agree with any of it very well, and Brother Deutsch of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., promptly pronounced it no good—or words to that effect.

On the other hand, Professor Simon Henry Gage, of Cornell University, one of the foremost authorities in matters optical in this country, says in part:

> I found the illustrations to be excellent. They bring out with great clearness some of the fundamental things in the optics of projection. * * * I hope that before you put this into book form you will get some good fellow who knows physics to go over the explanations with you and put them in a form which will conform to the general laws and principles of optics. Now please do not think that I don't appreciate what you have been doing. All I advocate is that you go right ahead getting all the help you can from the "Good Lord" and the good men in physics. It is only by pushing ahead that we ever get anywhere.

Mr. Lester W. Bowen, chief operator of the Strand Theater, New York City, says:

> The matter you sent has all been given a thorough examination. I consider it to be a most complete explanation of the light rays in motion picture projection, and entirely correct in the ultimate object attained; but I am inclined to take exception at Brother Griffiths' way of explaining his theory in as far as he assumes there are two separate systems of light rays. While in his conclusion I consider him as being correct, his way of explaining things may lead to a wrong impression of the light ray system as a whole, the proper understanding of which is the object of these experiments.

I also sent a set of the proofs to San Francisco to a man in whose knowledge and judgment as to matters projectional I have great confidence. His reply was enthusiastic. San Francisco says:

> I have very carefully gone over the matter you sent, and also have submitted it to several operators who were inclined to take interest enough to give it more than passing attention, and I feel that you have presented the first really practical tables we have ever had, as well as advanced some very startling theories on the action of light, some of which we have only known by the results they produced, and have been entirely unable to explain. * * * Diagram 4 is very valuable, and one which I have known for a long time, and for which I have had the basic lines on the walls of my operating room. On testing your table with the conditions under which I am now working, I find my lens systems agree with you to within ½ inch. As to the use of large diameter objectives, I believe your statements to be absolutely correct, and that the large diameter lens will be of value in long focal objectives more than it would be in short focal ones. Your statements as to where the meniscus lens may be used to advantage I believe to be absolutely correct. On the many diagrams relative to the crossing of light rays, and at what point the picture is reversed I am not prepared to make comment without considerable further study. Your table No. 1 will probably have to be extended, but in my opinion, is going to prove to be the greatest single assistance to the operator who is seeking results, that has ever appeared in print, and while it is probable that when you produce this article you may be attacked by many who may claim to differ with you, still I believe, so far as I have gone into the matter, that you are perfectly justified in producing it, for the reason that those who will attack you and your results will be those who consider their past performances only, and who either, from lack of ability, or lack of energy, will not take the time to carry out their own experiments as guided by the tables you have produced. In my own case, I found myself yesterday down in the basement hunting around among the discarded apparatus for a lamphouse, lamp, aperture plate, and other necessaries with which to construct something with which to test some of your assertions. In conclusion, I think you have certainly started something. I note that you ask me to return the proofs, but the more I go into this, the more firmly I am set on telling you that if you want those proofs you will have to come out here with a shot gun and take them away from me, as I cannot at present force myself to let them go.

I referred all these replies to Brother Griffiths, who replies as follows:

I do not think we ought to make any decided change in the article, so far as the criticism of Friends Armstrong and Deutsch be concerned, except that Deutsch pointed out what is a serious error in diagram Fig. 4. The diagram of the lens should both read and show by the line (which it does not) 1¾ inches instead of 1½ inches. I drew that line with a curtain rod instead of a straight edge. It was also made before the tables, the tables are more accurate, being taken from a much larger diagram.

Fig. No. 4 Diagram was intended to show the action more than anything else, or, in other words, the method by which the table No. 1 was obtained. Friend Deutsch apparently has a good set of drawing instruments. If he would consent to check up some of the figures in Table No. 1 he would be of real service.

I have tried, without success, to convince Deutsch that he was wrong. He studies light action only from a photographer's point of view, and is firmly convinced he is right. So we agreed to disagree. With Armstrong it is different. He keeps trying to convince us of facts upon which we already agree, viz.: that the condenser aperture is in focus at the narrowest part of the beam of light in front of the objective lens. James demonstrated that, in his article by showing a good image of a cracked condenser in photograph No. 6. Armstrong also raps me considerable in his letter about the "effective cone." That related to my first set of tables, and was long since discarded. I do not think it is mentioned at all in the new article. With reference to his drawings showing that when the rays are crossed in the center between the two condensers, the result gave the correct size of the image, while crossing them at the first plane gave an incorrect size of image. Why this is to be expected, because they are crossed at the point of equivalent focus without refraction, but the rays do not go through that way by a long shot. They are refracted four times in passing through two condensers, the total refraction bending the rays equal to the E. F. of the combination. Friend Armstrong also states that while he has offered proof for his theory, I have only made a bare statement of what I believe to be true. This is hardly true, because I have shown actual refraction through a plane of crown glass under similar conditions, existing in the lamphouse, which shows that the rays actually cross at the plane of the condenser when the refraction is measured with a refractometer. In view of the adverse views on the two sets of rays theory, I am going to try and make it a little more clear. You will find it appended to this letter.

I thoroughly agree with Brother Griffiths. Friends Armstrong and Deutsch are undoubtedly perfectly and entirely honest in their criticism, but I, nevertheless, believe they are in error. I would like to publish all the replies from those to whom proofs were sent to in full, but it would take much space and only tend to confuse matters by a long-drawn-out argument.

And now with these preliminaries out of the way, let us proceed to examine into and view what has been accomplished.

First and foremost let us consider the condenser. For some time past it has been a recognized fact that spacing its lenses different distances apart altered results. I myself have advised spacing them, and some machine manufacturers have provided means by which it may be done, but now, in the light of recently acquired knowledge, I am obliged to upset all that, and advise that condenser lenses always be placed with the apex of their curved surfaces not more than 1 16 to ⅛ of an inch apart: this for several reasons. First, examine A, Fig. 1, which shows the spread of light with a single 6½" lens, with the arc in normal operation position, and B, Fig. 1, which shows a 7½" lens with the arc in the same position.

It will be observed from this that the light diverges rapidly after passing through the rear condensing lens, and that with the arc at a given distance from the lens, the longer the focal length of the lens the heavier the divergence. This means that, even with the condenser faces very close together, there is some loss of light, as is evidenced in Fig. 2, in which a thin flaring ray shows the loss from this cause. True the light so lost is of comparatively poor quality, in that it contains the greatest amount of chromatic aberration, and, with the lenses only 1 16 of an inch apart, what little light is lost would, for this reason, not be worth serious consideration.

HANDBOOK OUT OF PRINT

Kindly note that the Richardson Handbook is completely out of print. Please send no more orders or remittances. The author is now at work on a new and revised edition, which will be still larger and better. Announcement of publication date will appear in due course. Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances have been demonstrated to its editor.

Work For Free Lance Photographers.

A SHORT time ago a letter from the Gaumont Company, Congress avenue, Flushing, New York, was received by this department enclosing the following notice:

> The Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y., is getting ready to release a travel series under the general heading of "See America First." Expert cameramen, who own their own outfit should communicate with the above company at once, addressing their letter to the attention of Mr. Pell Mitchell.

In response to a letter asking for further details Mr. Mitchell writes as follows:

> Replying to your kind favor of the 24th inst., we would be very glad if you would give us a more extended notice in your department of the Moving Picture World.
> For your information will say that at the present we expect to purchase scenic negative from free lance photographers and desire subjects which will cover a single trip of about 750 feet in length each subject to be complete. We desire these pictures to be made just as though the cameraman were personally conducting a visiting friend to the most interesting and beautiful spots of his home territory. It is possible that those photographers whose photography is the best will be able to make some permanent and remunerative connection with our company. We should be delighted to have an extended notice in your department regarding these points, and we hope you will include same as early as possible.

America First.

The European war has aroused the American public to a greater interest in the slogan "See America First" than ever before. Motion pictures have followed public interest in the past and the American public has gazed upon the scenic wonders of the old world, the equatorial depths of darkest Africa and the fronded palms of southern seas almost to the exclusion of the many wonders encompassed by our own boundaries. True, we have seen a few excellent pictures of our best known scenic wonders such as Yellowstone Park, Yosemite Valley, Niagara Falls, Grand Canyon and Glacier National Park, but even their possibilities have only been touched.

How many of the thousands of visitors to Yellowstone Park have ever seen its indescribable beauties when wrapped in the mantle of hoary winter? The gorgeous spectacles of its boiling geysers driving back the ever encroaching ermine cloak of drifting snow; its trees bedecked with prismatic ice jewels from the condensing vapors; the sledges and teams of husky dogs and snow shoed drivers who maintain their lonely vigils during Jack Frost's reign? Have these been caught on the fleeting film? Where are the pictures of Alaska, that vast treasure house of which we know so little? Where is the cinematographer to record the customs and life of the Southwestern or Pueblo Indian as Curtis has done with the still camera? Where are the pictures of the romance of the new West where the cowboy has shucked his six-shooter and wears blue jean overalls instead of leather panties, who irrigates his ranch and raises blooded cattle instead of Texas long horns? Show us the pictures of the gigantic irrigation projects where the civil engineer has built mighty dams and made the miracle of gardens in the desert. Show us the life of the mining camps where machinery and resistless hydraulic streams wrest treasures from the bosom of mother earth. Take us through the Philippines, let us see what a paternal government has done for them. Let us see the hospitals and schools, the railroads and highways our Government has built. What do we know of the Tagalogs, the Moros, the Bon Tocs, the Igorrotes and the other tribes? Are Luzon, Cebu, Mindoro, Negros, Samar, Mindanao the names of brands of cigars or some of our island possessions? Show us the Maine Woods, the Michigan Forests, the commerce of the Great Lakes, the pulse of our inland waterways, the awakening of the new South, the Florida Everglades, the cities of the great Northwest, the Peoria distilleries and the Texas missions.

Surely the man with his hand on the camera crank who can select from a myriad possible subjects the high lights and shadows of human interest and cement them together into logical and sequential order, will be well repaid for his work and trouble.

It is hard to conceive of more interesting work than this; to take the things of interest in some particular place or on some particular subject and compose a graphic essay that will hold, if not a world wide, a nation wide audience's attention. Don't forget, if you take such pictures, that the little intimate touches of humanity and the close up details of little things here and there are the master strokes that limn the greater subjects into high relief. Concretely, if you are photographing the awful chasm of the Grand Canyon, don't overlook the quizzical expression on the countenance of the quaint gray burro who patiently packs your apparatus, nor the horny toad that scurries away beneath your feet, or the round faced papoose hanging contentedly to a limb while mamma squaw spins the wool for a zig-zag patterned Navajo blanket. Nor mamma squaw either, for they all fit into the picture and make for what the artist calls atmosphere and local color.

There are many avenues open for the amateur owner of a camera to make money. It sometimes happens that the amateur beats the professional out on news events generally because he happens to be on the ground first, but even when the odds are equal, the zest of the chase or happy circumstance has often favored the amateur with better records than the salaried professional. You may live where things of general interest do not often occur but that does not prevent your making arrangements with your local theaters to supply them with pictures depicting events of local interest.

More Books on Cinematography.

Albert Thorpe, Scranton, Pa., writes:

> I would like to inquire where I can get an Instruction Handbook on Motion Picture Photography and different light effects. I will appreciate it very much if you can give me this information.

Probably the list given in the last issue of this department will give you what you want. Below are given a few additions to this list which may be of interest to those who wish to have as complete a library on the subject as possible:

Animated Photography. The A. B. C. of the Cinematograph. By Cecil M. Hepworth. 1900. 128 pp. Illustrated. Cloth, 50 cents. Living Pictures: Their History, Photo-Reproduction and Practical Working. By Henry V. Hopwood. 1899. 265 pp. and index. Cloth, $1.25.

While these two books are a long way from being up to date, they contain a great deal of interesting data of the early history of the motion picture. They may be obtained of Tennant & Ward, 122 East 25th street, New York.

The Kinematograph Weekly, Tottenham street, London, W., England, published "The Handbook of Kinematography," by Colin N. Bennett, F. C. S., in 1913, but I have not been able to ascertain its price or whether it is still obtainable from them.

Universal Camera.

Wm. K., Baltimore, Md., writes as follows:

> Enclosed please find check for one year's subscription to the Moving Picture World.
> Kindly advise me if you have investigated the Universal Camera made in Chicago which has been advertised in your paper lately?
> I am in the market for a light weight camera for outside work as I find the Pathe Studio Model too unhandy for quick work.
> Which camera would you advise for professional work?

Through the courtesy of Mr. McMillan, traveling representative of the Universal Camera Company, the writer was permitted to make studio tests of their camera with highly satisfactory results. It is light and compact and while the retorts hold only 200 feet of film, as against 400 in the Pathe, this makes the lightnesss and compactness so desirable in working outside. The tripod is also a marvel of lightness and rigidity so that with the carrying cases the camera, tripod and extra retorts for a thousand feet of film may be carried by one man as handily as he would carry two medium weight suit cases. The camera carrying case has space for four extra 200 foot retorts making with the film in the camera 1,000 feet, which is considerably more than the average day's work.

A more extended account of this camera illustrated with photographs will be given in a later issue.

If you mean by professional work studio work, it is probable that there are nearly as many Pathe Professional used in this country as there are of all the other makes combined. There are a number of other good makes which do equally as good work, but as their output is limited for various reasons, the Pathe camera at present practically rules the field. Of the American built cameras the Bell Howell manufactured in Chicago is one of the very best, but a recent letter from them states that advance orders will keep their factory going to capacity until the first of next year.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

A TRIPLE WINNING (Biograph), Aug. 30.—A wide-awake western drama, this one-reeler is well put together, and tells a good story of love and adventure. Isabel Rea, Hector V. Sarno and John K. Roberts are in the competent cast.

THE QUITTER (Essanay), Aug. 30.—H. Tipton Steck has written a one-reel photoplay of decided merit. The subject treats of modern life, and points an excellent moral. It is also good entertainment. The leading roles are taken by Edmund F. Cobb, Ann Kirk and Hugh E. Thompson.

A ROMANCE OF MEXICO (Lubin), Aug. 30.—The love motif of this one-reel drama supplies all the action of the picture. It tells of a young American mining engineer and his romance with a beautiful Mexican girl. A jealous rival plots his ruin, and matters are brought to a novel and dramatic climax. Jack Lawton, Vinnie Burns, Henry Russell, Josephine Keith and John Gordon complete a well-selected cast under the direction of Romaine Fielding.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 69, 1915 (Selig), Aug. 30.—A number of striking views of the Galveston flood are followed by: Auto home-on-wheels leaving Huntington, L. I., for San Francisco; Brazilian Minister thanked at Washington; fire at Atlantic City; coast battery firing at target; Fortress Monroe; swimming class, Chicago; Citizen Troops in camp, Plattsburgh, N. Y.; school children dance, Oakland, Cal.; Atlantic Fleet in war maneuvers, off Block Island.

MR. JARR AND THE VISITING FIREMAN (The Jarr Family Series, No. 17) (Vitagraph), Aug. 30.—The male Jarr has his innings in this one-reel addition to the series, and has lots of fun rescuing Mama Jarr and the little Jarrs from a fake fire. The picture contains nothing but clean-cut comedy, and is a credit to Harry Davenport's producing.

MIXING IT UP (Kalem), Aug. 31.—The title of this one-reel comedy exactly describes the plot and the rate of speed at which the characters move through it. It is a very good example of motion picture burlesque. Bud Duncan is the chief fun-maker.

AVENGING BILL (Lubin), Aug. 31.—This one reel is made up of three different subjects: "Avenging Bill," "The Haunted Hat" and "Mile-a-Minute Monty." The first subject is an amusing comedy, written by Epes W. Sargent; the second is a clever bit of hilarity, by A. D. Hotaling, and the third a cartoon comedy, drawn by Leon A. Sells.

THE LEAVING OF LAWRENCE (Selig), Aug. 31.—John Charles, in a dual role, contributes largely to the success of this one-reel comedy-drama, written by Giles R. Warren. The plot is above the average for plays of this class, and might easily have been expanded into a two-reeler.

THE SIMP AND THE SOPHOMORES (Edison), Sept. 1.—There is much capital fooling in this one-reel farce, which has been produced by Will Lewis, scenario by Eldon Raymond. Raymond McKee gives a droll impersonation of the "simp," and the other characters are taken by Harry Eytinge, Arthur Housman, O. N. Hardy and Jean Dumar.

JOE BOKO SAVED BY GASOLINE (Essanay), Sept. 1.—One of Wallace A. Carlson's clever living cartoons, the picture consists of a half-reel of solid fun. "Through the Canadian Rockies," a series of impressive views, are on the same reel.

THE QUARREL (Vitagraph), Sept. 1.—The amusing qualities of this one-reel comedy are of generous proportions. It also contains an effective method of getting rid of a mother-in-law. William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez and Jack Mower are the leading members of a good cast.

THE STRANGER IN THE VALLEY (Biograph), Sept. 2.—The interest in this one-reel drama is sustained throughout, the story depicting a woman's fight for love and happiness. The plot is skilfully constructed. Claire McDowell gives a convincing performance of the woman. Herbert Barrington and little Zoe Bech have important roles.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 70, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 2.—The explosion of a six-ton blast at Ives, Wis., heads the list of items. Then follows: Running races at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; Gertrude Palmer rides on aquaplane, North Wildwood, N. J.; U. S. regulars at San Francisco in war maneuvers; canine parade, Wildwood, N. J.; cutter race by cadets at Culver, Ind.; burial of Col. John W. White, New York; on the battle line in France; Japan sends training ship to San Francisco; Appalachian Club raise flag at Bretton Wood, N. H.; girls swim nine mile race, Anglesea, N. J.

THE FIRE ESCAPE (Vitagraph), Sept. 2.—W. A. Tremayne has turned out a rattling good one-reel comedy-drama, and the acting is done in fine style by Evart Overton, Lillian Walker, William Sellery, Edward Elkas and Harry Fisher. Life on the lower East Side of New York City is thrown on the screen with amusing fidelity.

THE WANDERER (Biograph), Sept. 3.—A. Griffith reissue, this one-reel drama tells a cleverly devised romance, in which Henry B. Walthall has the leading role. Mae Marsh, Claire McDowell, Lionel Barrymore and Walter Miller are also in the cast.

BRONCHO BILLY BEGINS LIFE ANEW (Essanay), Sept. 3.—In this one-reel drama Broncho Billy finds a lost child and restores her to her mother, and so misses a chance to rob a stage coach. The child and her friends work Billy's reformation. This plot is well told on the screen. Marguerite Clayton and Lee Willard have important roles in G. M. Anderson's support.

IN SPITE OF HIM (Lubin), Sept. 3.—Ethel Clayton and Thurston Hall have the leading roles in this one-reel drama in which a suspicious husband is taught a much-needed lesson. The play is smartly written, has a comedy ending and shows careful producing on the part of Joseph Kaufman.

THEIR NIGHT OUT (Vitagraph), Sept. 3.—The situations in this one-reel comedy are richly humorous, and afford the Sidney Drews a fine field for the display of their refined fun-making. Emily Heininger, the author, has mastered the art of writing high grade comedy, and Mr. Drew has produced her work in his best style.

THE WHEEL OF THE GODS (Biograph), Sept. 4.—A very grim story is told in this one-reel drama. It shows fate overtaking a man who attempts to break up another man's home. The picture has dramatic power. Charles Perley and Augusta Anderson head the cast.

ACROSS THE GREAT DIVIDE (Edison), Sept. 4.—The dramatic qualities of this one-reel photoplay are of a high order of merit. The drama grips all the way through and is finely played by a cast in which George M. Wright, Bessie Learn and Frank McGlynn have the leading characters. Edward C. Taylor directed the picture.

THE BROKEN RAIL (Episode No. 43 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Sept. 4. A startling incident takes place early in the action of this one-reel drama and the interest is maintained with the customary skill shown in these plays of life on the rail. Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, Robyn Adair and G. W. Williams are members of the cast.

AN ARTFUL ARTIST (Lubin), Sept. 4.—Epes W. Sargent discloses a great secret in this one-reel comedy—how the impressionistic school of artists paint their masterpieces. The entire picture is amusing, and Billie Reeves, Mae Hotely and Frank Smiley lend it valuable aid.

THE AWFUL ADVENTURES OF AN AVIATOR (Selig), Sept. 4.—This short reel comedy cleverly utilizes the animals in the Selig Zoo, and furnishes a number of hearty laughs. "Knock-Out Dugan's Find," a bit of lively farce with a neat finish, is on the same reel.

General Film Company Specials.

THE WAY OF A WOMAN'S HEART (Selig), Aug. 30.—The woman in this case is an actress, who is jilted by her lover when fortune smiles upon him. She is generous enough, however, to help him win a younger rival, when he comes to his former sweetheart and pleads for her help. The picture, which is in two reels, has a fair amount of merit, and is adequately acted by a cast headed by Eugenie Bresserer.

THE RETURN OF GENTLEMAN JOE (Essanay), Aug. 31.—The criminal careers of Dominica and Gaston Le Grand are brought to a close in this two-reel drama of the series written by Henry C. Rowland. Le Grand is captured and Dominica reforms and is married to "Gentleman Joe," who also takes the straight road. The offering is excellent melodrama, Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain keeping the acting at their usual high level.

HEARTS ABLAZE (Vitagraph), Aug. 31.—The plot of this three-reel drama, by Eugene Mullin, is a forcible reminder of the intensely dramatic material so often used by Victorien Sardou. Mr. Mullin has worked along original lines, but his story contains much of the highly romantic atmosphere to be found in the plays of the French dramatist. Several of the scenes are laid in the court of a mythical kingdom, and the production is elaborate. Leo Delaney, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Wellesley, L. Rogers Lytton and Frank Currier head a strong cast. Directed by Lorrimer Johnston.

THE FALSE CLUE (Episode No. 7, of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel") (Kalem), Sept. 1.—Life at the Grand Hotel continues to have more than its share of excitement. The mystery which the lady house-detective is called upon to unravel in this two-reel number, is an engrossing one, and said to be based upon fact. Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby, James W. Horne, True Boardman and Thomas Lingham are in the cast.

THE WILDCAT (Lubin), Sept. 1.—Lucille Younge's acting of the title role in this two-reel drama is a marked factor in the success of the picture. The story is not a rehash of familiar material, and is decidedly entertaining. Marc Edmund Jones wrote the scenario, and Paul M. Powell made the production. George Routh and the other members of the cast give Miss Younge excellent support.

THE PHANTOM HAPPINESS (Lubin), Sept. 2.—Artistic photography and picturesque locations are features of this three-reel drama, written by Shannon Fife. It has no great dramatic strength, but is marked by good taste in the selection of the incidents and the manner of its production. It is well acted by a cast that includes Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Rosetta Brice and William H. Turner.

THE MAN WITH THE IRON HEART (Selig), Sept. 2.—The familiar struggle between capital and labor is impressively shown in this three-reel drama. No new light is shed on the problem, but author and producer have presented the theme with commendable clearness. The absence of any love interest or complication of plot make the picture more a dramatic narrative than a good specimen of the playwright's art; but, it belongs to a class of screen dramas that have many admirers, dramas that rely upon their human qualities rather than their technical skill. The cast is well chosen.

THE WAY BACK (Edison), Sept. 3.—A young girl, who is cheated of her fortune by a rascally lawyer, and becomes a crook, is the heroine of this four-reel drama, written by Mary Rider. The author has made the story an interesting one and retains the sympathy of the audience for the young woman who goes wrong, but redeems herself at last. Miriam Nesbitt brings out the different phases of the girl's character very effectively. Strongly defined impersonations are also given by George Wright, Frank McGlynn, Robert Walker and Mrs. Wallace Erskine.

GANGSTERS OF THE HILLS (Kalem), Sept. 3.—The elements of a swiftly-moving melodrama enter into the making of this two-reel photoplay. The characters embrace a gang of counterfeiters, an ex-convict and a Secret Service officer. A well-handled love interest has also been supplied. The play is adequately acted by Al. Ernest Garcia, Seymour Hastings, Joseph J. Franz, Carolyn Higby and Lillian Hamilton.

THE WHIRLPOOL (Essanay), Sept. 4.—A better piece of dramatic construction than this three-reel play, written by Edward E. Lowe, has seldom been seen on the screen. The material is not new, but it has been given such skillful handling and is so well acted by Nell Craig, Warda Howard, Herbert Heyes, John Thorn, John Cossar and Frank Dayton that the picture makes an unusually strong impression.

THE OFFENDING KISS (Vitagraph), Sept. 4.—Anna L. Heath has written a very effective two-reel drama of army life in the early sixties, and it has been most creditably produced by Ulysses Davis. The picture demands the services of a large cast and an extensive body of soldiers and Indians. Aside from permitting the chiefs to wear the headdress of a medicine man, Producer Davis has given his Indian scenes the correct handling. William Dunc'n, Myrtle Gonzalez, Alfred Vosburgh, Otto Lederer, Geo. Staley, Anne Schaefer and Marguerite Reid deserve their prominence in the cast.

THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR (Sept. 1).—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 1842, issue of September 11.

Mutual Film Corporation.

NEVER AGAIN (Kay-Bee), Aug. 22.—An excellent comedy in which a young woman's vacation trip is spoiled by the participation of a country station agent in a bear hunt. The telegram which should have brought her friends to meet her was not delivered and the situation arising therefrom is extremely amusing.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 35, 1915 (Mutual), Sept. 2.—The opening of the Mussulman's hospital in Paris is an interesting item of this issue; also King Manuel at Kew, American mules being trained for the British army, scenes at the Galveston flood and other minor incidents.

A BULLY AFFAIR (Beauty), Sept. 4.—John Steppling is the central figure in this amusing farce comedy. Reading of the showers of money and flowers received by a bull fighter, he resolves to try his luck. He appears in the field with an imitation bull, and receives his share of the coin at his first appearance. His second appearance in the field, however, is disgraced by the bull's legs becoming too much the worse of a bottle of whiskey.

OVER AND BACK (Komic), Sept. 5.—A comedy number featuring Fay Tincher, Ed Darien, Chester Withey and Max Davidson. The lover crosses on ropes to the girl's room; his rival puts the father wise and trouble follows. This is amusing, though the humor is not extremely laughable.

THE INDIAN TRAPPER'S VINDICATION (Reliance), Sept. 6.—This features a real Indian, Dark Cloud. He is accused of stealing furs through the machinations of some renegades, but clears himself by bringing the crime home to one of them. The story is pleasing and contains some very attractive out-door scenes.

PLOT AND COUNTERPLOT (Beauty), Sept. 7.—This is a fairly amusing comedy in which a wife believing that her husband is neglected, takes to flirting in the hope of attracting her husband's attention from his books to her charms. The husband in turn hires a secretary to make his wife jealous. The result is, of course, a reunion and perfect happiness thereafter. This theme has been done over so often that it becomes tiresome.

FOR LOVE OF MARY ELLEN (Majestic), Sept. 7.—A pleasing comedy subject, adapted from a story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainard. Three clever children are featured, George Stone, Carmen de Rue and Violet Radcliffe. The boy impersonates a blind widow to carry out his charitable intentions. An unusually good juvenile.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR (Reliance), Sept. 8.—This story of a doctor who conspires with a nurse to obtain the rich man's bequest holds the interest well. The scene in the sick room when the disowned daughter appears is quite dramatic. Irene Hunt, G. M. Blue and A. D. Sears are in the cast.

THE FORECAST (American), Sept. 10.—George Field, Lizette Thorne and Edward Coxen appear in this number. The uncle refuses his nephew permission to wed, but later has a dream which makes him change his mind. The story is well constructed and compact in its manner of handling the various interesting episodes.

WEARY WALKER'S WOES (Falstaff), Sept. 10.—An original and appealing comedy number, in which a tramp, thinking he will be able to claim an inheritance of $10,000, acquires a complete outfit of clothing by his wits. He then lands in jail. This is new and pleasing.

THE MOTHER OF HER DREAMS (Thanhouser), Sept. 10.—An orphan girl, adopted by some people who make a slave of her, dreams of a beautiful mother. In finding the small boy, lost in the woods, she attains her heart's desire. The picture is pretty and has a touching close.

WHEN HIS DOUGH WAS CAKE (Beauty), Sept. 11.—John Steppling, Beatrice Van and John Sheehan appear in this original little skit. The uncle's despised birthday cake contains a valuable diamond and the young husband breaks up the neighborhood trying to regain the various slices. Fresh and pleasing.

OUT OF THE SEA (Thanhouser), Sept. 12.—Lorraine Huling and Morris Foster appear in this seacoast story. The girl rescues from drowning a young government detective, who is searching for her father. When he recovers he stands between duty and gratitude until the surprise finish clears the father of the charge. This is only fairly strong in handling, but has a good plot.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), Sept. 13.—The first of an interesting and well-photographed scenic series. This number takes us through the beautiful Ausable Chasm and is on the same reel with "Keeping Up With the Jones'."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONES' (Gaumont), Sept. 13.—On the same reel with the above, this subject which is presented in an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer, shows Mr. Jones learning to dance, in order not to be outdone by the rest of the family. The picture is a very amusing illustration of what happened to "Jones."

THE KNOCKOUT (Cub), Sept. 17.—George Ovey appears in this knockabout number in his character as Jerry. He arranges to have the English lord knocked out in a boxing match. Some of the small business is very funny, though the plot itself is not strong.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A YANKEE FROM THE WEST (Mutual Masterpicture, Majestic), Aug. 19.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1845, issue of September 11.

ONLY A MESSENGER BOY (Keystone), Aug. 23.—A two-reeler with Ford Sterling in the lead. The situation in which the messenger boy (Ford Sterling) places himself in his pursuit of a married woman is exceedingly amusing, in spite of the fact that a portion of a bedroom scene might better be eliminated. The last we see of the messenger boy he is at the bottom of the sea in a safe in which he has taken refuge, and which has been removed from its accustomed place by robbers, ere the unfortunate "boy" has time to escape.

IN TRUST (American), Sept. 6.—A two-reel production featuring Vivian Rich. There is quite an appeal to this picture which treats of the good deed of an outlaw in defending the honor of a woman. The woman in turn covers his "get-away" at the point of a revolver. The atmosphere of the picture is realistic, some excellent horseback riding is exhibited, and the exterior locations are very attractive.

THE BOWL-BEARER (Thanhouser), Sept. 7.—An attractive two-reel number, feturing Morris Foster as an American young man who rides into Mexico. He meets with numerous adventures while visiting a wealthy Don, also a poor niece of the latter, who saves his life. Her beauty wins him and the later scenes occur in this country when he announces his engagement to her. The girl was very pleasing and the story, on the whole, possesses unusual charm. It makes a good love tale.

THE UNSUSPECTED ISLES (Rialto), Sept. 8.—A three-reel offering, written by Rev. J. C. Harris, with Fania Marinoff, John Reinhard, Sydney Mason, Phin W. Nares and others, in the cast. The first two reels of this are entertaining and have some points of exceptional interest. Fania Marinoff is bright and vivacious in her rendition of the part of the romantic native girl, brought to Broadway by a turn of fate. The tragic episodes in the last reel will be disappointing to many observers and the story falls off greatly in strength as the result of several highly improbable happenings. The settings and general atmosphere of the production are attractive.

SHORTY'S RANCH (Broncho), Sept. 15.—An excellent three-reel comedy in which Shorty, with the aid of circumstances, and in a fit of desperation, impersonates Baron Hassenpheffer, whose gouty foot prevents his going to take charge at his new ranch for the space of a month. Shorty, getting hold of the baron's suit case by mistake, makes the necessary change of attire and plays the part to the bitter end when he is forced to vacate in disgrace.

THE RAJAH'S SACRIFICE (Centaur), Sept. 16.—A two-reel production from the Horsley studios, in which the Bostock wild animals play a prominent part. Capt. Jack Bonavita appears in the picture, and a very fair cast. The picture has been prepared with considerable care, but the story, which treats of the kidnapping of a white girl, the pride of the British regiment, stationed at a certain East Indian post, and the sacrifice of the life of a Rajah in order to restore the girl to her family, is rather ordinary.

THE MAN FROM OREGON (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 38—N. Y. M. P. Corp.), Sept. 16.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1326, issue of August 21.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY, NO. 19 (American).—Continuing from the burning of the restaurant in the last chapter, we find in nineteenth episode, "Fire, Fury and Confusion," that John Powell has been injured. He is carried to his home in Los Angeles, and by a clever turn Vivian has been able to install herself in his home as nurse, while Esther begs for admittance at the door in vain. The diamond placed in the hollow of a tree by the eccentric Englishman, is found by a couple of children, and thrown, in the course of a childish quarrel, on a hive of bees. The story continues to interest, and a word of praise is now due to Roy L. McCardell for the cleverness of the scenario.

THE HEART OF JENNIFER (Famous Players), Aug. 30.—Reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 1844, issue of September 11.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

JOCKO, THE LOVESICK MONKEY, Sept. 13.—An animated cartoon from the Bray studios in which an interesting series of bouts take place between an elephant and a monkey. The film is a very amusing one.

THE WATERWAYS OF BRUGES (Picturesque Belgium—Photocolor), Sept. 13 -This is an exceedingly beautiful scenic in which we traverse the waterways of the quaint old city. The film is colored, and well photographed, the result being an exquisite offering. On the same reel with "Fishing With Cormorants in Yun-Nan-Fou."

FISHING WITH CORMORANTS (Globe), Sept. 13.—An interesting illustration of how the cormorant is made use of by Chinese fishermen. On the same reel with the above.

INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS, NO. 7, Sept. 13.—In this film several thousand carrier pigeons are let loose and the space of time consumed in their passage from one distant point to another and return is automatically recorded.

MATRIMONIAL BLISS (Starlight), Sept. 18.—An amusing farce comedy in which Louie and Heine have a difference over a woman whom they both wish to marry. The less favored one takes desperate means of interrupting the marriage ceremony. The picture would undoubtedly amuse the average audience.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode 36, "The Triumph of Elaine"), Aug. 30 —The concluding chapter of "The Romance of Elaine" finds the supply base of Del Mar unearthed through the capture of Elaine. The hermit unmasks in this closing episode, disclosing a fact that many no doubt have guessed at, that the Hermit, Professor Arnold and Craig Kennedy are one and the same. And so Elaine's romantic career is closed to us with the restoration of her lover and benefactor.

THE GALLOPER (Gold Rooster), Sept. 11.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1663, issue of September 4.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episodes 2 and 3—Balboa), Sept. 11-18.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1844, issue of September 11.

MAID OF THE WILD (Balboa), Sept. 13.—Portions of this two-reel picture have marks of real merit. The acting of the children is particularly natural. The feminine lead is also attractive, and in fact the play has been well cast throughout. The story of the play treats of the marriage of a young woodland girl to a man from the city. In his generosity he brings her little brother and sister to live with them in the city. It happens, however, that the girl is not able to adapt herself to the ways of society life, and in a fit of pique at being found fault with, returns to her woodland home. The husband seeks her out and all ends happily.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 182 (Universal), Sept. 1.—Havoc wrought by a West Indian hurricane, a baby parade at Asbury Park, a "flood" of confiscated beer in Arkansas, excellent scenes in the trenches and other features appear in this number.

TOO MANY SMITHS (Nestor), Sept. 13.—An Al. E. Christie number featuring Eddie Lyons, Dolly Ohnet, Carmen Phillips, Lee Moran and Jack Connelly. Two married couples named Smith get their affairs mixed up. The scenes are taken at Coronado Beach and contain considerable amusement, though the plot is slight.

HOW EARLY SAVED THE FARM (Rex), Sept. 14.—Baby Early, to save the animals on her father's farm, drives them all into a pasture and remains with them over night. The holder of the mortgage relents and gives her father more time on the payments. This has good sentiment in it, but is only fairly strong in production.

JOE MARTIN TURNS 'EM LOOSE (Victor), Sept. 15.—A one-reel animal comedy, directed by Paul Bourgeois, which will keep an audience on the edge of their seats. An entire menagerie is turned loose in a town and the stunts done by the two and four-footed actors are surprising, to say the least.

IN THE HEART OF THE HILLS (Big U), Sept. 16.—A mountain story, by F. McGraw Willis, featuring Adele Lane, Edward Sloman Seymour Zeiliff and Jack Wilson. The girl falls in love with a watchman in the hills who turns out to be a villain. He makes an attack on the girl and tries to kill her father for interfering. Later the watchman is accidentally shot. The number is only of about average strength.

HE COULDN'T FOOL HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW (Joker), Sept. 18.—Max Asher, Gale Henry and others, appear in this low comedy number. The mother-in-law disguises herself as a fruit peddler to spy upon her daughter's flirtatious husband. There is some amusement in this; it makes an average offering.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH (Broadway Universal Feature), Sept. 6.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy on page 1843, issue of September 11.

A CRY IN THE DARK (Universal Special), Sept. 6.—No. 12 of "The Broken Coin" series. The most entertaining feature of this number is where Roleaux is placed, empty handed, in the bull ring by the soldiers of Grahoffen. He makes a bold dash, after facing the bull for some moments, and regains his liberty The reel closes with King Michael and Kitty in the hands of the Apaches and Count Frederick coming to the rescue. The main situation of the story, so far as it concerns the two halves of the mysterious coin, is not advanced in this CRIME'S TRIANGLE (Imp), Sept. 10.—A strong three-reel production of the criminal type, featuring King Baggot, Edna Hunter, Wm. Bailey and Frank Smith. The main situation is very unusual. The hero is short in his accounts through a theft committed by his brother-in-law. The cashier is at the same time short a much greater sum and tries to kill the hero. The latter, to brace his nerves, drinks the poisonous decoction prepared by the hero for his own death This situation, gruesome as it is, is handled in a skillful manner. From this point the story moves on to a happy conclusion. The construction is excellent.

WAR (Universal Special), Sept. 13.—No. 13 of "The Broken Coin" series. Roleaux is free and helps King Michael and Kitty escape from the Apaches. A raid is made by the king's soldiers on the Apaches' headquarters. Some of the action is vague in intent, though quite interesting in itself. Kitty rescues Count Frederick from a predicament and Count Sachio carries the bogus half of the coin to Grahoffen. The reel closes with preparations for war between the rival kingdoms.

QUEEN OF HEARTS (Gold Seal), Sept. 14.—A three-reel number, from a story written by L. V. Jefferson. Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, Wm. Worthington, Barney Furey and others appear. This is the story of a gentleman gambler of the metropolitan type who wins the property of the man whose daughter he loves. Though a gambler, he has honorable intentions toward the girl, who gave him the queen of hearts as a lucky card. This has a strong tendency to melodrama, but is restrained and forceful in treatment. It makes, on the whole, an interesting story.

THE HOUSE WITH THE DRAWN SHADES (Rex), Sept. 16.—A two-reel number, featuring Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips. The judge's wife deserts him and runs away with a musician. Later in life she is brought before the judge a wreck of a woman, addicted to the morphine habit. He takes her home and nurses her back to health in the old room where the shades have been drawn since her departure. This is a pathetic story, handled in a sincere manner. It makes the most of the plot and has considerable strength.

THE WOLF OF DEBT (Imp), Sept. 17.—A four-reel drama, by Hugh C. Wier, featuring Fanny Hayes, Violet Mersereau, Wm. Garwood and Brinsley Shaw. The story is well constructed and contains some strong situations, also some pretty settings. It pictures the efforts of a socially ambitious mother to wreck the happiness of her married daughter. The night scenes, taken in a pouring rain, are fine. The struggle in the office prior to the closing of the stock market has good suspense. As a whole, this maintains a pleasing grip on the interest.

THE SURRENDER (Bison), Sept. 18.—A three-reel subject presenting a story of love in a factory district. Marie Walcamp and Joe Singleton have the leads. The hero is a rough, almost brutal, fellow, who forces the girl into a marriage after saving her from a worse fate at the hands of another His later attempts to shield her erring father arouse her love for him. The story adheres faithfully to the type of life it pictures and is quite strong in many respects.

World Film Corporation.

POKES AND JABS IN CLOVER (Wizard), Aug.—An entertaining knockabout comedy that is well up to the standard of previous offerings in this series. There is enough of a plot to prepare for amusing situations and the director has introduced several fresh bits of business. The picture is acted with spirit.

SALVATION NELL (California M. P. Co.), Sept.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1493, issue of August 28.

GRACE D'ARMOND IN OIL PAINTING.

The Selig Polyscope Company has presented V-L-S-E exchanges with beautiful oil paintings of Miss Grace D'Armond, the youngest leading lady in the world, who stars in Selig Red Seal plays, including "A Texas Steer," "The Millionaire Baby," "The House of a Thousand Candles," "A Black Sheep," etc. Each portrait, done in oil, measures 30 by 45 and is enclosed in a golden frame three inches deep. It is believed that these oil paintings will prove most acceptable interior decorations for branch V-L-S-E offices. These paintings will be furnished exhibitors who take pride in beautiful interior decorations for $15 each.

ENLARGING AMERICAN PLANT.

President S. S. Hutchinson has just approved plans to practically double the present area of the American Film plant at Santa Barbara. Present details contemplate what is to be the largest stage under glass in the world, and when work under construction is completed the "Flying A" studios will cover approximately seven acres.

The American now has twenty-one directors and is producing more film footage per week than any other film company in the United States.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

"SWAT the fakir" should be the battle cry now. The battle has been started on the extortionate employment agencies with good effect. Why not carry the battle of reform right down the line and exterminate the grafters and imposters from all branches of the motion picture field? Several motion picture companies have decided to form an agency for the employment of "extras," the intention being that the people employed get all that is due them and the grafting agent be cut out. Thus far no reports have been received as to the results of the new venture. The backers are confident, and those expected to benefit by the venture are enthusiastic in their praise of the movement. On the other hand, the agents to be affected by the new movement are not in a pleasant frame of mind. Some of them are inclined to be combative. It is said that more than one of the agencies are inclined to force the self-supplying companies to take out licenses as employment bureaus and conduct business accordingly. Such a course may be stamped as a legallized bluff. Legally, the challenge must be given more than passing notice. Any motion picture company may individually establish its own employment department. If several companies combine to maintain an employment agency there seems to be a doubt whether such an agency can be conducted without compliance with the laws governing employment agencies. If it is upheld that such agencies are required to be licensed and operated under the laws governing employment agencies then there will be strong comeback upon the agencies that have been so successfully pursuing their course. For this reason it is believed that the threatening agents will not uphold their bluff.

Of course, the new venture is more or less an advertising proposition on the part of the companies that have undertaken it, and they are entitled to all the credit and advertising that can be accorded them. It is a worthy cause. But none the less worthy is the course taken by one of the most prominent motion picture companies in regard to scenarios. This company is to distribute among exhibitors lessons on scenario writing which are to be furnished to the patrons of the picture houses free of charge. To encourage writing a prize contest will be conducted and the company will pay regular prices for all scenarios accepted. Personal investigation by the writer showed that this proposition was a pure advertising scheme. The promoters had no idea, when they first launched it, that they were opening a war upon the scores of fake scenario schools that have been opened in various parts of the country. These bogus institutions have reaped a harvest from the innocents who have been led to believe that anybody with the required amount of cash could be made a scenario writer. Hundreds of dupes have burned the midnight oil to attain the goal of success. Thousands of manuscripts have been submitted and never returned. In their stead the dupes have received stereotyped adverse criticisms, and yet many of the "scripts" have been doctored and marketed by the fakirs. The fakirs have not only been living upon the money of their dupes, but upon their brains as well.

Now that the good work has been started in two branches let the third be taken up. An invaluable service can be rendered the public by the same people who have taken up the employment and scenario idea, girdling themselves for a decisive battle on the schools for acting. Existing evidence shows that such schools are even more reprehensible than employment agencies, and the scenario institutions. If the producing companies would combine on a basis similar to that of the anti-agency movement, and straight-forwardly declare the truth that there is not a dearth of talent in motion picture field, that companies are not clamoring for talent, and that the so-called schools have no standing orders from them, many of the confidence schools would soon be driven out of business. A young man residing in New Durham, N. J., sought the advice of the writer as to taking up a course on motion picture acting. He said the head, or advertised head, of the school that approached him was a well known photoplayer and for that reason he had seriously thought of taking up the course, but the impatience displayed by the school to get him upon the roll had created doubts in his mind. Originally the school had tendered him a course for $50. This, he answered, was more than he could afford. Better terms were offered and while he was considering the matter another letter arrived offering him a course for a cash payment of $25. Before this letter could be answered another followed with an offer to accept $15 cash and the balance at the end of one month. Letters followed quickly urging a speedy acceptance of the latter proposition, as it was a special offer limited for acceptance. Finally he received a letter informing him that as his graduation might lead to the school securing a satisfactory enrollment from his district, it had been decided to allow him the course on a cash payment of $3 and security for the payment of $1 for each of the succeeding fifteen weeks. Of course, each offer was accompanied by an implied guaranty that the pupil would be placed with one of the many companies so much in need of talent as soon as he had attained the proficiency required by the school. It will be observed that the school skillfully avoided any possible charge of fraud on the employment question. Position could be expected only when the school deemed the pupil proficient.

These so-called schools for the teaching of photoplay acting point to many graduates from dramatic schools who have attained success upon the stage. There are very few dramatic schools in existence today and when they were more numerous there were proportionately as many fakes in existence as there are phony photoplay schools at the present time. The photoplay school of today is simply the revival of an old money-making scheme.

What has been said, however, must not be taken as a wholesale condemnation of instruction in the art of motion picture acting. There are many people who by some means have become incapacitated for the pursuance of their work before the camera and have undertaken to coach people. They are doing what many veterans of the stage have done and are doing and it is a bona fide undertaking. In such cases it will be found the instructor first takes the precaution to sound the ability of the applicant and the chances of progress. From such sources even some people actually engaged in photoplay work may derive considerable advantage.

In less than eight weeks from the present time the patchwork quilt which the constitutional fossilites at Albany put together will be spread for the people to vote upon at the polls. This will afford the motion picture people an opportunity to show their voting strength. They should not allow it to pass. A convention which refused to accord a fair hearing to the motion picture people on an equitable proposition should receive a complete and unmistakable rebuke from them at the polls. It cannot undo or amend what the autocrats did, but it will indelibly impress upon the records a protest that must be respected when the motion picture people again appeal for justice.

HOWARD MITCHELL AT THANHOUSER'S.

From Philadelphia to New Rochelle is the jump that Howard Mitchell, Lubin director, has made within the last week. Film fans all over the country know the hefty "Mitch" for his splendid work with Arthur Johnson, with whom he was a co-director; but directing did not rob him of his genius for "putting it over" in a scene, and for a long time he continued to play heavies. He shines brightest in a fight, and Mr. Thanhouser, keen student of the strong points in his organization, handed Mitchell a script with a corking fight in it for his first production. He "put it over" so successfully that George Marlo, leading man, came out of the fracas with a prettily colored eye. Mr. Thanhouser facetiously remarked that there would be more fights, and Marlo is still wondering whether that was meant for him or Director Mitchell.

"The Dead Man's Keys" will be the first Mitchell release, a two-reeler, full of good "red-blood" action and deep situations.

GERMANY STOPS EXPORTATION TO SWEDEN.

Consul General Ernest L. Harris, at Stockholm, says that according to reports from Germany the Imperial Government has prohibited the exportation of German films to Sweden. This will affect not only the industry as far as the importers in this city are concerned but the entertainment of the people as well, for the reason that some of the most interesting pictures in this respect have thus far come from Germany. While most of the moving picture establishments are closed at present on account of the summer holidays, yet they all open September 1, and it is predicted that the source of entertainment will be much curtailed.

The Men Back of Equitable.

Arthur S. Spiegel and Felix F. Feist, the Two Spirits Which Direct Its Destinies.

THE Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, which came into actual being this week with the presentation of its first release, "Trilby," at the Forty-fourth street theater, is now girdling itself for its battle of "comparison" with the other great film makers.

Considerable has been heard of Equitable, and much has been said of its proposed work, releases, stars and plays—but as yet the dominating figures in this three million dollar concern have held themselves in the background.

Arthur S. Siegel.

Associated with Lewis J. Selznick, World Film Head, in the actual charge of Equitable are Arthur S. Spiegel and Felix F. Feist. Mr. Feist, just thirty-two years of age, began public life as a lyric writer for his brother, Leo Feist. Several years ago he became interested in picture work, through a connection with Henry Brock in the Kinemacolor Company. Mr. Brock sent Feist to Chicago for two weeks to straighten out the office, which was in a demoralized condition, and he made so good, he was kept there two years. Some time ago, Feist took charge of affairs at the Celebrated Player's office—result—business doubled in four months and it was only to satisfy an ambition to become affiliated in the production end of the film game that Feist was weaned away from Celebrated to cast his lot with Equitable.

Arthur S. Spiegel, president of Equitable, is likewise president and guiding genius of the Spiegel-May-Stern Company. The Spiegel-May-Stern Company, of Chicago, is the largest mail order concern in the world, doing an annual business exceeding ten millions of dollars and controlled at all times by this same Arthur Spiegel. Mr. Spiegel is two years younger than Feist, and succeeded his father as president of the great chain of industries in the west that bears his name. The motion picture activities of Mr. Spiegel do not take him out of touch with his Western enterprises.

Felix F. Feist.

Mr. Spiegel it was who induced Feist to join Equitable. Spiegel it was who interested Ladenberg Thalman Company, the second largest banking house in America, to finance Equitable to the tune of five million dollars, and it is Spiegel and Feist who, each day, interview stars and minor artists. Spiegel and Feist read books and plays. Spiegel and Feist who go into the projection room and overlook the finished productions, and it is Spiegel and Feist who are putting equity into the business of motion pictures.

"We have signed William Courtleigh, Jr., Helen Ware, Robert Edeson, Muriel Ostriche, Florence Reed, William Courtenay, Francine Larrimore, Charles J. Ross, Thomas Wise, Kathrine Osterman, Clara Whipple, Wilton Lackaye, Robert T. Haines, Clara Kimball Young (one picture only), and several others," said Mr. Spiegel, "don't you think this proves we are in earnest?"

Feist interposed: "and we have purchased outright the entire rights to the productions of one of the most prolific producers in New York, the picture rights to the works of five famous authors, two of the biggest novels of the past years and have options on the services of a great number of famous players, as yet unseen in motion pictures."

The staff equipment at Equitable is maintained at a minimum. There will be no great overhead expenses. Nothing costly that must of necessity be charged against the negative. Spiegel and Feist are of the new school of film magnates and their one idea is equity in business and a fair and square deal to exhibitor, public and themselves.

At Leading Picture Theatres.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Vitagraph.

J. STUART BLACKTON'S remarkable spectacle, "The Battle Cry of Peace," urging in a strikingly dramatic fashion the need for improving the army and navy of the United States, is being shown every afternoon and evening at the Vitagraph theater. Aside from the lesson it teaches, "The Battle Cry of Peace" is an uncommonly good play, replete with thrillingly dramatic incidents. Charles Richman presents the central figure in the story and others in the all-star Vitagraph cast are Joseph Kilgour, Thais Lawton, Lionel Braham, L. Rogers Lytton, Tefft Johnson, James Morrison, Harold Hubert, Louise Beaudet, Mary Maurice, Belle Brice and Lucille Hammill.

In making the picture, Commodore Blackton introduced 16,000 National guardsmen, 800 G. A. R. members, 5,000 horses, 17 aeroplanes, seaplanes, dreadnaughts, torpedo boats and armored motor cars. One of the most spectacular incidents in the production is the irresistible sweep of the invading army into New York. Other startling effects are the bombardment of the city, Wall street in flames and the dynamiting of public buildings. To assure the best possible presentation of the picture, Commodore Blackton and Albert E. Smith engaged S. L. Rothapfel to supervise its staging. An excellent musical accompaniment, arranged especially for the production, is played by an orchestra of twenty-five pieces.

At the Broadway theater, Charlotte Walker is the star in an original photoplay by Hector Turnbull, entitled "Out of Darkness." It is a play of serious intent, and reveals the impossible conditions under which young women work for starvation wages. Miss Walker is seen as a woman who loses her memory and changes from a society lady to a working girl in the factory she herself owns. She is supported by the Lasky all-star company. Special music is arranged for the picture by J. C. Bradford, leader at the Broadway. Paramount South American travel pictures, Pathe latest news, cartoons and the newest comedies complete the bill.

"The Case of Becky" at the Strand.

Blanche Sweet in the latest Lasky-Belasco production, "The Case of Becky," is appearing at the Strand theater this week, supported by Carlyle Blackwell, Theodore Roberts, James Neil and a fine cast. The play was written by Edward E. Locke and was a big success on the speaking stage. It deals with hypnotism and a dual personality, Miss Sweet taking the character of Dorothy, a lovable young lady, who is forced, when her other personality asserts itself, to change into Becky, a little hoyden whose contempt of everyone gets her into all kinds of trouble. The story offers unusual opportunities for the camera, and Miss Sweet brings out the many phases of her dual role with excellent effect.

An unusually interesting selection of European war pictures are included in the Topical Review, which also contains the latest news pictures from this country and abroad. The educational feature consists of colored travel pictures of rare interest. A humorous and well constructed comedy concludes the picture part of the entertainment. An attractive musical program consisting of vocal, operatic and popular selections by Kathlyn York and Alan Turner, and Alice Tss, a harpist, complete the entertainment.

KENT GOES WEST FOR GREAT NORTHERN.

John A. Kent, publicity and sales manager of the Great Northern Film Company, has left on an extensive western trip, during which he will call on all the exchanges controlling the territorial rights to the product of his firm. At the same time he will make a thorough study of trade conditions throughout that part of the country.

Edward R. Phillips Dead

Pioneer Vitagraph Player Succumbs to Heart Disease—Was One of First of Vitagraph Stock Company.

EDWARD R. PHILLIPS, one of the original members of the Vitagraph Stock Company, and one of the best known screen players, died Sunday, August 29th, of heart trouble. He is survived by a widow and two children.

Mr. Phillips joined the Vitagraph Company about ten years ago, and for eight years was one of the most active players, appearing in every kind of character imaginable. He was advanced to the position of directorship at a time when there were only four directors including Charles Kent, the late William V. Ranous and Van Dyke Brooke regularly employed by the Vitagraph Company. Two years ago he was compelled to retire from active service on account of ill health. On his recovery, however, he again returned to the Vitagraph Company, but after a year, in which he played lighter character parts, was compelled to retire permanently on account of the recurrence of his former illness.

Previous to his appearing in pictures, Mr. Phillips was recognized as one of the leading players on the legitimate stage and appeared in support of many of the prominent actors of his day. His last road engagements were with Raymond Hitchcock in "The Yankee Counsel," and three seasons with Macklyn Arbuckle in "The County Chairman."

Mr. Phillips brought the late John Bunny into the Vitagraph fold and not only played opposite him, but directed many of the pictures in which Mr. Bunny appeared. The Vitagraph pictures in which Mr. Phillips appeared as a player and made his most pronounced success comprise "On the Altar of Love," "He Couldn't Dance," "Napoleon, a Man of Destiny," "Training Grandfather," "Future Vengeance," "A Tale of Two Cities," one of the first three-part pictures produced by the Vitagraph Company of America, "The Latent Spark," Uncle Tom in "Uncle Tom's Cabin;" "Francesca di Rimini," etc.; while those produced under his direction include "Convict 796," "A Life for a Life," "Courage of Sorts," "Birds of a Feather," "He Who Laughs Last," and not only wrote but played the principal character and directed "In the Northern Forests."

William Bonelli

WILLIAM BONELLI, who has just completed a splendid five-reel feature, entitled "An American Gentleman," for the Liberty Motion Picture Company, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., has had an interesting career.

Mr. Bonelli studied law at Columbia University, and during his student days was an all-around athlete. His career as a lawyer terminated when the opportunity came to join the Lilly Langtry Company in one of her late trips to America. He left Miss Langtry to go with Sir Henry Irving, and following this experience he toured the country for several seasons as a boy tragedian in Shakesperian plays.

William Bonelli.

Mr. Bonelli was for some time a member o the Denman Thompson Company, and then for eight years an author and producer, having a number of companies on the road throughout that p· riod. During this time he starred for several seasons in his own play, "An American Gentleman," with Rose Stahl and Helen Ware, later appearing in his drama, "A Man of the World." Still later he starred with Rose Stahl in "Janice Meredith."

Mr. Bonelli has been a leading man for such well-known stars as Nance O'Neill, Hilda Spong, Mary Mannering and Lulu Glaser. He was also for several seasons a leading man in Ziegfeld's "Follies."

Mr. Bonelli has only recently turned his attention to motion picture work, and his success in the picturized version of "An American Gentleman" is likely to lead to further screen work.

Fawcett in "The Frame-Up" for Universal

Sterling Broadway Star to Act in Broadway Universal Feature Under the Direction of Otis Turner.

GEORGE FAWCETT, the well known American actor, is to be starred by the Universal in "The Frame Up," which was especially written for him by Otis Turner, director of "The Black Box" serial and "Damon and Pythias."

While touring the country Mr. Fawcett visited Universal City, Cal., and was much impressed with the vastness of the film industry. The Universal offered him an engagement to star in a big feature before his return east for the winter season, which Mr. Fawcett accepted. Mr. Fawcett was born in Virginia and was educated in the University of that state. He made his first stage appearance when twenty-six years old and has since appeared in about sixty successful productions.

George D. Fawcett.

In his early career he played for some time with the famous Tomaso Salvini, and at the Broadway theater, New York, appeared in the tragedians' company in such plays as "Samson," "The Gladiator," "The Outlaw" and "Othello." Later while with Alexander Salvini he played Baron Della Rocca in "A Child of Naples" and Don Jose in "Don Caesar de Bazan." This was followed by a season with Nat Goodwin in "A Gilded Fool," "David Garrick" and many other important successes.

For many years Mr. Fawcett was identified as Dow in "The Little Minister," in which Maude Adams starred. He also appeared as Prince Escalus in "Romeo and Juliet." Mr. Fawcett founded the Fawcett stock company in Baltimore and appeared in that city as a star for many years. Later he played "Caleb West," "The Squaw Man," "The Man of the Hour," "The Silver Girl," "The Great John Ganton," "The Fighter," "Getting a Polish," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "A Gentleman of Leisure," "He and She," "The Herfords," "A Man's Friends," "Are You a Crook?" and "A White Man." In 1908 Mr. Fawcett created a sensation in London in "The Squaw Man" and in "A White Man."

WARWICK SIGNS WITH WORLD FILM.

Robert Warwick, the man whom Charles Frohman and David Belasco selected to play the leading role in their all-star revival of "A Celebrated Case," has deserted the speaking stage for the motion picture drama. Mr. Warwick recently signed a contract with the World Film Corporation which binds him to appear in that company's productions for the next two years. This means that for that time Mr. Warwick will not appear in the speaking drama and that all of his appearances will be in features released by the World Film. Mr. Warwick has already appeared in seven World Film releases. Among these are "The Dollar Mark," "The Man of the Hour," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Man Who Found Himself," "The Face in the Moonlight," "The Stolen Voice," and the forthcoming feature, "The Flash of an Emerald."

GROSSMAN GOES TO CHICAGO.

In order to meet with the various leaders of the industry in Chicago who have been eager to talk the Lincoln Cycle, Harry Grossman, the newly elected sales manager of the Charter Features Corporation, departed for the windy city Thursday evening last. He spent a number of days interviewing interested theater owners, managers and exchange men. Incidentally he paid a flying visit to the Paramount convention and met the members of the Chicago Board of Trade who are anxious to see the Lincoln Cycle go big in Chicago.

After carrying out his program in that city Mr. Grossman sped to Milwaukee and Detroit and interviewed the big men of those cities. He returned with propositions for Western business which would delight the heart of any producer.

Polly Pathe.

Interesting Young Woman Who Is to Visit Points of Interest in the United States.

MILLIONS of people from coast to coast will be given an opportunity to see all the historic and other points of interest in their country when Polly Pathe returns from an extended "Seeing America First" tour of the country which she is making for Pathe.

Polly Pathe began in New York last week, when she was received in special audience by George McAneny, Acting Mayor of New York City, in the absence of Mayor Mitchel. Mr. McAneny gave Polly Pathe a letter to Mayor Rolph of San Francisco and had a kind word to say about Pathe's latest patriotic venture in the motion picture field.

Polly Pathe
(Miss Grace Wheeler Green).

On her trip Polly Pathe will be accompanied by Mrs. Frances Fisher Byers, who will have charge of the arrangements, and an expert cameraman. It is expected they will take about 150,000 feet of film before they return. The present plan, as announced by Pathe, is to release the pictures in weekly series, beginning about December 15. The pictures will be called "Seeing America First."

Every city of importance in the United States will be visited by the Pathe representatives. Arrangements have been made for interviews with governors, mayors and other officials, and an effort will be made to see President Wilson. According to the present itinerary the travelers will cover 14,000 miles. They will complete their work in New York this week and will start up-state.

In the metropolis they have visited such points of national interest as the City Hall, the financial district, the Central Park Zoo and the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The schedule has been carefully mapped out, and every important point of interest in the United States will be filmed for the benefit of moving picture patrons.

Polly Pathe in private life is Miss Grace Wheeler Green, daughter of Mrs. Franklin Green and the late Franklin Green, the noted architect. Miss Green is well known in society. She made her debut three years ago in New York, as well as in Paris, London and Brussels. She was educated in Brussels where her parents maintained a residence for several seasons.

Mrs. Byers is well known in newspaper circles throughout the country and her special training fits her for this important work. She has been the press representative for Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Ellen Terry and other notables.

EQUITABLE ISSUES ART SUPPLEMENT.

By an arrangement made by Harry Reichenbach of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, that concern will, on October 2nd, be represented in six hundred daily papers throughout the United States through the medium of a magnificent sepia Rotogravure supplement, now in course of construction and similar to that issued by the New York Times, Boston Herald and other great city papers.

The supplement will be on fine stock, contains the photographs of eighteen Equitable and World Film stars, and will be free from advertising in all forms and will be issued as a special art section of the papers in their Sunday issue October 2.

The supplement is being made by Sackett & Wilhelm Company, originators of the rotogravure process and over three million are being printed to supply the papers already under contract to Equitable. Exhibitors in cities to be covered by the supplement have been notified and are working in co-operation with the newspapers.

The supplement will contain photographs of Clara Kimball Young, Muriel Ostriche, Florence Reed, Molly McIntyre, William Courtenay, Katharine Kalered, Robert Edeson, Robert Warwick, Clara Whipple, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blynn, Katharine Osterman and others of note.

Ovey Remains With Horsley.

SPEAKING of the rumor that changes are about to be made in the playing force of his company producing Cub Comedies, David Horsley, who is sponsor for this new brand of one-reelers on the Mutual program, sends out an emphatic denial of the story declaring that changes have not even been considered. In speaking of the rumor which had gained some circulation, Mr. Horsley said:

George Ovey.

"There is absolutely no foundation in the rumor that I have contemplated or proposed any changes in my company now playing in the Cub Comedies. This refers especially to George Ovey, whose name has been specifically mentioned.

"I have signed Mr. Ovey to a contract which has a long term to run, and I am sure he is satisfied. As far as I am concerned I want Mr. Ovey to stay with me.

"Mr. Ovey has been the sensation of the film world and it may be that some interests are anxious to annex his name to their organization. It is in this way, quite likely, that the rumor started. The whole thing is a rumor with not an ounce of truth in it."

George Ovey, the comedian with Mr. Horsley's Cub Comedy company, though a newcomer in the motion picture field, has risen like a meteor in popular favor.

Four months ago he was playing Los Angeles with a musical comedy company in which he was featured. Milton H. Fahrney, Mr. Horsley's chief comedy director, attended one of the performances and was so impressed with Ovey's work that without delay he made him an offer which Ovey accepted.

Arthur Langan, a "Live Wire."

ARTHUR LANGAN is one of the busiest young men in New York filmdom. He is located on the second floor of the Candler Building Annex. Here he has established the headquarters of the Sun Photoplay Company, Inc.

Arthur Langan.

Mr. Langan is especially familiar with the film markets of Great Britain and her colonies and he has sold numerous American features for these markets, realizing very substantial prices. He is in touch with a host of foreign buyers who repose great confidence in his judgment and experience. Incidentally, Mr. Langan maintains what he justly describes as the "largest and finest equipped screening room in New York." It is in his nature to be helpful, a fact which has gained him a generous number of friends. He aided materially in the disposing to good advantage of the remaining assets of the All Star Company, making some profitable sales to the British market. He is always on the job and always ready for business.

Sherrill Pleased With Pathe Alliance

Manager of Frohman Amusement Corporation Says His Company Will Make Ten Subjects a Year Under New Contract.

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is feeling especially good these days over the contract recently entered into between his concern and the Pathe Exchange, Inc., whereby all future productions will be released by Pathe. Mr. Sherrill said this week it might be of interest to the trade to know that the moving factor in the negotiations leading to the new alliance was the belief of the big exchange heads in the excellence of "John Glade's Honor," a recent Frohman Corporation production. The subject will be released by Pathe on October 15 as the first of the Gold Rooster Plays. Under the contract with the exchange ten five-reel pictures will be made each year.

William L. Sherrill.

Mr. Sherrill said he had just closed a contract for "John Glade's Honor" and "Just Out of College" for the British Isles at a substantial figure. The latter subject has also been sold, on state's rights, for New England, to the Union Supply and Film Company of Boston. Other territory already sold includes Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Ohio; California, Nevada and Arizona; Pennsylvania and New York; seven southern states and Canada.

The next subject will be "Body and Soul," in which Florence Rockwell will be starred. The picture is about half completed. Mr. Sherrill said he was perfectly content with the progress his company had made and was making. He added that he preferred doing business on a smaller scale, that the Frohman Corporation had been conservative in everything and would continue to be.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN OSHKOSH.

Manager J. E. Williams, of the Grand Opera House at Oshkosh, opened the season with "The Birth of a Nation" August 29 for eight days' matinee and night, turning people away for every performance at 25-50-75 and $1 prices, and gave an extra performance Saturday morning at 9.30 to a crowded house. Mgr. Williams engaged an old-time minstrel, Eli Rice, to announce with a megaphone in all the surrounding towns. He also billed the country for 100 miles around.

The Grand will play pictures hereafter on all open nights: Sept. 6-7, "Graustark"; 8-9, "Juggernaut"; 10-11, "Rosary," followed with other pictures. The Grand has been equipped with all the latest improvements including the latest and best projection machine manufactured for the presentation of motion pictures.

PAULINE FREDERICK QUITS LEGITIMATE STAGE.

Pleased with her success in motion pictures Pauline Frederick, the star of "The Eternal City," a Famous Players production, now says that she has decided to quit the legitimate stage forever and devote her talents henceforth to pictures. Of course, the Famous Players have secured her future appearances at a large salary, but this is her principal reason:

"The motion picture to-day is the most illimitable form of art that the world has ever known. I have heard stage stars boast of having played, in the course of many years, before half a million people. Contrast this petty figure, obtained only after a score of years of constant activity, to the screen player's possession of an audience of thirty-five million a week in the United States alone! It was principally for these reasons that I have said goodbye to the oral stage and joined the stellar forces of the Famous Players."

The Metro Pictures Corporation is to provide musical scores which will be especially prepared for each feature picture prior to its date of release. The Metro plan, which will become effective with the current releases, is to select from the classics in music melodies of popular appeal, which will give suitable atmosphere and a harmonious accompaniment to the theme of the screen play. When the classics fail to provide material that supply the precise needs, the best American composers will be called upon to write original music suited to the picture. S. M. Berg, a member of the staff of G. Schirmer, Inc., music publishers, will have charge of the work. The first music program will be issued with the release of "The Silent Voice."

THANHOUSER HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Edwin Thanhouser and his family had a narrow escape from a fatal automobile accident on Sunday, September 5, while driving along the Hudson River near Haverstraw, N. J. The chauffeur of the Thanhouser car turned aside to avoid a collision with a swiftly approaching motor coming in the opposite direction, and was saved from going over a high embankment only by a steel derrick guy which happened to extend along the side of the road at that point and which caught and held the front wheels of the car as they went over the edge. Mr. Thanhouser calculated that the drop at the point where his car started over the edge was about sixty feet.

GO TO IT, CAPELLANI!

The energetic press department of the World Film Corporation is out with a story to the effect that Director Capellani proposes to buy a house at Fort Lee, N. J., reputed to be one of General Washington's headquarters, and that Capellani has expressed surprise that America has not taken steps to preserve this relic of revolutionary days. Of course Mr. Capellani doesn't know that if all the houses reputed to have been headquarters of General Washington were to be gathered together they would make a city several times larger than Fort Lee, N. J. But there can be no harm in Mr. Capellani's buying and restoring the said house if he desires. Go to it, Capellani.

HORSLEY'S PLAYERS WILL STICK.

David Horsley announces that he has signed long term contracts with all of his featured players and directors along with many others in his companies. Among them are George Ovey, Crane Wilbur, Milton H. Fahrney, Jay Hunt and Captain Jack Bonavita. In some of the cases the contracts were renewals of old agreements and called for big increases in salaries.

This announcement will set at rest a rumor that is being circulated in California studios that some of the stars were to leave for other fields. Additions to Mr. Horsley's staff of directors and players are being planned and announcement of the names will be given in due course.

MOROSCO ENGAGES UNA NIXON HOPKINS AS ART DIRECTOR.

Following its arrangement for a specially written musical program for "Peer Gynt" starring Cyril Maude, which marked an epoch in the annals of regular program releases, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company present further indication of its progressiveness through its engagement of Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins, as art director, with jurisdiction over the furnishings of all sets in its productions.

ANTHONY KELLY ON LUBIN STAFF.

Anthony Kelly, a scenario writer of considerable promise, has been engaged by the Lubin Company, and will devote his efforts exclusively to that company. Mr. Kelly's latest creations are "Destiny," in which Emily Stevens was starred; "Body and Soul," in which Florence Rockwell was featured; "Safety First," a three-act comedy, and a one-act drama, "The Trail of the White Swan." Mr. Kelly has assumed his new duties at the Lubin studio at Philadelphia.

BIRD BACK FROM VACATION.

Frederick J. Bird, of the Nicholas Power Company sales department, and one of the valuable cogs in the organization which has placed the Power's motion picture projecting machines on such a high plane, has recently returned to his desk after a sojourn of several weeks in the Southern states. Mr. Bird reports business in general to be excellent and that we may look forward to a most prosperous year, and one that promises to outshine any previous year since the in-

Picture Actresses Want Club

Lillian Tucker Believes an Organization of Screen Women Would Help a Lot.

THE disclosures made recently that so-called "motion picture agencies" have been extorting exorbitant fees from supernumeraries for supplying them with positions in motion picture productions has brought an unexpected response from the women of the motion picture actresses who are already started in the profession. The women, headed by Lillian Tucker, an actress from the legitimate stage who has just come into pictures, are starting an agitation for a club, which shall be similar in many ways to the Rehearsal Club belonging to the actresses from the legitimate stage. Because Miss Tucker is rather new to the pictures, having made her first appearance in "Evidence," and having just completed a picture with Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," she sees the need of a club for screen actresses the better because she has a fresh perspective.

"If motion picture actresses had owned a club, fake 'agencies' would not have dared exist because they would have been found out and prosecuted. The club itself would have maintained an informal employment bureau, in co-operation with the motion picture companies, and an information bureau, which would have been a clearing house for troubles.

"Men in the motion picture profession to whom I have broached the subject, express doubts as to the ability of the women to organize and maintain such a club. I think the men discredit the intelligence of the actresses. Personal jealousies could be overcome in working for a common cause. With a distinct purpose in view—the purpose to establish the dignity of their profession, aid the inexperienced and unfortunate girls who are having a struggle to gain a foothold, and to broaden the interests of those who have succeeded—I have no doubt but what the women could maintain a club. At the same time many of the problems which surround the profession would disappear."

Miss Tucker suggests that rooms be rented in a house in the theatrical district, to be fitted up temporarily for the club. A cafeteria, she feels, would be practical at first. There should be club rooms where the actresses could meet for sociability and where they could stop in to rest. She thinks that the producing companies would be willing to help finance the club to start, because the organization might become of real advantage to them through the employment bureau, and she feels that the influence of the club would be felt in a higher standard of work.

Miss Clara Whipple, the Equitable's leading lady, who is unusually interested in the organization of the club, because she was present at the studio the day a girl fainted from lack of food, because she had been preyed upon by agency sharks, will also take an active part in the starting of the club. Miss Whipple came to New York herself alone, and from the point of view of one who has struggled to success, she can sympathize and be of assistance to those who are beginning.

Miss Tucker asks other motion picture actresses interested in the club to communicate with her at the Hotel Algonquin. A meeting will be called in the near future.

(From the New York Review, Sept. 1).

"Technique of the Photo Play," by Epes Winthrop Sargent, now has a companion volume, "Picture Theater Advertising," by the same well informed writer which is certain to attract as much attention as its forerunner and become a standard for those who wish authoritative guidance about motion picture publicity in all its forms.

No one is better qualified than Mr. Sargent to write upon both subjects as he has studied both exhaustively and has had wide personal experience in writing photo plays, in editing them and in carrying forward big campaigns of advertising.

Mr. Sargent's weekly pages, "The Photoplaywright," in the Moving Picture World, easily contain more valuable information for ambitious scenario writers than all other such departments combined. It was the success of his work there that determined Mr. Sargent to put the results of his knowledge and experience in compact book form. Both volumes are published by the Moving Picture World.

"Picture Theater Advertising" should be invaluable for exhibitors. No owner or manager of a picture house should be without a copy as it gives more and better ideas for exploitation of film than can be found anywhere else. The trade and the profession is indebted to Mr. Sargent for these two volumes.

Francis Doughty

FRANCIS WORCESTER DOUGHTY is a name known to comparatively few, but mention old King Brady and if you exer had enough red blood to read dime novels down behind the barn, if you lived in the country or over in the vacant lot, if you were a town kiddie, and you are speaking of an old friend. You may not know Doughty, but if you never heard of Old King Brady you belong in the minority class. And Mr. Doughty will be a pretty good model for the famous old detective himself. He has to stoop to get under the six foot mark and with his broad brimmed sombrero and ferocious moustache he could pass for a hero of strenuous fiction or a Western Sheriff without the aid of a particle of make-up. But Colonel Doughty is a more interesting character than the fiction hero he created. Descended from old Revolutionary stock, he spent his early years in New England and earned his first money "sticking" type around Gloucester, Mass. But his spirit was too adventurous for the quiet life of the fishing village and he soon came to New York. But he wanted to see more and he set out on his wanderings that took him over practically the entire United States, a goodly part of South America, most of Europe and Southern Asia. He early formed a connection with the Frank Tousey company and for years he wrote the Old King Brady stories, one a week every week until his score stands more than fifteen hundred sixty-thousand-word novels covering every walk and phase of life, and he could write from personal knowledge, for he has mixed with all classes and conditions of men in all climes and countries.

Francis Doughty.

When the motion pictures put the dime novel out of business and the house of Tousey found it profitable to reissue the earlier stories, he turned to the pictures for a new field. His work as author for motion picture stories brought him into touch with the editors and producers and turned his attention to script writing. "Hook and Hand," produced by the Blache Company, was his first screened endeavor—and his first script, as well—and this fast moving five-reeler brought him the commission to strengthen "Zudora" which, in its earlier numbers, contained more literature than action. From the eleventh instalment to the end his action was followed and the serial was whipped from failure to success. This work, in turn, brought him to the attention of David Horsley, who was looking for someone to write melodramas that should tax to the utmost the resources of his great arena in Los Angeles and Colonel Doughty was commissioned to write a series of thrillers that will be presented in print and on the screen at the same time. These will not be dime novels in any sense of the word, except perhaps the price, but will carry the vivid coloring and tense action that is Colonel Doughty's forte.

He is an exceptionally well read man, an expert in gems whose word carries weight in Maiden Lane, and his collection of old coins was at one time one of the largest and most valuable private collections in the country.

WESTLEY BOOSTING "BATTLE OF BALLOTS."

George M. Westley left Columbus, Ohio, the headquarters of the Star Film Company, for a trip through Michigan and other western states in the interest of M. A. Neff's production "The Battle of Ballots." Mr. Westley will give showings of the picture and contract for state rights in the territory visited. Arrangements have been made for a week's showing in a large Chicago theater. Mr. Neff states that he has had many inquiries from various parts of the United States for bookings, but state rights only will be contracted for outside Ohio, where bookings are being offered.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

THIS village is full of tourists who find delight in the current attractions at the moving picture houses, and so I was not surprised, on entering the Boston theater early Saturday night, to have dainty Miss Ward say, "No seats left except in the boxes," where I was ushered. On gazing heavenward I was amazed to find that Manager Ferguson had opened his upper balcony (one of three) on account of the overflow. When I was a kid, this used to be called the "Nigger Heaven," the home of the gallery gods; and how they used to howl and hiss the villain!

In addition to the high-class concert by the Fadettes, we had "The Chalice of Courage" for a long film, and it was intensely interesting in many ways. I had a friend from New York City along and she was most deeply impressed with the sets and dramatic story, well told—a lesson without words. For a short reel we had the visiting Governors lined up on our State House steps and the group included Governor Whitman, who made quite a hit here. Then our mobilized state militia was pictured, as well as scenes in Brazil and some clever cartoons.

Sorry to say it, but "The Second in Command" was a disappointment, save for the battle scenes, and I heard many adverse comments on the picturization—that is, the faces which did not show up at all clear in spots. We looked for better results with Francis Bushman the hero whose handsome features were marred by a steel-like mask. Especially was this true of the oil painting which figures largely at the outset when pretty Muriel gazes upon it with admiration. It looked to us as if painted a dull gray instead of flesh tints. We did like William Clifford immensely, but poor Bushman was certainly "under a cloud" too often. We expect better photography from the Metro. However, the war scenes were great and historically accurate, according to a former English army officer in our party.

So Joseph Kilgour has the part of George Washington in "The Battle Cry of Peace"! That sounds good, for well do we recall his distinguished impersonation of the part in Victor Mapes' "Captain Barrington," put on for the first time here, and for a run at the Globe theater in 1903, and played with equal success in New York City. It was then considered the "last call" in impersonations, and thousands flocked to see the play and to note the resemblance to the famous Stuart portrait of the "Immortal George." Then, too, we had Charles Richman as the hero, and a dandy one he made! He had to play double, too, so that he was in the limelight quite a bit. George Wilson, one of the few survivors of the old Museum Stock Company then in its prime, was in the cast. Surely the film men are to be congratulated in securing such favorites as Richman and Kilgour! The Hub is anticipating another treat in the latter's work, illustrating how "George did it."

Marion H. Brazier

The Hub's newest club for women starts on its career September 6, the occasion being the birthday of the founder, Miss Marion H. Brazier, who also founded the Professional Women's Club, which has a score of members in the films and many others on the speaking stage. Miss Brazier is an enthusiast on the moving pictures, so she has named the organization the "Film Club," to meet informally Sunday evenings with male guests who are connected in some way with the picture industry. Among the charter members are Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, who runs the smart picture theater in the Back Bay—the Exeter Street; Mrs. Caroline B. Nichols, founder of the famous Fadette orchestra, an important adjunct to the films at the Boston theater; Mrs. Barbara Galpin, president of the Professional Women's Club; and many others to guarantee success. They propose tendering a dinner or reception to Rose Coghlan in October, when she celebrates her fiftieth year on the stage.

"The Vampire" made a big hit here—and no wonder, for the settings were most sumptuous, as befitted a woman of the type represented by Mme. Petrova, whose beauty calls for such. What we liked best were the scenes in Washington shown to Jeanne by the young hero, the marching past of the soldiers, his remark to her anent the secret code which she had earlier conspired to secure out of revenge toward his father, only to learn that she loved the youth. Queer that the advance notices of "The Vampire" spoke of her as only suffering "anguish of heart," when she in reality sacrificed her life to save his and dies in his arms after pleading with him to return to his early love. It was tragic to a degree, but superbly done all through. Most daring, too, was the later picture of Christ and the Magdalene with its wonderful lesson.

The Exeter Street theater, which is a beauty in its new dress and extended balcony with boxes, opens on the night of September 13.

The affair promises to be a most enjoyable one, and I will tell about it in the next installment of "Spokes."

Fanny Ward and Jack Dean are great favorites in the Hub, so the Park theater was crowded all day to see "The Marriage of Kitty" so well done by all in the cast, which included Cleo Ridgley, Tom Forman, dear old Mrs. McCord and that sterling actor, Theodore Roberts, whom those sending copy to the press and program printer absolutely ignored, giving Richard Morris the part. You can't fool old theatergoers, however, and I was glad to note Roberts' name on the screen (preceding his appearance), as he deserved it. Fanny Ward seems especially fitted for film work, and I predict greater success for those fortunate to sign her up.

On the double bill that night we had Elsie Janis in "Nearly a Lady," with Mary Pickford's husband, Owen Moore, playing the rustic lover—and winning out, too. My companion disputed me when I ventured to remark that Mary better look after "hubby," as Elsie was a mighty fascinating girl on and off the stage. She said that it was not Mary Pickford's husband as his name was Matt. "Oh, no," I said, "you've got the Marys mixed, as Matt is the brother who plays opposite Mary Fuller and thus far has escaped matrimony." With no desire to rub it in, I ventured to say that brother number three, Tom, married the lovely Alice Joyce, whom we've not seen here in months—and I wonder why?

Well we had a good laugh the other night over the antics of Sam Bernard in "Poor Schmaltz," more because he is a novelty on the screen and rarely smiles than for his acting which borders too close on the slapstick to suit the "high brows" (of which I am one when it comes to horse play). Bernard, however, is a comedian, never a clown, and if we must be inflicted with that sort of work it is refreshing to have a change in methods and a different setting from park scenes with adjacent pools of water into which the participants in the alleged play are knocked, regardless of age and conditions. The bomb scene in "Poor Schmaltz" was funny enough, also the masquerade of the maid, in love with "one of the finest." Conway Tearle was in the cast also in "Helene of the North," with Marguerite Clark shown the same evening at the Park. This play served to introduce our old friend, Robert Rogers, husband of Louise McIntosh, a Boston woman, and I looked in vain for her face, as this couple have never been separated professionally in the fifteen or more years of their married lives. She has just the face for the films and we hope to see her ere long. They will be recalled for their fine work in "Is Matrimony a Failure?"

Alleged Film Thieves Caught

Report from Newark, N. J., Says Police Have Uncovered Conspiracy to Rob Exchanges All Over Country.

IT IS reported from Newark, N. J., that the police in that city have unearthed a vast thieving conspiracy which has victimized film exchanges all over the country to the tune of many thousands of dollars. It is said four men were arrested in connection with the conspiracy and that one of them has been induced to confess. The police, according to report, have found $40,000 worth of film in the den of the thieves. These films are said to have been stolen from the Mutual Film Exchange at 294 Market street, Newark.

Wholesale arrests are now predicted. The suspects arrested in Newark are but part of a gang which extended its operations all over the country, victimizing exchanges in all the big cities. Impersonation of operators to get the films for "today's program" is said to have been one of the chief operations of the band. The thieves stored the stolen films, and after the hue and cry was over either sold or rented the reels. Their favorite method was to sell the films away from the place where they had been stolen. The loose business methods of some of the exchanges are said to have facilitated the operations of the criminals. It is claimed that the work of the band was directed by men who have before this been in trouble with the authorities and whose names are well and unfavorably known in the industry.

KIDDIES TO SEE THEMSELVES IN PICTURES.

The 250 odd children who appeared in the Charles K. Harris feature production of "School Bells" under the direction of Perry N. Vekroff recently at Whitestone in the Kinemacolor studio, are promised a great treat for their faithfulness in working in the warm sun during the hot days on which the pictures were made. Mr. Harris and Albert E. Lowe, president of the Charles K. Harris Company, have promised the young actors a special performance of the picture in which they appear at one of the local theaters before the picture is released through the World Film, to which they may bring their mothers. At this time Mr. Harris himself will be present and will present each child with a copy of his latest song, "School Bells," which he has written to go with the picture. A special singer will go out from New York to sing for the children.

"School Bells" is not yet ready for release. It will be given to the public probably some time during September. It will be the most tremendous children's picture ever made.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" SELLING FAST.

Territory for F. O. Nielsen's peace and preparedness picture, "Guarding Old Glory," is being disposed of very rapidly according to reports from both Mr. Nielsen and W. H. Rudolph, his Eastern representative. Sales last week were as follows: Greater New York, Greene Photo Plays, Inc., New York City. California, Nevada and Arizona, Sol Lesser for the Golden Gate Film Exchange, San Francisco, Cal. Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, William Cutts, Butte, Mont. Ohio, Paul E. Henry, Crestline, Ohio. Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia, Reese and Samios, Westminster, Md. It is confidently expected that every state in the Union will be closed out within the next ten days.

"THE SALAMANDER" CAST COMPLETED.

The B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation have selected the players to appear in "The Salamander," visualized from Owen Johnson's novel and play, which will be released shortly. The cast contains the names of such prominent artists as Ruth Findlay, John Sainpolis, Iva Shephard, Edgar L. Davenport, J. Frank Glendon and J. Elbert Hall. In some of the big scenes in the photoplay, the services of several hundred players will be utilized. The producing of the feature has been entrusted to Arthur Donaldson, conceded to be a master of the shadow stage.

PATHE PITCHER SIGNED BY FEDS.

Harry Crandall, Jr., crack pitcher on the Pathe baseball team, has been grabbed by the Federal League for next season. Manager Stallings, of the Boston Braves, was after him, but the Feds offered better inducements. Young Crandall has been combining working in Pathe pictures with pitching on the picture concern's baseball team, and has made a success of both. For the last four or five weeks he has been letting down opposing teams, which have been the strongest semi-pro organizations around New York, with two or three hits a game.

"THE WOMAN, THE LION, AND THE MAN" (Centaur).

For the second Centaur release on Thursday, September 23, David Horsley presents "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," a drama in two reels relating an episode of life in the animal arena. This release, in point of thrilling punch, is pronounced even more effective than "The Rajah's Sacrifice," which in intensity of power to claim and to hold attention has been proclaimed by film critics the most remarkable ever obtained in an animal picture.

In "The Woman, the Lion and the Man" the climax is a fight in a darkened room between a crook named Mancey (played by Captain Jack Bonavita) and Nero, the most ferocious of the Bostock lions. This situation is brought about by Mancey's demands upon Mrs. Fairfield, a lion trainer, for money to keep him silent about the past history of her father, whose downfall and death he caused.

Mrs. Fairfield's husband, also a lion tamer, overhears Mancey's demands, and when Mancey calls at the Fairfield home that night to take the money which Mrs. Fairfield has promised, Fairfield liberates Nero who springs upon the intruder and crushes out his life.

Another especially thrilling scene in "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," is that in which Mrs. Fairfield, while going through a performance with her lions, recognizes Mancey in the crowd. Overcome with emotion at the sight of the man she swoons, while the lions, free of their trainer's eye and rod, close in upon her. Fairfield, realizing his wife's danger, jumps into the arena and amid the commotion of the audience, saves her.

Besides the Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita there appears in this picture Chas. Gay, Mlle. Ottawa, Ray Watson, Herr Hatty and Madam D'Orsey in the principal roles. Capt. Jack Bonavita and Frank Montgomery directed.

PHOTOPLAY EDITION OF "HOUSE OF A THOUSAND CANDLES."

The Bobbs-Merrill Publishing Company is printing a beautiful photoplay edition in honor of the release of the Selig Red Seal Play, "The House of a Thousand Candles." Meredith Nicholson, author of the novel, has written a preface, and the volume will be illustrated by striking scenes of this film play.

MONTGOMERY NOT OWNER OF LIBERTY COMPANY.

A recent statement in an article regarding Frank Montgomery to the effect that he formerly directed a company of his own known as the Liberty Feature Film Company, is said to be untrue by Sadie Lindbloom, president of that company. President Lindbloom further explains that Mr. Montgomery merely worked for her company under salary as a director.

DEATH OF BURT BOHANNON.

Burt Bohannon, for the past two years traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Company, died at Stamford, N. Y., on Sept. 9. Mr. Bohannon before his association with the Power Company was for many years in burlesque. The funeral arrangements had not been completed at the hour of writing, but it was said services would be held at the undertaking rooms of Frank C. Riley, 104 East Twelfth street, New York, some time Monday.

"JUST OUT OF COLLEGE" RIGHTS.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation reports that it has disposed of state rights for its production "Just Out of College" to the Authors' Film Company for New York and Pennsylvania, and to the Bert Levy Circuit for the states of California, Arizona, Nevada, Canada, the Hawaiian Islands and seven Southern states.

CARROLL RECOVERING.

Frank Carroll, of the Stellar Photoplay Company, has recovered sufficiently from the trolley accident which occcurred at Sixth avenue and Thirty-fourth street last June, to be up and about again although his arm is still in a sling.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" AT STRAND.

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Nielsen's big peace, preparedness and patriotic picture, will open at the Strand September 19.

Reviews of Current Productions

"Queenie of the Nile."

Sumptuous and Spectacular One-Reel Lubin Farce by Epes Winthrop Sargent, Produced Under the Direction of Arthur D. Hotaling.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SUMPTUOUS is the word, for the picturesque luxury with which the last Queen of Egypt, the immortal Cleopatra, surrounded herself is reproduced to humor a wealthy lady who imagines that she is a reincarnation of Cleopatra. Her physician has permitted her to indulge her fantastic tastes, even to the extent of having an entire corps de ballet dance for her at the house, but her whim expands and she demands her Marc Antony. While this new manifestation is not entirely abnormal, the physician decides that he must still soothe his patient by compliance with her wishes and he finally secures the services of a famished lout who has been long enough out of work to undertake any desperate enterprise. The farcical element is largely made up of Mae Hotely's effective impersonation of the demented woman, and some rather ineffective attempts on the part of the pseudo Marc Antony to be funny.

Scene from "Queenie of the Nile" (Lubin).

The farce is saved by some beautiful settings and an opportunity the author has created for the Lubin Company to put on view a large number of shapely young ladies in "back-to-nature" costumes. The advent of these symmetrical nymphs opened up an abundance of farce comedy material which the author did not slight—to the contrary, he utilized it all—and some of it is amusing, but it is opportunity for a comedian who can seize the salient points of such a role as that of Antony to a mad Cleopatra. The comic effect could have been easily intensified if the lout had swelled up with importance and believed himself to be what circumstances had made him seem to be.

"The Cry of the First Born."

Three Reel Universal Production Tells Tragic Story of Love in the Hawaiian Islands.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE have been many stories in fiction and moving pictures based on the love of white men for native girls in the South Seas, but this tale, written by Olga Printzlau Clark, strikes a note so poignant that it makes one forget the familiarity of the subject matter. It brings before the observer a series of scenes so convincingly wrought that he forgets the weaker features of the production and thinks only of the emotional drama set before him.

The story opens with the son of an English lord going to Hawaii to look after his father's interests. Shortly after landing Edward meets Nana, a native girl, who attracts him. He becomes involved in a quarrel with her lover, Kaw, whom he flings over a cliff. He then lives with Nana and in due time a son is born to them. Edward loves the native girl devotedly, but is called to England by his father's illness. During his absence a naval officer tries to win Nana, and in order to carry his point writes Edward that the girl has gone to a wealthy grower. Edward is greatly shocked by this news, but feels that it is only another case of infidelity on the part of a native girl. He proceeds to marry an English girl and they also have a son.

Nana, meantime, has lived alone with her boy, rearing him in the Christian faith. But the naval officer, still hoping to win her, brings news of Edward's marriage in England. Nana dies of grief and the first born swears vengeance upon his father. Later Edward learns of the deception practiced upon him and goes to search for his child, Naipo. He finds him at Nana's grave, but Naipo flees from him. In the night Naipo steals the second child and is about to cast it over a cliff when a vision of Nana restrains him. Naipo then casts himself over and dies just as his father reaches him.

The story is well constructed and not overdrawn in any way. Its shortcomings are rather in the ordinary character of the settings and the uneven photography. But these faults, as above stated, do not greatly detract from the intense interest wrought by the plot itself. The cast includes Wm. Quinn, Wilfred Rogers, R. C. Ryles, Yona Landowski and Antrim Short. The latter makes the most of his part as the boy, Naipo.

"Seeing America First."

One-Reel Gaumont of Unusual and Interesting Scenic Beauty.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HERE is an idea that might be developed to a large extent, and one sure to be as popular as it is instructive. "Seeing America First" is particularly appropriate at this moment, when so many thousands, tens of thousands, Americans have given up their regulation tours abroad and are really at loss what to see in their own country. The whole country has been deluged with articles on the delights of European travel, and there is not the slightest doubt that Americans have benefited by the unconscious absorption of what constitutes rational design in combination with what is beautiful. This is evidenced in the homes of those who have intelligently studied the best examples of house building and interior decoration shown abroad, but those who went away to see the beautiful in Nature were leaving behind them what Nature has lavished on our own fair land.

Strange as it may seem, there are no guide books of adequate description to be found concerning wondrous beauties within a few hours' trip of New York City, and other parts of the country are as badly off. Perhaps the guide book of the future will be the moving picture, but such films as that of the Gaumont Company should furnish more information in the subtitles. The start they have made is a good one—the scenes are selected with admirable taste and beautifully photographed, but there is need of additional information, even small maps, relating to what is shown on the screen. The main subject is followed by a tiny comedy in pencil caricature, itself of good value, but the subject deserves undivided treatment.

"The Circular Staircase."

The Great Mystery Story of Mary Roberts Rinehart Cleverly Produced in Five Reels by Selig, with a Strong Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I CANNOT recollect another instance in which the visualizing possibilities of the moving picture have been so severely put to the test as in "The Circular Staircase." The complications of the plot are numerous and tangled and, to add to the difficulties, the solution of the mystery must be withheld until the very last moment. Notwithstanding these difficulties, the moving pictures visualize the story, without any excessive use of sub-titles or other announcements. Sixty-five sub-titles, four telegrams and an almost illegible fragment of script are the only aids employed throughout the five reels, a really notable showing under such trying conditions.

Exception must be taken to an oversight of the director in the fourth reel, an oversight, indeed, that might well be termed a blunder, and there are several others of minor importance. Referring to the main one, I direct attention to the scene where Aunt Ray, and Gertrude and Halsey Innes are seen standing in a room, in Sunnyside mansion, while the stables are being burned to the ground. The sub-title, "Halsey Disappears," immediately follows. The next moment an exterior shows Louise Armstrong driving up rapidly and alighting in front of Sunnyside. Then she rushes into the presence of Aunt Ray and Gertrude, and a sub-title, "I must see Halsey at once. He is in great danger. Find him; every minute is precious," is flashed. A detective and the gardener rush out to the waiting dog-cart and drive furiously away. We follow them until they reach a scene showing the wreck of an automobile, which has run into a stationary freight train.

How did the detective and the gardener sluse the way to the spot? The spectator is not shown.

Lest a wrong impression might be formed of the sterling merits of this fine Selig production, the reader is reminded that defects appear all the more glaring when they occur in close juxtaposition with prevailing completeness, and that a fault is far more pronounced in the case of a saint than in that of the sinner.

The settings show painstaking care and nice fitness for the needs of the story. The breakdown of the village fire hose cart, near Sunnyside, is a picturesque bit of realism, and the absence of water and the small-caliber hose pipes at the burning of the Sunnyside stables evidence careful attention to detail. The hidden chamber in the big chimney, at the top of the circular staircase, fits in well with the mystery of the story. So does the Armstrong grave with its bogus tenant, and the death from fright of poor old Tom, the colored butler, whose last whisper was about "the dead leaving the grave."

The characters in the cast have been excellently assigned. It would be hard to find a more typical Aunt Ray than Miss Eugene Besserer. She succeeds well in conveying the quality of the mental fiber and courageous tenacity of the new mistress of Sunnyside. In strong and mirthful contrast is the part of Liddy, by Anna Dodge, who gets frightened at her own shadow. Gertrude Innes and Louise Armstrong are happily impersonated by Miss Stella Razeto and Edith Johnson. The final scene showing the young ladies spooning with their fiances, in which old Aunt Ray catches sight, in succession, of both pairs of happy lovers, recalls sweet memories to the aged spinster. "No place for an old maid," she sighs, as she smiles resignedly, contented with her lot.

The strong parts of Halsey Innes, Jack Bailey and Arnold Thompson are in the able care of Guy Oliver, William Howard and Clyde Benson. Old Tom, the butler, is a fine character part and is well drawn by F. J. Tyler. Jane Watson and Fred Huntley are worthy representatives of Mrs. Watson, the Sunnyside housekeeper, and Detective Jamison, who tries to unravel the Sunnyside mystery.

The release date has been set for Monday, September 20, through V-L-S-E, Inc.

"The Unsuspected Isles."

First of Three-Reel Rialto Star Features for Mutual Program Presents Fania Marinoff in Unique Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH all the difficulties of presenting a romance of the South Sea Islands, Wm. T. Haddock has made for the Gaumont Company a production of considerable merit from the scenario of Rev. Clarence J. Harris.

The story of the production is of the fantastical sort, and is intended to advance the idea that a woman's moral conscience is part and parcel of the primal instinct, and is able, but for the interference of superior physical force and cunning, to keep her pure through the grime of any circumstance.

Fania Marinoff in the role of the South Sea Princess has a fair conception of the role she is portraying. John Reinhard as the Broadway cub who seeks to exhibit the morals of the maid for the sake of notoriety, as well as for the amusement of his associates, when with all the crudeness of her South Sea habitat she drops into the midst of Broadway revelry, presents a characteristic type. Sydney Mason, the Broadway Club man of better morals and some conscience, is also worthy of mention. Beside these already mentioned, but in less important roles, are T. Morse Koupal, Flavia Arcaro, Helen Ronan, James Levering and Phin W. Nares, all of whom do good work.

In the "Unsuspected Isles" we find the same passions that dominate the more civilized of the species. The jealousy of Lores, the native rival of Castelene, the fascinating princess, is the first step toward the opening up of new experiences for Castelene, who, attacked and knocked unconscious by Lores, is then carried by her to the ship of Captain Gilroy. The maid is not discovered by the Captain until he is well on his way to New York. Nothing is left for the Captain to do but to make the best of it, and guard as well as he knows how the path of the unsophisticated maid.

Having tasted of the wine of civilized life, and having been embraced by the Broadway cub, she learns to love the man with the dress suit better than her lover of the South Seas, and is easily persuaded to elude the grasp of Captain Gilroy when he is about to return to the South Sea Islands.

Later she learns that the man she loves treats other women in exactly the same way in which he treats her, and the illusion broken she returns to her own land to plot and successfully carry out her revenge. This she does by luring the Broadway cub, who follows her to the South Sea Islands, into the hut of a leper. The picture closes with the happy uniting of the former lovers.

"The Irish in America."

A Comedy-Drama in Three Reels, Written and Produced by Sidney Olcott for the Lubin Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is much good entertainment in this three-reel comedy-drama, in which Sidney Olcott figures as author, producer and actor of the star role. The opening scenes are laid in Ireland, Mr. Olcott having wisely gone to the Emerald Isle for his locations, and used the peasants of the country in a series of authentic and picturesque scenes. The story relates of a young Irishman who is forced to leave his sweetheart behind when he sails for America to better his fortunes. True to the traditions of his race, on his arrival in New York he becomes a guardian of the peace, a friend obtaining him a position as watchman in a bank. He proudly dons his new uniform, captures two enterprising burglars, finds New York too slow and makes for the west. Here he strikes a rich mining claim, is joined by his sweetheart, marries her on the day of her arrival, and gives every indication of becoming a good Democrat and a credit to his adopted land. A simple enough story, but so well has Mr. Olcott told it, endowing it with so much kindly feeling, unforced humor and real human nature, that it is thoroughly enjoyable from start to finish. Reference must again be made to the scenes taken on the "ould sod." Their quiet beauty, when laid near some humble cabin, or the grandeur of a view from a bold headland, are among the best features of the picture.

The acting is uniformly excellent. Sidney Olcott's characterization of Dan Murphy smacks a little of what has been called "the stage Irishman," but the actor puts so much good nature and native shrewdness into Dan and makes him so ingratiating, there is no resisting the fellow. Valentine Grant is Dan's sweetheart. A comely young woman, of the real Irish type. Miss Grant's naturalness and charm of character make her a most lovable colleen. Other noteworthy members of the cast are Laurene Santley, Arthur Donaldson and Charles McCornell.

"The Pretenders."

Kalem Broadway Favorites Four-Reel Offering, with Crawford Kent—Has Much Spontaneous Comedy, Rich in Humor—Freshly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE first few hundred feet of this worthy offering, "The Pretenders," a four-reel Kalem "Broadway Favorites" picture, may be disappointing. It's a farce built on a simple idyllic love story of an easily recognized plot. It seems at first to promise a drama. The principals are a young society girl and a rich broker, and when we see the author, C. Doty Hobart, putting his heroine in overalls that she may meet and fall in love with the hero, rusticating at a farmer's house in haying togs, one fears for the illusion. But anything is justified that paves the way for the thoroughly enjoyable fun coming later. The humor of the developing situation is subtle, not broad, and is understood and enjoyed by the spectator before he realizes its comicalness. The laughter that it provokes is not "holding both its sides," but like Emerson's rhododendron, "Is its own excuse for being."

Life requires so much earnestness that earnestness becomes the soul's taskmaster; what is more earnestness in others is always stepping on our toes. That's why we so thoroughly enjoy a farce that shows us the taskmaster getting his. In this picture two people full of earnestness begin to pretend. Fate puts a few twists in the threads and soon we find everybody barking up a wrong tree—the girl, her lover, a crook, a detective and the girl's father. Each is taking things at their face value. We have the inside, and know that the face value is all wrong. Things change and the people in the play begin to wonder, but without for a moment suspecting that their first supposition is awry. Things change again and still the wonder grows and with it the perplexity of soul of the characters and the spectator's pleasure in it all.

The story is a bit complicated, but is kept wholly clear. Most of it is excellent and the best of it is fine. There are some things in it that do not really belong—there ought to have been no automobile shown, as nothing was gained while the girl's staying at the farm house was made unbelievable by it. There were also one or two bits of fun dragged in. But, as a whole, the plot was wisely constructed and many things in it that seemed at first uncalled for proved that there was real dramatic cause behind them.

The photography is several degrees below Kalem standard, yet it serves well enough. The players are—the chief ones—wholly acceptable. Crawford Kent as the rich young broker and Marguerite Courtot as the girl are very pleasing. Henry Hallam plays the girl's father and several other well known players carry their work ably. One notices a tendency in the players to keep strictly in the camera's lines, as though the operator was over anxious and kept admonishing them. This is only now and then. It was directed by Robert G. Vignola. Flashes of very artistic picture making brighten through it.

Five-Part B. A. Rolfe Subject Is Well and Expensively Made, but Is Unpleasant.

entertainment the fault is in the story, which contains few lighter or cheerful moments.

The theme is of a woman who is deserted by her artist husband when he learns she has a past. She later leaves her baby son in a monastery, where he is brought up. When the son is grown to young manhood he expresses a desire to see the world before he consents to enter the order which has educated and shielded him. His wish is gratified. We see him enter a house which proves to be under the control of his mother; it is a resort unquestionably with a reputation—its title is "The House of Lost Souls." Here the young man is tempted by avarice, lust and rum, personified by three men, and passion, typified by a woman. In the revelry the youth is crowned with a fool's cap. The mother rushes into the scene and rescues him. She does not reveal her identity. The young man goes back to the monastery. Later he is given a pastorate. In a storm the mother seeks shelter in the church and dies in the priest's arms, also without disclosing relationship.

Emily Stevens has the role of the woman and gives a strongly dramatic interpretation. George LeGuere is the boy who becomes a priest. Walter Hitchcock is the connoisseur who, when he looks upon the Madonna the husband has painted, is made most unnaturally to remark "Your model was my mistress for many months." Theodore Babcock is the husband who refuses to accept his wife's explanation and not only deserts her but his infant son as well.

"The Soul of Pierre."

Good Three-Reel Biograph Adaptation from the Novel by Georges Ohnet.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Biograph will release on Sept. 15 the fourth of its series of three-reelers. This one, like its predecessors, is taken from a popular book or play. "The Soul of Pierre" is an adaptation from the novel of Georges Ohnet, and is produced by Travers Vale. The basic theme is the power of mental suggestion, and in the working out of the story the company uses a strong cast headed by Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale and Charles H. Mailes. The director for his backgrounds has selected spots that conform to the prosperity of the characters—in picturesque exteriors as well as in lavish interiors.

Franklin Ritchie finely plays the role of Pierre, the artist in love with Clemence, an actress noted for the large number of her admirers. It is when Pierre comes to a realization that Clemence is as bad as she has been represented to him that he follows the example of an artist friend and commits suicide—or rather tries to—ostensibly that an invalid friend may inherit his strength, as a crystal gazer had advised in another case of which he had knowledge; really he is tired of life. That his plans fail furnishes one of the big points in the story.

Louise Vale is the actress. Her interpretation of the part that is as difficult as it is unpopular is marked by fine judgment. Mr. Mailes is a convincing Dr. Davidoff, the scientist who is puzzled by the apparent recuperation of invalids believed to be beyond medical aid.

"The Wolf Man."

Four-Reel Reliance of Strong Motif and Melodramatic Treatment.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CRAFTY, rapacious and almost purely destructive, "The Wolf Man" exists in our midst, though he may not always be easily recognized because of his sheep's clothing. Lacking in any ability of a high order, he feeds on others through a combination of native cunning and yellow ferocity. A bluffer among the modest of real worth, a coward in the presence of aggression, a skulker ultimately destined to extermination through survival of the fittest, he is nevertheless still with us, nibbling at the product of inventive talent and swallowing it whole when he thinks he can get away with it unpunished. Such is the Wolf Man in society and such he is depicted in the Reliance feature.

The characterization of "The Wolf Man" is admirably typed and handled. Ralph Lewis interprets the title role, that of a junior partner in pottery works. While engaged in scheming to oust the senior partner, he uses one of his employees, appropriately named "Mole," to burrow into the secrets of a remarkable inventor, a lame old man splendidly impersonated by Richard Cummings, and is ultimately frustrated by the inventor's grandson and the latter's bright little sweetheart. The inventor is murdered in a clash with Mole, and the latter is driven to compass the death of the grandson, but turns when the Wolf tries to destroy his own confederate to cover up all traces of his numerous crimes. The initial motive greed, a ravenous hunger for money and power, the initial motive of a carefully prepared war of conquest, a swift line of destruction follows, though, in this case, the Wolf Man gets his deserts.

"The Social Law."

Second Grandin Release on Kleine Program Places the Star in Sympathetic Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE principal idea to be set forth in this picture has been dealt with in a fairly intelligent manner. The subject is a big one, and would allow of very extensive development, but at least this picture of two reels talks about its title and gives it considerable excuse for its being, which cannot always be said of productions attempting to deal with large subjects.

Ethel Grandin is particularly appealing in the role of the fisherman's unsophisticated daughter. This character is especially pure and good. The girl's protective instinct, and also her absolute faith in the man who has won her affection are points prettily presented. The value of obedience to that portion of the social law governing the union of the sexes is also well stamped, and the types to which are intrusted the various roles of the play are well chosen.

There are some points of the play at which the technique of the picture has suffered, but not to any large extent. The passage from the city to Fisherman's Island, for instance, always made, evidently, on the ship belonging to Ethel's captain friend, is not a clearly defined bit. The ship itself appears to be always in the same dock, its people ply to and fro between the island and the city, yet the ship, as we remember it, is not seen to move.

The picture has a distinct appeal, and in the outline of the story there is no confusion noticeable, excepting what has just been mentioned. The photographic quality of the production throughout is good.

Miss Margaret Hawesworth personally directed the ensemble and Grecian dances in native costume which appear as an important part of the story in the American four-reel feature picture, "The House of a Thousand Scandals." These are the same dances that created a sensation in New York, Newport and Palm Beach, and will give the general public an opportunity that has heretofore been limited to the favored few. This picture is to be released on the Mutual Program Thursday, Septembr 23d.

A seven-room house is being erected with rooms especially decorated for "Father's Child," a three-reel comedy by Harry Myers. Both Mr. Myers and his co-star, Rosemary Theby, will play the leading roles in this Victor drama.

"The Incorrigible Dukane."

John Barrymore in Famous Players Four-Part Subject Is the Greater Part of a Show That Will Be Liked.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on September 2 "The Incorrigible Dukane," a four-part subject featuring John Barrymore. Mr. Barrymore is always excellent. He has a distinct personality; is in a class by himself, as it were, using an expression that is much abused, but nevertheless one that may be employed in referring to him without at all straining the truth. As the younger Dukane, the dissipated son of a dam-builder sent out to Colorado to work on one of his father's projects, to fight his own battle with the world, he shows that he is able to receive many hard knocks, physical as well as other. He gives way before the blows in a manner worthy of an acrobat or of a rough and tumble comedian.

There are many amusing situations in "The Incorrigible Du-kane," and they all center around Mr. Barrymore. There are others of melodrama in which he is at the forefront. For instance, there are the uncovering of the crooked superintendent and the latter's attempt first to blow up the dam to conceal the evidence of his chicanery and then to destroy the younger Dukane, to be balked in the second instance by the action of a collie in picking up the bomb and carrying it to the shed occupied by the delinquent official. The misadventures of Dukane—the loss of his effects in a land where he is a stranger and his failure, in the garb of a tramp, to impress his father's employes—will provoke mirth.

W. T. Carleton as James Dukane, senior, gives a good performance, and his work stands out in the supporting cast. Some of the situations employing a big dam for a background lack the real ring, the mobs and some of the individuals as well, not always displaying spontaneity. There are slips in direction, as, for instance, the sunlight streaming full in the window when young Dukane retires in the little hotel and coming from the same point when he arises in the morning.

"The Incorrigible Dukane" will be liked, for a story that will interest and for the work of Mr. Barrymore.

"Via Wireless"

Pathe Gold Rooster Five-Reel Picture—Full of Melodrama's Up-to-the-Minute Wrinkles—Many Excellently Staged Scenes.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A MINE that is floating out in the open sea, a yacht with the heroine on board, one of Uncle Sam's ships with the hero as one of its officers somewhere across the waters, an explosion and an S. O. S. that brings help after the heroine has been deserted and is jammed in the wireless room of the yacht, while the waters are rising around her, this, wonderfully staged, serves as the climax of "Via Wireless," a five-reel Gold Rooster Picture on the Pathe Exchange program. The story is taken from the popular stage play by the late Paul Armstrong and by Winchell Smith, and although it is fair and certainly holds attention well, it is the weakest part of the offering. The thing that makes the picture a safe guess for audiences is the carefully planned effects—much of the staging is truly marvelous, even for a time when realistic sets and scenes are clamorously demanded.

Of the characters, the heroine (Gail Kane), the hero (Bruce McRae), with the girl's parents and the villain are normal melodramatic figures; but the queer character, the inventor (he is merely a rearranging of the usual and useful half-witted boy of other melodramas) is too impossible to be markedly effective in even such a story, and this in spite of the fact that he is one of the best played parts in the production. Then the tale, at the point when it needs to make one unwarranted assumption that bewilders; the assumption by the villain that the hero is guilty of something or other, when up to that moment no one had accused him, and when no one in the audience knew what he was supposed guilty of, unless it was for inventing a gun that had exploded in the test. It was, of course, the villain's evil work that made the gun explode.

Many modern things of the daily press have a part in the picture, the war in Europe (there is no lack of neutrality in the picture), the need of America for big guns for coast defense, etc. There are scenes taken in a big steel factory in Pittsburgh; there is a glimpse of the West Point cadets drilling; of the great ships that fly the Stars and Stripes, of Washington, of New York harbor, of under the sea, of Constantinople, and of the ocean. It is a pretty interesting picture and should be a safe offering for special shows or for houses that are running big offerings as a regular thing—but it is not a tremendous big hit.

"Esmeralda"

Mary Pickford Has Character of Marked Appeal in Famous Players' Five-Part Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

REGARDLESS of habitual preferences in photoplay entertainment, audiences will like this latest Famous Players—Mary Pickford—production immensely. It is so human, so simply appealing that it goes straight to the heart and that, after all, is the highest of recommendations. "Esmeralda" does not need an exceptional plot to catch the interest. One does not feel the absence of novelty in the adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, for the interest and the sympathies, too, are excited and retained by a wholesome romance, almost ingenuously simple in its construction.

The daughter of a farmer, made unexpectedly wealthy by the discovery of ore on his property, is torn from her rustic lover and betrothed to a count. She is led unwillingly to the altar, but not married, for the lover, supported by the long arm of coincidence, intervenes. Such, in substance, is the plot which offers opportunities for a Mary Pickford picture of the best caliber.

The depiction of life on a New England farm is rich in atmosphere and characterization, the winsome Esmeralda of Miss Pickford being capably supported by Fuller Mellish as her father, Ida Waterman as her mother and Charles Waldron as the lover. It would not be difficult to point out many passages in these first chapters of the photoplay that give a true impression of American rural sentiment—the normal sentiment that binds one to the old home, whatever the promise elsewhere. Miss Pickford and Mr. Mellish express this most effectively in a charmingly acted scene on the eve of their departure to the city—and riches.

For Esmeralda there is the wrench at leaving the farm, coupled with the heartache caused by the enforced break with David. Feeling quite out of place in a stately city mansion, the country girl is more than ever wistful in her demure bashfulness, her pretty gaucheries and her determination to gratify her mother by marrying the Count. Here, as in earlier scenes, the picture grips by reason of the sound human emotions on which it is based and the excellence of the acting. The direction of this admirable production should be credited to James Kirkwood.

"Trilby"

A Skillfully Constructed Screen Version of Du Maurier's Story Opened at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York, on Labor Day—Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye Are in the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MONDAY evening Sept. 6th, another of New York City's leading theaters entered the moving picture field, a five-reel version of "Trilby," produced by the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, opening for a run at the Forty-fourth Street theater. In addition to the Du Maurier story, a series of war pictures entitled "With the Fighting Forces in Europe," taken by C. H. Murray, and embracing views of military life and incidents in Servia, Austria, Hungary, Russia, Germany, France, England, Japan, Turkey and Italy are on the program; also a well-selected orchestra of fifty members, led by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, contribute a specially composed overture and the incidental music, the entire performance being under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel. The theater was filled with an audience that expressed hearty approbation for the war pictures, and followed the fortunes of Trilby O'Farrell with every manifestation of interest and delight.

Any one at all familiar with the George Du Maurier novel might easily have foreseen that it would make an excellent photoplay. The result obtained by Maurice Tourneur and the cast under his direction place this motion-drama among the finest examples of its kind. To start with, the scenario displays keen appreciation of what was required. The character of the Rev. Thomas Bagot has been dispensed with, and "Zou-Zou," "Dodor" and Madam Vinard, and, to a lesser degree, "Taffy," "The Laird" and Gecko have been kept in the background and Trilby and Svengali given the center of the stage, such an arrangement being necessary in order to compress the novel into five reels. The almost entire absence of "cutbacks" puts "Trilby" in the true drama class, where the human will is shown in action and tells its own story—not by the use of the narrative form. This makes for a firmer grip on the emotions, a stronger response from the hearts in the audience. While all the scenes in which the characters of the play appear were taken in this country, the atmosphere of the Latin quarter in Paris is reproduced most convincingly. One slight blemish mars the artistic worth of the picture—the introduction of the vision of Death in the quarrel between Svengali and Gecko. The figure is not impressive. To offset this, there are countless scenes thrown on the screen that are worthy the highest praise; the beauty and originality of thought shown in the final picture will not quickly be forgotten.

The acting of the cast, in which the names of Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye come first, is on a par with the most exacting demands of screen histrionism. Mr. Lackaye's impersonation of Svengali has long been recognized as a work of great merit. The triumph that he won for it in the spoken drama, he more than repeats on the screen. Clara Kimball Young makes an ideal Trilby. Her beauty of face, perfection of form and power as an actress fit the part splendidly, and, although she is not the type of Du Maurier's English woman, so accurately exemplified by Phyllis Neilson-Terry, the soul which animates her creation is the soul of Trilby O'Farrell. Her posing in the "all-together" is without offense. The Gecko of Paul McAllister, Chester Barnett's Little Billee, and the efforts of the remaining members of the cast are all in harmony with the performance, and responsive to every mood of the director's conception.

Terwilliger Writes War Play.

George W. Terwilliger, of the Lubin Company, has written a war play entitled "The Peril," which he has almost completed at the Newport studio, and in which he utilized the Rhode Island city, members of the "400," their palatial homes, and, incidentally, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Admiral Fletcher, Governor Beeckman, Governor Walsh, Governor Whitman, Vice Admiral Mayo, Real Admiral Fiske, Captain Hugh Willoughby, J. K. Sullivan, Captain J. K. Robinson, Captain W. S. Sims, Lieutenant C. C. Davis, of the Birmingham; Captain J. H. Newton and Lieutenant S. S. Lewis, of the Patterson; Captain Fitch and Lieutenant Harlow of the Yankton, Commander Watson of the Utah, Captain Roger Welles, Lieutenant-Commander Frank Taylor Evans, Lieutenant Ernest Durr, Lieutenant J. T. Everson, Lieutenant C. L. Foutz, of the Newport Training Station. The cast itself is headed by Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe.

"The Peril" is the story of a foreign attack on America in 1918. A strange coincidence is the use of an aerial torpedo. Since Mr. Terwilliger invented this visionary weapon, an English inventor has evolved an actual torpedo of this type and it is said to have been used in warfare against Zeppelin airships.

Paul Gilmore at Liberty.

Paul Gilmore, one of the few successful actor producers, completed his contract with the Balboa Company the 1st of September. This is Mr. Gilmore's first appearance in pictures. On the speaking stage he has played successfully, everything from musical comedy to tragedy. He was first noticed by Mr. Frohman, who engaged him to play the leading parts in "The Wife," "Americans Abroad," etc. Later he was starred in his greatest success, "The Mummy and the Hummingbird," "Captain Debonaire," "At Yale," "The Call of the North," "The Wolfe," Clyde Fitch's "The Bachelor," "The Havoc" and others. Mr. Gilmore was one of the first of the producers to see the possibilities for American productions in Western Canada, and "blazed the trail," which was later followed so successfully by many other American stars. He has appeared in the following Balboa pictures, to be released shortly, "A Shrine of Happiness," "Pawns of the War God," "The Idol of Paris," and "The Diamond Smugglers."

Picture Business in Genoa

City Has Fifty Theaters—All Admission Tickets Bear Revenue Tax Stamp—Some Theaters Employ Fifteen or Twenty Musicians.

[Consul General J. E. Jones, Genoa, Italy.]

THE Italians are great supporters of motion picture shows, and the business is developing rapidly in all parts of the Kingdom. This is remarkable because of the high prices which prevail, tickets ranging from 10 cents for third class to 18 cents for first class, with extra prices for expensive films. The city of Genoa boasts upward of 50 picture theaters; and while the large majority of these are housed in small rooms or halls, there is a tendency toward more pretentious establishments, and a picture theater has just been erected at a cost of nearly $100,000. Most of the motion picture houses are on Twentieth of September street, which is the principal thoroughfare of Genoa and the popular promenade. Italian love for adventure and all emotional impulses finds expression in the demand for films of this character. A film of intense tragedy with a short comic reel is the best program that could be presented.

Advertising Methods.

The theaters are well advertised. The newspapers carry regular notices for the more important ones, and bill posters are also extensively employed. Uniformed "barkers" are stationed before the important picture houses. A large illuminated sign on the principal square of the city flashes, at intervals of a minute, the advertisements of many of the larger houses. Since the war began, some of the more enterprising managers show the daily positions of the various armies by the aid of a map and tiny flags. To this is added a short bulletin of the important events of the day. This method of advertising attracts many. Another method of advertising is the issuance of coupons with every first-class ticket sold, which, when presented on certain days, entitle the holder to a discount of 30 per cent.

Revenue Stamps on Tickets—Music a Feature.

The success of the picture theater was utilized during the early days of the war as a method of tax collection, and since November 12, 1914, all tickets to motion picture houses must bear a revenue stamp of 1 cent gold. Recently there has been a proposal to increase this tax in accordance with the value of the ticket, but the matter has been postponed until the end of June, 1916. One of the good features of the picture theaters of Italy is the ease of egress. In selecting a location preference is given to property on corners of streets or alleys, and the doors are thrown open during intermissions with the result that the theater is quickly emptied. Great attention is paid to hygiene, and some of the houses advertise the purification of the air by germicidal preparations. As one would naturally expect in such a music loving country as Italy, great attention is paid to the orchestra. In some of the better houses it is the practice to employ 15 or 20 musicians, and the music furnished is one of the features of the entertainment.

Foreign and Domestic Films.

Before the war, films were obtained from the great supply houses of Europe and the United States, but now, because of the interruption to foreign business, Italian producers are turning out a large number of very excellent films and many of the best actors of Italy are under contract to appear in film plays. There is still some importation from foreign countries, but this does not amount to much at the present time.

There is an American agency at Milan which distributes films throughout Italy, and the business, in my opinion, could be largely augmented if the American producers would cater more to the Italian taste for emotion. It is important that American manufacturers who seek an Italian market should use the Italian language in the printed descriptions of scenes and incidents.

A short time ago the opera "I Pagliacci" was presented as a motion picture, with the music of the opera as an accompaniment. The experiment proved a great success, and now it is proposed to give motion plays or other operas under like conditions. Italian producers are showing a wonderful aptitude in the making of films. Indeed, it is my opinion, the Italian films will gradually increase in popularity as they become known.

Florence Rockwell Recovered.

Knickerbocker Star Features are pleased to announce that Florence Rockwell has recovered from her recent illness and that the production of "The Purple Night" is again under way. The illness of Miss Rockwell has caused the release date of this feature to be changed from September 1 to September 15.

"GERTIE'S JOY RIDE," (L-KO).

"Gertie's Joy Ride," an L-KO release featuring Hank Mann and Gertrude Selby, is a comedy thriller. Many of the most thrilling "stunts" in moving picture work are performed by the comedy companies, and, in spite of the fact that the object is to raise a laugh, it is often quickly hushed by a gasp.

In "Gertie's Joy Ride" two occupants of an auto, Hank Mann and the daring Gertrude Selby, deliberately raced down a pier at Venice, Cal., broke through the railing and dived eighteen feet into the Pacific. The still cameraman who accompanied the party was fortunate enough to secure the accompanying photograph just after the car had left the pier. Any doubt as to whether the leap was really made is precluded by a glance at the illustration, while a closer inspection of the moving picture taken at the same time proves conclusively that the occupants were real people and not dummies such as are sometimes employed by mollycoddle directors when they have similar scenes to be photographed. It was a perilous undertaking but Hank Mann and Gertrude Selby "got away with it."

According to the plot of the story Hank is decidedly jealous of Gertie, who is in love with Reggie. He determines that she shall die a watery death, and after he gets her in his car he skids down the wet pavements, knocking over cops, ripping out the side of a house and bowling over bystanders until he runs out on the pier, where, in a frenzy of paranoiacal jealousy, Hank sends the car through the bridge rail and into the liquid drink. "Gertie's Joy Ride" will be released on the regular Universal Program on Sept. 5.

WORLD FILM BUYS CALIFORNIA CORPORATION SUBJECTS.

The World Film Corporation announces that at a meeting of its board of directors, arrangements were completed for the purchase, outright, of all rights of the motion picture productions of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "The Lily of Poverty Flat," and "Mignon," in which the famous film star, Beatriz Michelena, was starred by the California Motion Picture Corporation. Heretofore, the features had been released by the California corporation through the World Film, but with the closing of the present transaction the California company relinquished all the rights to the photoplays.

Another announcement made by the World Film is that of the purchase of all film rights to Edward Sheldon's famous drama, "Salvation Nell." Beatriz Michelena starred in the film version of the play in which Mrs. Fiske scored such a triumph and the World Film also announces the purchase of another Michelena feature, "Minty's Triumph."

Holbrook Blinn, now prominently identified with the World Film, was Mrs. Fiske's leading man during her successful rendition of the role of "Salvation Nell," and much interest is taken in the announcement that the company with which he is now affiliated has taken over the photoplay, which, as spoken drama, won for him no little commendation.

AL RAY PRODUCES FEDERAL SPECIAL.

Al Ray, the young director-general of the Federal Film Company, has just completed the first of the special one and two-part pictures to be produced by this company. This two-reeler, which will be called "The Waiter Who Waited," will follow the fourth release of this company on the Associated program. "Nothing But Love" is the title of the film which will precede this special. The cast of this picture was carefully picked, and many favorites will be seen. Harry La Pearl and Gertrude Bambrick head the cast. Harry La Pearl was the man who was starred in the first year's MinA releases, and was also producing clown at the New York Hippodrome. Gertrude Bambrick is widely known as a screen favorite. She played lead in the "Billionaire," and many other Biograph pictures. This will be her first appearance since playing with Pauline Bush in "Virtue Its Own Reward." Miss Bambrick retired from the screen when she became the wife of Marshall Neilan, the director, but the Federal Company made her an alluring offer, and she has consented to sign a contract with them. Others in the cast are: Will Rex, who is making his last appearance in comedies, having been appointed dramatic director of this company recently, Margaret (Fatty) Burke, Dan Howard, Margaret Harmon and Dick Cowan. Mr. Ray has many surprises in this film, among them being a brand new way of introducing his characters.

"THE GAME OF THREE" (Sterling).

The unique method of state right distribution adapted by the Sterling Camera and Film Co., for their five-part feature production, "The Game of Three," has not only proven successful but highly favorable to the state right buyers who are limited for ready capital. "The Game of Three," with Barney Gilmore and Lillian Niederaur, two well-known stage favorites, and a cast, if principals of motion picture and stage fame is, in itself, an assurance that the production is well acted. "The Game of Three" has a number of distinct novelty features, some of which are quite new to the motion picture public, among which are scenes in the streets of New York actually taken at midnight.

"A SULTANA OF THE DESERT" (Selig).

"A Sultana of the Desert," a Selig Special in two reels, written by and featuring Miss Kathlyn Williams, will be released in Selig regular service on Monday, Oct. 4. Miss Williams will be seen making a pet of a gigantic African lioness and associating with other wild animals of the Jungle.

"A Sultana of the Desert" is a Selig two-reel Special dealing with Oriental life, and of how the daughter of a wealthy Oriental escapes from captivity only to fall into the clutches of a bandit. How she is rescued by an African lion and how later she is given into the arms of her faithful lover furnish a succession of thrills. Mr. Thomas Santschi assumes the leading masculine role in the support of Miss Williams. Kathlyn Williams is the one big drawing card for all theaters large and small. Kathlyn Williams in a Selig Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal picture play cannot be excelled as a box office attraction.

"SHANGHAIED" (Essanay).

Charles Chaplin's latest comedy, "Shanghaied," might almost be called a "thriller," so filled is it with intense action. But while Chaplin has injected the dramatic element into this comedy he never loses sight of his purpose to amuse the public.

In every scene the Chaplin antics predominate, and when the action is leading up to a thrill and one has set himself for a stirring climax, he is suddenly jolted into an uproar of laughter, which is all the more spontaneous and hilarious because of the unexpectedness of the turn of affairs. In fact it is this series of surprises, next to Chaplin's personality, that makes the photoplay exceptionally funny. He prepares his spectators for an intense scene, when suddenly, like a thunderbolt, he turns the trick into a most grotesque situation.

Chaplin occupies the exalted position of assistant cook. The owner of the vessel and the captain plot to blow it up and get the insurance. The owner's daughter, hearing of the plot and not knowing that her father has concocted it, hides herself on board. She is discovered by the captain and mate, who bind and gag her and cast her into the hold. Chaplin, ever on the lookout to rescue beautiful maidens in distress, releases her. The captain and mate scuttle all the small boats except one, light a bomb and prepare to flee. Chaplin and the girl steal a march on them, however, and take the small boat and escape. The ship is blown to pieces, but they are saved.

The Essanay company bought an old tramp steamer to take these scenes. The film was largely taken aboard the boat, which steamed out of Los Angeles for a short cruise. In the final action the ship is blown to pieces and burned a short distance out of the harbor at Los Angeles.

OCTOBER RELEASES FOR WORLD FILM NOTABLE.

The October schedule for the World Film releases gives the selling force a group of four features that are sure to be of a higher quality than any other four released in one month to date. The four are as follows:

Mollie King in "The Code of the Mountains." This is a story that deals with life in the Kentucky Mountains, and in Mollie King there is a new star. Everyone who has seen the stills and the sample print of the feature are boosting her as another Mary Pickford.

Holbrook Blinn in "The Family Cupboard" is the release. This play was a big success as staged by William A. Brady and Frank Crane is making the picture, with Holbrook Blinn as the star. Nothing more need be said.

There will be the second Oscar Eagle picture on October 3. This picture will bring forward Vivian Martin in a clever story called "The Little Mademoiselle."

Robert Warwick will appear in another picture made by Albert Capellani. In this picture Mr. Warwick appears as a crook hero. There will be many groups shown at the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, which is located near Quebec, Canada. A special trip was made to the shrine to take scenes there, and Mr. Capellani spent three days getting the settings that he wanted.

"SINS OF SOCIETY" (Brady).

A spectacular production of the first magnitude is promised in the William A. Brady Picture-plays Company's motion picture version of "Sins of Society," the popular melodrama which was staged at the New York theater a number of years ago. Under the direction of Oscar Eagle it will be given all manner of thrills. The story necessitates elaborate settings and an unusually large company of players. "Sins of Society" will be released on the World Film program.

"A FRIEND IN NEED" (American).

An exceedingly funny farce is presented, entitled "A Friend in Need," a one-reel American "Beauty" film, directed by James Douglass, which is to be released Saturday, September 18. Situations built around two young men, soda fountain clerks, who have between them but one suit of clothes, and who both love the same girl. She encourages each one alternately. Frank (Frank Borzage) is afraid to propose; Johnny (John Sheehan) is not, and wins the girl (Beatrice Van). Frank stays on the job for Johnny, who is being married secretly. Upon Johnny's return, the news gives Frank such a shock that he drops a glass and is discharged, so he loses girl, job and clothes.

DREW RIDES BLOODED STOCK IN "PLAYING DEAD."

When Sidney Drew was aranging for the filming of the picturization of Richard Harding Davis' story, "Playing Dead," produced by the Vitagraph company under his direction, he required three mounts. As the character portrayed by Mr. Drew, Jimmie Blagwin, a young society, club and sporting man, it was necessary for him to use horses that looked the sleek, well-groomed property of a rich young man, who spent a good part of his time in the saddle, and he was successful in securing three blooded stock. Of the three seen in the picture, the one ridden by Mr. Drew will attract the most attention, being none other than the famous jumping horse "Heatherbloom," whose record jump is eight feet two inches. Mr. Drew secured the famous jumper through the offices of a friend. The other two horses, although not so well-known, being young horses in the process of development, are from stock of the blue blood variety.

In "Playing Dead," these three horses lend a decided air of realism to the first part of the five parts it takes to tell the story on the screen. "Playing Dead," which is a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, bearing the V-L-S-E trade mark, was picturized by Mrs. Sidney Drew, who played Jeanne Blagwin in the production, from Mr. Davis' original story. The work of both Mr. and Mrs. Drew in this picture, is a radical departure from the line of characters with which they have become identified as their previous efforts have been confined to the portrayal of comedy roles.

"BOOMING TRIXIE" (MinA).

"Booming Trixie," the MinA release of September 16, promises to be a side-splitter. Getting away from both slapsticks on the one hand and the usual run of polite comedies on the other, "Booming Trixie" deals with the troubles of a press agent who has not been obtaining the proper amount of publicity for Trixie, a theatrical star. His efforts to gain his end make one thousand feet of comical film.

"THE TREASURE BOX" (Cub).

For the Cub Comedy release of Friday, September 24, on the Mutual program, David Horsley offers "The Treasure Box," a one-reel farce that is probably the best of the Cub series so far issued. This statement, in the light of past performances, means that "The Treasure Box" is an unusually happy vehicle in which George Ovey, the funniest man in America, and his supporting cast show to the very best advantage.

The comedy possibilities of the story left nothing to be desired and Director Fahrney did not fail to realize them. Jerry, played by George Ovey, has visions of sudden wealth upon picking up a cash box, discarded by two blackmailers with the arrival of the police, and makes away with the prize. Little did he know that instead of an array of watches, which because of the ticking he had reason to believe was his coup, he carried a box containing an infernal machine set to explode at 6.00 o'clock that evening, and intended to destroy Col. Biff, who refused the blackmailers' demands for $1,000 in cash.

With the box under his arm, Jerry sets out on a mission of pleasure which in time becomes so boisterous that Jerry is taken to the police station, arriving there just as the two blackmailers are brought in. They catch sight of the box, look at the clock, which shows but a few seconds to six, yell in terror and attempt to flee, but before they can escape the bomb goes off and the room's occupants are thrown in all directions. Jerry is last seen hanging suspended from the gas jet.

Besides its amusing qualities "The Treasure Box" is well done in point of technicalities. In the cast besides George Ovey are Louis Fitzroy, Gordon MacGregor, Jefferson Osborne, Fay Lincoln, Goldie Colwell and Janet Sully.

"THE HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT" (Rialto).

Thrilling situations crowd one upon another throughout the three reels of "The House with Nobody in It," second of the Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont Company for release in the regular Mutual program Sept. 22. In this stirring drama, Ivy Troutman, popular young Broadway favorite, recently engaged by the Gaumont Company, makes her initial appearance as a Mutual star. She is supported by an exceptionally powerful cast, which includes Bradley Barker and Frank Whitson.

"The House with Nobody in It" was prepared for the screen by the Rev. Dr. Clarence J. Harris, famous Gaumont editor, and was produced under the direction of Richard Garrick, Gaumont director.

The story of the photodrama centers about an exclusive home maintained by an aged woman, of whom her beautiful young daughter is her sole companion. At the death of her mother the girl, now penniless, goes into the world to seek a living. A bachelor artist who scorns women meets the young girl by accident and finds himself facing the girl of whom he has so frequently dreamt but whom, he told himself, never existed outside of imagination.

Later, the now deserted mansion becomes the center of unexplained and continued flashes of lights, which appear every evening after dark. These mysterious flashes lead to reports that the house is haunted and the populace shun it as they would the plague. Many and varied are the experiences that meanwhile befall the young girl, and slowly she succumbs to the drug habit, from which she extricates herself after a gallant struggle.

Miss Troutman, in the role of the young girl, delivers one of the most telling characterizations ever screened, her wonderful ability as an emotional player being demonstrated on many occasions. While "The House with Nobody in It" is by no means a preachment in any sense of the word, nevertheless it contains an exceptionally strong story—one that every woman, every girl should see.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "TILLIE'S TOMATO SURPRISE."

Since its completion, the new Marie Dressler feature, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," that will be released by the V-L-S-E on September 20, has been carefully guarded by the Lubin Company.

The first view that will be had of Miss Dressler's new picture will be at a private showing arranged by Miss Dressler, to which have been invited many of New York's most prominent society people and a choice gathering of celebrated stars of the speaking stage.

No one but the privileged few officials of the Lubin Company and the V-L-S-E have seen the feature screened; but it is reported to be the most excruciatingly funny production ever recorded in motion pictures. The first still pictures that have been received appear to testify to the truth of these remarks.

These stills show situations and depict facial expressions that in themselves, are irresistible laugh provokers. Marie Dressler has always been funny. She can assume more humorous attitudes, and "pull" more comical faces than any woman on the stage or screen, and the most important part of her acting is that the camera registers every one of her glances and facial contortions.

In "Tillie's Punctured Romance" Miss Dressler gave the motion picture art a screamingly funny comedy; but it is said on the best authority, that in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," she has far outdone her previous screen effort.

MARIE DORO IN "THE WHITE PEARL."

Marie Doro, the enchanting young star, who, through her first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players Film Co.'s charming film creation, "The Morals of Marcus," endowed the screen with a new personality, again attains a decisive screen triumph as the interpreter of unique roles in that company's forthcoming five-part photoplay, "The White Pearl," a fanciful romance of the Orient, by Edith Barnard Delano, to be released on the Paramount Program September 20.

As the American girl whom Destiny transplants to far-off

Scene from "The White Pearl" (Famous Players).

Japan under strange and thrilling circumstances, and who later becomes a Geisha girl, Miss Doro's delicate beauty and captivating grace and attractiveness help her succeed in making a picture of exquisite charm and appeal, which provides one of the most artistic characterizations ever contributed to the screen. In the scene in which Miss Doro is rescued from the sea by the natives of the Japanese island upon which the story develops, opportunity is given Miss Doro for a wraith-like creation. Her garments and hair wet from the sea, Miss Doro is a veritable mist-sprite, a bit of drifting foam that has come to life. For beauty of character conception, for artistic presentation of combined romance and drama, "The White Pearl" will not only equal but surpass the interest and appeal of Miss Doro's former screen vehicle.

In this unusual story, the strong attachment between two young American lovers survives and triumphs over the machinations of a band of Japanese Geisha traders, the influence of a Hindu legend of death which for a time threatens the life of the girl, and the caprices of Destiny itself.

CAILLE BROTHERS' NEW CATALOGUE.

The Caille Brothers Company have just gotten out a very attractive catalogue covering their ticket devices and it is certainly a very fine piece of work, not only from an artistic standpoint but from the point of usefulness to the theater owner. It gives a complete description as well as illustrations of the Caille electric ticket seller, choppers and lightning change maker. It shows the proper arrangement for the ticket booth as well as giving some very attractive views of theater lobbies and their arrangement and shows that the Caille Brothers Company has made a study of the need of the moving picture theater of today. A copy of this book will be mailed to all theater people who contemplate improving their equipment.

Caille machines are being installed in all the late theaters, among them being the New Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids, the Globe theater at Detroit, the New Duplex theater at Detroit. The Ben Ali theater of Lexington, Ky., is another of the new theaters which will be Caille equipped throughout.

THANHOUSER ENGAGES NOTABLE PLAYERS.

Edwin Thanhouser announces the engagement of Eugene Nowland and William Parke, ligitimate actors of considerable reputation, for his large and growing company of distinguished players assembled at New Rochelle. Mr. Nowland has had a wide experience, not only as an actor, but as a stage director and musician, both in the United States and abroad. As a director of pictures he put on "Vanity Fair" for the Edison Company with Mrs. Fiske in the cast. Other Edison successes are mentioned to his credit.

William Parke is new to picture playing. His theatrical experience dates back to the old Holland Stock Company in Philadelphia. A notable achievement of his was the staging of "Peer Gynt," in which Richard Mansfield appeared at the New Amsterdam theater, New York. Other highly important theatrical work has been entrusted to his skilled direction.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL IN "THE PURPLE NIGHT."

Miss Florence Rockwell, late Broadway star, has finished her work in "The Purple Night," Knickerbocker Star Features. This feature marks her debut before the camera and promises to bring her to the very front rank of moving picture favorites.

To rest up after the strain of this new work, Miss Rockwell has taken to her favorite retreat—the beaches of Rockport, Maine. There she will rest awhile before taking up further work. Miss Rockwell's "rest" consists of taking a one-mile row on the ocean every morning before breakfast, claiming that the exercise and salt sea air fills her with renewed vigor and "pep."

Supporting Miss Rockwell in "The Purple Night" are Noah Beery and Lionel Adams. For the last three years Mr. Beery has been playing the lead in Klaw and Erlanger's "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Among his other stage successes are "Strongheart" and "My Man." Lionel Adams is a well-known figure on the screen and has been associated with Vitagraph, Lubin and Famous Players.

September 15 is set as the release date of "The Purple Night," which is the story of a woman artist tired of the milk and honey life, her passionate infatuation for a man of the slums and her final awakening—too late!

BARSKY NOW WITH ASSOCIATED.

The Associated is going after all the good talent in business. Their latest catch is Irving J. Barsky, a pioneer at the game. He is a man of varied experience, having started at the bottom with Miles Brothers, on 14th street, as a reel boy and has worked his way through with different concerns to his present position. After leaving Miles Brothers he went to Canada with the Allens, later became one of the managers of the Canadian Film Company, and he also owned his own exchange and theater in Western Canada. A couple of years ago Mr. Barsky came back to New York and since then has made a host of friends in the business. Since his return he has been manager of the Pee-El-Bee Films; as manager of the New York Gotham Film Exchange laboratory and sales manager of the New York Film Company, and he is president of the Barsky Photo Play Company.

"MARIANA" (Universal).

Yona Landowska and the veteran Charles ("Daddy") Manley are featured in "Mariana," a charming story of Italian-American tenement house life which is about to be released by the Universal. "Mother" Benson and Harry Mann also play important roles in the play, which was written and produced by Harry G. Stafford.

The play depends upon its appeal, its excellent staging and local color, character acting of a superlative order and a story of intense strength. Pietra Roma, a maker of plaster figures, lives in an East Side tenement with his blind wife and grand-daughter, Mariana, who peddles her father's plaster statuettes in a pushcart.

She is arrested for peddling without a license and sees no harm when the landlord of the tenement in which she dwells pays her fine. Later, however, the landlord makes unwelcome advances to her after enticing her to his apartment. Pietra is about to knife Callahan, the landlord, when a series of circumstances prevent him.

Yona Landowska will be remembered for her remarkable dancing in several Universal feature productions. She is a graduate of the Imperial Mariensky Institute in Petrograd, which is supported by the Czar. It was from this same school that the famous Pavlowa also was graduated. Anna Pavlowa and Yona Landowska have known each other for some years and recently met in Universal City while Miss Landowska was working in "Mariana" and Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

"THE BLOOD SEEDLING" (Selig).

"The Blood Seedling," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels to be released in regular service on Thursday, Sept. 23, was written by the late John Hay, former Secretary of State. John Hay was an unusual man and he naturally wrote an unusual story.

"The Blood Seedling" concerns a sapling given to a prosaic young farmer by Colonel Blood. Into the root and branches of the "blood seedling" is woven a most surprising plot which is not uncovered until the final ending.

"The Blood Seedling" is a story of every day people which makes the sensational denouement the more amazing. Thomas Santschi is seen in one of his best character roles.

There is a "homey" atmosphere contained in his Selig Diamond Special in three reels which oddly contrasts with the solution of the story. The Selig Company predicts that "The Blood Seedling" will as a story and as a pictureplay create even more widely spread comment than have the former succession of successes released under the Diamond Special program.

The late John Hay was known to fame as one of the most successful and far-seeing of American statesmen. His literary ability and successes were somewhat obscured by the light of his world-wide diplomacy. However, "The Blood Seedling" will prove that John Hay deserves a niche in the Hall of Fame as a writer just as he won just recognition as a diplomat.

"THROUGH TROUBLED WATERS" (Vitagraph).

A picture story, whose theme is the drifting apart of a married couple and their reconciliation as castaways on a desert island, is the latest Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature to come from the Western Vitagraph Company at Santa Monica, Cal. "Through Troubled Waters" was picturized by David Smith from an original story by William MacLeod Raine, and was produced by Ulysses Davis, with a cast that includes Myrtle Gonzalez, who will be remembered for her exceptional work as Enid Maitland in the Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Chalice of Courage," Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer and Jack Mower in the principal parts.

Scene from "Troubled Waters" (Vitagraph).

In filming this feature, the scenes which show the castaways, were taken on an island of the Pacific, Miss Gonzalez and Mr. Vosburgh using drift-wood to build their shelter and gunny sacks that were washed ashore, to clothe themselves. "Through Troubled Waters" is a picture in which realism was the keynote and action the watchword. Every person in any way connected with the production was earnest in his or her endeavor to make this Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature the quality three-part picture from the Western Company, and a recent private showing at the Vitagraph plant in Flatbush bore out the contention of Director Davis, that he had sent a masterpiece.

BLANCHE SWEET'S NEW CHARACTERIZATIONS.

Since her appearance as the star in the photoplay production, "The Secret Orchard," Miss Blanche Sweet, of the Lasky Feature Play Company and one of the Paramount stars, has passed through a peculiar transition in her work as a screen artist. Miss Sweet with only a few others, relatively, occupies a unique place among popular motion picture stars as she is essentially of the screen and never appeared on the legitimate stage except in small roles and for only a short time.

With "The Secret Orchard," Miss Sweet started a series of dual characterizations in her work for the Lasky company. In this play she appears as a young woman of refinement and sweet nature underneath whose calm poise lies a personality which is the result of pre-natal influence. In the screen version of "The Secret Orchard" this phase of the girl is only suggested, but nevertheless it is important.

In her next Paramount picture the Lasky-Belasco production, "The Case of Becky," Miss Sweet actually plays two different persons—Becky, who is mean and mischievous, and Dorothy, who is sweet and good. Here, again, pre-natalism figures as the cause of this strange feminine phenomenon as Dorothy's mother when a girl ran away with a hypnotist and for years was the subject of his wierd power. "The Case of Becky," which is by Edward Locke and which in dramatic form ran for a whole season in the Belasco theater, New York, is considered by David Belasco to be among his best productions.

the American stage and who was stage manager for several years for the late Henry B. Harris, is the Lasky director under whom Miss Sweet has acted her past several roles, including "The Secret Orchard" and "The Case of Becky." Mr. Reicher, who is having the utmost co-operation from Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky Company, has been developing Miss Sweet's powers in the direction of dual characterizations even further than revealed in the two plays above mentioned. In her next Paramount picture after "The Case of Becky," Miss Sweet, it is learned, will act throughout a long feature play as "sisters."

The accompanying photograph is one of the most interesting ever made in a motion picture studio. It shows a double exposure with two views of Blanche Sweet and in between is Mr. Reicher.

GREAT NORTHERN RELEASES "A WOMAN'S HONOR."

Announcement is made by the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, that their next feature entitled "A Woman's Honor" will be released on or about September 15. This is a four-reel production with Rita Sacchetto, the world famous pantomimist playing the leading role, whose appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, is pleasurably remembered.

The subject is a modern society drama, wherein the young and unsophisticated wife of a high official is quickly transformed into a bitter and vindictive woman after being abandoned by her husband. Determined to take full revenge upon the man who unscrupulously had made her a physical wreck, she stops at nothing to obtain her aim. But out of the depths of vice a glorious love comes to her, which brings her consolation for all her sufferings and disappointments.

BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER IN ALASKA PLAYS.

Alaska furnished the atmosphere for William Farnum's greatest success, "The Spoilers," a success which is now challenged by his brother, Dustin Farnum, in the first release from the Ince studios for the Triangle season at the Knickerbocker theater, New York; the Studebaker, in Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia.

"The Iron Strain" is the title of the Ince play, and the husky Dustin Farnum has taken full advantage of the opportunities offered for the display of his rugged personality and finished theatrical methods in this stirring story of the northland. Two of the most famous Triangle beauties, Enid Markey and Louise Glaum, are in his support. Truly Shattuck, long a favorite of Broadway in musical comedy and operetta, also has an important role.

Scene from "The Iron Strain" (Triangle).

Farnum is now in New York, waiting for the opening at the Knickerbocker during the week of September 20, and will be one of the group of stars—Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks, Mabel Normand and others—who will be present in the flesh at the opening of the Triangle Star Combination which presents their picture selves.

"EVERYHEART" (American).

Imagination might be termed elasticity of thought—the mind in flight beyond the prison bars of reality. Imagination has brought about some of the greatest inventions—inspired the pen of the earth's greatest authors. Imagination is influenced by what we see, by what we hear and by what we read.

A keenly constructing imagination has evolved an interesting story, with a strong moral, entitled "Everyheart," which has been filmed by the American Film Company under its "Beauty" brand. This film, directed by Archer MacMackin, is to be released Tuesday, September 21. Webster Campbell, as Everyheart, and Neva Gerber, as The Woman, enact a very pretty love story. Common personal characteristics, such as kindness, selfishness, passion, anger and jealousy, are given spirit form. In the beginning, Everyheart comes from the realm of Spirit. Upon entering the world, he gradually falls into the way of the world, falls in love with Woman, and they are married. Later he becomes neglectful and grows unkind, which nearly causes Woman's death. However, she is saved by a treatment of kindness. Everyheart appreciates the power of Kindness in life, and all their vanished happiness returns.

CHURCH DIGNITARIES IN UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY.

When Cardinal Gibbons called on President Wilson in Washington Jack Cohn's Animated Weekly cameraman was right on the job and secured some excellent photographs of the dignitary of the church before and after his visit to the President.

Another concession was granted the Animated at Los Angeles, where three hundred noted prelates from every part of the country were filmed this week at a remarkable ceremonial consecration of the Rev. Joseph Glass of Los Angeles as Bishop of the Diocese of Salt Lake.

The consecrator was Bishop Hanna of San Francisco. One hundred feet of this solemn ceremony were taken for the Animated Weekly in St. Vincent's Church, Los Angeles, where the prelates convened. Archbishop Hanna permitted the Animated men to place lights in the church so that the pictures could be taken. This was made possible through the influence of M. G. Jonas and Beverly Griffith. Bishop Glass, accompanied by half a dozen of the Catholic churchmen who took part in the ceremony, came to Universal City the following day and the film of the consecration was shown to them in the projection theater.

ANOTHER INJUNCTION FAVORS GRIFFITH PICTURES.

Word reached New York headquarters of D. W. Griffith Monday afternoon from Pittsburgh that an injunction had been granted the representatives of "The Birth of a Nation" against Mayor Armstrong and the chief of police of Pittsburgh, restraining them from prohibiting the opening of the big spectacle at the Nixon theater, on Wednesday evening, September 1. Mayor Armstrong received a delegation of negroes on Friday, August 27, and late Saturday, served notice upon the manager of "The Birth of a Nation" and also Manager Kirk of the Nixon theater, that he would suppress the spectacle. Neither the mayor nor chief of police had seen the picture production. When this fact was made clear to the court, an injunction was issued immediately. This makes the fifth legal move the owners of the big picture have had to undertake to secure their rights. In each case they have been successful in getting injunctions which permit them to continue their presentations. These injunctions have been granted in Los Angeles, St. Louis, New Jersey, Chicago and now Pittsburgh.

NEW AMERICAN FEATURES.

The American Film Company at Santa Barbara is making rapid strides in the production of pictures which will be given the public under the Clipper and Mustang brands. The first Clipper release—a three-reel feature picture entitled "The Great Question," with an all-star cast headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison under the direction of Thomas Ricketts, will appear Saturday, Sept. 18. From that time on, a Clipper three-reel feature picture will be released every three weeks.

The Mustang brand of Western feature pictures will star Anna Little and Art Acord. The first picture, entitled "A Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," is now in course of production. These pictures are to be film adaptations of the famous "Buck Parvin" stories by Charles E. Van Loan. Through an arrangement made by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Mr. Van Loan will live in Santa Barbara to superintend the production of his well known stories, and himself write the titles, captions and inserts for the films.

Being the pioneer in the production of this class of film drama, the American Film Company enjoys an enviable reputation among picture-goers who are keenly interested in the forthcoming productions.

LARGE MIRROROID SCREEN FOR CANADA.

The Central Canada Exhibition Association of Ottawa has ordered a screen from the J. H. Genter Company, measuring twenty feet by twenty-seven feet, containing 540 square feet. This is to be first used for the presentation of the "Birth of a Nation" at the Exposition to be held in Ottawa from September 10 to 18.

"HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT."

Exceptional Photography in Gaumont Release.

Richard Garrick, directing the three-reel Rialto Star Feature, "The House with Nobody in It," has introduced some splendid double and triple exposure in the photographing of this subject.

Scene from "The House with Nobody in It" (Gaumont).

The close-up photograph of Miss Troutman, who takes the lead, was made from in back of her while she looked in a mirror. The other photograph, symbolic of a dream, necessitated double exposure on the "still" plate and triple exposure to obtain the same effect on the moving picture film. This subject will be released September 22, on the regular Mutual program.

"THE DOLL HOUSE MYSTERY" (Reliance).

The company of children acting child plays for children at the Reliance studios has been promoted to larger things. All of its former productions were one-reel subjects. In response to popular demand for more of the films presenting six-year-old Georgie Stone, nine-year-old Carmen De Rue, four-year-old Francis Carpenter, four-year-old Betty Marsh and other tiny photoplayers, the child productions now become two reels.

"The Doll House Mystery" is the first of the two-reelers to be produced under the direction of the Brothers Franklin. It features Carmen De Rue and Georgie Stone. They are supported by a cast of adults which includes Marguerite Marsh, Charles Gorman, Ben Lewis and Jack Hull.

"THAN-O-PLAY"—NEW THANHOUSER RELEASE.

Under the expressive designation of "Than-O-Play," Edwin Thanhouser proposes to issue every three weeks a three-reel production. The first picture under the new title will be "A Disciple of Nietzsche," from a scenario by Philip Lonergan, featuring Florence La Badie, Lorraine Huling and Harris Gordon. The teachings of Nietzsche, the great German philosopher, have been assigned as the cause of the present war, but Mr. Lonergan has not entered into any issues of the great European conflict in developing the Nietzschian theories for photoplay adaptation. Instead he has taken the theme of individual absolutism, as advanced by the great thinker. Niethsche preached that the power of self must be supreme, that for the strong to aid the weak unnecessarily detracts from the strength of the powerful.

The date of release of this subject is September 25.

"AN UNSEEN ENEMY" (Biograph).

This one-reel Biograph reissue is an excellent example of a capable director's ability to take a story, no matter how simple, and from it produce a one-reel picture which has that strange power over an audience which rivets their attention on the screen. The answer is, there is human interest in the story, and capable actors, under masterly direction, have brought it out. This is true of all Biograph reissues, and which, in its measure, contributes to the widespread popularity of these famous one and two-reel Biograph subjects that are being reissued at the present time.

The story of this picture is quite simple. The young man concludes a business deal after banking hours and places the money in the safe at home. The crooked housemaid watches the transaction and telephones her friend, the crook, who arrives with his tools to burglarize the safe. The young man's sisters return home and are locked in the adjoining room by the maid. They telephone their brother at the office, but before they can give the alarm, they are cowed by a revolver in the hands of the maid, who pushes the weapon through a hole provided for a stovepipe. The girls finally brave the weapon's threat and again seize the telephone. The maid fires, and the shot is heard by the brother, who commandeers an automobile and rushes homeward, capturing the crooks just as they are leaving the house.

The well selected cast includes Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Elmer Booth, Robert Harron, Harry Carey and directed by D. W. Griffith. This picture, by the way, marked the initial appearance of the Gish girls in motion pictures.

"HIS GUIDING ANGEL" (Majestic).

Charles Clary, well known leading man at the Reliance studios, is featured in "His Guiding Angel" Majestic production. He is supported by Gladys Brockwell, Jack Dillon and Bert Hadley, among others in a strong cast.

This feature presents the story of the love of a Western "bad man" for an actress. Alaric Neal (Charles Clary) first sees Vivian Gray (Gladys Brockwell) at a little Western theater hardly worthy of the name. She is playing Parthenia in "Ingomar." The scenes in which the tiny theater is shown and the performance of "Ingomar" are especially atmospheric of a small Western town.

Neal falls in love with the actress and makes her his guiding angel. He is able to perform a service for her at once. She has a worthless brother, Jack. Neal takes him from extremely dangerous moral paths and puts him on the straight road.

In reality the actress is entirely a woman of the world. Neal goes to New York, where he meets her again. Their love for one another works regeneration in the heart of each.

Their love, however, is not permitted to come to a speedy climax. A former associate of the actress endeavors to force her into a blackmailing scheme which shall involve Neal, but she is able to block this. Eventually, the actress and the "bad man" begin life together upon a higher plane.

"THE CODE OF THE MOUNTAINS" (World).

Charles Neville Buck, the novelist, is generally conceded to be one of the greatest living authorities on the mountain country and mountain folk of our southern states. His many novels, dealing with this region and people, have attracted world-wide attention and his reputation has been built on the fact that in all his portrayals he adheres strictly to the truth.

In the World Film production, "The Code of the Mountains," written by Mr. Buck, the author has followed his usual policy. Both scenes and characters are true to type and have been passed upon by the author himself both before and after filming.

Most persons upon seeing the play on the screen will think that the outdoor scenes were taken in the southern mountains. This is not so. They were made in the Adirondacks. It has been the intention to make the film in the south, but this was impossible. Mr. Buck accompanied the players into the more northerly mountains and there selected the locations in person. After the completion of the film, even such a stickler as Mr. Buck expressed eminent satisfaction with the portrayals of places and characters.

NEW OFFICES OF ASSOCIATED.

The Associated Film Sales Corporation is now permanently established in its new and commodious quarters on the sixth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th street, and the initial releases of the new program will be at the various Associated exchanges for use by exhibitors during week of September 13.

"THE CIRCULAR PATH" (Essanay).

"The Circular Path" is a strong emotional drama and unusually well adapted to the talent of Henry B. Walthall, who takes the leading role. The story is that of a clergyman, who is dragged down to the depths of degradation by his love for a woman of the world, but who finally climbs back to the heights, lifting the woman up with him. The play is filled with climaxes, so intense and dramatic that often one is led to believe it is the culminating action, but so carefully graded are the different situations that they work up to the final scene without the semblance of an anteclimax. Mr. Walthall brings out the varying emotions with an intensity that holds the spectator spellbound. His overmastering jealousy of the other man in the case, his terrible anger when he finds the man with his wife in a cafe and shoots him, his bitter remorse and despair that leads him to a life of dissipation in an effort to forget, and, finally, the joy of redemption, are all brought out with clarity and telling effect. Warda Howard ably supports Mr. Walthall in all these intensely dramatic scenes. This three-act drama was written by H. S. Sheldon and directed by Capt. E. H. Calvert.

Notes of the Trade

LYNN REYNOLDS has just completed a one-reel Universal by Harvey Gates, entitled "The Third Partner," and has started production on a two-reel drama by the same author entitled, "The Man from Panama."

There is comedy and real drama, too, in "For His Pal," a Reliance production now in the course of work at the Reliance-Majestic studios. It is from the pen of C. D. Clapp, the Reliance-Majestic staff author.

A. D. Sears is the husband, Irene Hunt the wife, C. M. Blue the partner, and J. P. McCarty a subtle Chinaman.

The next big feature to be produced by James Young for the World Film Corporation will be "The Heart of the Blue Ridge," starring Clara Kimball Young. In this picture Miss Young will appear in the gingham gown and sunbonnet of the mountains. As in "Marrying Money," she will again have as her leading man, Chester Barnett. Robert Cummings will be intrusted with the part of the villain.

Anita Stewart, leading lady of the Vitagraph Stock Company, has been selected to create the character of Countess de Villars, in a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's costume comedy, "My Lady's Slipper." It will be produced under the direction of Ralph W. Ince. Earle Williams will be Miss Stewart's leading man. The balance of the cast will include Julia Swayne Gordon, Albert Roccardi, Harry Northrup, George Stevens, Donald Hall and George O'Donnell.

The Essanay scenario and prize beauty contest, conducted in conjunction with the Age-Herald, of Birmingham, Ala., is nearing a close. The scenario contest was won by Morgan D. Jones, of Dadeville, Ala. It is entitled "The River of Romance," and will be produced by Essanay at the Chicago studios and be released under the General Film Company program. The five girls who win the largest number of votes in the contest will go to Chicago to take part in the play. The one with the highest score will take the lead in the picture and the other four will be cast for minor parts.

"A Pickled Romance," with Henry E. Dixey, the noted Broadway star, has been completed. T. Hayes Hunter directed the four-reel comedy drama which was adapted from a story furnished by Raymond L. Schrock and will be released on the regular Universal program as a Broadway Universal Feature. Playing opposite Mr. Dixey is Mabel Montgomery.

Ralph W. Ince has just completed a one-part comedy for the Vitagraph Company, entitled "The Counts." Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will be seen in the principal parts. This will be the first short picture in which these favorite Vitagraph players have appeared in some time. They will be supported by Hughie Mack, Donald MacBride, Albert Rocardi and William Dangman.

Ivy Troutman is the latest of the Broadway stars to join the Gaumont Company. Miss Troutman will make her initial bow to Mutual audiences in the second of the Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont Company for the Mutual program.

Moe Striemer, well known among exhibitors in New York for the last eight or ten years, has joined the staff of the Exclusive Features in the Masonic Building.

James Oliver Curwood has written a drama, "The Flashlight," which will soon be released by the Selig Company. Scenes are laid in East India and Bessie Eyton will play the part of a young English girl. A thrilling battle from howdahs on the back of a number of elephants and an escape by means of a slender rope from a high tower are only two of the many sensational incidents in the plot.

The popularity of the Essanay Western photoplays has increased so greatly that G. M. Anderson now is putting out a series of two-act dramas besides his regular releases of one-act Broncho Billy films. The first two-reeler is "A Convict's Threat," and will be released September 28.

Henry Otto, formerly of the American Company, has joined the producing staff at Universal City, to start work on the production of a three-reel story by Harvy Gates, entitled "The Measure of Leon Dubray."

Trade News of the Week

Apprentices' Wages

Chattanooga "Times" Prints Intelligent Letter from an Assistant Picture Operator Who Had Been Accused of Agitation—Says Apprentices Will Make No Demands, But Will Appeal for Better Rates—Now Get $7 a Week.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TAYLOR WILLIAMS, an apprentice or relief operator of Chattanooga, reports that he has been unjustly blamed and criticized in connection with the agitation recently started by relief operators of Chattanooga for a living wage. Mr. Williams is not employed as an operator at this time. He says that at "the proper time" an appeal will be made by the apprentice workmen to the union operators for higher wages. He recently asked the Chattanooga Times to print a communication from him, stating that he had been spoken of as an agitator. The letter was as follows:

"To the Chattanooga Times:

"I wish you would kindly allow me a few lines in your valuable paper in regard to a recent article concerning a petition in the hands of the apprentice motion picture operators for higher wages. I want to say in behalf of myself that I have had nothing to do with this matter whatever. It has been said by some of the operators that I was one of the agitators who started all of the misunderstanding. I want to say to those interested in the present difficulty that at the proper time the parties connected with the alleged agitation will present to the operators in the most business-like manner their appeals for higher wages—not demands. I think upon investigation it will be found that the relief operators, or apprentices, are in most cases just as competent as their fellow union operators, which shows that the third man is due some consideration, whatever that may be. As I am not connected with this affair in any way, I therefore have no apologies to make to any one for being in any agitation, for I think the matter has been badly misrepresented.

"Taylor W. Williams."

The apprentice operators in Chattanooga have been rather dissatisfied for some time over the $7-a-week wage scale which is now in force, and complain that the union operators are getting considerably too much money in comparison with what the apprentice workman is getting.

THE PRINCESS REOPENED.

The Princess theater, of Nashville, a vaudeville house owned by the Crescent Amusement Company, which quit showing pictures about six weeks ago in order to be overhauled in time for the vaudeville season, reopened on Labor Day. Harry Sudekum, manager of the theater, announced in advance that an unusual program would be handled whereby the bills would be changed every Monday and Thursday. Pictures are shown in connection with the stage performances.

MEMPHIS WRITER STICKS TO HOME STUFF.

Charles M. Brown, of Memphis, Tenn., who is booking picture plays for the Mutual Company, of New York, spends his odd time in writing comedies and comedy dramas as a side line. Brown never goes out of Memphis for original plots. He says there are numerous tragedies and comedies in the streets passing before the eyes of everyone, and all that a writer has to do is to "soft-pedal the rough stuff" to get a winning comedy. Mr. Brown believes all amateurs and beginners should try to write comedy instead of heavy stuff, which is supplied by staff men. He figures that there is no trick in writing comedy, as the mind drifts to such things as the seen and heard and which in many cases are new and unique. "A Mysterious Profession" was one of Mr. Brown's pictures, which was recently shown at Empire theater No. 2. He has been writing plays for eight months, and it is understood will become a staff man about the first of the year.

TENNESSEE NOTES.

Miss Blanche Sweet in the much discussed "Secret Orchard" started off the week at the Fifth Avenue theater of Nashville on Aug. 30. The Crescent simultaneously showed Miss Mary Pickford in "A Good Little Devil." The Vendome, Strand and Parthenon theaters all had good bills at the same time, and theatergoers of Nashville had an exceptionally good lot of star pictures to choose from.

The Elite theater, of Clarksville, Tenn., recently showed the big railroad drama, "Rule G," which went very well with the patrons of the theater. Charlie Chaplin in "Laughing Gas" completed the bill. The picture was one day behind its schedule in showing at the Elite through a mistake whereby the film was sent to the Elite, of Jackson, Tenn. The three-reel film, "Working of a Miracle," was run in the meantime.

The management of the Crescent theater, of Nashville, Tenn., recently had what was known as "Chaplin Jubilee Days," when for two days a selected series of Chaplin comedies were shown.

W. G. Boger, colored, of Nashville, has opened a new colored motion picture house at Fourteenth avenue and Jefferson street. The new theater, which is known as the Alpine, is said to be the only theater in the city which is owned by a negro.

AMONG EXCHANGES IN IOWA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE General Film Company, which moved its exchange from Omaha to Des Moines, is now occupying offices at Seventh and Mulberry streets. Activities in other Des Moines exchanges have been increased. The Laemmle exchange now in the Hubbell building will move soon to a new building at Tenth and Locust streets, where it will occupy 1,200 square feet. The Mutual in the Cohen building at Fourth and Locust streets finds changes necessary since it began releasing through Des Moines instead of Omaha and will double the space occupied and the working force.

The Pathe Company has opened an exchange in the Cohen building in charge of L. A. Sheridan, who has been with the Kansas City offices.

BURLINGTON HAWKEYE SCORES EXHIBITORS OF STATE.

The Burlington "Hawkeye" sees something sinister in the fights made by moving picture men to prevent bad censorship laws. After reviewing some fights in other states, it says: "The friends of the censorship law had to contend with a powerful lobby during the session of the legislature. The same commercial interests are likely to be felt in every state seeking to break down reasonable supervision of this popular class of public entertainment. For this reason, the 'Hawkeye' deems it prudent to interest public opinion in advance of future legislation in western states."

LOCAL 191, I. A. T. S. E., ELECTS.

C. C. HITE OPENS CINCINNATI TRIANGLE OFFICE.

The opening of a branch office in Cincinnati to take care of the interests of the Triangle Film Corporation not only marks the addition of another to the already numerous ranks of film exchanges and branches, but the transfer to that company of a leading branch manager, in the person of C. C. Hite, of the Mutual. Mr. Hite has taken charge of the new Triangle offices at 215 East Fifth street, giving the Pathe Exchange at 217 East Fifth a near neighbor in the business, and one of the finest exchanges in the city will be fitted up in the ample quarters under lease there.

FLOYD LEWIS TO MANAGE MUTUAL BRANCH.

Floyd Lewis, who will succeed Mr. Hite in charge of the Mutual office here, was until recently in charge of the company's exchange in Oklahoma City, and has been in the moving picture business in various capacities for twelve years.

FOUR REELS OF CHAPLIN AT LYRIC.

One of the most appreciated things of the season was seen during the Lyric's last week of moving pictures, when the first half of the week was devoted to the Charlie Chaplin revue known as "The Mix-Up."

Biggest Film Show

Cincinnati's Great Music Hall, Where the Famous May Music Festivals Have Been Held—Became Picture Theater September 4—Milton Gosdorfer Will Manage It—Music to Be a Prominent Feature of the Shows.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WITH the opening on Saturday, Sept. 4, of Music Hall as a moving picture theater, Cincinnati may lay claim to having the largest photoplay house in the West, and, probably, in the United States. At any rate, no one in this vicinity knows of a house with a larger seating capacity than the 4,000 which can be taken care of at the big auditorium.

Music Hall has for years been used principally for musical entertainments, the great semi-annual May Music Festival of Cincinnati, famous the country over, being the big event held there. Large gatherings of various sorts have also been held there, and, recently, occasional moving picture engagements, such as those in connection with the lecturers of Irvin Cobb and Herman Ridder on the war. Now, however, a continuous season of moving pictures has been undertaken, under the management of Milton Gosdorfer, a former Cincinnatian, who has for the past seven or eight years been connected with the moving picture business in the East, principally as an exhibitor.

Eastern and local capital is behind the venture, which, considering the size of the house and other features, may well be styled the most ambitious yet attempted here in the moving picture field. An orchestra of thirty pieces, under the direction of Walter Esberger, and supplemented by the great Music Hall organ, played by Alfred Schehl, a distinguished soloist at that instrument, will furnish a musical program which alone would be worth a good deal more than the price of admission; while an additional feature in this line will be a first-class singer each week, Mrs. Antoinette Werner-West, a well known soprano, filling the opening engagement.

The first moving picture attraction was a film version of Meredith Nicholson's "House of a Thousand Candles," produced by V-L-S-E. The policy of the management will be to show two first-class features each week, at prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents, the bulk of the seats selling at the former price, relying on the immense seating capacity to enable a profit to be made, in spite of the extraordinary expenses represented by the venture on the scale indicated. The house has been furnished up and largely redecorated for the new role which it will play, and getting off to a good start, promises to cut a considerable figure in the Cincinnati field.

WALNUT TO SHOW PICTURES.

Stair & Havlin Attractions Cancelled—Large Company Formed.

After being the subject of many conflicting rumors, the fate of the Walnut theater has finally been settled, at least for the coming season; and the settlement means that moving pictures will be shown there. This developed a few days ago when the incorporation of the Cincinnati Walnut Theater Amusement Company was announced by local interests, which will assume a five-year lease on the theater, including the privilege of purchase. This does not necessarily mean that the theater will be used for moving pictures for the entire period, but that policy has been definitely announced for the coming season, with the cancellation of the Stair & Havlin bookings which were to have been seen there. It is now planned to open the house with the first of a series of big feature films not later than Oct. 1, if possible.

Among those forming the new company are: George B. Cox and Joseph L. Rhinock, both former Cincinnatians and both large figures in the film world; A. Paul Keith, E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdoch, John P. Harris, Harry Davis, B. Heidingsfeld, and I. Libson, president of the Libson Amusement Co., and manager of the Strand and Family theaters. The apparently permanent accession of the Walnut to the ranks of the moving picture houses marks the second downtown theater which has made this change, the Strand being the other; but while the Strand succeeded the Gayety, a burlesque house, the Walnut has for twenty-five years been the home of the "legitimate" drama, and the change is therefore more notable in its case.

FIRST CINCINNATI PICTURE READY

"Silent Valley" Under Moon Brand—Dramatizes Hocking Valley Situation.

The first real Cincinnati drama, produced by a Cincinnati company in and around Cincinnati, will shortly be seen by the public, "Silent Valley," a one-reel subject, under the brand of the Moon Film Co., winning that honor. The Moon Company, of New York, which is working in connection with the Five-A Studios, with Rex Weber as producing director, is responsible for the picture, but Mr. Weber evolved the idea, and produced it under conditions which seem to promise a high degree of success for it.

The pitiable condition of some thousands of families in the Hocking Valley mining district of Ohio, caused by the virtual collapse of the local coal industry, has called for the assistance of the State and its citizens for some time, and many picture exhibitors have given a substantial proportion of their receipts on certain days for this purpose. Mr. Weber, however, has gone further, and has dramatized the situation effectively, staging the production right on the ground, and using the miners and their families as actors, thus getting an atmosphere which is realism itself. He and Miss Marjorie LeFern played the leads in the production, which has had the explicit approval of the Governor.

Aside from the appeal contained by the picture on account of the surroundings in which it was taken, it will have a further appeal to the public in connection with the plan under which it is to be exhibited in Ohio, which calls for a contribution of 50 per cent. of the proceeds to the aid of the miners. The company intends that this shall be only the first of a long string of productions, as it believes, in common with several other concerns recently organized in Cincinnati, that this location is peculiarly favorable, for several reasons, as a producing center.

"THE ETERNAL CITY" MAKES RECORD.

The Famous Players' production of "The Eternal City," featuring Pauline Frederick, which was seen at the Grand opera house last week, had the distinction not only of drawing the largest crowds of the Grand's 1915 moving picture season, but of doing so at the highest prices which have been charged since the first exhibition of "Neptune's Daughter" in Cincinnati, which was a year ago. The Grand prices last week for the Hall Caine production were 25 and 15 cents, the entire lower floor being held at the former figure. The length of the performance enabled the management to give only six shows a day, starting at 10 o'clock in the morning. The exact time of each performance was advertised, both in the newspapers and by a sidewalk sign, enabling the public to time its attendance accordingly.

PITTSBURGH'S MAYOR BANS "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

MAYOR JOSEPH G. ARMSTRONG last week instructed Superintendent of Police Noble W. Matthews not to allow the moving picture of "The Birth of a Nation" to be exhibited in this city, the picture having been scheduled for a five weeks' run at the Nixon theater. The mayor took this action following a protest by over a score of negro citizens who visited his office. The mayor issued the following statement:

I have notified the superintendent of police that the moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," will not be permitted to exhibit in Pittsburgh. I take this stand for the reason that I do not think that this picture or any other picture which tends to stir up racial feelings and to rehash events in history, the unpleasant features of which have been forgotten and should remain buried in the interest of a united people, should be permitted to show in this city. I am satisfied, from statements made to me by prominent citizens, and by a delegation which called on me that this picture is of the nature described. I have been besieged on all sides for some weeks by those who are opposed to the exhibition of the picture.

That the action of the mayor and the superintendent of police in prohibiting the display of the photo play "The Birth of a Nation," is arbitrary, and that the play has been passed and approved by both the Pennsylvania State Board of Censorship and the National Board of Censorship, are the arguments advanced by the Nixon Theater Company in a bill of equity filed in Common Pleas Court in which they ask the court to issue an injunction against the mayor to restrain him from prohibiting the showing of the film.

At the Nixon theater it was said by the management that the pictures would be put on as scheduled. A great deal of money has been spent by the Nixon in securing the film and in advertising it, and the officials do not propose to lose the money, was their declaration.

TRIANGLE LOOKS FOR PITTSBURGH OFFICES.

W. S. Rogers, Arthur Lucas and C. A. Hickey, of the Triangle Film Corporation, of New York, were in Pittsburgh last week with the object of locating a branch office in this city. The storeroom at 414 Penn avenue, near the Mutual exchange, was leased and it is expected the office will be opened this week. It is rumored that Mr. Rogers will manage the Pittsburgh branch.

J. A. WEILAND DIES.

Mrs. J. A. Wieland, mother of the Weiland brothers, well known Steel City Film men, died recently at her home in Carrick Pa., at the age of 62. Mrs. Weiland is survived by her husband and the following sons: Adam M., W. J., A. A., and the following daughters: Mrs. Joseph Opperman, Mrs. Peter Spinneweber, Mrs. Nickolas Grunder and Mrs. S. Axmacher. The entire trade join in their heart-felt sympathies.

FINED ON CENSOR'S CHARGES.

Charged with having distributed films in Pittsburgh without having eliminated features disapproved by the State Board of Censors, three managers of local film companies were before Alderman Louis Alpern this week on informations preferred by Miss Florence E. Wrenshall, agent of the board. Following a hearing they were fined $25 and costs each.

W. E. Kinson, 420 Penn avenue, of the Mutual Film Company, is alleged to have permitted a film entitled "Exile of Bar K Ranch," to be shown at the Columbia, Fifth avenue, Aug. 12; M. Milder, 436 Fourth avenue, of the General Film Company, is said to have distributed to the Wonderland, Fifth avenue, a picture entitled "Bank" for exhibition on July 20, and H. C. Holah, 715 Liberty avenue, of the Pathe Company, is alleged to have distributed to the Minerva, Fifth avenue, a picture entitled "Bold Bad Boy," which was shown Aug. 20.

NEW FILM EXCHANGE.

Matthew Teplitz, formerly booker for the United Film Service, announced this week that he would open a film exchange called the Specialty Film Co., at 111 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, in a week or so. Mr. Teplitz also announced his intentions of acting as general manager. His first release is the five-part war drama "The Fall of Przemysl." He also intends handling a line of special attractive features.

NEW REGENT OPENED.

The Connors Brothers, of Washington, Pa., opened their up-to-date theater, the new Regent, to the public last week. At eight o'clock on opening evening the house was packed to the doors, and they had to quit selling tickets because all tickets for all performances were sold.

THE PENN NOW OPEN.

Walter Artzberger's handsome new house, the Penn, at Penn avenue and Butler street, Pittsburgh, was opened to the public last Saturday. This house is modern and up-to-date in every respect and will be conducted on a high-class policy. Music is supplied by a Style R Seeburg pipe organ orchestra.

G. W. LEDERER TO MANAGE D. A. CO. THEATERS.

George W. Lederer, assistant manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the World film Corporation, has resigned that position to accept a position as manager of the chain of theaters operated by the Diamond Amusement Company of East Liverpool, O.

SMOKY CITY JOTTINGS.

Messrs. Feiber & Shea, of New York, have turned over the lease of the Majestic theater, in Erie, Pa., to O. A. Potter, a well-known amusement man of Erie, he owning and operating the successful Columbia theater.

George Sallows, formerly manager of the Cameraphone and later manager of the Vitagraph theater, on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has accepted the position of manager of the Strand, in Morgantown, W. Va., one of the Harris chain of theaters, and left for that place this week. He is succeeded at the Vitagraph by Calvin Landau, son of the owner of the house.

William F. Hummel has sold his Royal at 1715 Carson street, South Side, Pittsburgh, to William F. Boehmer, a well-known picture man. William Bonbeyo is manager.

Denham Palmer, division manager of the World Film Corporation, was in this city several days last week. Mr. Palmer has charge of the Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Indianapolis offices.

Glen McDonald, manager of the Belmar, which is owned by James Clark, has resigned that position owing to ill health. He intends taking a vacation, after which he will engage in mercantile business. His successor at the Belmar is George Volkenberger, a prominent young Homewood man.

The Mishler, in Altoona, Pa., opened recently with motion pictures, having booked "The Plunderer" for one week. The admission price of 10 and 20 cents is charged and due to the success of the first week's business this policy will continue.

The Pastime theater, on Market street, Pittsburgh, has been taken over by Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, with M. D. Martin as manager.

NO SUNDAY LAWS FOR MOTION PICTURES ONLY.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

LA CROSSE, WIS., is having a Sunday show fight. "We are well aware that the downtown theaters are operating in open violation of these laws, and we are not inclined, at the present time, to interfere, since the 'downtown' people seem content to have it so," said Rev. J. E. Watson, pastor of West Avenue Methodist Church, "but if you contemplate operating in the building you expect to erect on Jackson street, near West avenue, on Sunday, you may expect some strong opposition in the form of the enforcement of these laws." F. J. McWilliams, who is erecting a new house, declared: "If the church closes my new theater the Sunday closing law will be rigidly enforced. Sunday selling will cease in La Crosse. We'll close the Mississippi river on Sundays—not an excursion will be run out of this city."

UPSET WITH PICTURE CAMERA.

The canoe expedition sent down the Wisconsin river by the Crossette Film Company of Milwaukee met with an accident at Grandmother Falls, where the craft sunk with all the paraphernalia. A reward of $100 goaded river men to the recovery of the camera and the work was resumed.

CHURCH IN ILLINOIS BUYS PICTURE SHOW.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Rutland opera house at Rutland has passed from the control of the Mutual Improvement Company to the Sacred Heart Catholic church. New moving picture equipment has been installed and the house was opened with a free show of the first installment of "The Diamond from the Sky." Rev. Father Dickman, the pastor, will give picture shows every Tuesday and Saturday nights.

SWAPS THEATER FOR BETTER ONE.

J. B. Reilly of Kankakee has purchased the Princess theater in Kankakee from H. H. Schmidt, giving as a part of the consideration the Electric theater at Manteno. Reilly made a number of changes in the Princess, reopening Aug. 29 with "The Avenging Conscience." Schmidt will operate the theater at Manteno.

ILLINOIS JOTTINGS.

The Biograph feature "Judith of Bethulia" was one of the big night attractions at the chautauqua assembly at Lincoln.

The First Congregational church at Elgin will not use moving pictures in church services. Two reasons are given for this decision by the board—there are not enough religious films and some members are of the opinion that the time for such an innovation is not ripe.

Referring to moving pictures at the Methodist Camp Meeting at New Lenox, Rev. W. E. Way of New Lenox said: "These things were not necessary years ago, but they are needed now."

Springfield will have but one vaudeville house, the Majestic, this year. President W. W. Watts of the Vaudette Amusement Company will not resume variety at the Gaiety, but it will continue with pictures. Harry Thornton will remain as manager.

May Censor in St. Louis

Park Commissioner Cunliff Is Drafting a Bill to Provide a Local Censor Board in City—The Leo Frank Case Is the Cause of the Present Situation—Park Commissioner's Office Lacks Power to Censor as Yet.

A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS is one of the few large cities to be free of the moving picture censor and his activities, but the attempts to show the Leo Frank Case films will no doubt result in a censorship being established. Many complaints against the exhibition of these pictures have been received at the office of Chief of Police Young.

A telegram from the National Board of Censorship has been received by Park Commissioner Cunliff, who has charge of public amusements and recreations, stating that the showing of the Frank Case films had been prohibited in New York and other states, and asking what steps had been taken for their suppression in St. Louis.

Park Commissioner Cunliff is drafting an ordinance authorizing the censoring and elimination of objectionable moving pictures. "The need of such an ordinance has been strikingly demonstrated during the past few days," Cunliff said, "by the many requests to stop the exhibition of the Frank Case films. Under the new charter the park commissioner's office is in control of all amusements, but no ordinance delegating authority to censor or stop the exhibition of objectionable films has been passed, hence the bill in preparation.

EXTENDS "BIRTH OF A NATION" INJUNCTION.

ADRIENNE KROELL LEADS IN ST. LOUIS PICTURE.

The Advance Motion Picture Corporation of Chicago have been making a moving picture feature in St. Louis that has been attracting much public attention. The scenario of the play, "The Making of John Hayes" was written by G. Prather Knapp, a well known writer and literary man of St. Louis. All of the camera work was done in and about St. Louis to get the proper local coloring that the story demanded. On Sunday, Aug. 29, the officials of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company turned the bank over to Director C. D. Cox, who directed the picture. The employes of the company seized on the novel situation and attended in a body. Breckenridge Jones, the president of the company, and several officials took part in the film.

Miss Adrienne Kroell, who has been out of picture circles since she signed a contract with the Famous Players a year ago which she was obliged to cancel on account of illness, and who has just got back in film circles again, played the leading part opposite Ernest Ingalls. Miss Kroell is a native daughter of St. Louis, and she was welcomed by the City Club, a business organization similar to the Rotary Club of New York, with an elaborate luncheon in her honor on Sept. 1.

AN INTERESTING CASE AT LAW.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JUDGE Gilbert, of the Muscogee Superior Court, cited Roy Martin, proprietor of the Grand theater, Columbus, Ga., to appear before him and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court in showing a picture at his theater despite a temporary injunction issued restraining him from exhibiting the film. Mr. Martin takes the position that he was an innocent purchaser of the picture, and that the film company which furnished it is responsible. Picture men are watching the case with unsual interest.

TERRE HAUTE EXHIBITORS MAY ORGANIZE.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE Terre Haute picture house owners held a meeting to organize, and the question was pretty thoroughly discussed. Manager Jensen, of the Varieties theater, expressed his opinion that the organization would be perfected soon.

WHAT INDIANA EXHIBITORS ARE DOING.

Motion pictures are being shown now of the Gary, Ind., vocational schools, which leaped into fame along with the steel city, because of the unique vocational education methods established by Superintendent Wirt.

The Keystone Amusement Company, Indianapolis, has filed suit for $500 damages against the Fox Film Corporation, asking that the "Kreutzer Sonata," a five-reel film, be attached. The Keystone company charges that the film was leased to them for a week, but after being shown three days was taken from the house without cause.

The Huntington theater, Huntington, Ind., is promoting a film play put on by local talent to be given at a local theater for the benefit of the hospital fund.

W. C. Odle, of the Princess, Williamsport, Ind., is putting on a free show every Wednesday night for the Williamsport merchants.

The Pleak & Howard house at St. Paul, Ind., was opened September 4. The house seats 600. A player-piano and a Victrola furnish the music. The house is attractively furnished.

Manager Matthews, Monticello, Ind., owner of an aerdome, has given up. In the future, he advises his patrons, they will find the program at the opera house.

Actors in "Shelby's Romance," the local talent film for Shelbyville, Ind., were victims of a real for sure accident, when "the elopers" in an automobile hit the "coppers" on a motorcycle. The coppers were trying to head them off, but didn't have enough speed to get out of the way. Orville Cauzzert and Oliver Knight were pretty badly skinned up.

They had to open up the front of the Gaiety theater, Bluffton, Ind., to find room enough for the new mirror screen to enter the house. Fortunately the front was not far advenced in construction and it was easy.

The Irvin theater, Winchester, Ind., reopened September 2. It has been undergoing repairs.

Lafe Troyer, manager of the Princess theater, Elwood, Ind., is to manager the Habit at Tipton, Ind., unless the plans are changed.

Moving pictures will be a feature of the Sullivan, Ind., Chautauqua this year, a big tent being set aside for the exhibits.

With a speed almost magical, so we are informed, James Alcorn's aerdome at Greensburg, Ind., succumbed to the hammer and saw men. It was even so, according to Mr. Alcorn, with the money that went into it. Perhaps the fact that August broke all records for coolness, and July broke all July records for rain, will explain.

Manager Matthews, of Monticello, Ind., with his removal indoors, states that he will reduce the price to five cents, only charging ten cents on the big feature nights.

Manager J. A. Schull has taken charge of the Wallace theater, Peru, Ind. He is from Dowagiac, Mich., where he managed the Orpheum and Idle Hour theaters.

The Philbarg theater opened at North Vernon, Ind., September 1. It announces Tuesday and Thursday as feature nights.

The Starette, Newcastle, Ind., after being closed nearly two months, has reopened. The ceiling has been raised, a new entrance built, a new picture machine and a new ticket booth added. These with new decorations and a new piano, have made the place like new.

Manager Young, of the Grand, Gary, Ind., found a real Charlie Chaplin helped mightily in swelling the crowd for the reel Charlie on the inside.

The Dome, Clinton, Ind., couldn't hold the crowd for a home talent film.

Manager Bertha, of the Grand, Logansport, Ind., gave a private performance of "The Nigger" to show that there was nothing objectionable in the play which a delegation of colored folk had asked to be prohibited.

The Coburn Photo and Film company, Indianapolis, has obtained exclusive rights for the Indiana State Fair.

George Ade's "Marse Covington" is being easily booked in Indiana and well attended. Hoosiers are loyal to George.

Ned Hastings, manager of Keith's, Indianapolis, says if any manager wants to get an interested crowd around his door front, let him make a periscope. Hastings made one and they nearly blocked up the entrance, besides that a pitched battle between two Germans and two Italians was staged impromptu.

Evansville authorities put the ban on "The Birth of a Nation" for fear it would start a race riot, Evansville being subject to the breaking out of this sort of disease.

D. Kaver, Upland, Ind., has reopened the Idle Hour after being closed three weeks.

R. H. Hains, of the Mutual office, has been transferred from Indiana territory with headquarters at Louisville, to the Cincinnati office to handle Ohio and Kentucky points. Norman M. Dixon, traveling representative of the Mutual out of Indianapolis, has been transferred to Louisville.

Heller & Jean is the name of a new partnership which is building a theater at Prospect street and South East street, Indianapolis.

IN KENTUCKY.

A triple alliance has been made at Paducah, Ky., between the Gem theater, the "News-Democrat" and the Memphis, Tenn., Photoplay Association, whereby a contest is being operated to choose the actors to take part in a film which is to be manufactured in Paducah.

August 23 and 24 were "Pickford Days" in Nashville, Tenn., when Miss Mary Pickford appeared simultaneously at two theaters. The admirers of the popular film performer had their choice of seeing the little actress in her latest play, "Rags," showing at the Fifth avenue theater, or in seeing her in a return engagement at the Crescent in her famous hit, "Caprice." "Rags" was shown for three days, while "Caprice" was on for two days.

Howell Graham, manager of the Majestic theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn, which has shown big feature productions during the entire summer, recently announced that the theater would open shortly as a vaudeville house. It is understood that the Majestic will show the Keith attractions, and special moving pictures. The fact that vaudeville would be shown at the theater was announced following a meeting of the directors.

It was with surprise that Chattanoogans heard of the change made by E. H. Calvert, formerly leading man and director for the Essanay Company, as a director for the Quality Film Company. Mr. Calvert while working with a special production company for the Essanay Company at Signal Mountain, near Chattanooga, this summer, met a good many Chattanooga people, who are watching his movements in the film world with keen interest.

DESBERGER AMUSEMENT CO.

The Desberger Amusement Company, of Paducah, Ky., has filed articles of incorporation listing its capital stock at $80,000 and limiting its indebtedness to $250,000. The concern owns the Arcade, Gem and Star theaters at Paducah. The incorporators are Mrs. Rose L. Desberger, Norma Desberger, Joseph Desberger and David Desberger. The bulk of the stock is owned by Norma and Rose Desberger, Joseph and David controlling three shares each. The Gem and Arcade theaters run pictures, while the Star runs vaudeville and pictures during the regular theatrical season, but has been closed for several months. It is understood that the company contemplates establishing a chain of theaters in the western part of the state.

Higher Prices Evenings

Louisville's Exhibitors' Association Considers Raising Rates of Admission to Evening Shows—Five-Cent Houses Will Be Ten Cents and Ten-Cent Houses, Fifteen and Twenty Cents—All City's Theaters Likely to Concur.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MOVEMENT is on in Louisville whereby it is expected that admission prices to evening performances at the moving picture theaters will be raised. It is suggested that the legitimate houses have always maintained higher prices for night performances than for day or matinee shows, and there is no reason why an additional nickel or so should not be obtained for picture performances.

The movement has been advocated by the Louisville Photo-Play Association, of which all of the local houses are members. It is understood that practically every house in the city has agreed that such a movement would be a good thing for the business, and it is now merely a question of working out the details. It is proposed to raise the price of five-cent houses to ten cents at night, and the ten-cent houses to either fifteen or twenty cents.

At a recent meeting of the local organization, at which the matter was submitted, Louis J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company, stated that in Louisville the moving picture theater managers had not increased prices, although film rentals have increased materially during the year. In some cities the theaters have charged twenty-five to fifty cents for showing films which have been shown in Louisville at the regular prices. Mr. Dittmar said: "Since the producers of motion pictures are employing stars of national reputation at enormous salaries to take part in the photoplays, they have advanced the price of film rentals to exhibitors in proportion to the cost of production. Patrons of moving picture theaters, who travel, are usually surprised to find that in other cities the show houses are charging twenty-five and fifty cents for some of the big productions which are shown in Louisville for ten cents. The managers feel that the time is drawing near when the public must be asked to share a portion of the burden of the increased cost of production of motion pictures."

This change will probably have the effect of improving attendance at matinees, which have never been what they should in Louisville. Local patrons of moving picture theaters patronize the houses well during the two-night performances, but it is seldom that a house is filled during the afternoon.

LEXINGTON BARS "HYPOCRITES."

At the meeting of Lexington, Ky., Board of City Commissioners Aug. 30 it was unanimously voted to forbid the exhibition here of the motion picture feature, "The Hypocrites," which has been shown in a number of cities and caused considerable discussion as to whether it was suitable to be displayed to the public.

The management of the Colonial theater asked permission to exhibit the picture, but Mayor Cassidy in the meantime wrote to the mayors of Louisville, Cincinnati and St. Joseph, Mo., to get expressions from these officials before having the request considered by the commissioners. From letters which he received it appears there was no objection and no protest against the pictures in Louisville, where it was shown for several days, but the reports from St. Joseph and Cincinnati were not favorable. Mayor Spiegel, of Cincinnati, stated that the picture had not been shown in the Queen City, as the Ohio Board of Censorship and the National Board of Censorship had not passed upon it.—[Ed. note: The National Board passed it with only two dissenting votes out of eighteen.] In St. Joseph, Mo., the picture was condemned by members of the Federation of Women's Clubs as immoral, although the president of that organization had given it her personal endorsement.

A letter from the Ohio Board of Censorship stated that the picture had been "carefully scanned, again reviewed, and pronounced harmful."

A motion by the Mayor was unanimously adopted, and the picture will not be shown in Lexington. Mayor Cassidy, in condemning the picture, stated that he did not believe that the Lexington Vice Commission could gaze upon the picture unmoved.

SCREEN NO DANGER TO SIGHT.

The Louisville Evening Post, which has followed the lead of a number of the leading papers of the country in conducting a special department to answer questions pertaining to health, recently answered an inquiry pertaining to the effect of films upon the eye in its special department known as "The People's Doctor." The question was, "I have a slight astigmatism and wear weak glasses. Would it be harmful for me, in this condition, to go to the picture shows? How near should one sit to the screen to obtain the best results?"

The answer was as follows: "With the great improvement in film operation, much of the objectionable flickering and unsteadiness is removed; yet some individuals find that any long continued concentration of vision on the moving picture screen causes headache. In the regular drama the sense of hearing shares equally with that of sight, therefore there is less concentration on one organ of special sense, with its obvious advantages. An astigmatic eye properly corrected with glasses should be, to all intents and purposes, a normal one. I think that a position well back from the screen would be preferred by most people as giving the maximum of comfort."

AIRDOMES HAD BAD SEASON.

Cold weather in Louisville has called time on the lowly airdomes, which have had a very hard season, and the only open-air theater now operating is the Westonian, which is holding a few carnivals and special performances for West End clubs. The airdome business was a money-losing proposition all summer, due to the exceptionally cool, rainy weather experienced. The Woodland airdome, on Preston street, was one of the last to surrender.

LOUISVILLE GOSSIP.

J. Johnson Mussellman, manager of the Star theater, reports that he received "The Lynching of Frank" as a part of one of his programs during the last week in August, but that he cut out this portion of the film, feeling that he could not take a chance on showing such a picture in Louisville.

The Casino and Orpheum, of Louisville, have been remodeled somewhat, and large mirrors installed at the front entrances for the benefit of the ladies who generally have to "doll up" a little after having removed their hats during the performance.

Karl Zang, of the Cherokee theater, has returned from a trip to Cincinnati, O., Covington and Newport, Ky.

M. Y. Opie and F. B. Evins, leading citizens of Eddyville, Ky., have leased and taken charge of the Princess theater.

Fire which broke out in Midway, Ky., on Aug. 29 completely destroyed the Midway opera house and adjoining property. The total damage was estimated at $20,000.

J. P. Masters, manager of the Princess theater, of Bowling Green, Ky., which is owned by the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, recently returned from a short trip to New York.

Klu Klux Film in Phila.

Director of Public Safety Porter Enjoined by Judge Ferguson from Interfering with Showing of the Big Griffith Spectacle—Full Police Protection Was Given the Show, but Even the Colored People in Audience Applauded.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Philadelphia News Service.

ACCORDING to a decision handed down by Judge William C. Ferguson, Common Pleas Court No. 3, a preliminary injunction was granted restraining Director of Public Safety Porter from interfering with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest theater, Broad and Sansom streets, for a period of five days. The restraining order was granted after a hearing of a suit brought by the Nixon and Zimmerman Theater Company to enjoin the police department from stopping the picture under orders from Director Porter.

Judge Ferguson declared that after the five days' time expires either party can go before a judge with a motion to have the injunction vacated or made permanent.

Under direct order from Director Porter a detail of fifteen detectives, headed by Captain Cameron, were seated at various points throughout the theater and were prepared to act immediately in case any demonstration was made against the film. A detail of policemen were also stationed in front of the theater and many private detectives were to be found in the audience.

However, there was absolutely no need for any police protection of any description. The huge audience seemed to enjoy the picture to the extreme and continued applause could be heard throughout the exhibition. Many negroes were scattered throughout the house and it is very pleasing to note that they were numbered among the most ardent applauders.

Moving picture interests are more than pleased with the outcome of the affair and are unanimous in expresisng their opinion that the injunction will not be requested to be vacated at the termination of the five-day period. Director Porter is particularly pleased with the manner in which trouble was averted and declared that as long as there is no disturbance created the picture may run for an indefinite period of time.

TRIANGLE FILMS AT OPERA HOUSE.

The Chestnut Street Opera House, Eleventh and Chestnut streets, this city, has been obtained by the Triangle Film Corporation as a permanent place for the exhibition of their productions at regular theatrical prices, ranging from twenty-five cents to two dollars.

George W. Sammis, formerly of the Klaw & Erlanger forces and now business manager of the Triangle Film Corporation enterprises, has arrived in Philadelphia and has begun the active supervision of the remodeling of the theater to suit the conditions of a first class moving picture theater. Included in the alterations will be the installation of new seats, which will be the most comfortable obtainable at any price. Mr. Sammis announces that the first shows will include Raymond Hitchcock in the Mack Sennett farce, "My Valet," Douglas Fairbanks in the D. W. Griffith adventure story, "The Lamb," and Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," an Alaskan play directed by Thomas H. Ince.

TRENTON'S CITY SQUARE THEATER OPENS.

The City Square theater, Washington and Anderson streets, Trenton, N. J., the latest addition to Trenton moving picture theaters, was recently opened to the public and played to a capacity house. The new theater is of concrete and stucco construction and is one of the most handsome structures of its kind in the entire State of New Jersey. The crowd which attended the opening performance were loud in their praise of the photoplay house and intently examined the interior decorations of the theater. It is thought that this latest venture in the theatrical world in Trenton will prove to be a huge success.

PHILADELPHIA GOSSIP.

Opening week at the Alhambra was reported as being extremely successful, the new Kimball organ, the only instrument of its kind south of Market street, scoring a large hit. A well balanced program of vaudeville and high class motion picture plays was offered to the public and the attendance proved the popularity of the attractions.

The Leader, Forty-first and Lancaster avenues, continues to be one of the best attended moving picture theaters in Philadelphia.

It has recently been announced that the Garden Theater Company, proprietors of a moving picture theater at Fifty-third and Landsdowne avenue, have taken over the Rittenhouse theater, Fifty-third street and Haverford avenue.

Iva S. Johnson, well known moving picture exhibitor, has recently opened a theater in Archibald, Pa. The new photoplay house is known as the Grand, and is thoroughly modern and up-to-date in every respect.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Jack Delmar, manager of the Jefferson, this city, announces a new change in policy at his establishment. Girl ushers have been employed and a new Wurlitzer organ has been installed. The theater is now being conducted along lines similar to those employed at the Stanley.

W. H. Parker, proprietor of a moving picture theater at Long Branch, N. J., reports business as being of a most satisfactory nature and declares that the peopel of Long Branch appreciate good moving pictures.

Earl Courtwright, proprietor of the Cort, Shickshinny, Pa., was a recent visitor to this city.

Business is reported as being fine at the Charles R. Hall theater, Avalon, Cape May County, N. J.

The moving picture theater of Dr. Harrigan, located at Darby, Pa., is once more open. While the theater was closed it was completely renovated and many important changes made to the interior of the building.

It has been decided by Manager Love, of the Orpheum, Chelton and Germantown avenues, Philadelphia, to convert his theater into a moving picture playhouse for the coming season and he announces that nothing but feature pictures will be shown.

W. Spence Harvey, proprietor of the A. B. C. theater, Thirty-third and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, reports that in order to give his patrons the best possible service he has made many improvements.

On account of the remarkable success experienced with the exhibition of first class photoplays during last winter, it has been decided to run nothing but moving pictures at the Metropolitan opera house, Broad and Poplar streets, during the coming season.

PAYS DUPLICATE FEDERAL TAX.

By Clarence L. Linz, Virginia Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE attention of the exhibitors of Washington was again forcibly called to the provisions of the Internal Revenue Tax law when it became known that Harry M. Crandall had been compelled to pay $25 as a tax for the balance of the current year when he took possession on September 1 of the Apollo theater on H street, Northeast. This tax was exacted regardless of the fact that but two months before the previous operators of the theater had paid a half-year's tax on the theater and park which adjoins. The exhibitors look upon this provision of the law as unjust and an effort will be made, no doubt, to combat it if Congress seeks to re-enact it upon the opening of the next session in December. The authorities had thought that Mr. Crandall had taken possession of the house on August 31, and had that been the case, he would have been compelled to pay tax for that month.

S. B. LUST BUYS EXCHANGE.

Sidney B. Lust, who has just returned from a visit to New York City, announces that he has secured possession of the business formerly conducted in this city by the United Film Service, and of which he has been the manager. In taking over the exchange Mr. Lust will have nearly eight hundred reels of multiple and single reel subjects and to this he has added additional films that will enable him to give a regular three or four-reel daily service. Mr. Lust is also negotiating with outside concerns having features. His exchange is at 903 E street, Northwest.

POLICE BAR FRANK PICTURES.

All of the motion picture theaters and parks, as well as the vaudeville houses using motion pictures in connection with their regular shows, were visited by members of the police force and requested that they refrain from showing any films depicting the hanging of Leo Frank, or that in any way referred to his life or trial. In the meantime, one of the exchange managers had received instructions from his home office to remove a part of the weekly film which had reference to Frank. The exhibitors were quick to co-operate with the police so that no effort was made in this city to disregard their desires.

TWO NEW THEATERS RUMORED.

It is rumored around town that this winter will see the commencement of construction work on two large theaters. One of these, it is stated, will be put up on Pennsylvania avenue, near Eighth street, Southeast, and will be of a size to accommodate fifteen hundred people. The other will be located in the vicinity of Ninth street, Northwest, and will seat nearly twenty-five hundred people. Plenty of money is said to be back of both projects and interested in the latter is a well known exhibitor. There is further talk about town that outside interests are about to invade the field, which invasion would result in a twenty-five-cent theater being thrust into our midst. Well informed exhibitors give these rumors little credence in view of the fact that Washington is essentially a ten-cent town and in addition is already equipped with more theaters than the public can support in a manner counted upon to give anything like large returns to their operators.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., HANDBILL ORDINANCE.

The city ordinance of Alexandria, Va., prohibiting the distribution of hand-bills in the streets of that place is to be taken to the corporation court for construction by R. A. Steele, manager of the Alexandria Amusement company, who was fined $1 in the police court. Mr. Steele was summoned to court by policemen, who found programs of his theatre on the street. He explained that he distributed the programs in his theater, and also sent them out to houses, the boys who distributed them being cautioned to see that they were not thrown on the street. An appeal was noted in this case and the result thereof will be awaited with a great deal of interest. A merchant of Alexandria was also assessed $1 for the same reason, but in addition he was taxed $5 for contempt of court.

TOLD ABOUT THE CAPITAL.

William Ballinger, who has been an office assistant in the local exchange of the General Film Company, has gone on the road and is at present traveling through Maryland.

John Spellbring, operator at the Maycroft, is confined to the Walter Reed Hospital with a broken arm. The accident occurred during a ball game. Mr. Spellbring is the son of the head of the local operators' union.

NEW HOUSE IN HAMPTON, VA.

By Clarence L. Linz, Virginia Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

HAMPTON, VA., is to have another motion picture house, the New Theater, which is being erected and equipped at a cost of about $20,000. The front is to be very elaborately decorated and will present a fine appearance. The theater will have a seating capacity of about five hundred. A gold fibre screen, two Powers 6-A machines and motor generator are to be installed. Captain W. W. Scott, a Virginia pilot, is said to be back of the project. The manager will be G. C. Backus, who will inaugurate the policy of three feature nights when an admission of ten cents will be charged, and three program nights when the regular admission will be five cents.

CONSOLIDATION IN ALEXANDRIA, VA.

It is reported that Ralph A. Steele, manager of the Richmond theater in Alexandria, and representing the owners of that house has taken over the Surprise theatre, which has been its principal competitor. The Surprise was owned by Dr. William H. McClure, of Washington, D. C., and Braxton B. Smith has for several years been his Alexandria representative. Mr. Smith, it is stated, will relinquish the management of the Surprise and after a brief vacation will devote his attention to other enterprises. It is believed that Mr. Steele will assume the management of this house in connection with his duties as manager of the Richmond. The building occupied by the theater was not included in the deal, it having merely been leased and remodeled for motion picture purposes.

VIRGINIA NOTES.

George Karanicholas and his associates are said to have broken ground for what is believed will be a new motion picture theater on Granby street, Norfolk, which will seat, when completed, approximately eighteen hundred people.

A voting contest for the most popular young lady in the community is the attraction at the Lyric theater in Blacksburg and is one of the many features that have been inaugurated by the manager, J. A. Karnes. The first prize is five dollars in gold, while the contestant winning the second highest number of votes will be presented with a semi-annual pass to the theater. The contest closes on October 30. This house is at present open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, while matinees are given on Tuesdays and Saturdays at four o'clock.

The school board of Alexandria has secured the auditorium of the Richmond theater for temporary use in caring for some 200 school children who could not be accommodated elsewhere. The theater will temporarily be used as a school house until the new high school has been completed.

Messrs. Overbey and Lacey, operators of the LaZada theater, in South Boston, visited Washington last week to arrange their feature service for that house.

BUSINESS IMPROVES IN NORTH CAROLINA.

By Clarence L. Linz, North Carolina Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BUSINESS throughout this section is improving in a most satisfactory manner. Being in the nature of a luxury, the pictures were among the first to feel the effects of the general depression which hit the South some months ago. Readjustments compelled or induced by now changed conditions have reached a stage in the Carolinas at which their effect is beginning to be evident. Labor of all classes seems to be very well employed. In the increasing number of cities within this territory in which manufacturing is developing, pay-rolls are much heavier than was the case about two months ago. All lines of business feel the effect of this as wages received up to this time have in large measure been used in liquidating indebtedness incurred during a preceding period of idleness. August is always a quiet month and the fact that there is some little improvement is noticeable in comparison with July possibly reflects a change of conditions which will be gradually accentuated. This year there can be no excuse for a repetition of the disasters of last fall for the cotton situation is being taken care of in a most efficient manner. With all of these facts before them, the exhibitors in this territory are looking for a most prosperous fall and winter business, and that it is their belief that this will come true is evidenced by the fact that several well known exhibitors have already erected, or are contemplating the construction of new houses.

NORTH CAROLINA CO. TO PRODUCE FILMS.

The Special Features Film Producing Company has recently been incorporated with an authorized capital stock of $100,000, of which amount the sum of $1,000 is paid in. The stock is subscribed by Robert R. Reynolds, Marcus Erwin and M. S. Erwin. The principal office of the concern will be at 17½ Patton avenue, Asheville. Its charter authorized it to produce and deal in motion pictures and, it is stated, that extensive developments along this line are contemplated by the new corporation. Mr. Reynolds recently produced "Captain Bob of the National Guard," an account of which recently appeared in the Moving Picture World, and with which he has met with considerable success.

WILMINGTON FILMS ON CIRCUIT

Requests have been received in Wilmington from various places, including points in Texas, for information concerning the reels giving views of that city which were taken in connection with the recent convention of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. These films have just started out on the North Carolina circuit, having made their initial appearance at the house of Howard & Wells where they were shown to the members of the Chamber of Commerce by whom they were pronounced as excellent. The Theater News of Dallas, Tex., recently made mention of these pictures and reported that a number of Texas exhibitors had made inquiries as to where booking could be had.

WILMINGTON'S ROYAL READY.

The Royal, newest and most modern theater in Wilmington, will soon be opened to the public, there remaining but a few slight touches to the interior to be done. This house, which is owned by Howard & Wells, is located on Front street, just opposite the post office. It will be conducted as a feature house with an admission of ten cents for adults and half that amount for juvenile patrons.

The pictures will be projected by means of two Powers 6-B machines on a mirror screen. An automatic ticket-selling machine has been placed in the box office. A Seeburg Motion Picture Player of the latest type has been contracted for at a cost of $4,000. A feature of this theater will be the running of shows on a regular schedule, thus enabling patrons to know at all times of the commencement and ending of each.

A ladies' rest room has been built in at the left side of the house at the front and which will be open to all of the ladies of the city, whether they are patrons or not.

SUPERBA AT RALEIGH PROGRESSING.

Great progress is being made in the construction of the Superba theater, in Raleigh, which is to be operated by R. J. Allen. The front of the entire three-story building is to be of theatrical architecture and will be covered with electric lights. A large electric sign in pendant shape and representing a dragon will also ornament the front. Nearly one thousand electric light bulbs will be used in illuminating the front and the sign. This house will have a seating capacity of about five hundred. A Universal and Mutual program service will be used in addition to features.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

Eleanor Ellis, who has been starring in the William A. Brady productions, is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Ellis, of the Paramount theater, in Winston-Salem.

A building is being constructed on Main Street, Mt. Airy, by Banner & Lovell on which a lease for ten years has been secured by A. C. Burgess. It is to be used as a motion picture theater and will have a seating capacity of about 500.

It is reported that H. J. Paradis, who operates the Lumina theater, in Wilson, has also secured the control of the Oasis, formerly operated by the Southern Circuit Corporation in that city.

The Charlotte Observer, in combination with the Universal Film Company, is furnishing to the motion picture theaters in this locality the Observer's Universal Animated Weekly. This reel will contain both national and local events of note. Local views will be taken by F. L. Plaisance, staff photographer of the Observer.

Letters were recently mailed by Chief of Police Williams, of Wilmington, to some three hundred people of that city who, it is claimed, failed to pay license taxes for which they are liable under the city ordinances. This list was prepared in the office of the city clerk and there will be some consternation on the part of those who have heretofore been doing business without paying the privilege tax. Included among those subjects to this tax are the motion picture exhibitors.

The management of the Lumina pavilion at Wrightsville beach held another very successful "Charlie Chaplin" night recently.

KANSAS CENSORS, A POOR TEAM.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

A NICE mix-up ensued at Topeka last week in which the Rev. Festus Miller and Miss Carrie Simpson, state censors under W. D. Ross, played the leading roles. The Rev. Miller gave one weekly news film the once over in one picture house and placed his official O. K. upon it. The film contained pictures of Leo Frank. Miss Simpson glanced through the same weekly news film and refused to pass it, because of the Leo Frank pictures. The films are now tied up waiting for W. D. Ross to return from California to make his official judgment on them. Wonder how much the owners care whether or not the release dates on them lapse a month or so and how much money they will lose by it?

SAFETY FIRST FILMS.

Frank Wightman, superintendent of the Safety First for the Frisco railroad, is planning on using moving pictures with his lectures to employees on safety first appliances and practices, provided the proposal meets with the approval of the higher officials of the road.

NEW OLYMPIA AT NEW HAVEN READY.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Olympia theater, which has been pronounced the most beautiful picture playhouse in the New England territory, will be opened on Monday, September 13. This house is located on Temple street, New Haven, Conn. It is owned by the Olympia Theaters, Inc., a $7,000,000 corporation, recently chartered under the laws of Massachusetts. It is up-to-date in every detail and has a seating capacity of 2,500, with one balcony.

Vaudeville and pictures are to be used and the performances, which will be continuous, will start at 10.30 in the morning. The scenic effects, which have been completed by the firm of Curran and Craig, are superior to those in any house in the country. Representative Curran, of the Massachusetts Legislature, whose work in the interests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, in the lower branch of the state government during the censorship fights of last year is well remembered, is the senior member of the scenic concern. All who have seen the work have claimed that it excels anything of its kind that they have ever witnessed.

Manager Curran of the new playhouse has arranged for a gala opening night. The prominent officials of the city have signified their intention of attending the opening performance.

NO FRANK FILMS IN BOSTON.

Films of the Leo M. Frank case will not be exhibited in Boston. Censor John Casey learned that a theater in East Boston was planning to show the film and immediately notified the proprietor that he could not run them. Mr. Casey bases his action on the fact that the film had not received the approval of the National Board of Censorship.

It is a standing order from the Mayor's office to the moving picture men of the city that no film of any nature shall be exhibited unless it has received the approval of the National Board.

STANLEY W. HAND ACTIVE.

Manager Stanley W. Hand, of the New England branch of the World Film Corporation, keeps in direct communication with his salesmen, when they are on the road, by writing them sales letters containing valuable suggestions regarding the merchandising of film. Mr. Hand was formerly in the advertising business in New York City and joined the World's sales force in March. Three months ago he was appointed New England manager. He reports that the Equitable releases are going big in this territory. He has already signed the Gaiety theater, Providence, R. I.; Nelson's theater, Springfield, and the New Park theater, Worcester. The sales force from the New England office comprises C. W. Bunn, H. L. Raymond and Hyman Fein.

Mr. Hand spent several days of last week in New York City, where he was in consultation with General Manager Selznick regarding the policy of the Equitable releases.

HARMONY CLUB HAS OUTING.

The Harmony Club, composed of male employees of the New England branch of the General Film Company, held their first annual outing last Sunday in Glen Echo Park, Stoughton, Mass. Over sixty members attended. A special car carried the party from the office of the park.

Upon their arrival a light luncheon was served which was followed by the athletic events. The results of the track events follow: Shoe race, won by Flanagan; potato race, won by Ernest Warren; 100-yard dash, Myers; 220-yard dash, Smith; 50-yard dash, B. Rolfe; 440-yard dash, Max Carmusin; broad jump, L. J. Hacking; fat men's race, Manager E. J. Farrell; hop, step and jump, Sam Hasse; swimming race, Joe Harris; sack race, Levine.

A ball game between two picked teams followed. Owing to the rain Umpire Edward J. Farrell called the contest in the seventh inning. The winning nine comprised Captain J. W. Farrell, third base; B. Rolfe, pitcher; J. Murphy, catcher; Harry Smith, first base; J. Bent, second base; O. Peterson, shortstop; Harry Hasse, left field; Jeff Levine, center field, and Sam Hasse, right field.

The winners of all the athletic events were awarded suitable prizes, as were the members of the winning baseball aggregation.

A dinner was served in the Glen Echo Inn. A quartet, composed of Frank Rouse, J. Flanagan, B. Rolfe and I. L. Myers, entertained all with popular selections. Peterson and Butler gave exhibitions of the modern dances in a most appropriate manner.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

Several Bostonians attended the convention of the Paramount Pictures men, which was held in Chicago recently. The delegation included W. F. Bossner, manager of the Park theater, Boston; Hiram Abrams, W. T. Greene, Harry Asher, J. J. Leonard, I. Y. Merchant and H. T. Scully. Mr. Abrams is the head of the Famous Players Company of New England.

A huge wave swept Mary Fuller, the Universal star, from a rock at Braces' Cove, Gloucester, Mass., one day last week, as she was playing the role of a mermaid. She sustained no injury. Her companion, Robert Hull, dressed in oilskins and rubber boots, was less fortunate. He was unable to act for several days.

The proposed new Roslindale theater, which was to have been finished by the 1st of June, has struck a snag, which makes it doubtful when the house will be opened. After digging away a knoll the contractors came to a ledge of rock. For weeks workmen have been patiently drilling to get the rock out of the way, but still several tons remain. The site of the new playhouse is at the corner of Washington and South streets.

The Academy of Music, Lowell, Mass., has been reopened under the management of J. J. Lyons. During the summer the house was entirely renovated and repainted. A new stage set was installed and new operating machine has been placed in the booths. Fox and Kleine features are being used.

Manager J. A. Eslow, of the New England Universal Film Exchange, motored through the Maine woods over Labor Day.

Manager F. G. Berry, of the Magnet theater at Raymond, N. H., reports that he played to capacity business while exhibiting the six-reel feature, "A Born Warrior," released by the New England United Film Service. Mr. Berry has pronounced the feature as one of the best on the market.

Miss Della Verrill, formerly auditor of the Mutual branch at Springfield, Mass., is now employed in a similar capacity in the Springfield office of the New England United Film Service.

Through Manager Sam Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange, the entire Poli circuit has contracted for the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Get Rich Quick Wallingford." This contract not only includes the New England theaters, but those in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, Penn. The negotiations were completed by Richard C. Miller of the Poli company.

Winfield H. Bradley, formerly New England manager for the Mutual, is the manager of the local Triangle Film Corporation offices, which are now located in the Kimball Building, 18 Tremont street. It is probable that a new exchange will be later established in the Pleasant street district.

George K. Robinson, formerly manager of the Park theater, Boston, is now managing the Franklin Park theater, Dorchester.

Manager Thomas Meehan, of the Plaza theater, Worcester, Mass., visited Manager Samuel Bernfield, of the New England Pathe Exchange, during the past week. Manager Meehan reports business as booming in his playhouse.

Frank A. Gardy has been appointed assistant manager of the New England branch of the "Big Four." He has contracted with the New Fenway theater for the use of V. L. S. E. features. Mr. Grady is well known to New England exhibitors, having been connected for some time with the General Film Company.

Manager Fred E. Wright, of the Plymouth and Park Square theaters, entertained a number of his friends in Chipman hall, Tremont Temple, last Friday afternoon, when the film version of his play, "York State Folks," was shown by the Dra-Ko Film Company. Director Harry Jackson was also present.

Over forty exhibitors attended a runoff, in the exhibition rooms of Fox Film Corporation, of their latest release, "The Two Orphans."

LEWISTON EXHIBITORS OBJECT TO CARNIVAL.

Picture Men's Protest, Backed by Good Reasons Heeded by City.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

A STRONG objection on the part of Lewiston theater men and merchants of that city against allowing a carnival show to come into Lewiston during the state fair week, was made to the Lewiston city government with the result that the license previously granted to the show was revoked. The theater men took the position that state fair week is one of their biggest assets and as they are in the city 52 weeks in the year and at Christmas and Thanksgiving contribute to charity, they should be protected in this instance. A theater owner said "If this show was going to benefit anyone locally I would not raise objections, but it is not under the management of any local club and I do not think we are being used right if the carnival is allowed to come into the city."

GARRITY CONTINUES PORTLAND'S JEFFERSON.

Manager M. J. Garrity, who has conducted the Jefferson theater, Portland, very successfully for a number of years, will continue to run the house. There has been much uncertainty regarding the Jefferson and various reports concerning the theater, Manager Garrity's lease having been due to expire this fall. It seems that the directors for a time thought if the theater was placed on the market a larger rental might be given by some promoter of amusements and while this idea was entertained, they were not prepared to talk to anybody about the lease. It was finally concluded that no one was so well fitted to make the theater a success as is Manager Garrity, who has demonstrated his qualifications in that direction, and it is decided to let the old good relations continue.

FRED MURPHY OPENS NEW EXCHANGE IN BANGOR.

Fred. Murphy, formerly exchange agent for the Mutual Film Company, in Waterville, has opened the third exchange office in Bangor, representing the United Film Company. Mr. Murphy has a great many friends in eastern Maine who are pleased to welcome him to the new field. The General Film Co. is represented in Bangor by A. L. Ehrgott and the Universal by Chas. M. Stern.

ITEMS FROM PINE TREE STATE.

Tucker and Darling have leased the Camden Opera House from Fred. Chase of Orono and Dorchester and have taken possession.

The opera house at Gardiner, J. Burns, proprietor, and the Bath Opera House, E. L. Crawford, proprietor, have taken on Universal service.

Mrs. Imogene Pettingell of Ellsworth, proprietor of the Strand theater, was a visitor to town this week and reports that business is excellent.

The Bijou theater at Bangor began its moving picture program for the season on Aug. 30, with Francis X. Bushman in Graustark, an Essanay production.

Right to Take Films

Idaho Falls Has Interesting Suit Over Breaking of a Camera by Police of City—Exclusive Right to Film a Street Parade Had Been Given to Another Company—Heavy Damages Asked and Basis of the Suit.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHILE taking a moving picture of a round-up street parade in Idaho Falls, Bonneville county, Idaho, recently, A. B. Hager, of the Orpheum theater of that place, had his camera broken by the chief of police, Larry Hansen, and Dow Williams, according to a complaint filed in the district court of Bonneville county by counsel for the plaintiff. The suit was instituted to recover damages to the amount of $10,150. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, Hager, was taking a motion picture of the parade from a room in the Mills building over the Red Cross drug store and that while he was taking the picture and while the parade was passing, the said chief of police and other officers entered the room by force and compelled him to stop taking the picture and when he resisted, they broke the moving picture machine and placed Hager under arrest and took him down the street until they met a man who gave his word as a $500 bond for appearance in police court.

The suit asks $5,000 damages for the reels of the film which could have been exhibited and sold, and $5,000 as damage for the injury to character caused by the arrest and the mental and physical suffering caused by the arrest, also $100 is asked for the damage to the motion picture camera, and $50 dollars as a fee for the attorney who filed the suit.

It is stated in the complaint that the defendant, Dow Williams, caused the arrest, and it is said Hager was restrained from taking the picture because of the fact that the motion picture company in the city had been granted the exclusive right to take the round-up pictures.

It is understood that the defense claim they have a lawful right to grant exclusive moving pictures franchises to all the features of the round-up and the plaintiff claims that the law is that any person may take pictures of a public performance such as a free street parade and that this has been established before the supreme court of the United States.

SPOKANE GIRLS MAKE HITS.

Virginia Lee Riblet, a Spokane girl, played in "A Matrimonial Mix-Up" to 21,872 in four days, according to Ralph Ruffner, manager, in a play for which she prepared her own scenario. Miss Signe Auen, now with D. W. Griffith, appeared at the Empress in "The Mystic Jewel."

In "A Matrimonial Mix-Up," written by Miss Riblet and produced in Spokane by the Liberty for the Liberty a week before its presentation, Miss Riblet appears pleasing and some good comedy was worked into the production by William Cutts, general manager of the Liberty Amusement Company, who produced it. Miss Riblet is supported by Ed Carter and Will Paine, both of the Spokane social set, and 150 prominent Spokane society people appear in the party scene taken at the Riblet home.

A RETURN ENGAGEMENT BEATS FIRST RUN.

The ability of Mary Pickford to repeat an engagement and play to larger houses than the first time was demonstrated at the Clemmer theater for the four days ending Saturday, August 28. She played to 15,666 spectators for the four days, the house seating about 1,000, in a return engagement of "Tess of the Storm Country," according to reports furnished at the theater.

Miss Pickford appeared in the same production in the former Clemmer theater last October. The house, which had a capacity of 450, was filled to standing room for each show and many persons were turned away, while others crowded into the street to wait their turns to be admitted. I might add that during the four days I heard fully a dozen persons say they were going to or had witnessed the production for the second time, having been so impressed with the first presentation.

IT WAS MIRIAM NESBIT.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty, reports that he had one of the surprises of his life several nights ago. Mr. Ruffner plays the Hope-Jones Unit orchestra occasionally and had just left the organ and returned to the rear of the theater when approached by a stylishly dresed woman. He said:

"The woman approached me and asked for the manager, to which I replied I would answer for him. She then said, 'I am well pleased with your theater, it is a beautiful house, the pictures are well projected and the music is fine.'

"I said, 'You must be professional,' and was trying to place her, for her face was familiar, when she told me she was Miriam Nesbit, then I knew, for I had seen her in the pictures many times before she became a woman director for the Edison company."

HEARD IN SPOKANE.

Anita Stewart and Earl Williams made a hit at the Casino in the V-L-S-E production, "The Sins of the Mothers."

Lillian Gish was a good drawing card at the Lyric in "Captain Macklin," by Richard Harding Davis. Charles Chaplin in "A Night Out," also drew well.

"Whom the Gods Would Destroy," and Lillian Drew and Richard Travers in "Vain Justice," and Mae Marsh in "The Sands of Dee," all drew well at the Majestic last week.

PROGRESS THEATER, SAN FRANCISCO, IMPROVED.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, which conducts two large houses in the Fillmore street district of San Francisco, and one in the Mission, has commenced work on the improvement of the Progress theater at 1535 Fillmore street and plans to expend $25,000 in making this one of the finest houses in that section of the city. An entirely new front is to be put in, changes are to be made in the operating room, a motor-generator set added and an electric sign to cost about $1,000 will be installed. Changes will be made in the seating arrangement of the house and the theater will be redecorated. The admission price at this house has been five cents, but when the improvements are completed it is planned to advance it to ten cents.

General Manager L. L. Kahn has returned from a two weeks' trip to Portland, Seattle and British Columbia to secure a respite from business, but while away took advantage of the opportunity of inspecting some of the leading houses in the Northwest to secure ideas for the Progress and for other houses that are being planned for other districts of the city.

THEOGRAPH FILM CO. MOVES.

The Theograph Film Company is now settled in its new quarters in the Call Building, on New Montgomery street, having moved recently from the Metropolis Bank Building. This concern was organized some time ago for the purpose of manufacturing and distributing educational films for use in secular schools and a large organization has been built up for this purpose. A small moving picture projection machine, suitable for school work, will also be placed on the market.

ATLAS PORTABLE PROJECTORS.

The Atlas Educational Film Company, which recently established offices in the Pacific Building, demonstrated its portable types of projection machines suitable for school work at the recent convention of the National Education Association held here. The machines attracted much attention and a number of sales are expected to result from the exhibition. Two Atlas machines were recently disposed of to the San Francisco Board of Education for class-room work.

AT THE FRENCH EXHIBIT.

While no attempts have been made to strongly feature moving picture equipment in the French Building at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, a neat display is being made there and this is attracting considerable attention from exhibitors. The "Provo" moving picture camera of J. Debrie, an "Optima" perforating machine and a printing machine from the same maker, forms one of the most interesting parts of the display. Gaumont, of Paris, has one case of equipment, while J. Demaria furnishes a projection machine.

J. M. TRIPLETT LOCATES AT SAN FRANCISCO.

J. M. Triplett, formerly of Wenatchee, Wash., has located at San Francisco and is busily engaged in placing his patented loop setter on the market. A good demand has been worked up here for this device and the factory is quite busy.

EXCHANGE MAN WENT FISHING.

I. H. Lichtenstein, head of the Globe Film Exchange, has returned from a three weeks' fishing trip in the Klamath Falls country, where some excellent sport was enjoyed. Marion H. Kohn, formerly manager of the Apex exchange here, has been appointed resident buyer for the Globe Film Exchange in New York, and is sending out a number of large feature productions.

NEW POWER'S MODEL SEEN.

R. W. Horn, the representative of the Nicholas Power Company at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, recently received the new 6B model put out by this concern and this has been attracting a great deal of attention from operators. On the first day it was inspected by thirty-one local operators. The past two weeks have been the liveliest ones since the opening of the Exposition at this exhibit, due largely to the meeting of the National Educational Association.

GOLDEN STATE BRIEFS.

C. N. Carrington, Jr., of Santa Rosa, Cal., was here recently to visit the Exposition and look over offerings.

Edward H. Kemp has completed a set of moving pictures on the Grand Canyon for Dr. Harry O. Reik, an eastern lecturer.

John Ratto, of Jackson, Cal., was here a short time ago.

The official Lincoln Highway Association party, headed by Henry C. Ostermann, reached San Francisco recently with more than ten thousand feet of film taken between New York and the Exposition City. Some of the most interesting of this is now being shown at the Exposition.

F. A. Richey, of Ray's Photo-play, Sacramento, Cal., was here recently for a short stay and stated that the trouble that had been experienced with the operator's union there had been settled.

The Parnassus, formerly known as the Sunset theater, located in the Sunset district, has been sold by C. Stanley to Andrew J. Hamilton, who is making a number of improvements.

The houses in the North Beach section are preparing for a good run of transient business now that the salmon fishermen are arriving from Alaska. There are no moving picture houses on the water-front so the crowds that frequent this section gravitate toward North Beach to seek amusement.

TRIANGLE FILM CLOSES DENVER OFFICES.

Walter S. Rand, Prominent Mutual Man, Chosen to Manage the New Exchange.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

THE new Triangle Film corporation is to open an exchange in Denver in a few weeks. Walter S. Rand, a man well known in the moving picture world is to be associated with it. Mr. Rand, Sr., had the Gem, the second moving picture show in Denver, on the corner of 15th and Champa. In 1909 the father and son operated the Globe Film Exchange branch in Denver.

Walter S. Rand then became the manager of the Mutual Film Exchange here and was transferred to Salt Lake City as district manager for Salt Lake and Butte. In 1914 he became special representative for the Mutual, with jurisdiction over the offices at Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Seattle, Portland, Spokane and Phoenix. In this capacity he has been with the Mutual people up till the last few weeks, when he resigned to become association with the Triangle Corporation.

The Triangle Corporation is fitting up handsome, and well equipped offices at 1435 Champa. The offices themselves, are fireproof, and include all modern equipment, including a fireproof vault for the films.

DENVER'S NEW STRAND OPEN.

The new Strand theater, which has been in the course of construction for the past six months, opened Saturday, September 4th, at 1 P. M., with Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow in "The Second in Command."

FILM MEN VISITORS.

Mr. F. H. Cohen, manager of the Denver Paramount exchange, has gone to Chicago to attend the meeting of the Paramount exchange managers and publicity men. Mr. L. Marcus, president of the Notable Film Company and Mr. George E. Carpenter, the Notable publicity man, stopped off here on Monday, August the 30th, to look over the moving picture condition, and to see old friends. Mr. Marcus was well pleased with the situation here, except for the fact that so many of the moving picture houses run such splendid films for five cents admission. Mr. Marcus was pointing out how that indirectly reflected back on them, for, if the price is not secured for the picture, it cannot pay the producers to put out such expensive and finished films.

Mr. Marcus and Mr. Carpenter will stop off with Mr. Cohen on their way from Chicago, for a day or so.

MANAGER BAXTER GIVES ORGAN TO CHURCH.

Mr. Baxter, the manager of the Isis, has just given another proof of his big heartedness. He has an Estey organ, but has just installed a new Wurlitzer. The Estey instrument cost $10,000 and is in perfect condition. Father Burke, pastor of the Church of the Holy Ghost came to him to buy it. However, Mr. Baxter announced that he would give it to him, instead.

FORMER DENVER NEWSPAPER MAN TO WRITE FOR MUTUAL.

Denver people remember Charles Van Loan, as the sports editor and special feature writer for one of the local newspapers. He was here in 1907 and 1908. He has become a famous scenario writer, and is well known as the author of the great Parvin motion picture stories that ran with such remarkable success in The Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Van Loan has been retained by the Mutual people to write the scenarios and title the films in his own breezy, original style, for they are going to make a picture of these stories, and it will be called "Buck Parvin and the Movies." Denver people will be interested to hear of this latest work of Mr. Van Loan.

Strike Truce at Edmonton

Trouble Between Management of Pantages Theater and Its Union Employes Partly Settled — Case of the Discharged Stage Carpenter Being Arbitrated — New Trouble at the Bijou May Complicate Matters.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AFTER being at outs for three days, the parties to the strike of the Pantages stage employees at Edmonton effected a temporary settlement of their differences, and through the diplomatic offices of A. Farmilo, secretary of the Trades and Labor Council, all the men except the stage carpenter returned to work. The latter, whose dismissal by Manager M. A. Milligan of the Pantages was the cause of the strike, remained under suspension pending a settlement of his case by a board of arbitration. It was agreed that the strikers and the management of the theatre should each choose a representative—they in turn to select a member of the Trades and Labor Council. These three men will deal with the question of his dismissal, and decide whether or not it was justified. Other charges regarding his conduct will be dealt with later.

When it was thought that the trouble was over, and managers were beginning to breathe easier, the whole union question was re-opened by the sudden dismissal by the management of the Bijou of its electrician and stage carpenter—(the latter being E. J. Wolfe, business agent of Edmonton Local No. 210, I. A. T. S. E., and the man really in charge of the strike at the Pantages). The union musicians at the Bijou remained at work, however, and it is thought that they will prefer to wait advices from the Trades and Labor Council, or to rely on arbitration, rather than join the discharged employees in sympathy.

Business Agent Wolfe was inclined to attribute his dismissal to his activity in connection with the Pantages trouble, but Manager Fiddes of the Bijou stated that such was not the case, and that the dismissals would hold good irrespective of the action of the management of Pantages.

Meanwhile, a number of exhibitors are making arrangements which will enable them to continue business without interruption in case of a general strike.

FROM CENSOR'S REPORT.

Of 539 reels submitted to the censor at Winnipeg during the month, 38 were rejected, while 299 cuts were made from 133 additional reels. As showing the care of manufacturers in this respect, only two cuts were necessary to eliminate murders, and two for robbery, although 36 excisions were made for "threatening with gun," 25 for shooting, 18 for burglary, 11 for fighting, and 4 for the crime of "contemplating suicide." Fifteen letters and 41 subtitles were also cut out, presumably to the detriment of the stories.

FILLED PROGRAM FROM OUTSIDE.

Because he brought in some films from outside points to complete his show, A. Roubert, proprietor of the Globe, at Winnipeg, recently ran afoul of the government's theatre license inspectors, who threatened to assess him the regular $250 exchange license fee. The difficulty arose over the fact, as claimed by Mr. Roubert, that the Winnipeg film exchanges were discriminating against him, and refusing to supply him with all the films he required. This, he stated, was because he was running a 5-cent show; and the ten-cent houses, combining against him, had exerted pressure on the local exchanges. Color was given this statement when the treasury department, as a result of Mr. Roubert's complaint, called up the various exchanges. One, it is said, announced that it had all it could do to supply the ten cent houses, while another gave a similar answer, concluding, so the report says, "with a few added cracks at Roubert." The offending exhibitor was informed that if he could not make satisfactory arrangements with the exchanges, and continued to import films for his own use, he would be forced to pay the regular exchange license fee.

VANCOUVER BRIEF NOTES.

In Calgary, R. J. Lydiatt, manager of the Grand, denied that there was any thought of superseding vaudeville with straight picture programs in that house, and mentioned Pantages Manager C. G. Milligan as authority for the statement.

World Features Limited, distributors for Western Canada for the World Film Corporation, agents in this territory for the Minusa Cines Products company, announce the sale of the first Minusa gold fibre screen in Western Canada. This has just been installed, at an approximate cost of $500, in the Regent Theatre at Calgary, which is now showing World features. H. B. Wright, secretary and treasurer of the distributing company, has just returned from a trip through Alberta and Saskatchewan, and in a recent letter states that he found the exhibitors all very optimistic, in view of the splendid crop outlook. All the exhibitors, says Mr. Wright, seem to be clamoring for good features and Charlie Chaplin. The Minusa screen is handled in British Columbia by the Dominion Film Exchange, Vancouver.

Considerable interest was aroused in Penticton, B. C., by an advertising campaign conducted jointly by the Empire theatre and the local newspaper. Every week for a month previous to showing the first installment of "The Black Box" the paper ran coupons which were to be filled out with guesses as to the contents of a black box at the theatre, and the contents of which were hinted at in the paper. Passes to all installments of the serial were given those who guessed correctly, using the newspaper coupons. Almost everyone in town, public officials included, entered the contest.

The Camp Sewell soldier pictures have been a great success in Winnipeg, and in addition to raising a large amount for the Red Cross and Patriotic Funds, are said to have stimulated recruiting to a marked degree.

The use of a moving picture theatre as a court in which to hold a murder trial is rather a novelty, but the little theatre at Peace River crossing, in Alberta, has just been utilized for this purpose, in one of the most dramatic trials in the history of the Northland. The judge and counsel traveled overland 350 miles north from Edmonton to conduct the case.

The Johnson-Willard pictures played for two crowded days at the Princess Theatre, Edmonton.

A visit to the General Film Co. exchange a few days ago found Manager Meagher preparing for a renovation of the offices. Mr. Meagher is now sending Griffith's perennial spectacle "Judith of Bethulia," over the rounds again, and reports good business with this feature all over the Province.

The Sun theatre, in the Japanese quarter, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened by B. Griffith, using Mutual service.

Manager S. B. Taube of the Universal exchange has just brought in "Damon and Pythias," and reports that he has it booked up solid. It opened in this city at the Colonial. Other big features are soon to be brought in by the Universal.

George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead, special representatives of the Selig Polyscope company, have arrived in Winnipeg with the nine reel Rex Beach feature "The Spoilers."

Price Increase Proposed

Portland, Oregon, Downtown Houses Contemplate Rise of Admission to 15 Cents —Increased Cost of Service the Reason—Newspaper Gets Opinions of Prominent Citizens on Portland's Censorship.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

DECLARING that first-class picture shows at 10 cents puts the big photoplay houses in the light of charitable institutions to the Portland public, the managers of several of the downtown houses have gotten together and an increase of the admission price to 15 cents is looked for shortly. The managers advise that film service costs them nearly 50 per cent more than it did a year ago and with competition keen for big features, the service cost has reached a point where 10 cents admission is no longer profitable. With the standard of film production becoming higher every day and incidentally the cost of service increasing commensurate with the cost of production, it is folly to retain the old price of ten cents established in the infancy of the industry, said one of the exhibitors.

Manager James's increasing the admission price to the Majestic to 15 cents has been a complete success and shows that the public is willing to pay the price if value is to be had. Mr. Carl Ray, owner of a large zoo in Los Angeles and the producer of "Vengeance of the Wild," was a recent visitor in Portland and he wondered at the low price of admission charged in the first class houses, calling attention to the fact that the same class of shows were running in many other cities at 10, 20 and 30 cents. A rumor that the Globe on Upper Washington Street was to raise its admission to 10 cents was denied by the management.

UNION MUSICIANS WITHDRAW DEMANDS.

After many conferences, the troubles between the musicians and exhibitors extending over several months have been amicably adjusted and the musicians have withdrawn the minimum man law promulgated against the employers of union music. A working agreement extending over a specified period of time is now in contemplation between the exhibitors and musicians.

METRO'S PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN.

P. E. Noble, of the local office of Grombacher and Bailey, distributors of Metro, has prepared designs for 24 sheet posters which are to be used in the publicity campaign now being started by Metro in this territory. The designs cover the four biggest releases of the company and the posters will be put in every town in the Northwest. A Portland firm, the Holly Press, has secured the contract for the printing.

ON THE GRILLS.

To show that the Portland public has not lost interest in the agitation against the no-appeal censorship ordinance, the Morning Oregonian printed opinions of many of Portland's influential citizens on the issue. "Poor public!" was the sentiment accredited to P. E. Sullivan, president of the Portland Press Club, on the censorship question, and County Clerk Jno. B. Coffey, County Judge T. J. Cleeton, Circuit Judge W. N. Gatens, Deputy District Attorney T. G. Ryan, and C. C. Colt, president of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, expressed themselves as favoring an appealable ordinance.

The inspection of theaters being conducted by the censor board as to the films run, the lighting and ventilation, is about complete, 13 theatres out of the 50 in the city having yet to be viewed.

The Retail Merchants Bureau of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, of which W. E. Conklin is the secretary, is investigating the fire ordinance applying to exchanges recently proposed by the Fire Marshal.

P. J. FEENEY MAY BUILD OPERA HOUSE.

P. J. Feeney, president of Jones sanitary market, has purchased the Bangor opera house site, which has been vacant since the destruction of the building in January, 1914, from the Opera House association for $20,000. Mr. Feeney says that contrary to a published report, there is no one associated with him in the deal. He also states that it is his plan to erect a combined business block and Opera House providing an interest in the enterprise is manifested by Bangor people to the extent of subscribing for stock. It is his intention to include in the building a general food store. It would be his plan to sho moving pictures when legitimate dramas were not being presented in the new building.

NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

M. Rosenberg, late of Minneapolis, has purchased the interests of the Lesser Film Company in Seattle and opened the Northwest Feature Film Company with offices in Portland and Seattle. Al. Rosenberg will have charge of the Seattle office. Mr. Rosenberg formerly conducted a film exchange here and will share his old stand with the Northwest Weekly. In the same building with Mr. Rosenberg, Happy Jack Walker has opened a vaudeville booking office.

OREGON NOTES.

H. Trull and wife, Sherry's theater, La Grande, Ore., have just completed an extensive motor trip through Eastern Oregon.

The Empire theater, Medford, Oregon, has closed.

The Orpheum theater, Seaside, Oregon, has closed, the summer season being over. E. V. Ransome, the manager, advises the venture has been very successful.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

C. M. Simmons, of the Triangle, passed through Portland on his way to Seattle, where he will open a distributing office for the new product.

Portland theaters opening this week are the Crystal, by C. A. Rugg, the Grand, in Woodstock, by J. C. P. Westengard, and the Acme.

T. C. Malcolm, manager of the General Film company's Portland office, has gone to Los Angeles for his vacation. D. P. Merwin, former branch manager in Portland, is relieving Mr. Malcolm. Mr. Merwin motored from Seattle to Portland and he and T. J. Newell, manager of the Echo theater, spent a pleasant morning recently swapping reminiscences about the chuckholes in the road.

Portland visitors this week were: E. Lakeman, Rex theater, Chinook, Wash.; P. F. Evans, Columbia theater, St. Helens, Ore.

The Fairfield Opera House, with combined motion pictures and dancing, opened for the season on Saturday, Sept. 4.

PROMINENT FILM MEN VISIT DALLAS.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DURING the last two weeks, Dallas exchanges have been visited by many "big guns" in the film game. Andrew J. Cobe, of the Alliance, at New York, had a day's consultation with Messrs. Hill and Lowe, of the local Alliance releasing concern; the Box Office Attraction Co., the firm under which the Fox productions are handled in Texas territory, was visited by A. S. Carlos, of New York, and Sam Dembow, special representative of the company; The Western Automatic Music Co., local distributors of Wurlitzer instruments, was visited by A. G. Clancey, of the Wurlitzer factories at Cincinnati, Ohio. and the World Film exchange was visited by the new Southern District manager, J. Klein.

NEW TRIANGLE FILM OFFICE.

The new Triangle Film Corporation's quarters, 1814 Commerce street, is rapidly being remodeled for the opening of the exchange September 15. The Triangle's location is in the "Film Row," being next door to the V-L-S-E and the downstairs entrance to the Consolidated. In this same block are found about twelve exchanges. L. B. Remy, the local manager of the Triangle, was formerly an exhibitor in Fort Worth, was President of the M. P. E. L. of A. in Texas, and has for the past year or so been connected with the Mutual, handling the "Million Dollar Mystery," Mutual Master-pictures, etc. He put over these pictures with great success and is well liked by the exhibitors he is acquainted with in the southwest—and incidentally, he knows about 99 out of every 100.

PROGRESSIVE FEATURE GETS THE GERMAN WAR FILMS.

The Progressive Feature Film Co., of Dallas, of which L. W. Miller is the head, has recently secured the New Yorker Staats Zeitung German War Films for the southwestern territory. Mr. Miller started them off with a booking at the Old Mill, Dallas, the house that is considered the "Strand of the southwest."

EXCHANGE EMPLOYES PLAY BALL.

Baseball has invaded filmdom in Dallas. A little late in the season, that's true, but nevertheless, the fever is strong and it has hit almost every exchange and theater in the city. The Consolidated exchange, through their hustler, Jimmy Kelly, organized one team, of which the members were employed in various of the Commerce street exchanges. Another team was organized to play the Consols, which was instigated by C. A. Walker, of the Southern Theater News. L. B. Remy heard of the new team being organized, so he "framed up" with Walker's bunch, the outcome of which said Remy deposited some money for baseballs and the team henceforth has gone under the name of the Triangle.

The two teams have met three times in the past three weeks, with the Triangles winning out in each contest. Kelly says there is only one thing to blame for the defeats administered to his team, and that is hard luck. He says his bunch had the second and third games won right up to the last inning or two and then old hard luck swooped down on 'em. Both teams will meet again after a couple weeks' rest for the championship series.

Two teams are being "framed" now—one made up of exchange managers and the other of exhibitors—and "some" game is expected to be played soon.

R. B. MORRIS RESIGNS.

R. B. Morris, for several years head of the supply department of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., at Dallas, has resigned and it is reported that he will become general sales manager for a southern screen manufacturing concern.

E. T. PETER INVESTIGATING.

E. T. Peter, of the Dallas United exchange, has a very important question that he has been propounding to bother exchangemen without a satisfactory answer as yet. The question was asked him in a letter from a would-be scenario writer, and he has been trying hard to secure the information to answer the question. The lady wanted to know "about how many words it takes to make a good five-reel feature." Anyone having the technical knowledge desired will please communicate with Mr. Peter.

LACK OF CO-OPERATION IN FILM MAKERS NOTED.

Exhibitor Complains of Heedlessness on Part of Manufacturers.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Corespondent, 503 Free Press Building.

AN exhibitor dropped into the office the other day and said to the writer: "I wish you would send something in to the World about the lack of co-operation on the part of some of the film manufacturers. I have asked four of the large companies to send me certain information regarding their productions, and not one of them did so. Instead, they sent me something entirely different from what I asked for. I wrote one company for photographs of a production I had booked and they sent me photos of everything else but the right one; another company refused to send more than one set of prints; still another failed to answer my letter. It may be that the heads of these concerns do not know of these conditions, but it's time that they took greater interest to see that the exhibitor was better taken care of on these publicity matters. Co-operation is one of the essentials between producer and exhibitor."

D. LEO DENNISON OPENS LOCAL PARAMOUNT OFFICE.

The Paramount Film Corporation has opened a Detroit exchange at 278 East Jefferson avenue, in charge of D. Leo Dennison, formerly of Pittsburgh and New York City. Mr. Dennison was here for some time looking for a location. The building he selected is a new one, two stories high, only a few blocks from Woodward avenue, and has a white tile front. Skylights over the second floor, with large windows in front and back, make the building especially desirable. The Paramount has its shipping and publicity departments on the first floor, while the second floor is given over to the general offices and the storage of film. When the writer dropped in there Sept. 1st workmen were still putting in partitions and making other needed installations. It will probably be the 15th or 20th of September before the entire building will be put into completed condition.

METRO'S NEW QUARTERS.

The Metro Film Corporation has opened its new Detroit headquarters at 159 West Jefferson avenue, occupying the second floor, which is directly above the main floor quarters of the Universal Film Exchange. The new Metro quarters are very elaborate. The front part has been carpented in green and there is a private office for the manager, who is George W. Weeks. Then comes a small reception room, back of which are the shipping and stock rooms. The Metro offices were formerly in the Campau building. The Michigan Metro Corporation is now in the hands of A. Arthur Caille, Henry J. Guthard, George W. Weeks and a few others.

GEORGE OWENS TO MANAGE THE KNICKERBOCKER.

George "Doc" Owens is the new manager of the Knickerbocker theater. "Doc," as he is familiarly known, has been associated with Frederick Ingersoll, one of the principal owners of the Knickerbocker, for the past twelve years. For six years he managed Widdington Park in Hot Springs, Ark., at the same time handling the Lyric and Princess theaters. The Knickerbocker theater is doing a splendid business, running all of the leading features, the regular policy being a daily change, although occasionally a "hit" is run two days. Fred Grennell, of the Detroit Free Press staff, is the Knickerbocker's press agent.

WILL R. SHEEHAN VISITS.

Will R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Detroit on Wednesday, Sept. 1. Paul Mooney, manager of the Fox office in Cleveland, also came over for the day. Mr. Sheehan told the World correspondent that his firm was producing a film in Central America with Annette Kellerman

GARDNER TO MANAGE STRAND IN SAGINAW.

L. H. Gardner has resigned as manager of the Rosedale theater, owned by William F. Klatt, and has become associated with the Butterfield interests. He will manage the new Strand, in Saginaw, which is scheduled to open Sept. 28. This house will seat 1,800 people, will play feature productions, and its prices will be 10, 15 and 25 cents. The house was formerly conducted as the Jeffers theater. Mr. Gardner is succeeded at the Rosedale by Charles McVicker, formerly manager of the Gratiot, and who has been connected with Mr. Klatt for the past year. Mr. Gardner, by the way, was connected with the Butterfield theaters some years ago in Kalamazoo and Battle Creek.

NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL FILM OPENS OFFICES.

The National Educational Film Company has opened Detroit offices in the Free Press building. It is official local photographer for the Selig Company, and will make independent pictures of an educational nature. J. A. Burke is president; H. M. Mavin is vice-president and director; William Beaufore is secretary and treasurer, and Frank Marshall is general manager. The company is also getting out a weekly news film for the Metro.

UNITED AMUSEMENT COMPANY ORGANIZES.

The United Amusement Co., of Detroit, has filed articles of association with the Secretary of State at Lansing, Mich. The company is capitalized for $75,000, and the stockholders are: Bert C. Whitney, proprietor of the Detroit opera house; A. J. Gillingham, owner of the Empire theater, Detroit, manager of the Detroit branch of the General Film Company, and owner of a chain of theaters in Grand Rapids; Sam Levey, manager of the Cadillac theater; J. A. Fitzgerald, stockholder in the Metro Corporation, and Frank Drew, owner of the Avenue theater and the builder of the new Drury Lane theater. No definite announcement is made as to the policy of the company. When seen by the World representative, Mr. Whitney stated: "We are not organized for any special reason. All of us have been in the show business for many years, and if anything comes along that looks good, either in the way of a good film or a legitimate attraction, we are in a position to take it on."

ON DETROIT'S MANY THEATERS.

Bert C. Whitney said recently: "I really don't know what is going to become of all of these theaters. I have never heard or seen anything like it. I am sure they will not all last. The limit must come some time. The trouble is that men build theaters who know nothing about the show business, its possibilities or its future. The other day a man came to me and wanted me to go on the board of directors of a new company he was going to promote, offering me so much free stock. I told him no, because I really could not see it and because I did not want my name attached to a proposition as a bait to get in others to buy stock. Now, don't misunderstand me. I do believe in the motion picture business. It is certainly going to be permanent. I am more enthusiastic about the business today than I have ever been, although we play legitimate attractions 40 weeks out of the year, but there are some things I do not believe in, and one is building theaters on every tenth corner."

ABE SIEGEL OPENS OFFICE.

Abe Siegel, who recently resigned as manager of the Detroit branch of the Box Office Attraction Co., has opened offices in the Peter Smith building and has a number of productions to offer Michigan exhibitors.

MAJESTIC AT GRAND RAPIDS OPENS.

A. J. Gillingham, proprietor of the Empire theater, feels very much elated over the auspicious opening of the Majestic theater, Grand Rapids, which took place Saturday evening, Aug. 28. The whole town turned out to get a peep at the new Majestic, which is now controlled by Mr. Gillingham. It was utterly impossible to accommodate all who came for the opening. They came on foot, by street cars and motor cars. The local newspapers described the event as "the greatest theater open in Grand Rapids."

CAUGHT IN DETROIT.

C. T. Hulbert has sold the New Mystic theater at Madrid to D. W. and G. W. Evans, who also have taken over the lease from Johnson & Swanson. William Evans, a son of G. W. Evans, will be manager.

Herbert & Leach, of the Opera house at Atlantic, are installing new seats, increasing the capacity, and putting in a new front. A permanent inclined floor will replace the false floor and the house will be used no more for dances or fairs.

Abraham Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Detroit August 21, 22 and 23. While here he closed a deal whereby the Broadway-Strand will become first-run theater for Fox films.

The date set for the opening of the new Lakewood theater, Jefferson and Oneida streets, is Sept. 7. John C. Cutler is president of the company and Charles J. Roberts, vice-president and manager. The Lakewood will seat 1,300.

Sidney Abel, the new Cleveland manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, was in Detroit recently and called on R. R. Hutton, the Detroit representative, who maintains offices in the Peter Smith building. Mr. Abel reported business conditions remarkably good for this time of the year, and said that he can only see long runs for V-L-S-E features. Many theaters that never ran a feature more than one day are now giving two and three days on V-L-S-E features. The Family theater, Detroit, which started two days on Big Four stuff, is now running it four days.

The Michigan Securities Commission has passed on the securities of the Harris & Warren Amusement Co., Wyandotte, Mich.

The Strand theater, Grand River and Fourteenth street, owned by John H. Kunsky, held its opening Saturday, Sept. 4.

Carston W. Spanuth, special representative of the Central Film Co., Chicago, Ill., has opened a Detroit office at 414 Peter Smith building.

The Bell Film Exchange, formerly on the 8th floor of the Peter Smith building, has moved to No. 414, the same building. J. Rosen is manager.

The management of the Alhambra theater has set aside ten large comfortable boxes, each with six chairs, for special matinee parties, making the price 25 cents per seat.

The writer has been informed of another new motion picture house to be built on Woodward avenue within the half-mile circle, plans for which are now being drawn, and requiring only one signature to make the deal final. It will be a large theater, seating under 3,000 people.

E. M. Simons, manager of the New Family theater, Adrian, Mich., has just finished extensive alterations to his theater.

Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway Feature Film Co., Detroit, is "cleaning up" on the feature, "The Melting Pot," for which he has the Michigan rights. This film played three weeks at the Broadway-Strand to big business. It has played one or two days at all of the leading outskirt theaters, and it is booked (two copies) solid until Christmas time throughout the upper and lower peninsulas. Mr. Garson also has the state on "The Christian," "Cabiria," "The Ordeal" and others.

NOTES FROM SOUTHWEST.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

NATHAN & NAMAN have purchased the Arlington opera house, at Marlin, Tex. The building was damaged in the storm which recently swept the southwest, but the new owners plan to expend $6,000 this fall in remodeling it into a modern photoplay and theatrical house.

James E. Downen and Fred Harle, of Durant, Okla., will equip a building on Main street in that city for use as a moving picture theater to be known as the Colonial.

Business men of Tecumseh, Okla., have engaged the local picture shows for Saturday afternoons and are entertaining their farmer friends.

The Houston Post and the Queen theater, in Houston, Texas, enabled the kiddies at the Industrial Home to see a matinee of "The Ring-Tailed Rhinoceros."

The Globe opera house, at Medford, Okla., was destroyed by fire which swept the business portion of the town.

The Kempner theater, at Little Rock, Ark., planned to have a two-reel picture, "The Queen of the Shops," made for showing at that house the week of September 6-11. It was planned to use 1,000 persons in a mob scene at the Iron Mountain Railroad shop.

The Joie theater, at Fort Smith, Ark., gave a special Saturday matinee show of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" for children.

Manager Harry Van Demark, of the Isis theater, at Houston, Tex., has been giving special childrens' shows on Wednesday mornings. The time will be changed to Saturday mornings when school starts.

When the Rex theater, at Waco, Tex., showed "Little Lord Fauntleroy" on Saturday special inducements were offered to get the children there in the morning. One hundred pounds of candy was given to those arriving before 12 o'clock.

"His Bunkie," the Vitagraph staged in San Antonio and Fort Sam Houston, played to good business at the Empire theater, in San Antonio, Tex.

The New theater in Fort Smith, Ark., opened as a combination moving picture and road show house with the feature film, "Neptune's Daughter."

The Grand Opera house at San Antonio, Texas, has been featuring comedies made in that city by the new Excel Fotoplay Company. Among the films were "His Umps," a baseball comedy, featuring Ed. Sedgewick, "The Picnickers" and "Flirtatious Mr. Gubbs." During this engagement the three Sedgewicks, Ed., Josie and Eileen, played in vaudeville as well as pictures at the Grand.

The Yale Amusement Company of Oklahoma City, Okla., has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are O. W. Connally, C. M. Munson and X. Epstein.

Miss Fay Tincher has been visiting her mother and sister in El Paso, Texas.

The Airdome at McGehee, Ark., has moved to a new location on Railroad street in that city.

A. J. Xydias of the Rex at Houston, Texas, advertised his first run Chaplin shows by acting as judge at a Chaplin contest at a local park. Season passes to the Rex were prizes and every lady attending a dance was given a ticket to see "The Bank" at the Rex.

Charles Mahone has purchased the building at Cordell, Okla., in which his moving picture theater is located and has been increasing the seating capacity from 200 to 400 by building a 40-foot addition.

A camera man roamed ten streets of Jonesboro, Ark., getting slide material for the Princess theater.

The Odeon theater at Bartlesville, Okla., gave a free matinee of Thanhouser's "The Flying Twins" to all children under twelve years of age.

V. L. Wade, of Frederick, Okla., is remodeling the Sledge building in Duncan, Okla., for use as a moving picture theater.

R. E. Peacock has opened a moving picture theater in the McCarter building at Pond Creek, Okla.

The old home of the Queen theater at De Queen, Ark., will be used by the Princess theater which some time ago was consolidated with the Queen. The building has been redecorated and remodeled.

B. F. Libert has opened the Erie theater at Clement, Okla.

M. L. Oppenheimer is erecting a moving picture theater seating 1,000 and office building on West Houston street at San Antonio, Texas.

KARL GUIOTT, THE HAPPIEST MAN.

By Abraham Nelson.

Fifteen years ago, Karl Guiott, carrying his violin under his arm, was walking along the street of his native town when suddenly everything went black before his eyes and upon awakening from the daze into which the suddenness of the happening had thrown him, he was totally blind. The cause of the blindness was never determined and the tap, tap of the blind man's cane became a familiar sound upon the sidewalks of Pendleton, Oregon.

With the advent of moving pictures into the little town, Karl Guiott sat in the orchestra pit before the screen and played his violin following the promptings of the leader of the orchestra and for many years the people of Pendleton went to the Pastime and Orpheum theaters to hear the wonderful blind musician play stirring melodies to the pictures he could not see. He opened a music studio in his little home on Turner street and in spite of his handicap he became a useful and honored citizen of the Eastern Oregon town.

A fortnight or so ago Karl Guiott was feeling his way along the sidewalk from his home to the picture theater where he played when, as suddenly as the happening of fifteen years ago, a flood of light passed into his long sightless eyes and his vision returned to him. A few days ago he saw his first picture show, a five reel subject. He marveled at its realism, wondered at the lifelike size the characters attained upon the screen and expressed an inconsolable regret that the hundreds of pictures to which the strains from h violin had added realism for the people of Pendleton were forever beyond his view.

In the mornings, when the picture theaters are not open, Mr. Guiott's friends, of whom he has many, call on him with their automobiles to show him the changes that have taken place in Pendleton during his fifteen years in darkness. And those changes are many, for in fifteen years Pendleton has grown from a frontier village, picturesque with its cowboys and Indians, to one of the most up-to-date and flourishing cities in Eastern Oregon. Mr. Guiott's favorite pastime is to walk along the streets over which he formerly picked his way with a cane. He walks with a smile on his face, for every step is a revelation, every object an enchantment and he makes no secret of the fact that he is the happiest man in the world'

KALEM.

THE CALL OF THE DANCE (Broadway Favorites—Special—Four Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast includes Yancsi Dolly, George E. Romain, Guy Coombs, E. T. Rosemon, Orlando Lloyd and Frank Leonard.

Jim Hall tries to discourage his daughter Natalie's love of dancing, but the girl finds a warm friend in old Carlo, a musician. Natalie's beauty attracts Brace's attention. At the latter's orders, Spud Howell kidnaps the girl. Hall, attempting to interfere, is slain. Marston, assistant district attorney, is ignorant of the fact that his uncle, Fisk, is the head of the vice ring. Marston discovers Natalie's predicament and rescues her. Falling in love with the girl, he obtains a position for her in a friend's office.

Natalie resigns when her employer later makes love to her. The girl lands a position in the chorus of a musical comedy company. Her dancing attracts the manager's attention and when the principal falls ill, Natalie takes her place. The girl's wonderful dancing makes her famous. Marston, who had lost track of Natalie, finds her again when he visits the theater. Fisk, madly in love with the girl, invites her to a dinner he is giving. Carlo, employed at the restaurant where this function is held, recognizes in Fisk the man who had blasted his life.

When Natalie and Fisk's friends accompany the man to his apartment, Carlo follows. Marston trails the party in an auto. Later, Fisk contrives to get Natalie alone. Marston, hearing the girl's cries for help, batters down the door. He comes in time to see Carlo, who had climbed through a window, shoot the girl's assailant. Brace, in coming to his master's assistance, shoots at Marston but misses and kills Carlo. While the murderer is placed under arrest, Marston takes Natalie in his arms.

DOUBLE-CROSSING MARMADUKE (Sept. 21).—The cast includes Bud Duncan, L. Trembly, Dave Morris, Margaret Keyes and Ethel Teare.

Her envy excited by the rings on Gwendoline's fingers, Violet urges her gentlemanly lover to get them for her. Marmaduke attemps to carry out his lady-fair's request, but is rudely bumped on the nose by Bud, who comes to Gwendoline's rescue. Horace falls in love with Violet. This bold beauty, however, declares she will marry none but the man who brings her Gwendoline's jewels. Horace and Marmaduke thereupon set forth to burglarize the girl's home. They come upon Bud, who has been given a job as chauffeur, and knock him over the head.

This done, the kind-hearted crooks enter the house, pick up the jewel case, commandeer an auto and then make their get-away. Bud recovers and takes up the chase. Accompanied by a number of daring policemen, Bud dashes after the fugitives who desert their auto and enter a house. The chase leads to the roof. There Bud closes with Marmaduke, while Horace continues to flee. The combatants fall through a skylight, smash through five floors and land in the gangster's den in the basement. The police enter the den at the same time. Proudly carrying the jewel case back to Gwendoline, Bud tells her the story. Smiling pityingly upon him, the girl shows her hero that the jewels had never left her fingers.

THE WOLF'S PREY (Episode No. 12 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Special—Two Parts—Sept. 22).—The cast includes William H. West, Ollie Kirkby, Frank Jonasson and Marin Sais.

George Duncan, who is stopping at the Grand Hotel with his wife, Dorothy, is called out of town. Mrs. Duncan, giddy and pleasure-loving, is introduced to Langdon, who is also living at the Grand. The pearls worn by the foolish woman excite Langdon's cupidity. Upon returning to her room, Mrs. Duncan repents of her violent flirtation and realizes the depth of the love she bears her husband. Acting upon an impulse, she writes him a letter, addressing the note merely to "Dearest." Langdon, who occupies the adjoining room, steals the letter from the bellboy who is sent to mail it. The contents of the missive make a powerful blackmailing instrument.

First, however, the scoundrel attempts to burglarize Mrs. Duncan's room. Failing, Langdon displays the letter. He threatens to show it to her husband and thus induce the latter to believe the woman guilty of a clandestine love affair. Terror-stricken, Mrs. Duncan allows the cur to depart with her jewels. Instead of leaving the hotel, Langdon remains. It is his intention to further victimize Mrs. Duncan. Realizing this, the woman sensibly decides to place the matter before the hotel management. As the result, Francis Ballou takes charge of the case. She confronts Langdon, but the latter defies her to find the gems or the letter. A clever ruse enables Francis to locate the hiding place of the jewels and the document. She restores them to Mrs. Duncan. Because of the latter's desire to avoid publicity, the human wolf is allowed to leave the hotel. Her lesson learned, Mrs. Duncan promises to abstain from flirtations in the future.

A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE (An Alice Joyce Re-Issue—Sept. 24).—The cast includes George Middleton, Alice Joyce, Tom Moore, Stuart Holmes and Hazel Neason.

Old Tom Wells, a victim of drink, is unable to pay the rent when Steve, the young landlord, appears upon the scene. Their stormy interview is broken by the arrival of Alice, Tom's daughter, whom the landlord has made many unsuccessful efforts to court. Alice, who is engaged to Martin, a farmer, entreats her father to overcome his weakness. Wells, knowing he will be dispossessed, becomes desperate and starts for the village to obtain money. The drunkard attempts to steal Steve's horse, but is caught in the act by the landlord who announces his determination to throw the man into prison unless Alice consents to become his wife.

The unhappy father therefore refuses to permit Martin to visit Alice, explaining to the latter that he is in Steve's power. Alice, to save her father, sacrifices her happiness and marries Steve. Wells makes his home with the young couple but soon finds that he is in the way. Meanwhile, Martin, heartbroken, leaves for the village. Wells, forced from the house, dies after dispatching a note to Martin beseeching the latter to look after the unhappy daughter. Steve meets a young woman and plans to elope with her. Returning home for money, the man finds Alice gazing upon Martin's picture. Wild with rage, he attacks her. Martin, fulfilling his trust, arrives upon the scene. In his jealousy, Steve attempts to shoot the young man but the weapon is accidentally discharged. The bullet strikes the brutal husband, killing him.

A MATTER OF SECONDS (Episode No. 46, of the "Hazards of Helen Railroad" Series—Sept. 25).—The cast includes Helen Holmes, Robyn Adair and E. Z. Roberts.

Dawson, a newcomer to the division, meets Helen while the girl is riding in the freight engine with Star, his engineer. Helen ignores the fireman's offensive stares, knowing that trouble would instantly result, if she reported the matter to Star. The following day, Dawson approaches the girl telegrapher and, seizing her in his arms, kisses her. Star witnesses the incident and gives his fireman a thorough thrashing. Compelled to apologize to Helen, Dawson drowns his humiliation in drink.

Intoxicated, the man picks a quarrel with the crew of the freight and is whipped. The following day brings his dismissal. Vowing vengeance, the man climbs aboard the freight just as it pulls out and knocks the relief fireman unconscious. This done, Dawson waits until the train has gathered speed when he attacks Star and hurls him from the train. This act is witnessed by a lineman who promptly wires a report of it to headquarters. Helen hears the message. Knowing the train will pass the station shortly, the girl mounts a horse and goes down the track. In the meantime, Dawson, in leaping from the wild train, is mortally injured.

Dashing alongside the runaway, Helen throws her lariat over a piece of lumber projecting from the side of one of the flat cars. This done, the daring girl hauls herself aboard the speeding train and eventually brings the runaway to a halt. Star is found to be only slightly injured, but Dawson dies just as a searching party finds him.

VITAGRAPH.

WILLIE STAYED SINGLE (Sept. 20).—The cast includes George Stanley, Gretchen Lederer, Anne Schaefer, George Holt, Otto Lederer, Geo. Kunkel.

Hungry Weary Willie, sawing and chopping wood for a meal, piles up a lot of timbers, scatters a litle chopped wood on the top, and has the laugh on the farmer's wife who only gave him enough for a bird to eat. He "borrows" a suit of clothes from the clothes-line, then makes love to a boarding-house mistress—a widow—to secure real eats.

All he has to do is to marry her to enjoy three square meals per day for the rest of his life, but when the slavey cook mixes up two kettles and he gets a mouthful of soft soap instead of soup, he changes his mind. Under the impression that he has hydrophobia, Willie gets some pretty rough treatment, from which he is only too glad to escape, leaving behind a heart-broken widow and an upset boarding house.

DOROTHY (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 21).—The cast includes Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, George Stevens, Mary Maurice, Van Dyke Brooke.

Dorothy Manners, a school girl, falls in love with Tom Marley, son of a well-to-do cotton goods manufacturer, and he returns her affection. Marley, Sr., is negotiating with Manners for his valuable invention for the production of manufactured cotton goods. Just as Manners is about to sign an agreement with Marley, he drops dead of heart failure. Marley forges the dead man's signature, and, placing the body in a life-like position, obtains the signatures of two witnesses. Marley then carries the dead man to a lonely spot and leaves him. The body is found and unidentified, so Marley feels safe. Five years later Marley has tripled his fortune through the invention and taken his son into partnership. Dorothy finds in her father's desk a letter which starts a train of clues leading directly to Marley. She denounces him and Marley dies from a stroke of apoplexy while Tom, after making restitution, marries Dorothy.

GETTING RID OF AUNT KATE (Sept. 22).—The cast includes Kate Price, Jewel Hunt, Mary Anderson, Harry Fisher, Frank Kingsley, Frank Bunny.

Pa Jones, his two daughters, Helen and Susie and Fred and Tom, their beaux, all get along finely together until one sad day, big, husky, strong-minded Aunt Kate arrives. She changes the atmosphere of the place entirely and proves very tyrannical. The maid goes away and Auntie forces the girls to help with the general housework. Pa doesn't have a minute's peace, and unable to stand it longer, he appeals to Tom and Fred. They suggest a husband for Auntie, thus getting rid of her. Old Bill Perkins is selected as the victim, and the plan works beautifully, for, within a week after his introduction to Auntie, she leaves the Jones family in peace and quiet, to become the bride of Old Bill.

THE LESSON OF NARROW STREET (Sept. 23).—The cast includes Edward Elkas, S. Rankin Drew, Mary Maurice, J. H. Lewis, Harold Foshay.

Studying art in New York, a young artist, Phil Mayborn, is induced to invest his little pile of savings in Wall Street. He meets Sheldon, the eccentric Ruler of the Street, and mistaking him for a derelict because of his shabby appearance, asks him to pose for his painting, "What Wall Street Does to a Man."

Appreciating the ironical humor of the situation, Sheldon consents. He takes a liking to the young man and when Phil's broker (one of Sheldon's agents), absconds with all available funds, including Phil's, Sheldon brings the young artist to his private office. After impressing upon dazed Phil that the Narrow Street wrecks men, body and soul, he gives the young man his money back. Having learned his lesson, Phil swears never again to gamble in Wall Street.

BACK TO THE PRIMITIVE (Sept. 24).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and others.

Frances and Hugh—just married—have exactly oposite tastes. He believes in the radically Simple Life; she in the ultra-modern. Frances thinks her husband is just perfect, however, and consents to try out his doctrine by camping out in the deep primeval forest. At first she rather enjoys it, but soon the lack of every convenience to which she is accustomed, gets on her nerves. She determines, although her husband carries his ideas pretty far, she will go him several better, in hopes of curing him of his fad. Claiming he should be consistent, and that the aboriginal man had nothing to start with, she destroys all their actual necessities even the matches! Hugh balks at eating raw meat, and the inevitable result is that they are both glad to get back to civilization and comfort.

FROM OUT OF THE BIG SNOWS (Broadway Star Features Special Three Parts -Sept. 25). —The cast includes James Morrison, George Cooper, Dorothy Kelly and Donald Hall.

Harris, a young adventurer into the big snows of the Northwest, through an accident, becomes a great friend of Dr. Brandon, who warns him against his fascination for Marie, woman of the dance hall. He tells him of Jean, her half-breed lover, and that he is a bad man. Harris disregards this and Jean, returning from a trapping expedition, finds Marie in his arms.

Concealing his hatred, he contrives a fiendish plan, and in pursuance of this, wins the friendship of Harris. They go on a hunting expedition together and in the dense forest, Jean overpowers his unsuspecting victim and ties him to a tree, leaving him there to be devoured by the wolves. Brandon becomes worried over his friend and after a long search finds Harris, just in time to save his life. After recovering from his experience, Harris goes looking for Jean, prepared to shoot on sight. They meet and Harris kills him. Dr. Brandon hides him from the Mounted Police, then sees him safely over the boundary line.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO BILLY BEGINS LIFE ANEW (Sept. 3).—The cast includes G. M. Anderson, Lee Willard, Marguerite Clayton, Ella McKenzie, Lloyd Bacon.

Broncho Billy, through a notice posted on a tree, learns he can go free if he will give himself up. He keeps the notice, and, as he rides away, comes upon a little girl, who wandered from her mother, when an accident happened to the stage coach in which the two were riding. The mother, frantic, starts in search of her child, and meanwhile the coach drives on. She finds the little child in the arms of Broncho Billy, who takes mother and child to the home of the young woman's parents, the deacon and his wife. Broncho Billy is welcomed there, and later, attending church with the deacon's daughter and her child, is so impressed with the deacon's sermon that he goes to the sheriff's office and gives himself up. He wins his chance to begin life anew.

A MANSION OF TRAGEDY (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 13).—The cast includes Darwin Karr, Lillian Drew, Howard Lang, Minnie Stanley, Richardson Cotton, Beverly Bayne, Ted Sullivan, Jerome Kennedy.

Mr. Kelsey, a poor cobbler, dies from overwork inventing a shoe manufacturing machine, and his widow receives, through the efforts of Richard Baldwin, a friend of the family, $1,500,000 and royalties for the plans. Nell Kelsey and Hester, adopted daughter of the Kelsey's, grow up in luxury. Prince Oswald wins Hester's love, only to cast her aside when he learns she is not the heiress. Mrs. Kelsey brings about a double marriage, the prince marrying Nell and Baldwin wedding Hester. Oswald, however, keeps Hester under his mysterious spell and pleads his love for her. Mrs. Kelsey and Baldwin learn of the state of affairs, and Baldwin finds Hester trying to repel the prince's advances. In a struggle, a revolver is accidentally discharged, killing the prince, thus ending the already tragic and apparently hopeless love tangle.

TISH'S SPY (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 14). —The cast includes Richard C. Travers, Camille D'Arcy, Lillian Drew, Marion Skinner, Louise Crolius, Eugene Acker, Grant Foreman, Kate Wenster Edmund F. Cobb.

Jane Newcomb, calling Jim McDonald, a "money loafer," refuses to marry him, and to teach him a lesson becomes a "lady chauffeur" for "Tish" Carberry. "Tish" and her companions, Aggie, Lizzie and Jane go to Canada on an outing, trailed by Jim and a red-haired detective, hired by Jane's father. Aggie, a hay fever victim, sneezes constantly and ludicrous and exciting times are experienced by the women in camp. A big snake starts a wild dash toward the river. Jane and Lizzie fall over a cliff into the stream, and after many thrills, in which motorboat explosion sends a constable flying into a tree, Jim rescues Jane and the detective departs after she decides to marry Jim to take care of him.

DREAMY DUD, COWBOY (Cartoon Picture—Sept. 15).—Dreamy Dud, gazing at a bill poster announcing the coming of a Wild West Show, enthuses over the lot of the cowboy, and informs Wag, his dog, that the "blooey, blooey" life is the real thing. Forthwith Wag is transformed into a blooded steed, and Dud's commonplace "duds" give way to a regulation "Broncho Billy" outfit. Dud's steed races over hill and dale, leaping lofty crags like a mountain goat. Suddenly Dud finds himself on the edge of a canyon. On the other side a fair damsel bound to a tree is about to be tomahawked by an Indian. Dud lassoes the Indian, who falls apparently to his death, down the canyon. Dud crosses the canyon on his lariat. The damsel is freed and she is kissing him when the Indian pops up from behind a boulder and is just shaking the life out of Dud when Dreamy awakens to find his mother standing over his bed, telling him its time to get up.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE LUMBER KING (Sept. 10).—The cast includes G. M. Anderson, Lee Willard, Marguerite Clayton, Lloyd Bacon.

Tired out, a ranger happens upon a cabin in the woods to ask for rest. He is met at the door by a pretty girl, and it is a case of love at first sight. The girl's father, leader of the lumber thieves, returns to find her before a small mirror arranging her hair, and upbraids her for her vanity. The ranger hears and, as the father is about to strike the girl, rushes out and hurls the man from her. When the ranger departs, the leader of the thieves follows with a rifle, and catching the ranger unawares, forces him to go to the thieves' rendezvous. The girl, who has seen ,rushes to call the sheriff. Meanwhile the thieves draw lots to see who shall kill the ranger. It falls to the chief, who is about to shoot the ranger when the sheriff and his aides rush up and arrest the thieves. The ranger and the girl pledge their love.

MUSTACHES AND BOMBS (Sept. 16).—The cast includes Bud Jamison, Marjorie Reiger, Jack Pollard.

"Pay over $5,000 or we'll drop a bomb on your doorstep!" These startling words greet Hubby on a placard in front of his house. He remembers having seen some mustached men mysteriously wandering about that morning. As he goes down the street, every person with a package terrifies him—especially any man with a mustache. Some one drops a loaf of bread and Hubby runs for his life. Some one else picks up a round object and hands it to him. The man has a mustache. Hubby hurls the "dangerous" object back and then another race for life is on. A policeman stops them and he gets the mysterious package. He breaks it over Hubby's head. It is a head of cabbage. Hubby goes home and finds a doctor with a mustache attending his wife. He binds and gags the physician. Then a group of persons return and ask for the placard. They are motion picture actors and Hubby learns his mistake.

THE SCAPEGOAT (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast includes Bryant Washburn, Edna Mayo, Hugh E. Thompson, Mark J. Ellison.

Virginia Dalmar, success of the theatrical season, is secretly married to Victor Thompson, banker, despite opposition by Ezra Thompson, brother and business associate of Victor. Virginia's scapegoat brother, in a gambling fight, fires at his opponent and believing he has killed his man, appeals to his sister for aid. She meets him in a cafe, and Ezra happens in as she kisses him good-bye. Ezra forces his escort on Virginia and accompanies her home. Dick arrives as Ezra is trying to kiss her, and in a fight, in which Dick is badly wounded, Victor's brother is killed. Dick flees and Virginia is arrested for the murder. Later Dick returning to confess the crime, meets his gambling house opponent and is fatally injured in a fight. He is dragged to the court room, where he makes a dying confession just as the judge is charging the jury to find Virginia guilty.

EDISON.

THE WAY BACK (Special—Four Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast includes Miriam Nesbitt, Yale Benner, Frank McGlynn, Wallace Erskine, Robert Walker, Robert Brower, Mabel Dwight, Jessie Stevens, George A. Wright and Marjorie Ellison.

Mary Wilson, an orphan, has inherited all of her father's money. Her unscrupulous lawyer, Samuel Kingman, tells her that all her investments have turned out badly, and that she is ruined. She immediately suspects Kingman of dishonest dealings. She consults another lawyer, and is told that she really has no redress. Mary is compelled to sell all her possessions and goes to a boarding house. Then she starts out to look for employment. Unsuccessful and embittered, she is finally compelled to take a cheap room "with meals" in an East Side house. This house is the home of many noted underworld characters, and here Mary meets Dan Reedy, a crook, as well as Lilly, an all-around thief.

One of the gang has stolen jewelry and brings it to Dan, who is at the gambling den. The place is raided by the police. They help their leader to make his get-away. Hastening

METRO PICTURES

TO the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the world the Metro Pictures Corporation presents its compliments and its sincere wishes for a successful season.

The Metro Pictures Corporation is leaving to others the giving of advice, the activity in behalf of high finance and the time wasting pursuit of looking into the past. All our energies, all our experience, all our showmanship as practical men with red blooded ideals, are concentrated on the making of good pictures. If we are to believe the critics, the exhibitors and the public, we are making good pictures and better pictures all the time.

The Metro Pictures Corporation with this one ambition calls your attention to its stars and to its plays and invites critical comparison with all the others in the field. We still insist that good pictures cover all the manufacturer need give the exhibitor.

to the boarding house. Dan rushes into Mary's room and begs her to take the jewels out and pawn them for him. She objects, but finally agrees to help him. She passes the police at the door, pawns the jewels and returns just after the police have left. She eventually becomes one of the gang.

Meanwhile Samuel Kingman's son, Ralph, has been given a position of cashier. Although handling large sums of money each day, he draws only a moderate salary. One night Ralph meets Mary and Lilly, and Mary prevents Lilly from picking Ralph's pockets while in a semi-intoxicated state. This leads to further conversation, during which Mary discovers that the young man is the son of a man who has cheated her out of her fortune. She obtains her revenge upon Ralph's father by getting the son infatuated with her, and by having him steal a lot of money. Mary agrees to go with Ralph to South America when the shortage is discovered, but before boarding the boat, she tells him that she has forgotten something at home and leaves. Mary does not return to the ship and Ralph goes in search of her. He finds her in her apartment, and upbraids her. Mary then makes it known to Ralph that, with the aid of her lawyer, she will make good his shortage, and shows him papers to this effect. Being in love with Mary, Ralph proposes. Mary does not love him, and tells him so. She is later confronted by Dan, who pleads his love for her. Having been impressed by his manliness, she consents, and together they seek "the way back" to upright living.

CARTOONS ON THE BEACH (Sept 8).—The cast includes O. W. Foster, Maxine Brown, Gladys Leslie and Charles Mussett.

Billy and his sweetheart, Eleanor, are with a crowd of friends at the seashore. Here Billy meets Trixie, the flirt, otherwise Mrs. Brody. While Billy is paying attention to Trixie the girls are looking at a book of "Cartoons." The first picture shows "The Kelly Kid's Bathing Adventure" in which little Billy has his clothes eaten by a goat while he is in a pond. He climbs out, undaunted, and starts on his homeward way. Sitting on a freshly painted bench, he gets up with some beautiful green stripes decorating the place where his bathing suit should be. By smearing the same kind of stripes all around the little chap walks off with a very good substitute for a bathing suit. After many funny adventures, he reaches home to be soundly spanked and given a bath in the kitchen sink. In "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland" Hercules finds himself seated on the beach with a telescope in his hand. Through it he sees a dream of summer loveliness posing in the surf. Hardly has he succeeded in "getting her eye" when he is brought back to earth by his watchful wife. In "Bunkum's Boarding House," Silas and wife start out to get rich quick by housing and feeding summer boarders. Silas is elated when a "peach" is the first arrival, and tells his wife to cut the rate in order to get her as a guest. They turn down a fat man, but take in a very thin man and dyspeptic-looking old maid. While Silas is flirting with the pretty young lady, the thin boarder eats the old maid's wig. When the frantic wife instructs Silas to feed the gluttonous boarder with a pitchfork full of hay, the human skeleton disposes of the hay and calmly picks his teeth with the pitchfork.

Meantime, Billy has introduced Trixie to his sweetheart and girl friends. While they are talking, Trixie shows sudden alarm and crawls under the table. A second or two later, her husband walks up, asking Billy if he has seen his wife. Denying all knowledge of her, Billy waits till Mr. Brody has gone and then tells Trixie that she had better not be seen with them for a while. Before going, Trixie sees the last cartoon in the book, "A Sand Microbe Flirtation," in which "Hubby" Microbe wipes up the beach with a flirtatious "dude" microbe who attempts to win wife's affections. Telling Billy that a similar fate may befall him if he is not more careful, Eleanor promises to forgive and forget.

BREAKING THE SHACKLES (Sept. 11).—The cast includes Herbert Prior, Margaret Prussing, Charles Sutton, Robert Brower and Brad Sutton.

Dr. Gilroy is made consulting physician at the Metropolitan Hospital. To relieve his overtaxed nerves he resorts to cocaine and soon becomes addicted to its use. His wife notices his failing health, but does not suspect. One day she finds evidence. She attempts to prevent him from using it. He throws her to the floor. As the drug takes effect he becomes normal again, and realizes what he has done. When his wife recovers he begs her to forgive him.

Later the doctor and his wife attend a musicale. They all admire an Indian idol, studded with precious stones. Later the doctor begins to feel the craving for the drug. He slips out of the music room and into the hall. His wife, watching, presently follows him. Gilroy enters the general's den, in which room the idol is kept. His wife slips into another room just across the hall. Gilroy starts back to the music room, and is seen by the butler. After the guests have gone the idol is found to be missing. The butler tells that he saw Dr. Gilroy leaving the den alone during the evening. A detective is successful in finding the evidence to convince the judge. Gilroy is sentenced to a year in prison.

After having served six months he receives a visit from a brother physician. The physician tells him that he is delighted to find him in such perfect health, with all the old craving for the drug gone. A moment later comes the jailer with his clothes. He goes to the warden's office. There he finds his devoted wife. She shows him a newspaper article. She has confessed to the police how she herself stole the idol to compel him to rest and to give up the drug. She has restored the idol.

RANSON'S FOLLY (Special—Four Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast includes Marc MacDermott, Mabel Trunnelle, Marjorie Ellison, Edward Earle, Joseph Bingham, Gladys Leslie, Jessie Stevens, James Harris, George A. Wright.

Filled with memories of the Philippine campaign, Lieutenant Ranson returns to the United States. After a month or two in Washington, he tells his father that he must have a change, and a chance to see some excitement. General Ranson thereupon writes and arranges to have him go to Fort Stanton, Texas, an army post commanded by an old friend. Arrived at the railroad town nearest to the post, Ranson is conveyed to the post by stage coach. A prairie fire is in progress a few miles away from Fort Stanton, and Ranson joins the soldiers and others in fighting it. Incidentally, he is successful in rescuing Mary Cahill, the daughter of the post-trader, Patrick Cahill. Ranson is received into the life of the fort and becomes a leader among the younger men. Ranson talks of the "big doings" out in the Philippines, and is "bored to death" with the dull routine of the fort. When one of the men calls his attention to a placard announcing a large reward for the capture of "The Red Rider," Ranson declares that it is nothing at all to hold up a stage; that anyone can do it and get away with it; that on a fifty-dollar bet, he, himself, will hold up the stage coach that night—and with a pair of shears! His brother officers ridicule the idea. Ranson insists that he can—and will—do it.

Meantime, at the railway town, the coach has already started when Lieutenant Patten, the paymaster, arrives, carrying a bag containing $10,000 with which to pay off the soldiers. Finding the coach gone, he engages a man with a buckboard to drive him to the fort. Ranson successfully holds up the stage-coach. He is polite to the two lady passengers and takes nothing from anybody except a souvenir from one of the ladies, in the form of her photograph, this being sufficient proof to show his brother officers. He then rides back to the post. Meantime, Lieutenant Patten, hurrying along in the buckboard, is held up by a masked man dressed almost exactly as was Ranson. In a fight that ensues, the highwayman shoots and kills the driver of the buckboard, and wounds the lieutenant in the shoulder. The robber then gets possession of the bag of money and makes good his escape, but not before he has been himself shot in the hand by the paymaster.

At the post, the news of the robbery arrives with the return of the detachment of men who have been sent out to escort the paymaster. They bring Lieutenant Patten with them, and he tells of the robbery and of having wounded the robber in the hand. As an outcome of the whole affair, Ranson is arrested, charged with having held up both stage and the pay-train. He is confined to his quarters, awaiting court martial, and there he sends for Mr. Cahill, with whom he wishes to speak in regard to Mary. He notices that Cahill's hand is bandaged, but Cahill tells him that his pony has bitten him while he was bridling her. Mary enters, and in the course of the conversation, tells Ranson that her father has told her that he shot himself in the hand while tooling with his revolver. Ranson is at once suspicious, and when Mary goes out, he accuses Cahill of being the real "Red Rider." Finally Cahill confesses that it is true. Ranson tells him that no matter what happened, he will stick by his daughter. He urges Cahill to hurry away to Fort Worth on the pretext of buying an engagement ring. Cahill says he will do so, and that he will write a letter of confession, exonerating Ranson, after he is safely in Canada. But hardly has he entered the other room when Ranson hears a shot. Rushing in, he finds Cahill lying across the table, a bullet through his brain. By his hand is a brief note of confession, which he has hastily scribbled. As Mary rushes in, Ranson draws her back, but she has guessed the truth. Her father has paid for his long-concealed life of crime, and now she gives herself wholly into Ranson's keeping, knowing that her father's wish was to have them marry and be happy.

THE CALL OF THE CITY (Sept. 18).—The cast includes Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Bessie Learn, Robert Walker, Marjorie Ellison, Yale Benner, John Sturgeon.

Bessie Graham has been a sort of maid-of-all-work in her mother's boarding house for years. Determined to make a change, she tells her mother that she is going to strike out for herself and try to get a position in the city. Arrived in the city, she rents a cheap room and starts to look for work. At two or three different places she is told that only trained assistants are required. Coming out of an office building, where she has met with another refusal, she starts down the street, almost in tears. A woman of the underworld, flashily dressed, sees her, and so does the woman's male companion. Approaching Bessie, the woman tells her that if she is in trouble, she may be able to help her. Bessie is glad. The man trails along behind, and suddenly coming up with them, speaks. The woman introduces him to Bessie as her husband. Together the three continue down the street. Turning a corner, they run into a tough-looking customer, who, the moment he sees the woman's "husband," halts the party and starts in to hurl epithets at the man. When the man gets back at him the tough hits him a stinging blow in the face, declaring that this is one time his game of trapping young girls is going to be spoiled. A furious struggle commences, the woman, meantime, making a quick get-away from the scene. Bessie stands there, paralyzed with fear as the men both draw revolvers. A moment later, there is a shot fired, and the tough turns and runs down the street, leaving the other man lying at Bessie's feet dead.

In an upper room of the building in front of which the fight has taken place, Jim Ross, a young newspaper man, is hard at work, writing. He hears the shot and rushes downstairs. Taking hold of Bessie's hand, he pulls her into the hallway, closing and locking the door. A moment later, two policemen dash around the corner. The janitor tells the cops that a girl was with the murdered man when the fight started. The cops have the body removed and one of them remains on guard, waiting for a chance to get into the house, they having discovered that the door is locked. At last, Jim tells Bessie that the policeman will probably stay on guard all night, and offers to let her sleep in his room. She trusts him instinctively and accepts the offer. The next morning the police, armed with a search warrant, come to his room, accompanied by the janitor. As they knock on the door, Jim tells Bessie that she had beter pretend to be his wife. When the police enter, Jim tells them that Bessie is his wife, and that they know nothing of the murder. The janitor, "getting wise," does not give Jim away, and after the police have gone, satisfied with their investigation, Jim tells Bessie that he wishes, now that she has posed as his wife, and she would make it come true. And Bessie does.

CARTOONS IN A SEMINARY (Sept. 22).—The cast includes Caroline Rankin, Gladys Leslie, Yale Boss.

Laura tells her companions at Miss Syntax's seminary that Jim, her sweetheart, is to visit her that afternoon. Shortly afterward, Jim climbs the fence surrounding the school playground and, after greeting the girls, shows them a copy of the "Grouch Chaser." The girls get a great laugh out of "Silas Bunkum's Boarders' Picnic" in which Silas, his wife and their three guests spend a lively day in the country. They spread their cloth and prepare to eat on the grass, but a huge spider from an overhanging tree steals the old maid's wig and carries it up into the branches. A bird comes along and lays an egg in it. The boss of the whole situation, however, is the Limburger cheese, which finally compels even the dog to retreat. The bird is frightened from the wig-nest by the return of the spider and the spider drops the egg on the dog's head as he prepares for another attack on the cheese. The bird gets a whiff of the cheese and, asphyxiated, drops into the open mouth of the dog. A snake passes through the tunnels in the cheese and remarks that "This subway air is awful!" Finally both humans and animals are vanquished, and the victorious cheese is left in possession of the field.

Hearing the principal coming, Jim looks about for a place to hide. As she comes out of the door he is obliged to jump into a barrel of rain water. Miss Syntax discovers the book in Glady's hand and is soon chuckling over "Kid Kelly Krusoe" in which Billy is reading the classic story of Robinson and his man, Friday. Dozing off, Billy is transformed in his dream into a regular Crusoe, with goat-skin suit and a parrot in place of a watch-dog. He finds "Friday," sure enough, and together they have some funny adventures until Billy is awakened by his mother's call to dinner. As they finish looking at this cartoon, Jim, in the rain-water barrel, sneezes loudly, and Miss Syntax discovers him. As a punishment for the invasion of the school grounds, Jim is forced to stand, wet and shivering, until they look at the last cartoon, "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland," in which Hercules, the oppressed, is seen smoking a big perfecto while sitting on the window sill. At the approach of his better half, he puts the cigar in his pants pocket, and shortly afterwards falls asleep. He dreams that he has descended to the "Heated Region" and the devil proceeds to make him feel "at home." He is invited to eat some smoking dynamite bombs, but they all blow up just as he reaches for them. He is harassed by imps and denizens of the lower regions, and finally a miniature devil applies a fiery torch to his trousers. As the blaze burns him, he wakes up, and finds that his cigar has set fire to his pocket, and that the smoke is being noticed by Mrs. Hicks, who jumps up, seizes a fire extinguisher, and turns it upon him compelling him to jump out of the window to escape. Miss Syntax restores the book to Jim with a warning to never again invade the sacred precincts of the seminary.

HER HAPPINESS (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast includes Viola Dana, Charles Sutton, Nellie Grant, Johnnie Walker, Gladys Leslie, Mabel Dwight, Helen Strickland.

Viola Winters and Harry Palmer are sweethearts, and members of a choir in a church in a small town. Viola is the daughter of James Winters, a small town banker. Harry is a chauffeur in a small garage in the town. Mr. Winters has higher ambitions for his daughter, and refuses his consent to their marriage, forbidding them to see each other. They confide their troubles to a girl chum of Viola's, who suggests that they see each other at her home. There they meet a Mrs. Curtis. Mrs. Curtis and Viola's father were, at one time, sweethearts, but were separated by her father, she being forced to marry a friend of her father's for financial reasons. Mrs. Curtis is told of the situation and tries to help them. She goes to Viola's father, but fails to gain his consent. Harry and Viola decide to take matters into their own hands. They elope to New York and are married.

Her father vows never to let her enter his house again. Her mother is heartbroken. They live in New York with Mrs. Curtis, who has grown very fond of them, and is practically a mother to Viola. A thief enters her home, and during a struggle between Harry and the thief, Mrs. Curtis is accidentally shot and killed. They find, upon reading the will, that she has left everything she has in the world to them. In the meantime, Viola's father has been speculating with the bank's funds, and is caught in the net. The market breaks, and he is ruined. Viola's mother wires her to come home. They arrive in time to cover her father's shortage in the market and a reunion is effected. They return to their old places in the choir, where they pay a last tribute to the woman who was responsible for all their happiness.

WHEN CONSCIENCE SLEEPS (Sept. 25).—The cast includes Bessie Learn, Robert Walker, Margaret O'Meara, Sally Crute.

Robert Selwyn, a wealthy broker, has been married about six years and is very happy with his young wife and a baby girl. Later Selwyn meets and falls in love with Grace Bailey, one of those actresses who bring bad repute upon the theatrical profession. On the morning of the anniversary of their wedding, Mrs. Selwyn prepares a "surprise breakfast" for her husband, and is heartbroken when she sees that he pays absolutely no attention to the specially prepared table and decoration.

One day, at the office, Selwyn receives a telephone message to come at once to the stock exchange as a business in which he is financially interested, has failed. He has just come to his office after purchasing a magnificent pearl necklace to present to the woman who holds him in her power, and he leaves it lying on his desk as he rushes out to go to the exchange. His wife has come down to see him, and approaches the office building just as he hurries out. As she starts to cross the street, she calls to him, not heeding an automobile that is bearing down upon her. Selwyn, however, sees her danger, and springs forward to save her. He thrusts her back into a place of safety, but is himself struck by the oncoming car and knocked down. He is unconscious when picked up, and a brief examination shows that he is severely injured. He is placed in an ambulance and taken to his home, where for several days he is in a most critcal condition. While lying there, almost within the shadow of death, he dreams. In his dream, he sees the accident re-enacted, only it it is his wife who is knocked down by the car. He sees her brought home, dead, and is pathetically unable to answer little Betty's question, "Why won't mamma talk?" He sees Grace taking his wife's place in the home, and the child happy with the stepmother. Then he sees himself proposing marriage to Grace, and even in his dream, feels the sting of her taunting reply as she declares while she has been satisfied to have him show her several good times, she is not interested in the idea of married life and a career as a mother and home-maker.

While he dreams, one of his employees has brought the necklace bought for Grace, to his home, telling his wife that it has been found on his desk, and that they feared to leave it at the office on account of its value. Mrs. Selwyn brings it to her husband just as he awakens and he, realizing that she suspects nothing of the truth, tells her that he has bought it to give her upon the anniversary of their wedding. Forgetting his past indifference, she thanks him for his gift, while she mentally resolves that never again will she have cause to even accuse him of neglect.

BIOGRAPH.

BEHIND THE MASK (Sept. 20).—The cast: Isabel Rea, Edward Cecil, Claire McDowell, Herbert Barrington and Hector V. Sarno.

The new maid, a crook in disguise, overhears Mrs. Rathbone tell her daughter that the Rajah of Ramptura will wear his famous ruby at the masked ball. Ascertaining what costumes the girl and her lover will wear, the maid duplicates them for herself and an accomplice. A wig completes her disguise of Miss Rathborne, and by making skillful love to the rajah she succeeds in stealing the ruby. Her partner, meanwhile, has drunk too much. Miss Rathborne's lover, who has seen her in the rajah's arms, chances to be at the trysting place when she arrives, and she gives him the ruby. Her accomplice, meanwhile, has accosted Miss Rathborne by mistake, and she, believing her lover intoxicated, is heartbroken; while he, deeming her false, is astounded to learn that she is also a thief. The tangle of mistaken identities is finally unraveled, the crooks being captured after the girl has made a clean haul of the Rathbone jewels.

AND BY THESE DEEDS — (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: Laura LaVarnie, Ivan Christy, Joseph McDermott, Mary Malatesta and Zoe Bech.

Slick Bill Hudges was a burglar with ideas of his own. He had no pals and saved his money. Thus he minimized the risk of being betrayed to the police, and could afford to go methodically about his business. He had a professional contempt for banks, so he deposited his money with Tom Blink, a politician whom he knew he could trust. One eventful night Bill decided that the time was ripe for a job, and he was making ready for business when, from the flat of the widow Calahan downstairs, he heard the sound of a child crying. Investigating, he discovered the widow's crippled daughter alone and desolate, her brother and sister having deserted her—basely, as she thought, but actually from the highest motives. They had stolen out to buy her a doll with their entire fortune—one cent. Bill, his heart touched, promised the child a lot of toys, and went to Tom Blink's saloon to draw some money. But when he arrived there he found another man in charge, a low-brow, who informed him that Tom was dead, and that he knew nothing about any money deposited in Bill's name. Thunderstruck, Bill decided that he must make good his promise by "doing a job." That night he entered a Fifth avenue house, where he saw the most wonderful child's playroom in the world, with amazing toys. It was the room which the millionaire Stanley Biggins had provided for his little daughter. While he was helping himself to some toys for the Callahan children, little Miss Biggins came on the scene. Learning his errand, she insisted on being taken to see the children. Bill tried to dodge her, but he couldn't. So, in mortal fear of the police, he took her to the Callahan domicile, where they all had the time of their lives. But when morning broke Bill began to experience qualms of conscience. From a drug store he called the Biggins residence, where a distracted millionaire and his wife at once placed detectives on the trail. Following the clue, the police arrested Bill. But little Miss Biggins wouldn't let him go to jail, and papa squared it with the detectives to give Bill a chance.

A KENTUCKY EPISODE (Sept. 23).—The cast: Charles Perley, Jack Mulhall and Augusta Anderson.

Seeking vengeance for his imprisoned father, Tom Theron kills the judge who passed sentence on him. Jack Benson, sweetheart of the judge's daughter, is a witness of the crime. The Theron gang warn him to leave the country on pain of death, and he obeys. In the next township he meets the judge's widow and daughter, who have left their home, and the girl upbraids him for cowardice when she discovers his knowledge of the crime. Her information comes through a note sent by the Therons to Jack, warning him to move on. Stung by the girl's taunt, Benson returns to the forbidden ground, tells the sheriff what he knows, and then, attacked by the Therons, fights a desperate battle until help, summoned by the girl, arrives in the nick of time, and he is saved, although his wounds are many.

AN UNSEEN ENEMY (Biograph Re-Issue No. 16).—The cast: Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Elmer Booth, Robert Harron and Harry Carey.

The young man concludes a business deal after banking hours, and places the money in the safe at home. The slattern maid-of-all-work telephones to her friend, the crook, who arrives with his tools to burglarize the safe, The young man's sisters return from a last walk with the sweetheart of the younger, who is going away to college. The maid locks them into the room adjoining the parlor, where her accomplice attacks the safe. They telephone their brother at the office; but, before they can give the alarm, they are cowed by a revolver in the hands of the maid, who pushes the weapon through a hole provided for a stovepipe. The girls finally brave the weapon's threat and again seize the telephone. The maid fires, and the shot is heard by the brother who cammandeers an automobile and rushes homeward. Meanwhile, the college boy, longing for the kiss his sweetheart has refused, returns. The crooks are captured just as they rush out of the house.

THE GIRL WHO DIDN'T FORGET (Sept. 25).—The cast: Helen Bray, Jack Mulhall and Alan Hale.

The grocery clerk in the little village discovers that the girl he loves is being illtreated by her uncle, and proposes that she give him the right to protect her. But she demurs, saying that she must first achieve independence. He offers her his savings to start her on the road to success, and after some hesitation she accepts the money. But she refuses to wear his ring until the time comes. In the city she obtains employment in a fashionable shop, where she is seen by a theatrical manager, who engages her for a stage production. She writes the news to her sweetheart, but he does not receive the letter, because he has gone to the city, intending to surprise her. But he does not find her.

Years pass; she becomes a star under a stage name, while he is the trusted employee of a large firm. At the theater he recognizes his former sweetheart, and when he ventures behind the scenes she greets him affectionately. This arouses the jealousy of his employer's son, who has lavished gifts on the star; and when a shortage in the firm's accounts is discovered, he accuses the cashier, saying: "He spends our money on an actress." But the girl establishes her lover's innocence of the charge, and shows that the other stole the money to buy her costly presents which she didn't want, although she had accepted them reluctantly rather than provoke a quarrel with the donor.

LUBIN.

ADVERTISING DID IT (Sept. 13).—The cast: Jack Lawton, Vinnie Burns, Horace Morgan, Kenneth Davenport and Henry Russell.

Phil Humphreys has lived his entire life at Silverton, a small mining town in Arizona. He is in love with a picture of a "Ladies' Dress Model" in a mail order catalogue, the price of which is $26.00, and which he misreads for $2,600. He has struck rich placer ground, so he sets out for town and confides his unusual desire to the town merchant. The merchant, impressed by Phil's earnestness and his gold, promises to have the "order filled" for him. Phil interprets the outfit "complete" to include the model. Harriet Millet has also fallen in love with a kodak picture. Her life of luxury and the persistent attentions of Gerald La Vane, a self-indulged society man, becomes boresome, so she goes with her father to his ranch in Arizona. La Vane accompanies them.

Harriet and Gerald start out for town one day and while at a water hole on the way, he declares his love, is repulsed by Harriet and, becoming angered, Gerald takes both horses, leaving her to hike it to town afoot. The merchant, in his attempt to "fill the order" for Phil places an advertisement in his window which reads: "Any young lady who can wear this costume and complete the model, shall not only win the costume, but the handsomest man in Maricopa county for a husband."

The girls of the town respond in a stampede. The girls, used to Arizona mode of dress, find it difficult to appear at ease in the evening gown. The boys, seeing the girls in tears, turn against the merchant as the cause of the girls' humiliation and he, in order to save himself, is forced to explain about the agreement. Plans are made to take their revenge on Phil. They leave the store just as Gerald passes. The idea strikes them to dress Gerald in the costume. After attiring Gerald in women's clothes, they put him on a horse, and all the cowboys start out after Phil for revenge. In the meantime, Harriet is almost overcome with thirst and loneliness when she stumbles into Phil's cabin on the desert. He revives her and she recognizes him as the original of the photograph which she has admired, while he, in turn, recognizes her as his ideal. While they are talking, the party come in with Gerald on the horse and the crowd following, Phil demands an explanation. They explain. Phil tells them that the order has been filled and after the explanation all leave for town, preparing for a hasty marriage, while Gerald follows, afoot, trying to free himself from the costume.

BABE'S SCHOOL DAYS (Sept. 14).—The cast: Babe Hardy and James Levering.

Ikie is a very good boy, but does not seem to get along with the other boys at school. His father taught him to be diplomatic but he gets no chance to display it. His very appearance on his way to school is a signal for a grand rally of bricks. His father often follows him to school to protect his dear little boy, but it costs him the price of so many high hats that it's no fun. One day Ikie and his father thought they would retaliate by throwing a few bricks too. They made such a success of it that they put the law out of business and are now happy.

WHERE THE ROAD DIVIDED (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast: Louise Huff, Edgar Jones, George Gowan and Earl Metcalfe.

The girl is a dainty little school miss of the mountains, still ignorant of the world. She is loved by the teacher. He is a kindly, grave young man of the Puritan type, and the girl, though she loves him, resents his just severity and impartiality. They quarrel, and the angry girl wanders off until she comes to a fork in the road. She hesitates, undecided whether to take the right or left branch, or to turn back.

If she takes the right-hand road the girl meets a stranger who is leisurely touring the country carefully looking for mineral prospects. At the sight of her fresh and dainty beauty his ardent interest is aroused, and he deliberately determines to possess her. Flattered, and still angry with the teacher the girl allows herself to be lured on, and at length agrees to run away with the stranger. There is a young mountaineer who has loved the girl since she was a little child, and he attempts to save her. There is a fight in which the stranger is killed, and the girl mortally wounded by a stray bullet, dying in the teacher's arms. The mountaineer, broken-hearted, flees the country. His spirit crushed, the teacher goes back to his dreary life, without hope or ambition for the future.

If she takes the left-hand road. The girl meets the young mountaineer, who renews his suit, and, impulsively, she agrees to marry him at once. They make their way across the mountain, and are married. Returning, they encounter the stranger, who wants water for the radiator of his machine, and the mountaineer conducts him to a spring off the road. The stranger observes an outcrop of mineral, learns that the land belongs to the mountaineer, and purchases it for a sum which seems a fortune to the mountaineer and the girl. The stranger hurries away to arrange for the development of his mine, and becomes very wealthy. He has scarcely noticed the girl, his attention being given entirely to his interesting and exciting discovery. The teacher, broken-hearted, leaves the region, and in the city becomes a famous author. The girl and the mountaineer are prosperous in a rude way, but she is never happy—too late she realizes that the teacher had her love for all time.

If she turns back. The girl finds the teacher as sorry for the quarrel as she is, and there is a reconciliation. The stranger, having found nothing to interest him, turns back and never returns to the mountains. The mountaineer, having lost hope of winning the girl, and the teacher being his friend, goes quietly away. The teacher gradually puts aside his ambitious dreams, being busily engaged with the practical problems of making a living for the girl and himself. They, the teacher and the girl, live a commonplace but contented life together.

Which road will she take.

THE RED VIRGIN (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 16).—The cast: Helen Eddy, L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Jay Morley, Melvin Mayo, George Routh, Riccardo Espino, Florine Garland and Edythe Sterling.

Prince William of Moravia, unwilling to marry the Princess Hilda of Sunderland, goes to America. In a village he meets Rose, daughter of a deacon, and secretly marries her. A few months later, William is traced, and the Prime Minister of Moravia comes to America with the Princess Hilda. William is told that his father, the King, is dead, that the country is in great danger of war, and that only his marriage to the Princess Hilda will avert the catastrophe. Thinking to gain time for his country, William consents to go back, and takes the Princess in his arms. And thus Rose, who has come to tell William she can no longer keep the marriage secret, finds them. William denies the marriage, intending to explain later, but when he goes after Rose, she has already jumped off a precipice, and he finds only a farewell note and her handkerchief. Believing her dead, he goes to Moravia, marries the Princess, and is crowned King. Rose is not killed by her fall. She is taken care of by Madeleine, a woman, whose life has been ruined by Clinton Steele. Rose loses her mind, and dies after giving birth to a daughter. Madeleine registers a vow that the child shall get vengeance on men for the wrong done her mother. Later, in Moravia, a son is born to the King and Queen.

The years pass. Rose's daughter, Fay, is taught to hate men, and especially her father, whose picture she has in a locket. One day, Vera Hamilton, an actress, is motoring through the woods with her latest admirer, Clinton Steele. They meet Fay, and Steele is fascinated. Madeleine, coming up, sees her betrayer, and later tells Fay to accept Vera's offer to go to the city and makes Steele shed a drop of blood for every tear of hers. Fay goes, and in a few months blossoms forth as a radiant creature. Vera introduces her to her friends, and a young artist, Pierre Legarde, falls in love with her. Fay poses for the artist's painting, "The Rer Virgin." She toys with Steele's affections, and goads him to such a frenzy, that one day when he finds her at the artist's studio, he slashes the painting to shreds. Then he attacks the artist, and in the struggle, is killed.

In Moravia, King William, and his motherless son, Prince Franz, are forced to abdicate. They come to America, and one night Fay meets the young Prince, her half-brother. She sets out to ruin him, and when she discovers that his father is the man who ruined her mother's life, she redoubles her efforts. She manages to ruin Franz at the roulette table, and gets him to promise to do anything for her. Then she tells him to rob the safe of the gambling establishment. She warns the proprietor in advance that an attempt will be made to burglarize his safe. The fateful night comes. William is alarmed when he finds that his son has left the house, and goes in search of the woman who is ruining him. And so he comes face to face with his own daughter. She tells him that she has secured vengeance for the wrong done her mother, but when William explains who he is, and the real circumstances surrounding his denial of the marriage, Fay weakens and father and daughter are united. But suddenly Fay remembers the danger that awaits Franz. She and William hurry to the gambling establishment to find Franz desperately wounded. The matter is "fixed" with the proprietor of the place, and Fay nurses her brother back to health. Then comes a message—the people of Moravia are clamoring for their King, and so Fay goes with her father and brother to face a new future across the sea.

A HEART AWAKENED (Sept. 17).—The cast: Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Eleanor Barry and William H. Turner.

Dr. George Graham returns home to find his wife, Betty, absent from dinner. Betty has fallen in with a pleasure-loving set, and has come to spend more and more of her time away from home. He finds a letter in his office from a charitable institution, asking him to take upon himself the care of at least one poor person in bad health. In the slums he finds a woman suffering with a serious illness, but forced to work to support her infant, and undertakes to care for her. In the course of time he finds that Betty is becoming careless of conventional things. On one occasion he asks her to remain at home with him, but her reply is that she has already been asked out and cannot disappoint her friends. After Graham has gone, Betty receives a phone message that the evening's affair is postponed, and she hurries to the office on the first floor of the house to tell Graham that she has decided not to go. She is outraged when she finds that Graham has left the house. When he returns after midnight, he finds Betty indignant at his having gone out. Graham tries to explain, but Betty will not listen.

Graham reads in the paper that "Studio Trots" are the latest sensation. These somewhat questionable affairs are given by members of the artist colony who are really "near-artists" and who take this means of gaining popularity and advertising. On one of his visits to his patient, he is surprised by a gathering of women at the door, talking in whispers. From one he learns that the unfortunate mother is dead, and that they are in a quandry as to what is to become of the baby. One poor neighbor offers to take the child, but when Graham has gone to her home with her, she is met with a refusal from her husband to assume the extra expense represented. Graham takes the child home, intending to take it to an asylum. When he reaches home, he finds that he is called at once for an operation and must keep the baby overnight. He asks the maid to attend to the child, but that domestic flatly refuses to give up her evening out. In the argument which follows, Betty enters and is horrified when she learns that Graham has dared to bring the baby into the house. Her indignation is unbounded when he suggests that she remain home and care for it. She is going to Cuyler Schofield's studio dance. This is the first that Graham has heard of Betty's interest in the studio affairs. He leaves for the hospital.

Betty leaves a note in his office, saying that she has gone, and then hurries upstairs to dress. She is in the midst of her preparations when the baby wakes and begins to cry. She stands it as long as she can, and then goes into Graham's room to quiet it. She is surprised when, with only a few caresses, grudgingly given by Betty, it falls asleep. She is nearly ready to go when she hears the infant's cry again. This time Betty is startled. She rushes into the other room, and is relieved when she finds that it is only exercising its lungs. Betty starts to go, but unknown even to herself, the baby has struck a hidden cord within her. She can't leave it in such apparent agony. She soothes it back to slumber. Then she places it on the bed, goes to the door, stopping to look back at it as she turns out the light. Hours later Graham returns from the hospital, tired out. He goes into the office, and there finds her note. It tells him that she has gone to the studio, that she does not intend to be dictated to by him, and he is at liberty to apply for a divorce. Graham takes her at her word. He writes his attorney a letter instructing him to bring proceedings against his wife. He is going out to mail the letter, when he remembers the baby. He goes up the stairs and enters his own room. There, on the bed, he finds the child, nestled on the arm of his wife, both fast asleep.

the tiny kingdom, comes to America to locate the Brotherhood and recover the crown jewels. He is in disguise, but the Brotherhood knows that he must always wear the order of the Golden Oyster, most ancient of the orders of Rootoonia. Rudolfo fools them by wearing it under his shirt instead of over his vest. Rudolfo, fond of a night off now and then, takes a couple of handsful of gold from the royal dough bag, and starts off to see what the town is like. The navigating officer and commander in chief of the cab is Billie Brown, who hopes to earn enough money nighthawking to marry Sally Sprag.

Rudolfo comes home late but very happy. He has had a night of it and does not notice that the jewel of the oyster has been lost. Bill finds it and offers to return it, but Rudolfo's valet thinks Bill wants to give him a second beating and will not stand for it. Bill stands admiring the oyster as one of the men told off by the Brotherhood to make the capture happens to pass. Next morning the Fatal Four are on his track and capture him in an automobile. Sal sees the abduction and runs after the auto. She locates the home of the Brotherhood and runs in search of a disguise. She finds it in the shape of the tool kit and overalls of a thirsty plumber.

Meanwhile the sentence of death has been passed upon Bill. The use of a bomb is avoided and it is decided to drown him in a bath tub. Sal, now disguised in overalls, returns to the house, and climbs up the side, peering through the windows. Failing to find out anything, she gets to the roof and comes down through the chimney. She discovers the plot and gets the water key out of the plumber's kit and returns. She turns the water off at the street main, then goes to the house and asks if they called a plumber. They have not had time, but they tell her they can use one, so she goes down cellar to tinker with the pipes, carrying the men with her to hold candles to light her at her work. On the pretext that she needs more tools, she regains the lodge room and locks them down there. Then she rescues Bill, and together they exterminate the anarchists with their own bombs just as the police rush in. Bill is knighted and given real money, besides, and when last seen Bill and Sal are on their way to the minister's.

THE SILENT ACCUSER (Sept. 20).—The cast: Richard Wangemann, Mary Charleson, Francis Joyner, James Cassady and Bartley McCullum.

Dr. Mills is a succesful physician with a daughter, Jane, in love with his assistant, John Howard. There is also working for the doctor a man named Joe King who does odd jobs about the office. One evening money is taken from the doctor's desk. Howard is found semi-conscious nearby, and when he is revived tells a story of being choked in the dark by someone unknown to him. The doctor's suspicions are allayed so far as the servants are concerned. The detectives he has called in find the windows locked and King asleep in his room, and after the usual deductions arrive at the conclusion that Howard had something to do with the theft.

Just as the net is closing around young Howard, Jane discovers some pencil marks on his collar. She takes the collar to her father, who examines them under a lens and sees that they are peculiar marks, up and down like a jagged teeth of a saw. They are, in fact, the markings of a pencil held in Howard's hand while he was being choked, and record the up and down movements of the victim's hand as he struggled.

Believing more in the boy's honesty now, Dr. Mills calls in the porter as the first one whom he will test. The doctor asks him to assist him in an experiment, and puts the pencil in the porter's hand, and makes him clench his hand in the same manner in which Howard says he was choked. Then the doctor turns on the revolving globes. King becomes hysterical, at first tries to stab the doctor with a paper knife, and then, as a vision comes to him of his deed the night before, cries out his own guilt.

THE CARELESS ANARCHIST (Sept. 21).—The cast: Harry Lorraine, Roy Byron, Frances Ne Moyer, C. W. Ritchie and George Welch.

Ivan Petroff and Peter Vasillovitch are anarchists. Ivan is working on a new explosive. His reward is to be Anita, Peter's pretty daughter. Ivan discovers the explosive. It is shown that it is good, because it blows Ivan and Peter through the window. Ivan goes home with Peter to claim his reward.

But Anita loves Jim, a young American. Ivan decides that Jim shall be the first to be killed by the new explosive. He carefully prepares the bomb, but leaves it outside a saloon while he goes in for a drink and a tramp steals it and tries to tell it to a junk dealer. The tramp runs down a side street and leaves it in the gutter. Jim, on his way to see Anita, picks it up and finds it very handy on which to crack nuts. Ivan is horrified to see the use to which it is put, but Jim does not worry and finally throws it at Ivan. The humbled inventor takes it to the wood pile to smash it. This time it works, and Jim and Anita are free to marry. Peter mourns over a pair of shoes, all that is left of his compatriot, Ivan.

A DESERT HONEYMOON (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 22).—The cast: Romaine Fielding, Vinnie Burns, Jack Lawton, Violet Malone, Eleanor Mason and Jack Dillon.

Out of the East came a young man, cleanly fashioned and nobly made, answering the call of the desert's waste, that pioneers have responded to from time immemorial. On the desert's rim, the moral youth, whom we had known as such, tastes of the bitter fruit of the cactus, a plant of death, and as the poison gurgles madly through his veins, he meets with Chiquita, a Spanish dancer, and the quiet, sane youth is turned by this foreign incense into a mad animal, bent on lust. The girl of his boyhood dreams comes into the West after her mother's death to wed him, and finds the wreck of a man, the shell of the youth she had known and loved.

THE LAST REBEL (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalfe, Kempton Greene and Herbert Fortier.

At the end of the war, Betty Carew receives word of her father's death and that Clay, her sweetheart, fell in the same battle. The overseer of the plantation tells her that since the war he has run the plantation at his own expense and if she can't pay the money due him, the plantation will be his. He holds out but one hope—marriage. She refuses. For reply he seizes her in his arms as she is watching the remnant of Lee's army which is passing her home. One crippled Yankee, seeing Betty's predicament, made his way to her assistance. Betty recognized him as Howard Goodrich, a lieutenant in the Northern army, who early in the war had saved her home from a raiding band of Yankee foragers. He winced under the pity of her gaze, then, hearing the reason for the overseer's arrogance, told her he could still be of assistance by buying him off. Betty's objections are overruled, for, he explains, being alone in the world, he could not put what is left of his fortune to better use. The papers are signed and the overseer leaves, vowing to get even.

Betty and Howard are later united in marriage. The ceremony is seen by the overseer and Clay. The latter, contrary to reports, was not killed and never surrendered. Still fostering a hope of rekindling the rebellion, Clay lays in hiding until night. Betty, who has gone to her room, is awakened from her brooding by a pebble against her window. She hastens to Clay, who explains his being alive, their love flames forth again, but Clay is man enough to admire Howard's action in the matter and leaves. Betty is panic-stricken and Howard wonders how he can help her in this new predicament. The overseer, having heard Clay and his followers planning further rebellion, informs the Union soldiers. They locate Clay's rendezvous after all but a little drummer boy have gone on their respective errands. Clay sees the end at hand and, in the hope of escape, manages to send the boy with a note to Betty. Howard gets the note and sees his opportunity. Leaving a note for Betty, Howard goes to the rendezvous. He stops the firing and, waving a white handkerchief, enters the old shack in which Clay is making his last stand. He compels Clay to change his clothes and impersonating him, get away. This Clay does successfully and Howard continues the fight. Betty gets to the rendezvous in time to take the dying Howard in her arms. Before he dies, he secures immunity for Clay providing the latter gives up his seditious actions and Clay and Betty are reunited.

THAT BRUTE (Sept. 21).—The cast: Mabel Paige, Sadie Midgley and C. W. Ritchie.

Leave it to Mayme, her hubby is a brute. The finish comes when Mayme telegraphs her mother that James has struck her. Mother is pretty handy with a six shooter but on the way to the station she picks up a bull whip and a stiletto. When she gets to her daughter's home she is a little uneasy, even though she has a bomb planted beside the steps, so she buys a yacht cannon. Mayme shows up and is mean enough to laugh at these warlike preparations. Mother does not know what her daughter is laughing at and drives her into the house.

Then James comes home. He is delighted to see mother and "beats" Mayme for not telling him she was coming. The beating is done by slapping her on the wrist. When mother realizes she has taken Mayme's hysterical outbursts too seriously, she shoots the cannon after dear daughter and blows her out the back door. When Mayme returns she finds James and mother chatting on the steps. James lights a cigarette, but does not see that the lighted match drops beside the bomb. When the smoke clears away, mother and Mayme scramble to their feet, and mother decides to let Mayme fight her own battles.

THE LEVEL (Sept. 24).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Dorothy Barrett, Edythe Sterling and Robert Gray.

Dorothy Brooks is a proud, haughty girl of the upper class. She rejects the proposal of Philip Craxton, a young settlement worker, because she considers him beneath her station. Kenneth Brooks, her uncle, is interested in Philip, and takes Dorothy to Philip's refuge in the slums to show her the good work that is being done, but Dorothy remains unconvinced of Philip's worth as a suitor. She has an unpleasant experience at the Refuge with Mary, a girl of the streets, who bitterly censures her for her unsympathetic attitude. The doors of Dorothy's home are opened wide to Alan Dart, a young society man, who knew Mary in her better days, and is the father of her child. Dorothy accepts his proposal, as he is of her station.

The wedding day comes. Mary reads the announcement, and, fired by the injustice of it all, breaks up the wedding at the church. Dorothy is led away, and at home, her troubled mind conjures up symbolic visions of the levels of life. She sees herself garbed in the white robes of virtue, walking on the heights, and casting a deaf ear to the cries of the unfortunate souls below her level. Then comes a vision of what true humanity stands for. Philip is helping the unfortunates to rise, and she, moved by a more kindly spirit, descends to do likewise. When Alan calls at the Brooks home the next day, and explains that he couldn't marry Marry and sink to her level, Dorothy tells him that he might have tried to raise her to his level. Alan, chastened in spirit, determines to do the right thing, Dorothy, casting pride aside, gives Philip another answer."

CAPTAIN KIDD AND DITTO (Sept. 25). The cast: Billie Reeves and Charles Griffith.

Billie likes stories of adventure, so he reads the "Life and Adventures of Capt. William Kidd" until, like a modern Don Quixioto, he thinks that he, too, should sail the Spanish Main. It is a mild enough monomania until he visits the seashore, then it becomes virulent and he breathes his secret to several of the beach promenaders. Griff, too, has the idea that he is a pirate bold, and he knows that Billie's last name is not Kidd. How can it be? He is Capt. Kidd himself. But Billie's flag is larger than his and Billie's is the dominating personality, so he decided to dissemble until he can get a privateer with Billie's help and then all experienced pirates will have no difficulty in recognizing him as the original inventor of piratical proceedings.

They pick out a sight-seeing boat, and once they get well out from shore, they take possession of it. This is a simple matter, since they have guns and the sight-seers have not, and once in possession the two men strip off their conventional attire and show their colors on the fronts of their jerseys. Here again Billie wins, because his shirt is more piratical than the other But Nemesis is aboard, if not on the passenger list, and the only thing that cheers the would-be pirates is that they will not be sent to jail for life, but hanged for their piratical outing and they go quietly with the officers after inviting everyone to the execution.

MINA.

LOST IN THE SWIM (Sept. 9).—Jesse's choice is a handsome young country gentleman, but her mother will have none of it, and calls upon the proprietor of the hotel for his listed notables—it is clear she is looking for a count as the proper match for Jesse. It is up to the proprietor to furnish a count or lose a boarder.

Coincident, Brake Beam Pete, a good-natured hobo, makes his appearance and the crafty proprietor decides to make him earn his board. Pete is disguised as a count and starts out to win the hand of Jesse. As he is on the verge of success, he is "Lost in the Swim."

BOOMING TRIXIE (Sept. 16).—The popularity of Trixie, a theatrical star, has been waning. Her press agent is given notice that he must either bring her back into prominence or resign his job. He goes to his cousin, Tom, and relates his woe to him. There is only one plan he can think of. Tom shall kidnap Trixie and elope with her.

Tom, however, is in love with another girl but has been too bashful to propose. He reluctantly consents to the press agent's scheme and preparations are begun to "boom" Trixie. The girl with whom Tom is really in love learns of the plot and decides to intervene. Her plotting ends in Tom's mistaking her for Trixie and finally finding that he has eloped with and married the girl he loves.

The press agent has put the reporters on the trail and as they think that the girl is the actress the newspapers start booming Trixie and everybody's happy.

You Are Buying Pictures— Not Overhead

Just look at this matter of picture prices in this way: Pictures, so much; Business Office, so much; Exchange rents, salaries, etc., so much. Every added link adds to your price or detracts from quality. You can't put more than one hundred cents in a dollar. Every eliminated element means lower prices and higher quality in pictures.

Associated Service is laid out on efficiency lines, with all the "red tape" cut out. Associated Service is a closely knit combination of producers whose artistic and manufacturing problems are separate and individual, but whose business and distributing problems and expenses are massed and concentrated in one office, so that everything costs a fraction of what it did before.

Here is the executive department for all,—the central sales office, which not only lifts the burden of selling responsibility from the producers' minds which should be devoted solely to picture making—but acts in addition as a central exchange. But Associated Service does not pay for offices located all over the country. It does not pay extravagant salaries to managers and assistants. Associated Service cuts all this off your price and puts it into the pictures. Under Associated Service methods independent exchanges act for us and you.

Here is efficiency at last!

Why We Program Twelve Reels a Week

The best of us must admit that there are other good pictures on the market. And the exhibitor is coming to the point where he does not want his hands tied. Nevertheless, he wants a regular program for a solid foundation to which he can add as he will. Thus Associated Service furnishes 12 reels a week which is the right number for your regular schedule. This means that you will never pay for pictures you can't possibly use. There is and you can at any time headline any production you desire.

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

Film Business On a Business Basis

is a natural development, worked out by sound business principles, answering to the call of the exhibitor. Here are the most approved commercial ideas as found successful in the great business of America applied to motion pictures. Eliminated are the middle men. Eliminated are the tremendous overhead percentages. And, because independent exchanges give exhibitors better service Associated Program comes to you in that way.

Every Picture Must Measure up to Standards

Here is the gauntlet every reel on Associated Service must pass before it gets to you and why it must be of a standard quality.

A committee composed of every member of the Association of Producers in Associated Service passes on each picture and you may well imagine that a majority of these is not going to permit one member to ruin the reputation of all others.

The exchanges being independent and considering what they can sell and what their patrons want are not, like those paid managers going to take anything they get, they are going to insist on a quality that is up to the Associated Service standard.

This is why Associated Service guarantees you no dead wood in any single reel.

Now Releasing

At this moment a surprisingly large number of fine exhibitors are showing Associated Program. This is the first week of our releases and if you want to see a rounded, perfect, just right sort of a program, go to the nearest exhibitor, or the nearest exchange and see the Associated Program. Associated Service gives you comedies, quick fire, glowing with humor, condensed, a laugh to every foot, regular laugh torpedoes, each with its war nose on.

Associated Service comedies are not forced. They are not slap-stick. They are the kind your audiences want to see. Associated Service gives comedies which will bring a laugh and make Associated a synonym for stuff that will bring them back.

Associated Service balances comedies with fine gripping, clean dramas by good authors, with fine actors.

There are no fillers in these films. Every instant bristles with attention-commanding action. Associated Service gives The Grand Prix Photo Plays special features in five and six reels, great dramas featuring well known stars. Associated Service gives you protected service, 120,000 ft. of film all ready. Ten weeks' supply constantly on hand, thereby cutting out another expensive factor, vexations and costly delays and interruptions.

Associated Service provides paper which gets the eye, whets the appetite and curiosity and leads the transient interest of the man on the street into the lobby past the box office.

who vows he will take her by force. Wamba and his hunters have traveled many miles from their village in search of game. They meet one of the abused native runners of Starling's camp, who tells Wamba that Starling has made slaves of the native people. Van Cleeve, in his cave, makes a successful test of his new explosive.

Starling discovering Naida alone, endeavors to abduct her but Jan opportunely appears. Naida runs for her life, while Jan is made a prisoner by Starling and his aids. A shot from Starling's rifle causes Van Cleeve's explosive to let go and Van Cleeve is rendered unconscious in the cave, where Naida tries to revive him. The natives seeing the flames issuing from the cave, believe it is witchcraft. They mistake Naida for a witch, and she offers to lead the natives in war against Starling, who has made slaves of the native people. Jan has been tied to a tree near the Starling camp. Naida, leading the natives, approaches. Led by Naida, the natives attack Starling's camp. As they retreat, Naida discovers that a leopard is about to attack Jan. The animal is compelled to leave his prey just in time.

Wamba, the native chief, and Starling, with clubbed rifles, engage in a combat at the edge of a precipice where Starling falls to his death. Van Cleeve is then rescued by Jan and Naida from the cave. Later Naida and Jan observe their wedding day with Van Cleeve and the natives as witnesses.

COCKSURE JONES, DETECTIVE (Sept. 18).—Jones, who longs to be a detective, arranges for board on a Western ranch. He proves a pest to Monroe, the ranch owner, to Mabel, Monroe's daughter, and to the cowboys. His one admirer seems to be Jennie, the fat woman cook.

Rustlers are active near the ranch and Mabel asks the frightened Jones to show them some modern detective methods. The boys organize as fake rustlers and frighten Jones. In the meantime "Shageared Dick," the real rustler, visits Monroe ranch where he is made prisoner by Jennie, the cook, under direction of Jones, who has appeared. When the cowboys reach the house, they find that Jennie and Jones have captured a real rustler.

MOLLY'S MALADY (Sept. 17).—The cast includes Billie Rhodes, Harry Rattenberry, Neal Burns, Jack Dillon.

Jack, a young doctor, upon finishing his course at college, decides to make his start in a small town. On his way to the station, however, he happens to notice a charming girl, whom he later sees buy a ticket to Centerville. He decides that Centerville is the place for him to start practicing medicine, and accordingly purchases a ticket.

In Centerville an old couple are awaiting the return of their daughter, Molly, who has been attending school in the city. Molly and the doctor get acquainted on the train. Molly is met at the station by her brother and an old sweetheart, who is annoyed at seeing her with the doctor. The young doctor is invited to call at Molly's home. Later finding himself "cut out" by the doctor, the country sweetheart remonstrates with father, who has always favored his suit. Father orders the doctor out; but the young people, assisted by Molly's brother, arrange to so closely counterfeit an accident to Molly that they are not discovered, and Jack, being the only doctor within five miles, is necessarily called in to attend the case.

Thus it is that the young people manage to spend a great deal of time in each other's company. Jack, by a clever ruse, convinces Molly's father that she will never walk again, and then pretends to discover a remedy to cure her. Her father is so happy at the prospect of his daughter recovering the use of her limbs that he tells the young doctor he can have her if he cures her. A cure of course is speedily effected. A confession of the deception follows, and the young folks finally gain forgiveness from the girl's father.

VENDETTA IN A HOSPITAL (Three Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast includes Billie Ritchie, Henry Bergman, Gene Rogers, Louise Orth.

The three suitors tried to serenade the girl all at the same time, but there was a discord in their regard for one another as well as in their instruments. In fact, the ill-feeling grew so pronounced that a couple of them took refuge in a shed.

This didn't relieve the situation, as the shed was blown up and they were all taken to the hospital. On the way the ambulances ran over Billie, the only uninjured Romeo, and he had to go to the hospital also. Meantime Henric, the other suitor, got chummy with a fat gentleman who was suffering from an over-indulgence of liquor.

The friendship was all right, but the sousy one imagined he was seeing things and started following a bomb. The unpleasantness and confusion was enhanced when the girl came to visit Henric, when everything went wrong and there was a big, unexpected explosion. The great question was, who suffered most?

REX.

THE PINE'S REVENGE (Two Parts—Sept. 19).—The cast includes Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney, M. K. Wilson.

Dick Rance, forest ranger, incurs the everlasting hatred of Black Scotty, mountain renegade, when he arrests him for wilful burning of forest land and game-killing out of season. Scotty vows vengeance. That same afternoon Rance rescues a girl whose canoe is overturned by her escort. To his surprise he discovers that the girl is Grace Milton, whom he was to have married, but whom he left when he found her in the arms of John Harding.

Upon Grace's recovery she decides, still ignorant of the ranger's true identity, to reward her rescuer. Accordingly she goes on horseback to Rance's cabin. Harding follows her, fearful of a renewal of the engagement he so successfully severed. At the cabin the lovers meet. Grace finds Rance cold and unforgiving. Later Harding finds her and again presses his suit, but she denounces him and runs away. Harding meets Black Scotty, who, still determined to be revenged, is seeking an easy tool.

It happens that the fires in Rance's district have been more frequent and dangerous than in any of the outlying districts, and he is warned that stricter vigilance must be exercised or a new man found for the post. Scotty steals and opens correspondence relating to this matter, in which he himself is accused of being the incendiary of these fires, and he sees a safe and sure way of removing his enemy and saving his skin. He lays the matter before Harding and they agree upon a plan. Grace writes to Rance, begging his forgiveness and asking him to meet her at Pine Cove. The letter written, her pride will not permit her sending it and it is thrown away. Harding recovers it and sees that it reaches Rance, who immediately rides to Pine Cove, where he is held up by Harding while Scotty lays the death trap and sets fire to the King Pine. Far across the lake, Rance sees the flames and, after a terrific struggle, escapes from Harding and reaches the fire in time to stop information reaching the next district in his absence. The fire is fought and conquered. Rance is rewarded for his bravery; Harding confesses to his deceit and the lovers are reunited.

THE SUBURBAN (Four Parts Sept. 17).—Robert Gordon, wealthy stock owner, has a home near Sheepshead Bay. His son, Donald, loves the lodge-keeper's daughter. Gordon is informed that Sir Ralph Gordon and his sister are to visit them. Gordon gets the idea that Donald should marry Helen, and tells him so. Donald, however, is not interested, and, later, marries Alice, the lodge-keeper's daughter. The guests arrive. Ralph covets Alice. He is a gambler, and begins playing in Thurston's faro joint, finally falling into Thurston's power.

Gordon tries to force matters and Donald tells of his marriage with Alice. Donald's father disinherits him and the boy, leaving home, takes the stocks and bonds willed him by his mother. He leaves a note for his father and does not close the safe. Sir Ralph, to pay Thurston, takes a large amount of money from the open safe, and Hyde, the butler, catches him and gets a written confession from him. Donald hunts work and leaves Alice in the care of Joe, the stable boy, who is ever her guardian angel. The time of the Suburban arrives, and Gordon puts all of his fortune on the race. Sir Ralph plots with Tom, the jockey, to throw the race and let Thurston's horse win, thereby evening up Ralph's I. O. U.'s to Thurston. Tom, the jockey, thwarted by Joe while trying to give the powder to Gordon's horse, fights with him and is worsted. In another city, Donald sees in the newspapers that his father has staked his fortune on the race and decides to go back. He receives a letter from Joe and immediately leaves for his home. There he finds Ralph making love to Alice, and, after a thrashing, Sir Ralph is ejected from the house. The day of the great race arrives and Donald goes to the course. There he finds that Tom has been bribed to throw the race for Thurston's horse, and, after a heated argument with his father, who doubts that Donald tells the truth, he substitutes Joe to ride his horse and wins the race.

Later they go to the house. In the meantime Sir Ralph receives a note from Hyde demanding money or he (Hyde) will turn over Sir Ralph's written confession to Gordon. Ralph kills Hyde as Don and Alice come upon the scene, but before dying Hyde manages to get the paper to Donald who takes it to his father. The police bring on Ralph and a big scene ensues. Sir Ralph asks to be allowed time to get his coat, and in his absence the father makes everything right with Donald and Alice. They hear a shot and, rushing to the hall, find Ralph stretched dead on the floor.

THE COUNTRY CIRCUS (Sept. 10).—Claribel is looking out of the window when she sees a circus parade pass the house. She is enraptured with the sight, but nurse tells her that "circuses are only for little boys, and not for girls. Take your nap, now." Poor little Claribel jumps into bed and dreams a wonderful dream.

Dressed as a tiny boy, but with long trousers, she steals under the flap of a circus tent and finds herself confronted by a huge lion in a cage. Later a monkey jumps at her, but when the elephant comes to her and offers to take her on his back—they are extremely human animals, by the way—she is delighted. Suddenly a big man, really the trainer, appears and tells her, "You are not a boy!" Poor Claribel breaks down and cries and confesses that she isn't, but wants to see the circus so much!

She has a dandy time visiting the circus lady's room and donning the prettiest circus costume! She visits all the grounds and makes the acquaintance of all the trick animals. Just as she is about to jump on the back of the balky mule she falls out of the bed and finds that she has only been dreaming again.

A SHRIEK IN THE NIGHT (Two Parts Sept. 15).—The cast includes J. Warren Kerrigan, Helen Leslie, Ethel Phillips, Robert A. Myles, T. D. Crittenden and Mary Talbot.

The story deals with a "bull movement" engineered by C. P. Allison, a prominent New York operator, whose daughter, May, is visiting at a mountain resort, where the Lathrop family father, mother and son are staying for the summer. Miss Allison is pressed into service by her father to obtain information from Billy Lathrop, whose father is supposed to control the stock of an Eastern railroad, and to gain that end she attempts to win him from his sweetheart, Patsy. While the stock movement is progressing the elder Lathrop receives a telegram from his New York office conveying the information that Allison is about to carry out a coup, that the railroad deal is tied up, and that "personal means" are necessary to save him from bankruptcy. Lathrop shows the telegram to his son. The son asks what is to be done and is told the only chance is for him to marry Miss Allison.

Jim Kirkley has connived to make the acquaintance of Patsy, who, piqued because of Billy's attention to May, accepts Jim's invitation to take a stroll, and afterwards rides with him through a pass in the mountains. They dismount at the roadside, where, while Patsy is picking flowers, Jim starts the animals back to the resort. Billy is on the point of asking May to become his wife, when two horses, which he recognizes as those used by Patsy and Jim, return riderless. Billy mounts one of the animals and rides off, while guests at the resort quickly organize a searching party. Billy, riding through the forests, hears a woman's screams. He follows the sound to an abandoned cabin in the mountains, where Patsy is struggling with Jim to save her honor.

Billy attacks Jim. Billy gains the advantage and is about to close on Jim's throat when Jim draws his revolver. Patsy jolts Jim's gun arm, but the cartridge is discharged, the bullet lodging in Billy's left leg. Thinking he has inflicted a mortal wound, Jim rushes from the cabin and mounts the horse upon which Billy came on the scene, and, on reaching the resort, escapes in a high-powered racing car. Meanwhile, Billy has been ministered to by Patsy. Patsy helps Billy into the cabin, where they pass the night, Patsy acting as physician and nurse. The searching party has not been successful in finding Billy and Patsy and its members return to the resort.

Early the following morning Patsy is successful in inducing a passing rancher to drive her and Billy to town, where a marriage license is procured. The rancher drives Billy and Patsy to the home of a minister and the young people are married. They start home and Billy is taken to his parents' suite where he is made comfortable. While the Lathrops and Patsy are gathered about the couch, Mrs. Jones, Patsy's guardian and chaperone, calls to Patsy, requesting her to leave the room. But when Patsy tells her that they are now married, consternation reigns. At this point a messenger arrives with a telegram, which advises Lathrop that Allison is merely a figurehead in the railroad deal, and that Patsy's father, C. P. McGrath, is really the power behind the big deal. When the unique situation dawns upon Lathrop he joins his wife in congratulating Billy and Patsy.

THE QUEEN OF HEARTS (Three Parts—Sept. 14). The cast includes Herbert Rawlinson, Wm. Worthington, Barney Furey, Jack Welch, Anna Little and Miss Bonnie.

Col. Phillipot is one of the experts in the government ordnance department. In his official capacity he has a bundle of plans and prints of the latest inventions in the new guns. The Colonel has become involved to the amount of $50,000 in a gambling house conducted by Bruce Henderson. The Colonel's daughter, Bernice, has just finished her schooling and as a reward for her faithful study she is to make her coming out at the inaugural ball at the White House. Jim, the Colonel's son, has the gambling fever and is identified with Horace Westlake, seemingly an idler, but in reality an international spy, and his mistress, Olga Merode. Bruce Henderson, although a gambler, is respected in a sort of way and has access to exclusive circles in society. He attends the ball and makes the acquaintance of the Colonel's daughter. There is mutual attraction. Bernice's brother comes up with Westlake and introduces him to his sister. He orders Henderson to have nothing more to do with his sister, be being a gambler.

The next day, Henderson, while out riding, again meets Bernice and tells her of his life, but out of his strong regard for her offers to quit his gambling. She takes him at his word, and Henderson says he will close his gambling house that day. That evening the Colonel arrives for his nightly game and is again a loser. Henderson then announces that he is going to close the house. Phillipot, furious at his losses, and slightly under the influence of liquor, accuses him of trying to keep the losers from recouping their losses. The Colonel calls for his account. He is staggered at the size of it and finally puts his home in the balance against the I. O. U.'s, the winner to be decided by one cut of the cards. Again he loses. Henderson, drawing a queen of hearts. The deed is made out, the name being left blank, and later Henderson fills it out in Bernice's name and mails it to her.

Next morning Bernice gets the deed and thinks her father sent it to her. He is afraid to explain the real transaction, and the son, coming in at the moment, thinks his father has willed all his property to the daughter to cut him off. Angry words follow and the son leaves, vowing never to return. The Colonel goes to Henderson to demand satisfaction for interfering in his family affairs, and the hot words finally lead to a duel.

Henderson does not wish to fight the father of the girl he loves and resolves to sacrifice himself by firing into the air in the duel. He calls upon Bernice for what he himself thinks is the last time. He drops one of his gloves and, unobserved, it is kicked under the Colonel's safe. Through Westlake's pleadings, Jim steals his father's plans. The time for the duel arrives, and Henderson keeps his resolution by shooting into the air while the Colonel aims at his opponent. This is witnessed by Bernice, who has followed her father. Henderson is rushed to his apartments while the Colonel goes home and discovers his loss. Bernice finds the glove, recognizes it and goes to Henderson, who knowing that the plans are in Westlake's possession, journeys to him with Bernice. Henderson gets the plans and takes the blame upon himself to shield his sweetheart's brother. At home Jim confesses his theft. The Colonel also tells how the deed came to be made out to his daughter. While father and son are making their peace, Bernice slips up to Henderson's room and begs for forgiveness, which is readily granted.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS (Sept. 13—Six Parts).—The cast includes Nat. C. Goodwin, Mr. Nelson, Maude George, Mlle. Marguerite, Gretchen Lederer, Marc Robbins, Frank Newburg, Wellington Playter, Wyndham Standing.

Isidore Lechat, a wealthy Frenchman, lives in his castle in the south of France, together with his daughter, Germaine, and his wife, Madame Lechat. Although Isidore has a craving for money, he is fond of Germaine and his son, Xavier, who is attending college in Paris. Isidore hates the nobility and conceives a plan of having a nobleman working for him. He hires the Vicomte le da Fountenelle, who is in poor circumstances, supports his son in college by working as steward at the castle.

Madame Lechat is a woman of slovenly appearance. Isidore gives his usual Sunday banquet to the neighbors to impress them and win their favor, and refuses to let his wife attend because of her dress. Germaine is in love with Lucien Garraud, overseer of the castle, but they realize that Isidore would never give his consent to their marriage. Isidore goes to Paris to see his son, Xavier. Xavier is leading a fast life, entertaining girls of the boulevards and the cafes. Isidore is not displeased with this, and, in fact, abets Xavier by giving him money for his expenses. Celeste Saint Jean, a friend of Xavier, urges Isidore to leave his wife, but he tells her it is impossible, because he must live for the future of his two children.

Pierre Dauphin, a lifelong friend of Isidore who is on the verge of bankruptcy, finds Isidore is in town and decides to appeal to him for a loan. Isidore refuses because of unsuitable security. In despair, Dauphin kills himself in Isidore's office. Isidore is accused of murder by Dauphin's wife, who has followed. He sympathizes with her, but tells her that with him business is business. Isidore goes back to the castle and the Marquis de Porcellet calls upon him and asks for a loan upon his land. Isidore conceives the idea of marrying Germaine to the Marquis' son and offers him the loan upon this condition. The Marquis refuses.

Xavier goes to Monte Carlo, where he loses several hundred thousand francs at the gambling tables. Gruggh and Phinck, two swindlers, call upon Isidore and attempt to interest him in a mine which is inside the military lines and cannot be worked without the consent of the Minister of War. Isidore evolves a plan to secure a permit to work the mine and thus turn the tables upon the swindlers. Xavier comes to his father for money. Xavier's chum is Henri de Braggard, son of the Minister of War. Isidore bargains with Xavier to get Henri to use his influence with his father to allow the operation of the mine, and in return for this he agrees to pay Xavier's debts.

In the meantime, the Marquis, having to raise money, decides to accept Isidore's offer to have his son marry Germaine. Germaine refuses to marry the Marquis. Isidore is astounded and demands an explanation. At first Germaine refuses to explain her reasons, but after an angry scene with her father, she tells the Marquis that evidently his son would not wish to marry a woman about to give birth to a child. Isidore is thunderstruck. He orders the Marquis from the room and, seizing Germaine, attempts to strangle her. Lucien enters and forces Isidore to leave Germaine alone, telling him that he is the father of the child to be. Gruggh and Phinck see in the paper that Isidore has secured a permit to operate the mine and realize too late that he has turned the tables upon them. However, they have signed an agreement to deliver the deeds at a certain hour and must carry out their contract.

Isidore appeals to his wife to prevent Germaine from leaving. As Madame Lechat is on the point of persuading Germaine to stay, Celeste enters. At this his wife turns against him. The Vicomte enters and tells Isidore that they are bringing the body of Xavier in; that he has just been killed on his way back to Monte Carlo. This completely unnerves Isidore. Learning of Xavier's death, Gruggh and his partner, Phinck, hurry to the castle, believing that they can escape giving up the deeds to the mine, thinking that the tragedy that has overtaken Isidore will prevent him from carrying out the deal. Isidore does carry out the deal and receives the deed to the mine. In his room, Isidore is about to kill himself when Celeste prevents him. In the struggle for the possession of the gun Celeste is killed. The story closes with Isidore on the verge of insanity.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 12 -Two Parts—"A Cry in the Park"—Sept. 5).—Kitty lies unconscious in the palace of Gretzhoffen. Frederick and Michael return to the palace. The King of Grahoffen returns to the palace, angry because he cannot start war with Gretzhoffen and his ruler. Roleaux, upon arriving in Gretzhoffen, goes to the hotel, hoping to find Kitty there with the coin. Inquiring at the desk, he learns that she has not returned since the murder. As he is about to leave the hotel he is arrested. At the palace, Frederick is about to bid the King good-bye and go in search of Kitty and the other part of the coin when he overhears the King asking the housekeeper if Miss Grey is feeling any better. Frederick, surprised, sneaks from the room and follows the housekeeper to the room Kitty had occupied. Opening the door to Kitty's room, Frederick, who is hiding behind nearby curtains, hears the housekeeper give a cry of surprise as she finds the room empty. Frederick sneaks down to the cellar where, after looking about for Kitty, he is about to give up, when he hears a groan, and, listening at the door leading to the torture chamber, hears the same thing repeated. He opens the door and finds Kitty prostrate upon the floor. Kitty slowly comes to, and, seeing the face of her enemy, Frederick, forgets for the moment the horror of the place she is in and asks him what he wants there with her. He helps her to her feet. Leading her toward the door, Frederick tries to get her out of the place, but she stops to fix her hair a bit and, in doing that, she again sees the skeletons that frightened her before. She faints in the arms of Frederick.

At police headquarters Roleaux is given the third degree. He pleads his innocence, telling them he was not in the hotel until after the murder was discovered. Then, remembering that the body had mysteriously disappeared, asks the chief how he knew there had been a murder, saying his word was as good as that of the hotel proprietor. The chief pays no attention to him, but orders him back to the cell to await trial. As he approaches the door, Roleaux remembers the King's fondness for Kitty and asks the chief if he would have the King notified that a friend of Kitty's was being held. The chief promises to go himself. At the palace of Grahoffen the King calls his prime minister and other members of the council together, with them Count Sachio, tells them that he will give them a very short time to get the other half of the coin, so they can lay their plans to start war against Gretzhoffen and secure its wealth of gold. Frederick meanwhile takes Kitty to a small room in the palace, and, with the aid of the housekeeper, finally succeeds in bringing her back to consciousness. They then take her to the King. Michael is much concerned about her health and insists that she go to bed and reamin there until she is quite well. She is about to refuse, when a servant announces that the chief of police wants to see the King regarding the murder. The King and Frederick go to the chief, leaving Kitty in the small room. Kitty hides behind the curtains of the door leading to the room, hoping to hear something about Roleaux. The chief tells the King what Roleaux has said and asks what he shall do, as they have not yet found any dead body. Learning Roleaux is Kitty's friend, the King tells the chief to wait until he has asked Miss Grey about it, and goes to her.

After the chief has gone Michael returns to Kitty, trying to persuade her to remain at the palace, but Kitty, more anxious than ever to get back to the hotel, makes her excuses to Michael and leaves the palace. Frederick, believing Kitty had heard the chief tell about Roleaux, and suspecting she will go to him, follows her. The chief returns to the prison, and, sending for a guard, tells him to give Roleaux a chance to escape and then follow him. This they do, and Roleaux goes directly to the hotel hoping to find Kitty there. As he gets into the hall, outside her door, he hears a noise in her room, and, hiding around the end of the hall, watches for the intruder to come out. He has not long to wait, for no sooner had he gotten out of sight when an Apache sneaks out. He follows the Apache out of the place, just as Kitty enters by way of the front door and goes to her room, closely watched by Frederick. The Apache, unaware of Roleaux following him, makes his way to his den, and Roleaux keeps close watch, unaware of the gendarmes not twenty feet back of him.

At the hotel Kitty is told that Roleaux has not returned. She then phones police headquarters and learns that he has escaped and that the gendarmes are tracing him to the lower parts of the city. Frederick, on the outside of her room, overhears her repeat that the police are on Roleaux's track in the lower part of the city, decides to follow her. Kitty leaves the hotel for the Apaches' den. Just as she leaves the hotel, followed by Frederick, another Apache, who has been keeping watch, follows the both of them. Roleaux succeeds in entering the dive of the Apaches, unseen by the one he was following, and is about to follow him into the main cellar, when something stops him and he waits for his chance. Blanc, the chief, comes into the dive just as another of his men sees Roleaux and makes a grab for him. Roleaux, unaware of the two, stands still, waiting his chance to enter the room as Blanc draws his gun and fires at him.

AMERICAN.

THE SENOR'S SILVER BUCKLE (Two Parts—Sept. 13).—The cast includes Edward Coxen, Charles Newton, Winifred Greenwood, Robert Klein, George Field.

The Senor Cabello, a Spaniard, is threatened with seizure by an invading party of "Grin-goes." He leaves his home, accompanied by a peon servant, Miguel, taking with him the family treasure to be buried until safer days come. The treasure is buried near a certain tree and the location marked on a silver buckle. The Senor is killed by Miguel, who retains the silver buckle that he may later recover the master's gold. A settler, passing through the country, pitches his camp near the treasure tree; and later the tree is cut down to make way for his home.

Twenty years later the settler is living in the original cabin with his daughter, when Miguel sends his son, Felipe, to recover the buried treasure. Felipe is misled in his search because the treasure tree is gone, and the stump has been covered with a tub which is used by the settlers for a table. George Davis, a young surveyor, is in love with Alice, the settler's daughter. He is instrumental in foiling Felipe's work and the treasure is recovered for Alice.

THE LITTLE LADY NEXT DOOR (Sept. 17). The cast includes Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer, Louise Lester, Jack Richardson, Parry Banks, Virginia Fordyce, Harry Edmondson.

Charles Bender is wrapped up heart and soul in his motherless child, Betty. A pretty young woman rents the cottage next door. Betty is attracted to the "little lady" and a warm friendship springs up between them. The "little lady" (an artist) asks permission to paint a portrait of the child. The father readily consents, worshipping the "little lady" from afar; but through diffidence, does not express himself. He knows her only as "the little lady next door."

Before the painting is finished the child falls ill. Hastening to his neighbor for assistance, he arrives just in time to witness an affectionate meeting between the "little lady" and a handsome stranger. Heartsick, and without completing his errand, he stumbles away utterly crushed. The village doctor fails to bring the child relief, saying that she must have the care of a specialist. The father rushes to the telegraph office only to learn that the wires are down and that he is shut off from the outside world. He returns home frantic, to find that in his absence the "little lady" has arrived with the handsome stranger.

In his grief, the father is about to resent the intrusion when the stranger is introduced to him as Dr. Stirling, the "little lady's brother"—a noted specialist. His arrival is indeed opportune. The child's life is saved. The lonesome father overcomes his hesitancy, gains a loving wife, and the little family lives on happily.

THE BARREN GAIN (Two Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Walter Spencer, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester, Nan Christy, Charles Bartlett and Teddy Lynch.

Through years of struggle, Philip Cameron has won literary fame. His close application to work during those hard years has erected a barrier between him and his pleasure-loving wife. Their child, Helen, a girl of five, is their only tie. Philip longs for someone, sympathetic and interested, to share his dreams and ambitions. Lois gives all her time to society. Philip receives a letter from his boyhood friend, John Daunt, that he is sending his daughter to him that she may develop her literary talent. Philip finds that she has talent, and also that she shares his dreams and ambitions. It becomes a joy to work with Meta.

Dr. Brainbridge, a frequent visitor at the Cameron home, falls in love with Meta, but she feels toward him only a casual friendliness. Barr, a wealthy man of the world, is paying assiduous attention to Lois—and his attentions are not unwelcome. Meta and Philip are facing a serious situation. They find that their mutual attraction has ripened into love, but, for the sake of Helen, they do not give in to their feelings.

Meta overhears Barr and Lois planning to elope; and sacrificing her own love, she decided to stop the elopement. She confides in Dr. Bainbridge. He administers a sleeping powder to Helen and pretends she is seriously ill. Lois is summoned from packing her grip and Philip is called away from a banquet in his honor.

Midnight finds Barr waiting in vain at the railway station. The crisis of the child's illness has brought husband and wife together. Finding his ruse successful, Dr. Bainbridge revives Helen, with the announcement that she is out of danger. And Meta! She has given up eternally the man she loves.

IT WAS LIKE THIS (Sept. 24).—The cast includes Edward Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood, George Field, Lizette Thorne, Robert Klein.

Adams is hoping for a son the same night that "Spider" Barlow plans to make a haul at the Adams house. While Adams smokes in the library, outside "Spider" waits for him to retire. The burglar enters the house. The maid is awakened and corners him in a closet. Adams comes, and explains the need for quiet, leaving the maid on guard with a gun.

When Adams goes to send a hurry call for the doctor, "Spider" relieves the maid of the gun, and, taking advantage of the opportunity, rifles the house. Acting as self-appointed butler, "Spider" admits the doctor, and, removing the gag long enough to give the maid three kisses, departs in the doctor's limousine with the doctor's coat and bag.

AMERICAN STAR FEATURE.

THE GREAT QUESTION (Three Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast includes Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Harry Von Meter, William Stowell, Eugenie Ford.

Prior to his marriage it behooves every man to destroy mementoes of his cast-off loves, else they become ghosts of his future life. Bagley sits before the open fire in his apartments and, in burning the souvenirs of former days, has visions of each of the charmers. A series of dissolves ends with the showing of his flirtation with Lois Valerie in a brilliant cafe, followed by the enactment of the story portraying her inroads on the heart of young Bagley. Realizing her motive, Bagley, Sr., buys her off for $20,000. After his first fit of anger at what he considers an intrusion on the part of his father, the younger man appreciates the wisdom of the act, and goes West to his father's ranch to think it over and begin over.

His meeting with Flora Donner, the daughter of a rancher, soon ripens into love. The young people are married and live in New York. On tango night at Bagley's club, his wife discovers, to her sorrow, the duplicity and artificiality of both men and women of New York's high society. Through an innocent indiscretion, she is estranged from her husband and is victimized and imprisoned by society vultures who thrive on family discord. Finally succeeding in getting word of her imprisonment to her repentant husband, he rescues her. They go directly to the station, pausing only long enough to dispatch a letter to his father, telling him that they are going back to the ranch; that the city with its lusts and riches spells nothing but misery and ruin for them.

BEAUTY.

INCOGNITO (Sept. 14).—The cast includes Webster Campbell, Neva Gerber, Rae Berger, Lucille Ward, Wallace MacDonald, William Carroll.

John Cross, a millionaire, and his daughter, Patty, visit Oak Forrest Inn, traveling incognito to avoid fortune seekers. Much to their surprise, they are snubbed by the elect and refused admission to the social set. About this time Dick Ellis arrives at the hotel, and is also snubbed. The situation throws the three together, and they form a little circle of their own. Staying at the hotel is an impostor posing as a count who is much sought after by the fond parents.

John Cross chances to drop a note which is found by the count, and which reveals its owner's identity. The count immediately lays seige to Patty's fortune through feigned love. He finds Dick in favor and manufactures tales which grieve and disappoint Patty. Dick becomes disheartened and decided to leave the hotel. Through mistake, Dick gets into the

THE WORLD'S BEST SCREEN

The SEMPACO is the last word in screen construction; the very limit of perfection; the nearest approach to satisfaction ever built into a screen!

Read that again, and let it sink in!

Now—ponder this:

The SEMPACO has never been advertised before, but because of its superiority over ALL other screens, it is already in use in the best theatres from New York to Havana! In many instances, it has supplanted screens that have been advertised for years!

In ANY length, up to 12 ft. 6 in. wide, the SEMPACO is ABSOLUTELY SEAMLESS. It doesn't merely "look" seamless—it IS! Another thing, the SEMPACO CAN'T SAG OR WRINKLE! It is as tight as a drum when first put up—and—the longer it's in use, the tighter it gets! And—it is made to wear without repair—FOREVER!

It makes a poor picture good; a good picture better. The finer the photography, the cleaner, clearer, truer, more perfect the projection. It brings out every little detail of the picture with utmost strength.

The SEMPACO is sold with OUR GUARANTEE OF EVERLASTING SATISFACTION, or until you can find a screen you'd rather have. In that event, we'll take back the SEMPACO and refund your money. Gold or silver, 45c. a square foot. Write for any size sample you want—free.

room next to his which is occupied by a woman of wealth and is seen emerging. He leaves the hotel and starts for home. At this time John Cross received a telegram telling him that his wife is ill; so that he and Patty hastily leave.

At this juncture, the woman, into whose room Dick accidentally stepped, misses some jewels, and suspicion is cast upon Dick. Detectives sent after Dick are successfully eluded. In the meantime, the count has found it necessary to leave the hotel. The three different parties are arrested, the count is detained and Dick cooly walks off with Patty.

A FRIEND IN NEED (Sept. 18).—The cast includes Frank Borzage, John Sheehan and Beatrice Van.

Frank and Johnny, two clerks at a soda fountain, have but one suit between them. They are in love with the same girl. She strings them alternately on their respective hours off duty. Frank is afraid to propose; Johnny isn't, and she accepts him. He makes a date to meet her at the church, and rushes back to ask Frank to stay on the job for him while he gets married. Not knowing who the girl is, Frank cheerfully agrees. When Johnny returns with the girl, Frank is so surprised he drops a glass of soda and is discharged, losing out on the girl, the job and the clothes.

EVERYHEART (Sept. 21).—The cast includes Webster Campbell, Neva Gerber, William Carroll, John Sheehan.

In the beginning, Everyheart comes from the Realm of Spirit. On his way to the World, he enters the Garden of God's Gift, where he received many good gifts at the hands of the Angel attendants. He asks abundantly of the Angels of Kindness and Protection, knowing in the World he will need these gifts. He is admonished that, according to "Life's Eternal Law every unused gift shall be taken away." At the entrance to the World, he is cautioned not to exchange his priceless gifts for worldly goods of temporal glory. He forgets this warning, and trades his gifts for money, passion and selfishness. As he is about to trade for more money, the detaining hand of Woman touches him and reminds him of the warning at the entrance. Later he falls in love with Woman and promises her kindness and protection while she pledges everlasting love. They are married.

As the years pass, Everyheart becomes neglectful of his kindness, until Woman seeks kindness in the friendship of a man. Everyheart accuses Woman of infidelity, but she swears it is only kindness she seeks, not the man's love. Everyheart becomes the prey of anger and departs, leaving Woman alone. She sinks to the floor. Returning a few hours later, he finds her where she sank to the floor earlier in the evening. He seeks a Doctor, who is helpless and who tells Everyheart that only kindness can cure Woman. He searches everywhere but cannot find kindness, until finally, in desperation, he offers a fervent prayer to the Angel of Kindness. She answers his prayer, and he hurriedly returns to Woman, whom he is able to treat with kindness. Slowly she revives; and, as she recognizes Everyheart's kindness, all of her vanished happiness returns.

CATS, CASH AND A COOK BOOK (Sept. 25).—The cast includes John Steppling, Nan Christy, Bessie Banks, Dick Rosson.

Jeremiah Brown and his wife live in a city apartment. He is a broker. Through high living, much entertainment, and a lavish wasting of money by his wife, bankruptcy stares him in the face. Brown appeals to his Aunt Clarinda for $5,000 to tide him over the crisis, and is informed that she has just endowed a home for stray cats at the behest of Rev. Amos Doolittle. This is a great shock to Brown. However, Aunt Clarinda writes that she will pay them a visit and bring a jewel that will provide them the lives of kings. This rumor is circulated, the newspapers get hold of it, and announce that Miss Clarinda Peabody of Cloverdale will visit the city and bring with her some rare jewels.

Second-story Sam reads this, and decides to make a rich haul. The jewel turns out to be Aunt Clarinda's cook book. Brown tires of her, and plots to have her scared away. One of his club members is to enter Aunt Clarinda's room in the disguise of a burglar. On the fatal night, she routs the intruder and goes back to bed, when Second-story Sam comes upon the scene. She knocks him out and ties him securely with the cord from her bathrobe. It later develops that a reward of $5,000 has been offered for his capture. She claims the reward, and loans it to Brown on the condition that the firm name be changed to Brown & Co. and she is the "Company."

FALSTAFF.

PANSY'S PRISON PIES (Sept. 6).—Pansy ran a restaurant, and because of her good cooking Pansy was much sought after, but she repulsed the local swains with scorn. She declared she would only wed a man who had traveled and knew the world, and that was why fortune smiled upon the fat and impecunious drummer. As a drummer he was not a financial success. He traveled for a musical supply house but found it almost impossible to sell cornets and violins to the farmers in his territory. He was nearly at the end of his resources when he struck the little town where Pansy lived, and a kindly fate led him to her restaurant.

It was love at first sight. Something told her that the drummer was in a state of financial stringency, so she showered pies and doughnuts upon him. Another suitor saw all this and was jealous. He was the local policeman, who because he was the only member of the force, had the right to sport the title "Chief" on his helmet. But Pansy did not like him because he was not a big eater. That evening the drummer serenaded Pansy and the policeman arrested him on a charge of being a band without a license. The drummer was cast into jail but Pansy did not forget him. Day after day she appeared outside the cell window and recklessly hurled pies and doughnuts through the bars. The drummer thrived upon this diet and when Pansy urged him to escape he consented. She had concealed a file in one of her pies and with this he busily sawed away at the bars.

This happened to be the police chief's hoodoo day. The sheriff, who was also president of the village board, told the chief to keep an eye on the jail while he, the sheriff, went into town on business. The chief stood under the drummer's window and the drummer carefully dropped a loaf of prison bread upon his head. Then the chief lost all interest in the proceedings. The other prisoners had got wind of the drummer's attempted escape, tore down the doors of their cell in frenzy, swarmed into the drummer's cell, and several of them plunged out to safety. The drummer tried to follow them but the doughnuts and pies had made him so plump that he could not pass through, but simply blocked up the opening. The sheriff returned just as the police chief regained his senses, staggered to his feet and remarked, "The jail is out." The sheriff looked up and from what he saw was convinced that the drummer was preventing the escape of the other men. He rushed inside, secured them in his capacity as sheriff, then as president of the town board he ousted the policeman and bestowed his helmet and shield upon the convict drummer.

The little town where Pansy lives now boasts of the fattest police chief in the world, and they talk with reverence of his devoted wife who meets him while he is patrolling his beat and lavishes pies and doughnuts upon her jolly husband.

WEARY WALKER'S WOES (Sept. 10).—A tramp reclining on a park bench picked up a letter lying on the ground which read: "Dear Sir: Call at our office and receive $10,000 left by your late uncle. The single stipulation is that you are prosperous. This letter is the only identification required." Fortune came the tramp's way for right at the start he managed to annex a large furlined overcoat. This covered his shabbiness and induce a simple-minded clerk to trust him for a pair of shoes. In a barber shop his gorgeous coat hid his ragged clothes and he got a shave, haircut, massage, manicure, shoe shine, and cigar without being called upon to pay in advance. On his way out he annexed the collar and tie of the man in the next chair, lifted the same unfortunate's silk hat from the rack and even had the nerve to borrow his victim's auto for a getaway. Being thoroughly dressed "prosperous" he sauntered around to the lawyer whose address appeared upon the letter.

The lawyer was the man who had lost the silk hat, collar and auto. He recognized his hat and under a plea of taking Weary to his inheritance leads him to the police station. There the tramp meets the other man who was swindled. The tramp was led to a cell, followed by his "creditors." One by one they returned each carrying an article of Weary's raiment. As the last one filed out, the doorman came from the back room and approached his superior.

"Say, boss," he remarked languidly, "that new guy is chirping about an inheritance that's due him. Shall I send him down to this foolish ward at Bellevue?"

The Lieutenant laughed and from his desk picked up the letter. He turned over the second page and called the doorman's attention to it.

"He forgot to read the second page," exclaimed the Lieutenant. "This isn't a letter about property. It's just a cleaver that lawyer got up. If you don't turn over the page and read that it's an ad you may get fooled."

The Lieutenant then added: "That guy wants his inheritance," he chuckled. "Give him my compliments and tell him his inheritance will be either three or six months, depending upon how the judge enjoyed his breakfast." This made Weary Willie's bones tremble, and he cursed the day that he tried to be prosperous.

THANHOUSER.

THE BOWL BEARER (Sept. 7—Two Parts).—Romance came into the life of the young American when he took a horseback trip through upper Mexico. One afternoon he found himself lost in a strange country. Coming to a cross roads he debated which way to go and finally took the right hand path. Proceeding along it for some miles he noticed a ranch house and rode up to it. A pretty girl smiled out of the kitchen window at him and indicated the bowl, which she had just put out and which was filled with Mexican Torta. She told the rider that if he would sing again that she would give him some of her tarts. He sang an appropriate ditty, helped himself to a cookie and rode around to the front of the house, where he was greeted by the proprietor, a stately Spaniard, who gave him a most cordial welcome. He then introduced him to his daughter, a handsome young woman but not the one to whom the adventurer had lost his heart. The young man accepted their invitation to remain until the following morning, and a few minutes later supper was announced.

At the table in addition to his host and hostess there were two scowling young men who were introduced as cousins. Both seemed to resent the presence of the young American. During the progress of the meal the visitor again met the young girl whom he had dubbed "The Bowl Bearer" and found that she was a poor relation and practically treated as a drudge. Her name was Delicia. The dainty torta which he had seen earlier were passed around by Delicia, and in her progress around the table she accidentally bumped into one of the cousins. He became enraged, and brutally shoved her aside. The American jumped to his feet and thrashed the bully. Later he apologized to his host.

In the morning the American rode away and after he was gone Delicia learned that the two cousins had plotted to lay in ambush and kill the man who had struck one of them. Hoping to be able to warn him, Delicia mounted a horse and rode swiftly away. She arrived too late, however, for the plotters had succeeded and left the American lying in the road. An old servant who accompanied the American to act as guide, told Delicia that aid was useless, but the girl put up a little camp in the woods, and tenderly nursed the young man. When the young American recovered, he was very grateful and urged the girl to marry him. She refused, however, until he could obtain his mother's consent, and yielding to her entreaties he returned alone to his home. Days lengthened into weeks, but no message came to her. Delicia was confident of his loyalty and finally a chance came whereby she could investigate for herself. Another relative of the old servant with whom she was staying was a caterer in Pasadena, the home town of her lover, and she secured a position with this estimable woman. Their first engagement was at one of the finest homes in Pasadena and the caterer told Delicia that at the affair the engagement of the only son of the wealthy hostess would be announced. The entertainment was in progress before Delicia learned that the young man was the one with whom she had plighted her troth. From the pantry where she was preparing the bowl of torta for the banquet, she saw her sweetheart, his mother on one side of him, while on the other was a beautiful girl to whom he seemingly paid much attention. She picked up the bowl of torta and entered the banquet room to serve the guests.

As she approached the table, unnoticed by all, one of the women guests asked the young man whom he was to marry. Delicia stopped to listen. The young man, realizing that someone was near him, looked back for a moment and saw her. He rose to his feet, placed his arms around the trembling girl and said: "Here she is, my friends, here she is—the little bowl bearer—Delicia—meaning Delight!"

THE MOTHER OF HER DREAMS (Sept. 10).—The little girl has been at the orphan asylum as long as she could remember. Who her parents were she knew not, but the happiest moments of her pitiful life were those when she lay asleep, and, "the mother of her dreams" visited her. She was a beautiful woman, always clothed in white. From time to time women visited the institution to select children for adoption. Finally she was adopted, but her hope of securing a "mother" was cruelly blasted. The woman who took her did not want a daughter, she had sought a drudge and treated the little orphan most cruelly. One evening the child crept abed weary after a hard day's toil. In the night "the mother of her dreams" reappeared, and beckoned her to follow. With rapture the child arose, hastily dressed herself and wandered out into the night. Where she was going she did not know, but later she declared that the "mother of her dreams" was with her all the time. Finally the girl came upon a little boy, lost in the woods. The boy could not explain where he lived, but the girl remained with him.

Some hours later searchers arrived, headed by a wild-eyed woman, a wealthy widow, the mother of the boy. She took her child in her arms, while others of the party questioned the girl, believing at first she kidnapped the youngster, but the boy explained matters and his mother came forward to thank his protector. The girl looked at her with awe and said, "Why, you are the mother of my dreams." Gently questioned, she told her pitiful story. The woman listened with compassion, her boy whispered in her ear, she nodded, then taking the girl by the hand, she led the child to her beautiful home.

OUT OF THE SEA (Sept. 12).—An old fisherman lived alone with his daughter in a little cabin on the sea coast. The natives soon saw that the man and his daughter were well educated people and suspected that there was a mystery connected with their lives. One day the fisherman's daughter saw a man struggling in the surf. Despite his efforts to keep afloat he disappeared beneath the surface of the water and would undoubtedly have perished if the girl had not plunged into the water and brought the man to land. In the little cabin father and daughter cared for the stranger, but their solicitude changed to terror when a police officer's shield was found in their guest's possession, and he was identified by a newspaper article as a detective who had been searching for a bank embezzler. And the man for whom the detective was searching was the old fisherman.

The fugitive was innocent, but circumstantial evidence was so strong that if he was placed on trial it would mean a long term in prison, and would leave his daughter without a protector. The detective recovered. During his illness he had grown to care for his nurse, and, although he realized that he owed his life to her and to her father, he was tormented by the fact that his oath as an officer of the law obliged him to arrest the fugitive and bring him back to the city with him. The officer telegraphed his mother of his safe return and then the conflict between love and gratitude on one side, and duty on the other began, and duty won.

The detective told the fisherman that he was under arrest, and the fugitive obeyed without protest, but as they turned to go the police officer read the mute appeal in the girl's eyes. Love seemed so much stronger than duty, he wavered, and it seemed to the anxious girl that he had decided to disregard his duty as an officer and let her father go free. But he did not have to make a decision, for a messenger arrived with a telegram for the detective, telling him to return to the city, for the embezzler for whom he was in search had been proved innocent by the death bed confession of the real culprit. A happy girl bade farewell to the detective, who told her that he would soon return, and she knew in her heart the question which he would ask when he came back to her.

CENTAUR.

THE RAJAH'S SACRIFICE (Two Parts—Sept. 16).—The cast includes Mlle. Ottowa, Capt. Jack Bonavita, Roy Watson, H. Batty, M. Gay, Vera Robson and others.

Captain Roberts reports to Col. Sanders of the appearance of sudden threatening activities in the native secret society. Reaching home he discovers his daughter, Helen, has gone to a reception. He follows her but en route receives a decoy note. While returning he is overpowered by natives and taken to their rendezvous. When Col. Sanders arrives at the place of reception he finds that Helen is not there. A disturbance outside attracts the attention of the party and when Col. Sanders returns to the reception room he finds a note informing him of the capture of Helen. The party imediately mount their horses and hasten to rescue her.

Helen is obliged to assume native garb and mount an elephant. The natives see the approach of the rescue party and bind and gag their victim. The rescue party passes without discovering her identity. Helen is carried to far away Hindoo City and presented to the Rajah, who falls in love with her. He removes her from the power of the high priest and places her in the hands of his women. Having been educated in England, the Rajah has high respect for Christian women. The high priest insists on keeping her in his power. The Rajah objects and to secure Helen's freedom suggests that she go through the formality of marriage. The Rajah will then have the right to return her to her father. Helen consents and Captain Roberts is notified to come for her.

The Rajah enters the room of a group of lions who attack and kill him. The high priest again makes Helen prisoner to be burned alive with the body of her husband, according to the custom of the country. Captain Roberts, upon receiving the Rajah's letter, becomes hysterical and takes a party of friends with him to free his daughter. Helen has been tied to a stake and the funeral pyre is fired. But the high priest, desiring Helen for himself, has constructed a trap door. While the fire burns she is lowered to a sacred chamber and is placed in charge of Jumba, keeper of the sacred animals, who is in love with the high priest. The high priest attempts liberties but is repulsed by Helen. Jumba endeavors to free Helen and passes her through the den of sacred animals and the secret chambers. Captain Roberts and the rescue party gain entrance to the chamber when the high priest enters the secret door with natives. They attack the rescuing party when suddenly Helen rises from the altar and the natives, thinking her a ghost, flee in terror. Helen recognizes and rushes to her father and the high priest, angered at Jumba, attacks her. In the fight Jumba kills the high priest in self-defense and then flees from the temple. Roberts, Helen and the rescue party make good their escape.

KAY BEE.

NEVER AGAIN (Sept. 22). The cast includes Leona Hutton, Harry Keenan, Jack Hamilton, Virginia Philly.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis live in a lonely part of the Catskill Mountains and are entertaining a young chap named Roy Gill. They invite to see them a young New York girl named Ellen Watts. Ellen accepts the invitation, telegraphing she will arrive on a certain train. She misses this train and telegraphs again that she will arrive on a later train. This latter telegram never reaches the Davises, as the old telegraph operator at the country station has been persuaded to go on a bear hunt. The Davises meet the first train, find Ellen is not on it and return home and go to bed.

Ellen arrives later, visits the house and finds the inmates asleep. She effects an entrance through a side window but is scared away by the inmates rising and firing a couple of shots at her, under the impression she is a burglar. She gets out of the window again, is seen by the dog, who chases her. Ellen beats a hasty retreat and manages to elude the dog.

Meanwhile the bear hunt has been progressing and the Rubes have been chased by the bear. The bear is frightened from under a tree where the Rubes are, and moves toward the station. Ellen arrives at the station and sees the bear. In fright she climbs to the top of the station roof while the bear claws underneath in an attempt to reach her. In the pouring rain Ellen swears that never again will she leave the city.

RELIANCE.

THE STRONGER MAN (Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast includes Irene Hunt, Francis J. MacDonald, Jack Brammell, A. D. Sears.

Cecil Graham learns that her husband is faithless. They agree to be divorced. At a house-party Cecil meets James Long, with whom she flirts to divert her mind from her troubles. A love affair develops between them, but they soon tire of one another and drift apart. Cecil then goes West. On the train she meets Stanley Hargrave, whom she later marries. Long's enthusiasm for her revives and he follows her across the continent. Finding her married to Hargrave, he tries to persuade her to leave her husband, pleading that their love comes first. Cecil at last is won over. On the point of going away with Long, however, she is discovered by Hargrave, who orders her from the house. She pleads with him. The story of her unhappy life affects Hargrave profoundly. Cecil is sure now that she loves only Hargrave. At last he sees everything through his wife's eyes and gladly forgives her.

KOMIC.

THE JINX ON JENKS (Sept. 12).—The cast includes Max Davidson, Frank Darien, Ann Slater, Pearl Elmore.

Jenks and his friend, Max, are out celebrating. They separate, and Max goes home to his hotel where he flirts with a pretty young woman in the lobby. Max's wife catches him, and gets a sound beating for his duplicity. Jenks, in the meantime, has broken a window. He is followed to his office by a detective. He manages to give the sleuth the slip by locking himself in private sanctum, where he stays all night. In the morning he is a trifle nonplussed to find the detective waiting in the hall to make the arrest. Jenks phones Max for help. Max's wife has gone away for the day, and her husband is free to enter into any piece of deviltry he pleases. He loses no time in getting hold of a dress belonging to his large mother-in-law and securing a quantity of false hair. These he contrives to pass into the office. Cleverly disguised, Jenks makes his getaway. He meets Max down the street and they repair to the later's hotel together. A gossip sees them enter the lobby and immediately phones Mrs. Max, who hurries home. Over the transom she sees her husband smoking and drinking with an unknown companion in petticoats. She bursts into the room, and before Max can collect his wits to explain, he is caught up in a hurricane of marital vindictive and violence.

GAUMONT.

WHEN THE CALL CAME (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast includes Mrs. Wright, George Larkin, Fred C. Hearn, Louise Hamilton.

Jim Gleason long has had an evil reputation. One night he breaks into the home of the Widow Hunter, and overhears Will, her son and sole support, resolving to enter a life of crime to save his mother from starvation. Half from pity, half from curiosity, Gleason follows Will to the house of Harvey Elliott. Strangely fascinated, the hardened crook hides to watch this boy commit his first crime. A diamond brooch of peculiar design lies on the table. Will seizes it. Gleason starts from his place of concealment to prevent the deed. But before he can intervene, young Hunter has fled. The crook stealthily follows. He is brought face to face with Elliott, however, and the police are summoned. Gleason, accused of the theft, is locked up.

Meanwhile, the boy has been tracked by two men. Once safely inside his own house the enormity of his offense comes over him and he starts on a run back to the home of the millionaire to replace the diamonds. The two men who have been shadowing Will, waylay him. A struggle ensues in which the boy is knocked senseless. At daybreak he comes to himself. He reads of Gleason's arrest. Forgetting everything else, he goes to the station and gives himself up. Gleason, meanwhile, has been released. He steals around to Hunter's house after dark, meaning to leave there the few dollars he has. Old Mrs. Hunter, who is both deaf and blind, discovers his presence, and, mistaking him for her son, implores him not to leave her again. Gleason resolves to fill Will's place as best he can. By this time he has learned in full the story of Will's adventures of the preceding night. Gleason determines not to rest until he has run down the two men and brought them to justice. He gets a respectable job, and at night still visits his old haunts in the hope of tracing the thieves.

Months pass. Several times he is on the point of capturing the crooks when the opportunity evades him. At last, through a woman's whim, their whereabouts are betrayed, and Gleason triumphs. Will Hunter is freed. He is convinced that his mother must be dead. But on reaching home he is amazed to find that a stranger has been substituting for him all through his absence and that Mrs. Hunter is well and happy. Will is overcome with gratitude to Gleason. But all the latter asks in return is the boy's promise that never again will he resort to the crooked path. Then Gleason goes away—a changed man for the rest of his life.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE MAN FROM OREGON (American—Five Parts—Sept. 16).—The cast: Clara Williams, Howard Hickman, Herschel Megall, Fanny Bidgley and Jos. J. Dowling.

"Honest Jim" Martin is elected by popular vote to the U. S. Senate in the fight against the Railway Land-Grab Bill. When Jim goes to Washington his mother accompanies him. At the first reception of the season, Jim is introduced to Harriet Lane, the most dangerous woman in the Capital, by Wm. Landers, chief of the secret railway lobby. Harriet is a lobbyist and is supposed to win the votes of the Senators for the Lanb-Grab Bill. Jim becomes fascinated by Harriet's wit and beauty and she and Landers set a snare for him. Harriet writes him that she is in great trouble and asks him to call at her hotel. In his sympathy for her he places his arm about her and she leans against him, burying her face against his shoulders. As she does this she manages to loosen her hair, which falls in a tangled mass over her shoulders. She also disarranged her waist, giving evidence of a struggle having taken place between herself and Jim. While they are in this position Landers snaps their picture from a curtained doorway where he is concealed. He then confronts Jim and tells him that the negative will be given the newspapers if Jim doesn't give them his vote. Jim leaves the hotel in no pleasant frame of mind, first telling Harriet of his scorn for her. Harriet, who has become friendly with Jim's mother, is vary unhappy because of the part she has been obliged to play and when Mother Martin calls on her that afternoon, bringing her a pie which she has baked herself for Harriet's birthday, Harriet determines to get the negatives from Landers and destroy them. To do this she goes to Lander's office that night and unable to open the safe, because Landers has anticipated some such move on her part and changed the combination, she telephones to police headquarters and asks them to send up an expert to open the safe. This is done and while Harriet and the expert are still in the office (Harriet with the negatives in her hand) Landers enters and snatches the negatives from her. He has drawn his pistol and as he stands there talking with the safe expert, Harriet snatches the pistol from his hand and shoots the negatives to pieces as they lay on Lander's besk. The next day she sends them to Jim with a note telling him that all the evidenee the lobby had against him is enclosed and asking him in future to try to live up to his mother's belief in him.

THE WOLF MAN (Reliance—Four Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: Ralph Lewis, Jack Brammall, Richard Cummings, William Hinckley, "Billie" Lee West, Alberta Lee and William H. Brown.

Benjamin Lord, an old chemist, after many years of investigation and experimenting, involves a new glaze for pottery, which promises to revolutionize the industry and bring a fortune to him. Hilbert Grinde, head of the nation's largest pottery, is given a sample and, realizing the fortune it means, commands Timothey Mole, the company's chemist, whom he holds in his power, to secure the formula. Mole goes to Lord's home and secures part of the formula. He manages to make a glaze almost perfect, but not to Grinde's satisfaction. Returning again, Mole encounters the old chemist and in a struggle for the formula, kills him. Grinde enters and assures Mole of his protection if he will get the formula for him. In an effort to hide the crime, Mole prepares a chemical solution which explodes, destroying the laboratory.

David Lord, the dead chemist's grandson, who is also a chemist, and his sweetheart, Mary Field, determine to complete the task begun by the murdered chemist. David, after much work, completes the formula and offers to sell it to Grinde. That night Grinde and Mole steal into the house, lock David and Mary in a windowless room, steal the formula book and flood the room where the two young lovers are imprisoned, with the fumes of chlorine gas. Then Grinde attacks Mole and leaves him, supposedly dead, on the floor. While Grinde is informing the directors of the pottery works of his wonderful discovery, by means of which he hopes to oust the president and assume the controlling interest of the concern, Mole, his head cut and bruised, staggers into the room and makes a complete confession, implicating Grinde. He tries to escape, but is captured. Then Mole leads the police to the house and David and Mary are rescued just in the nick of time. Later Grinde is sent to prison for a long term. David and Mary marry and the former, by means of the glaze invented by his grandfather and perfected by himself, is elected president of the pottery concern. The glaze not only revolutionizes the industry, but makes David one of the country's wealthiest men.

HER DEVOTED SON (Liberty—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—Mr. Burns, a rich farmer in Scotland, holds a mortgage on an adjoining farm, owned by a widow, Mrs. Thomas, whose son Paul, is in love with Mr. Burns' daughter, Esther. When Mr. Burns learns of the young couple's infatuation, he refuses to countenance it, owing to Paul's poverty. Paul, heartbroken, tells his mother he will go to America to earn the money necessary to pay off the mortgage.

Mona Higgins, the postmaster's daughter, is also in love with Paul. Finding that Paul rejects her love, she destroys all communications between Paul, his mother and his sweetheart. Paul secures employment in America at the home of a wealthy landowner, and at a critical moment rescues his master's baby from a gypsy kidnapper, for which deed he receives a check for $5,000 and also a medal.

Paul eventually returns to his home, just in time to rescue the old homestead from Mona, who had endeavored to secure it. It is needless to add that Paul and Esther "lived happily ever after."

BORROWING HOGAN (Two Parts—Santa Barbara—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—Hogan is the manager of a small dramatic company and a succession of bad houses finally lands the company back in the city broke. The company is dispersed and Hogan finds shelter at the boarding house of Mrs. McStinger, a widow of ancient and acidulated vintage. The blarneying tongue of the witty Irishman and his evident admiration for her, coupled with possession of the company's wardrobe trunks, wins the heart of the unusually obdurate landlady, and she foregoes her regular rules and takes the shelterless Hogan in.

Hogan ingratiates himself with various members of the household, from all and each of whom he borrows indiscriminately. The leading woman of the troupe succeeds in finding an "angel" and the company is booked to open at a nearby town at an early date. But Hogan is found to be in pawn; the landlady has discovered him in a tender love scene with a cafe entertainer, and after she has inflicted condign punishment on him, she, assisted by the lodgers, incarcerates Hogan in his room. He subsequently escapes and joins the company.

THE HAPPY AWAKENING (Banner—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—A city chap arrives at a ranch and decides that he will spend a few days with the kindly people who have given him a hearty welcome. He is at once smitten with the daughter of the rancher and shows her much attention. Rube, a farm hand, is in love with the girl, and he notes the attentions of the city chap to his girl with much concern. During a troubled sleep, the Rube dreams that his fair enslaver has been decoyed away from the old home, taken to a big city and once there she has been forced to don male attire to become an assistant to a gang of thieves.

Finally, in his dream the Rube takes a hand himself and succeeds in rescuing the heroine from her perilous surroundings and brings her back to her old home, thereby covering himself with glory and winning the eternal love of the girl. When things are brought to this happy pass, the Rube awakes to find that the girl and the stranger are still bent on a flirtation and that his troubles instead of ending are just beginning.

A CATTLE QUEEN'S ROMANCE (Ramona—Two Parts—Sept. 20).—Muriel Dallia, a western girl, has a large ranch inherited from her father who has but lately died, with the expressed wish that she marry Edward Douglas, an Englishman, son of his former partner, who has returned to England after making a fortune. Edward, who is a dissolute man about town, abhors the idea of marrying a rough western girl, but having spent the fortune left him by his father, he is persuaded by the family lawyer to go to America and marry Muriel.

On his arrival, Muriel has brought home Bart, a strange cowboy who caught her runaway horse and who, by his good looks, has created more than a passing interest in Muriel's mind. Edward, after a few days on the ranch, proposes to Muriel and is refused. Edward swears revenge upon the girl who has dared refuse him. That night Ed, the foreman, brings to the ranch a large sum of money, the receipt of a cattle sale. Both the Englishman and a half-breed attempt to steal the money. The half-breed is caught by the Englishman and threatened with death, but is turned loose with the promise that he will assist in abducting the girl. Edward then places the money in Bart's pocket while he is asleep.

The next morning the money is missed and all hands are searched. Bart is discharged, but after cogitating the incident, Muriel comes to the conclusion that Bart is innocent. She goes in search of him, and, while riding beneath a tree, the half-breed drops on her horse and carries her away. She is rescued by Bart. The half-breed confesses. They return to the ranch and confront the Englishman. He is sent to town under guard, while a love scene between Muriel and Bart shows who will be the boss of the ranch.

A WATERY ROMANCE (Federal—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—Mr. Smaltz and Mr. Fish are in love with the same girl. She gives neither much encouragement. Smaltz awakes one morning before his roommate and, dressing himself, goes out to meet his sweetheart. Fish awakes a little while later to find his roommate gone, and sees him from his window spooning in the park with the girl. Fish quickly reaches the spot and asks Mabel to go for a row. She consents. Smaltz becomes furious and plans revenge. He bores a hole in his rival's boat, placing a cork in the hole to which is attached a long string. When Mabel and Fish get out in the middle of the lake, Smaltz pulls the string and the cork comes out of the hole filling the boat with water. The water police set out to rescue them but meet with a mishap. Smaltz jumps into a boat and rescues Mabel and Fish. He changes his mind and kicks Fish back again. Fish is finally rescued and goes after Smaltz. Both are locked up. Mabel goes down to bail them out, but falls in love with the Chief and elopes with him. When they hear the news, Smaltz and Fish fall into each other's arms in a dead faint.

ACCUSING FINGER (Empire—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—A young bank employee attempts to ged rid of his rival for the affection of the president's daughter. The girl favors the suit of the intended victim of the jealous clerk and the latter, learning of this preference, locks the favored suitor in the bank vault. Later his conscience awakens. He breaks away from a ball which is in progress at the banker's house and hastens to the vault. The accusing finger of the time clock on the massive door is forever pointing at the hour of twelve. He sees the safe about to be blown by a cracksman; he struggles with and overcomes the robber, only to find that in the struggle the alarm has been turned in and the arrival of the banker, his daughter and the police make the opening of the bank vault imperative. The door is opened and the dying clerk lives long enough to point the accusing finger at the trembling fellow clerk who is arrested, tried and convicted of murder.

The scene changes to the condemned cell. The visions of his boyhood come to the felon and as morning dawns, he is led forth to the scaffold. As the executioneer approaches him he wakes with a violent start to find that he is standing at the vault door with the crime and its accomplishment only a figment in his brain. The younger man enters from the interior of the vault and is surprised by the alteration in the demeanor of the man who, up to that moment, had been his bitter rival. The men shake hands and later we see wedding ceremony performed with the tempted man as the best man at his rival's nuptials.

A SHATTERED ROMANCE (Deer—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 20).—Lillian Wiggins, a society girl and an admirer of fine arts, while motoring along a rocky beach, comes across Jack Bryce, a handsome young artist, who is painting a herd of seal. She stops to admire his work. They become acquainted and exchange cards. Lillian is infatuated with the artist, and the romance of his profession appeals to her. The next day she writes him asking him to call and arrange for painting a portrait of her. He accepts the commission. Her love is reciprocated as the picture proceeds, and soon he proposes and is accepted.

Soon after the betrothal, Lillian, again riding along the country road, stops her car at a scenic point. Suddenly she beholds a little girl fighting with a great eagle. As she rushes to her rescue, the eagle flies away and perches on a rock above them. Lilliian then learns that the eagle had stolen the little girl's baby brother and carried him off to its nest from which the baby had been rescued by the courageous sister. Lillian took the baby and the girl, Violet, into her car and drove to the children's home, where she found their mother sick in bed. One object in the poorly furnished room where the sick woman lay attracted the attention of Lilian. It was a picture of Jack, her fiance, holding the little girl on his lap. As she washed the child's wounds, Lillian asked Violet who the man was. "My papa," was the reply. Surreptitiously slipping the photo into her bosom, she asked the sick woman's permission to take Violet home with her that the wounds may be properly dressed.

That evening, when Jack calls at Lillian's home, Lillian accuses him of being married. He denies it until Lillian calls his daughter, Violet, from the next room. Jack hangs his head in shame, takes his little girl by the hand, and goes home. Gathering his sick wife in his arms, he asks her forgiveness, though she had not known of his perfidy. While that scene is being enacted, Lillian, seated at her fireplace, tears Jack's photograph to pieces and throws it into the grate. The fire flares up and fades out.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 1, "The Survivors"—Two Parts—Sept. 1).—The cast: Lillian Lorraine, William Courtleigh, Jr., William C. Hamilton, Ed. Brady and Henry Stanley.

Capt. Hardin of the tramp steamer "Princess," his wife, and Neal, their son, are making away from the port of St. Pierre, Martinique. Welcher, the mate, and his son, Joe, are the only others aboard beside the crew. In St. Pierre, Thomas Ilington, an American, owner of Lost Island, enlists the services of Hernandez and Ponto, two evil adventurers, to assist him in exploiting his mine. When they learn that Ilington has a map showing the whereabouts of the isle, they exchange sinister glances, but decide to do their knifing only after they know more of the mine's whereabouts. While Ilington is talking over the details of the trip, and just as Capt. Hardin's tramp steamer "Princess" is getting out to sea, Mount Pelee starts belching forth fire and lava, and thousands of the inhabitants of Martinique rush madly to the sea. Capt. Hardin, at Neal's supplication, and against the will of mate Welcher, puts back to port to rescue as many people as possible.

Meanwhile, Ilington, his daughter Annette, her nurse Manuella, Hernandez and Ponto escape to the sea in a leaky boat. They sight the "Princess," which has already picked up an overload of people. Capt. Hardin, to protect those already aboard, has to refuse them succor, but Neal, his heart touched by the terror-stricken Annette, implores his father to take her aboard. Unknown to Hernandez and Ponto, Ilington gives Manuella an oilskin packet containing the map showing the location of Lost Isle. To the child's clothing he also pins a note explaining her identity and the value of the map. Hernandez, Ponto and Ilington, after a terrific struggle to keep afloat in their leaky boat, finally land on an island and drop exhausted to the sands. Hernandez and Ponto are the first to awake, and going up to Ilington, demand the map showing the location of Lost Isle. There is a terrific struggle, in which Ilington is felled with a great stick and left on the sands for dead. In the hold of the "Princess," a cinder from the fiery volcano starts a conflagration that menaces the ship, and boats are put off. Mrs. Hardin, Neal, Annette, and Joe Welcher are thrown together in one boat which is later picked up by a U. S. cruiser, and the seed of a great naval career is sown in the mind of young Neal Hardin.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 2, "The Yellow Packet"—Two Parts—Sept. 8).—Cast as usual.

Mrs. Hardin, Neal Harden, Annette Ilington and Joe Welcher are rescued by a U. S. cruiser when the tramp steamer Princess goes down. Pinned to Annette's underclothing is a map showing the location of Lost Isle. Hernandez and Ponto, two evil soldiers of fortune, know of the existence of Lost Isle, and seek the map.

The second episode opens eighteen years later. Neal is a clean cut, manly young American, while Joe is a slinking young man of bad habits. Hernandez and Ponto are drug smugglers, and have, as their slave and beast of burden, a gigantic beast-man bereft of all reason. A young adventuress, Inez Castro, is in league with the smugglers and insinuates herself into the Hardin household, to steal the map of Lost Isle. Hernandez, Ponto and their brute-man are apprehended in an attempt to land some drugsdrugs off the Seaport coast, and a running fight follows. Mrs. Hardin explains to Annette about her heritage of Lost Isle, and shows her the map. They are all alarmed by many shots outside and run out in time to see the smugglers, pursued by the officers coming toward the house. After Annette is knocked down by Hernandez in his mad rush. Neal is mainly instrumental in capturing the two outlaws who are put in the town jail. Late that night the brute tears out the bars from their cell and frees them. Neal decides to try for Annapolis.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 3, "The Failure"—Two Parts—Sept. 15).—Cast as usual.

Mrs. Hardin, Neal Hardin, Annette Ilington and Joe Welcher are rescued by U. S. Cruiser when the steamer Princess goes down. Pinned to Annette's underclothing is a map showing the location of Lost Isle. Hernandez and Ponto know of the existence of Lost Isle, and see the map. Eighteen years later, Annette learns from Mrs. Hardin the secret of Lost Isle, and Hernandez and Ponto learn the whereabouts of Annette. Neal Hardin decides to try for Annapolis.

After the test Joe slips the stolen exam. papers into Neal's pocket, where they are found. Neal starts for New York to enlist in the U. S. Navy. That night, in an attempt to secure the Yellow Packet, Joe sets the house afire. Annette rescues Mrs. Hardin, and then rushes back into the burning building, but is overcome by the smoke. Outside, Hernandez, Ponto and the Brute assemble with a host of others. The Brute enters the blazing building and rescues Annette, who he lays at the feet of the hysterical Mrs. Hardin, much to the rage of Hernandez, who felt the Yellow Packet almost within his grasp. Joe Welcher loses the Annapolis appointment.

THE MAID OF THE WILD (Balboa—Three Parts—Sept. 13).—James Sterling, wealthy bachelor, is told by his doctor that he must go up into the mountains if he would recover the health lost in his midnight parties. He goes, leaving behind Clarice Driscoll, a society girl whom he loves. In the mountains he meets Lucy Bingham. Away from the city influences, he falls in love with this maid of the wilds, and she, blinded by his polished manner and the prospects of magnificent city life, consents to marry him. She, in her turn, leaves behind David Graham, a young mountaineer who wants her as his wife.

Once in the city, Lucy finds that her fine new clothes and many servants cannot change the real Lucy who cannot understand or be understood by her new friends. Even her husband, so charmed with her wild freedom in the mountains, becomes angered at her inability to become conventional and upbraids her for it.

But Lucy cannot reconcile herself to this strange, cramped city life with its pretenses and restraints, and longs again for the unrestricted freedom of her home in the mountains. One morning, unable to bear it longer, she starts away for the great hills, where she again breathes freely. Her husband follows her; and once again they find love and a complete understanding.

THE WATERWAYS OF BRUGES (Photocolor Picturesque Belgium Sept. 13).—Bruges, a quaint mediaeval town, is traversed by many waterways. It is connected with the North Sea by three canals. Situated on one of these is the beautiful "Rosary Quay" shown in this picture. Sailing over the calm waters, one passes many moss-covered walls and stone bridges. The "Quay of the Fiddlers" is another enchanting spot. The houses are erected on the very edge of the canal. On approaching the Lion Bridge, one is greatly impressed by the lovely scenery, and the clear reflections mirrored in the limpid waters. In the distance stands "The Belfry," whose tower was originally erected in 1098. Here is also shown one of the many ancient cathedrals which grace the Old World city.

FISHING WITH CORMORANTS (Globe—China—On the same reel as foregoing).—Catching fish with cormorants has been practiced by the Chinese from time immemorial. Before setting forth for a day's fishing, the fishers indulge in their favorite tipple—tea. To prevent the cormorants from swallowing the fish which they catch, a ring of silk thread is fastened about their necks. This operation meets with little resistance from the birds. With the well-trained birds' perched nonchalantly on the edge of the dory the fishers start for the "grounds." On their arrival the cormorants are forcibly given to understand by a rough though effectual method, that their activities must now commence. How efficient the cormorants are as fishers is here shown. The apparent enthusiasm of the birds and the manner in which they are drawn into the boat and relieved of their catch is startling.

MATRIMONIAL BLISS (Starlight—Sept. 18).—Heinie and Louie decide to get married. They strike a snag, however, when they each decide to marry the same girl. Heinie and Louie are anything but sentimental, and their choice is governed by the girl's earning capacity. Louie nips in first, and gets the girl's promise just before Heinie proposes. Black rage is in Heinie's heart and he decides to get even. Disguised as a waiter, he goes to Heinie's wedding carrying a large cake well loaded with gunpowder. Just before the knot is tied, the deep plotting Heinie, from his vantage place on the floor above, deluges the whole party with hundreds of gallons of water.

After the soaking, the guests decide to dine "a-la-bedsheet," and robe themselves accordingly. The dinner is considerable "blow-off," especially when Heinie's ambitious cake is cut into. Heinie is unmasked, but defends himself with the assurance that Louie put him up to it. The window is the nearest and out of it Heinie and Louie make their speedy exit.

If you aim to produce the utmost in film, you need this man to help you produce the utmost in advertising.

He has earned a reputation in the commercial world directing the advertising of some of its greatest national successes.

POSTERS: He is a master of poster production—not the stale, flat "movie" poster, but the brilliant new commercial treatment that is rapidly coming into its own in pictures. His posters combine vivid imagination, action, story, unique and original color treatment and handling.

EXHIBITOR HELP: He knows, both from commercial and moving picture experience, the things the exhibitor needs to fill his theatre and how to give it to him so that he can and will use it.

HERALDS: His ideas of booklet treatment are original, different, yet wonderfully effective.

He knows how to plan trade and newspaper advertising that has the earmarks of quality and applied ability.

He is not a publicity man. He is a specialist in a work big enough and important enough to deserve the time and attention of a man of his calibre. Talk it over with and let him show you some of the things he has actually done.

ESMERALDA (Sept. 6).—The unexpected good fortune which falls to Esmeralda Rogers in the discovery of a valuable vein of ore on the old farm of her parents, where she and Dave have known and loved each other from childhood, result in Esmeralda being at once removed by her over-ambitious, society-stricken mother from the humble associates of her childhood and young womanhood to the society into which her mother seeks admittance. Both Esmeralda and her father are very much upset and ill at ease at this sudden wealth and the decided change in their lives.

Dave leaves prior to the Rogers' departure when he realizes that he must make something of himself to be ever able to claim his sweetheart from her ambitious mother. Esmeralda, despite the many protests of her mother, remains true to her sweetheart and refuses to listen to her mother's protestations to marry suitable suitors—all of whom are nothing more than fortune-seeking men. But the mother becomes more firm when she learns that the Marquis de Montessin is seeking a bride. The mother overlooks the fact that he is nothing more than a poverty-stricken nobleman ready to sell his title—and to force Esmeralda to consent to marrying him she spreads the report that David Hardy is dead.

Esmeralda is easily blinded and preparations are quickly made for the wedding, but when, on the day of the marriage, Dave finally confronts her, after reading the notice in the paper just before he is about to do away with himself, the wedding is stopped and the lovers are reunited. Later he learns that the ore has given out on the Rogers' farm, but that a wealthy vein has been found on his own property, thus enabling David to care for Esmeralda's parents and finally gaining their consent to his marrying Esmeralda.

THE MAJESTY OF THE LAW (Morosco—Five Parts Aug. 26).—Judge Randolph Kent repudiates his son when the latter makes no satisfactory explanation of how the jewels which were stolen at Mrs. Monroe's ball came to be found in his coat pocket. That young Kent, heretofore the idol of the little city and the apple of his father's eye, was, after all, hopeless from the beginning seemed proven when he was later indicted for embezzlement.

By an irony of fate Judge Kent himself is forced to hear the case, and on considering the incontrovertible evidence instantly gives his son the maximum sentence, ten years in state's prison. But before the sheriff starts with the condemned youth it is discovered that young Kent has all along been sacrificing himself to shield others. Innocent himself, he protected the thief of the jewels at the Monroes' because it was the brother of the girl he was about to marry, and shouldered the crime of the real embezzler because the latter had befriended Kent and got him his position at the bank when the Monroe scandal had made him an outcast.

THE HEART OF JENNIFER (Famous Players—Five Parts—Aug. 30).—Jennifer refuses to marry Stephen Welton, the man who makes her hand the condition of his helping her father out of his financial crisis. Jennifer and her father leave for a lumber camp in the West, resolved to renounce society. Here Jennifer meets James Murray, owner of a lumber tract, with whom she falls deeply in love. In the meantime Welton has discovered a spurious note which Jennifer's father had issued before he left the East, and tracing him locates and threatens him with exposure unless Jennifer is compelled to marry him. When Welton learns of her marriage to Murray, he seeks the latter out and tells him she has married him for his money, offering such convincingly circumstantial proof that Murray leaves Jennifer.

In the subsequent development of the story, it transpires that Welton has had a previous affair with Agnes, Murray's sister, who, when he is about to leave, pleads with him to marry her. Upon his refusal and in the desperation of her plight, she kills him. Jennier discovers the murder, and to save Murray from learning of his sister's disgrace takes the blame upon herself. Murray at last learns of the heroic sacrifice of his wife and seeks her out, with a greater love and regard.

THE MAN TRAIL (Essanay—Six Parts—Sept. 13).—The cast includes Richard C. Travers, June Keith, Ernest Maupain, Thomas McLarnie, Arthur W. Bates, John Lorenz, Betty Scott, Jack Meredith, Hugh Thompson, John Cossar, Sam Cramer.

John Peabody, an athletic young man, tires of city life and goes to his uncle's logging camp in search of adventure. His uncle, "Wolf John," a rough giant of a man, thinks his nephew an effeminate youth and refuses to recognize him, although he gives him a job. When the young man wins a lumber sawing contest and later subdues a crowd of lumberjacks engaged in a drunken brawl, the uncle announces he will make him a partner in the firm.

Peabody falls in love with Belle, the adopted daughter of "Wolf John." "Bull' Bart, foreman of the camp, also is in love with her. He is the crude, unscrupulous type of the backwoods and hates Peabody with all his soul because the girl favors him. Bart quits the lumber camp and takes a place with a rival concern. He and his men constantly interfere with Peabody, who succeeds to the foremanship, in the hope of making him forfeit the right to a certain timber tract, as the contract calls for a time limit in clearing it away. Peabody foils him at every turn, and, goaded into a fury, Bart stalks Peabody in an attempt to kill him. He is wounded in a gun battle between the two factions, but Bart is driven away. Later the two meet face to face and then comes the battle to death. Peabody proves the better man, and slays the man who boasted he would kill him on sight. The camp troubles finally are over, and Peabody has proved to his uncle he is a real man. He wins to the partnership, and Belle confesses her love for him.

THE GREAT RUBY MYSTERY (Lubin—Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Beatrice Morgan, Octavia Handworth, Eleanor Barry, Frankie Mann, Jeanette Hackett, Miss Nordine, Geo. Soute Spencer, Peter Lang, Chancey Keim, Walter Hitchcock, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, Howard Mitchel, Charles Brandt, James Farrell, Douglas Sibole, Richard Wangemann, William H. Turner, Geo. S. Trimble, Bernard Siegel, Alan Quinn, Clarence Jay Elmer, James Cassady, Walter Law, Ruth Bryan, Geo. Clark and Edith Ritchie.

On her wedding night, a valuable ruby is stolen from the bride by a Rajah. It later falls into the hands of General St. Edmunds when the English conquered India, and two generations later it is offered for sale by Sir John Garnett, a jeweler. Sir John's wife is a somnambulist, and while in that state has an inclination to hide articles of jewelry which she afterwards claims have been stolen. With the recurrence of such incidents, Sir John begins to doubt his wife and hires a detective to watch her. Through the aid of Princess Wadia, a direct lineal descendant of the original owners of the ruby, Countess Mirtza Charkoff and her lover, Longman, a notorious criminal, locate the whereabouts of the jewel and the terms of its sale. By a unique subterfuge Longman gets possession of the precious stone. To hide its identity he places it in a chocolate box and leaves it in the care of the Countess, who is a guest of Lady Garnett. The Countess makes an artful excuse to have Lady Garnett consent to have the box of chocolates placed in her safe.

Mrs. Elsmere, her daughter, Brenda, and Captain Dalrymple, a baloonist, are also guests of Lady Garnett. In order that Brenda's mother should not be aware of his offer of marriage to her daughter, Dalrymple plans to leave a note with a token for his sweetheart in the Japanese vase in the office of the hotel, where they are all staying. The token is in a rose which it taken is to be construed as Brenda's consent to marry him. The next morning Brenda finds a diamond bracelet with the note and flower, and thinking it is the token named in the letter, wears it. In reality Lady Garnett, who again walked in her sleep, put the bracelet in the vase, and the chocolate box, which she had also taken from the safe, she accidently dropped on the stairs. This is later found by the captain's valet really believes that his mission on earth is to rob the undeserving rich that he may help the poor. Returning to America with his associates, Hilary Quackenbos and George LeFay, after a rich haul on the chateau of a French lottery swindler, he meets on shipboard Stephen Janissary, head of the great chain of Janissary grocery stores, and Janissary's ward, Decima Duress.

Dalrymple observes that the rose is still there, and thinking that this is his answer from Brenda, departs with his valet, who, unmindfully, packs the chocolate box in his suit case, to Islington. The theft of the bracelet is discovered, but this is explained by Detective Brett, who had seen the action of the somnambulist. Upon consulting Dalrymple, the whereabouts of the chocolate box is revealed, and the Countess, remembering the threat the diamond gang made to her regarding the diamond on account of her confessed fascination for Prince Kassim, is compelled to report the loss of the gem to the gang. Wishing to secure the ruby for herself, she plays upon the credulity of the Prince, who believes that the precious stone is really his, and who arranges to secure it from Longman. The ruby is taken from Dalrymple's tent by Longman and his confederates just as Detective Brett arrives. Giving the password to Longman, Prince Kassim is given the ruby. In a fight which follows Longman is killed and the Prince forgets to give the ruby to the Countess in his enthusiasm to get to the military tournament. On his way he falls from his horse and is wounded seriously. The first one to reach him before his death is Countess Mirtza, to whom he gives the great ruby, but not in time to escape the eye of Detective Brett. Brett is about to arrest her in order to complete his round-up of the diamond gang, but is dissuaded from his purpose by Lady Garnett.

On the ship, Adams takes $5,000 away from Janissary at cards and gives the money to Decima for the model tenements she is building for the poor. An active enmity springs up between the two men. Adams reports his success abroad to the two men who have schooled him in crime, Wulf Axtell, a modern fagin, and Balthazar Van Trump, another doddering old man. Adams comes to realize that his past life is an effectual bar to asking Miss Duress to marry him, so he goes to his old pals to tell them he is through with them. Van Tromp, before Adams speaks, proposes that Adams next rob the Janissary home. Adams refuses and tells the other that he is going to live straight.

Meanwhile Decima has been approached for help by Alderman McKenna, whom Janissary threatens to crush unless he votes his way on a traction franchise. Janissary holds over McKenna's head some old falsified indictments. Janissary keeps them in his safe. Decima asks Adams to get the indictments. He agrees. He goes to his old associates and says he has decided to rob the Janissary home. They get him the plans of the house.

On the night of a big ball, Stephen Adams opens the Janissary safe. Then Balthazar Von Trump has the revenge for which he labored many years. He goes to the ball and tells Janissary that his safe is being robbed. When Adams comes down stairs with the police at his heels Von Trump tells his secret. Adams is Janissary's son whom Von Trump kidnapped when Adams was an infant in arms, and reared in a life of crime. The son has robbed his own father for the love of a girl. To substantiate his statement Van Trump dangles before Janissary's eyes the shoes which the kidnapped baby wore. Janissary, broken in heart, dismisses his guests and bids the police release Adams. Then his better nature asserts itself and the father and son are reunited. Later Stephen Adams marries Decima Duress, the girl for whom he attempted to re-enter the life of crime temporarily, nd for swears his old associates and ways forever.

NORTH AMERICAN FILM CORP.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 19—Two Parts—Sept. 6).—Where was the diamond from the sky? It was not in the grasp of Frank Durand, erstwhile King of Diamonds. It was not in the hands of Kansas Em, the dance hall fury. It was not in Esther's possession, as Quabba, the ever-watchful Italian, drew her from the maelstrom just in time to escape the falling roof of Pete's Palace. Ahead of them spurted the English lawyer, Marmaduke Smythe, still holding to his cherished deer head. On one of the horns of the head dangled the diamond from the sky! In the excitement and struggle he had not noted the diamond had been hurled through the air when Luke Lovell, struggling for it like the rest, had struck the arm of Kansas Em, loosening her grasp up n the chain of the locket as she held it high above the throng. The fallen roof had crushed, maimed and pinioned down a score of men and women, among them being Arthur Stanley. Though sick and faint, Esther, with the help of Kansas Em, found her way to her lover's side. She tried to drag him out, but her strength was not enough. Quabba and Kansas Em joined their efforts with hers, and, together, they dragged the unconscious man from the ruins. Peter Huff came along just then and announced that he has sent for a doctor. At this remark Frank Durand said that he was a doctor. It was no idle boast of Durand's though he did not happen to have by him his certificate from Heidelberg to prove it. His skill had been marked in his profession, especially in surgery. But he had debased his great talent, and mixed in several scandals, he had been forced to fly from New York, Paris and Vienna. For a while he smuggled illicit drugs, and then abandoned this for the desperate profession of international gem crook. Arthur was badly injured. But Durand had surmised that his patient's youth and strong constitution would enable him to stand a hurried journey to Los Angeles. A daring scheme already was forming in Durand's mind. Arthur was wholly at his mercy. When Esther came to herself she was in the cottage of Kansas Em—and Arthur had been carried back to Los Angeles. A few days later she parted with the dance-hall virago, who had become sentimentally fond of her. When first the woman's fingers, grasping the diamond from the sky, had touched a secret spring in the locket, a folded paper dropped out. On it Esther's dying mother had written a prayer for her baby girl.

Marmaduke Smythe, next day, twenty miles from Mammoth, hid the diamond from the sky under a stone by an oak tree. Here it was found by two little girls and clasped about the neck of Toodle's dolly. At the ruins of his dance hall, Huff watched the diggers in the debris with a keen glance which never wavered. But tireless excavatiosn failed to bring to light the treasure which would have requited him for the destruction of his property. At last, from one of the workmen, Huff got hold of a rumor that the Englishman had gone off with the diamond. Huff procured a cheap roadster car and set out to track down Marmaduke. He found the lawyer and compelled him at the point of a gun to lead him to the stone under the oak. But by this time the diamond was gone. On their way back to Mammoth, Huff and his men passed Toodles in the road. The diamond, forgotten by the scampering child in pain, the result of the sting of a bee, lay on the board of a bee-hive.

In Los Angeles, the newspapers made much of the dramatic first homecoming of John Powell. The papers spoke feelingly of the skill and untiring attention of the eminent physician, Dr. Durand, and of the care given the young magnate by a favorite cousin from Virginia, Blair Stanley, who would take complete charge of Mr. Powell's affairs. No one could be admitted to Mr. Powell's bedside, except Dr. Durand, and the nurse in charge, Miss Marston.

WORLD FILM CORP.

THE IVORY SNUFF BOX (Brady).—The cast includes Holbrook Blinn, Alma Belwin, Norman Trevor, Robert Cummings.

Richard Duvall is a young American detective in the employ of the French Secret Police. While in Paris he meets Grace Ellicot, also an American, with whom he falls in love. He marries her and is about to start on his honeymoon when he is called on by Mons. Lefevre, chief of the secret police. The French Ambassador to England, Monsieur De Grissac, has lost an ivory snuff box which must be found. They depart for London to interview the Ambassador. In London they go to the Embassy. There the Ambassador tells them that he was robbed of the snuff box while he was dressing and suspecting his valet, Noel, he locked him in his room. When Duvall goes to interview the valet, he finds that he has been murdered.

Meanwhile, in Paris, Lefevre has broken the news to Duvall's wife of his departure to London. She, wishing to follow Duvall, asks Lefevre where she can find him. Lefevre tells her that if she will help in the recovery of the snuff box she will find Duvall. She consents, and Lefevre tells her to go to Brussels and try to place herself in the sanitarium run by Dr. Hartmann, who is supposed to be a German spy and whom Lefevre believes to be instrumental in the theft of the snuff box, which box, Lefevre hints, is of diplomatic importance. Richard Duvall, aboard the boat for Antwerp, finds the man whom he is following, asleep in a saloon, and during the night he opens the stranger's suit case. He finds the package given the stranger in the barber shop and, on opening it, discovers the contents to be rice powder.

By this time Duvall has learned that Grace is in the sanitarium, and that she furnished the news to Lefevre's agents. He feels that Grace should leave the sanitarium as soon as possible. He goes to Mr. Phelps, the American Ambassador, and has him invite Grace to dinner, planning to escape after dinner. During dinner, that night, Dr. Hartmann, who is beginning to suspect Grace and Duvall, turns up at Mr. Phelps' house as an unexpected guest. When Richard and Grace leave on the pretext of Duvall's escorting Grace back to the sanitarium, Hartmann asks if he might ride with them. Because of no plausible reason, Duvall is forced to consent. On arriving at the sanitarium, Duvall is taken prisoner by two of Dr. Hartmann's attendants. His failure to discover the snuff box angers Dr. Hartmann. He knows that Duvall must have it with him, as his luggage has been searched and his friends imprisoned on various trumped-up charges. He gives Duvall until the next evening to confess the whereabouts of the box.

The time allotted him is up, and Duvall refuses to confess. Hartmann resorts to torture. Finally Richard, at night, finds his opera hat behind a packing case and secures the box from the hat. Experimenting with several ornaments on the top of the box, he discovers that it has a double top. Inside the box is a piece of tissue paper, on which a series of numbers are written. Duvall substitutes another set of numbers, and conceals the set found in the box. In order to make Grace confess where the box is, as Dr. Hartmann believes she knows, he lets her see Duvall being tortured. She is almost crazed by watching his pain, so gets the box and delivers it to Hartmann. They are at once released, and proceed to Paris. They are not able to deliver the box to Lefevre, but they give him the series of numbers. Duvall and Grace at last start on their delayed honeymoon.

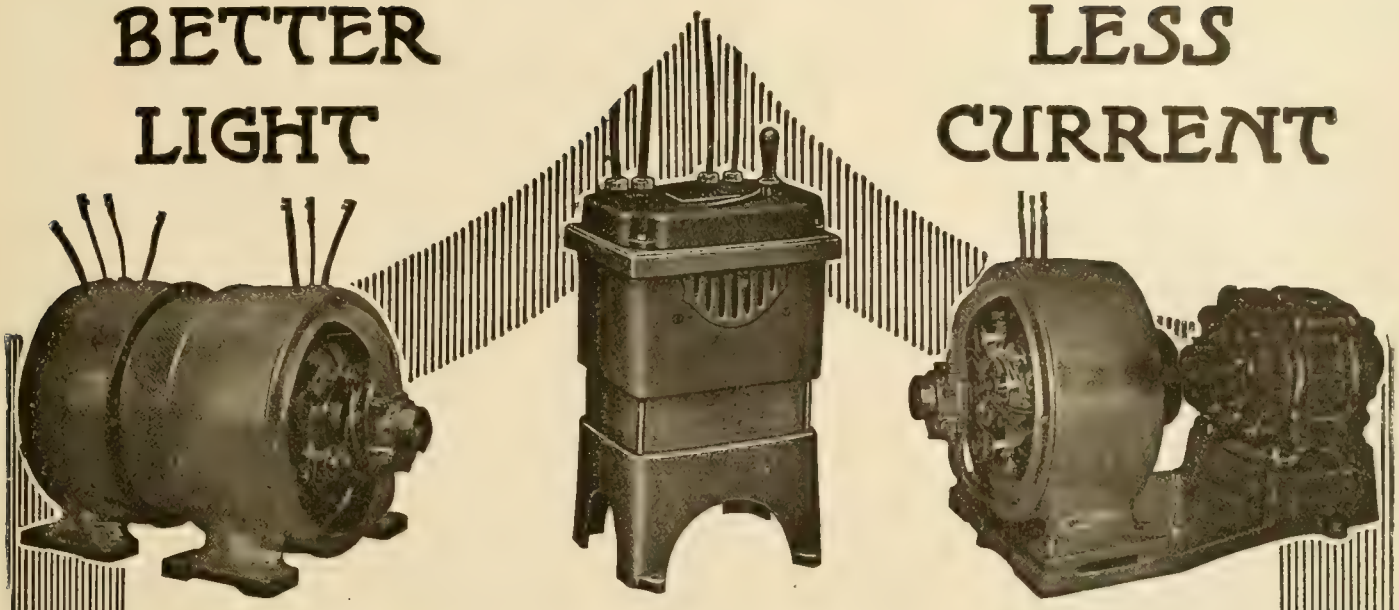
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Publicity That Advertises
Advertising That Isn't Bull

You, the manufacturer or distributor of films, have often wondered why your publicity man sent out stories like this:

"Miss Flimy Film, star of the X Company, has just returned from New York where she purchased a large number of gowns."

Why did he send it out?

Because he didn't know any better.

It isn't

Publicity That Advertises

It isn't News, not even in a hamlet without a newspaper.

Now consider if he had written a human interest story about Miss Film's fondness for gowns, had described them from a woman's point of view (his wife's, perhaps), had cuts made of them and had hitched the story to one of his corporation's forthcoming productions.

In that case the newspapers would have printed the story with the pictures; the production would have been advertised, the women would have been on the lookout for the gowns and the photoplay. That's

Publicity That Advertises

And it's better than advertising because it's FREE. You couldn't buy it for $10,000. But you get it because of your point of view.

Advertising That Isn't "Bull"

Most advertising is "bull": Extravagant claims that exhibitors have learned to discount. It is valueless—except for getting over the name of the picture.

Now there is a kind of advertising that will place before the exhibitor the great facts of your picture, and that is so craftily planned that the exhibitor in the end, without thinking that he has been led, decides that he wants your picture.

In this sort of advertising you prove something about your picture, not merely assert it boastfully. That's ADVERTISING THAT ISN'T BULL.

Publicity That Advertises
Advertising That Isn't Bull

These are my stock in trade. I am employed by one of the largest motion picture corporations. But I am willing to make a change under proper circumstances. I have written for the magazines over my signature, I have been star reporter and editor for more than ten years on great New York dailies. I have an extended motion picture and theatrical experience. I know the motion picture business thoroughly, and could be more than advertising man, more than publicity man to a corporation.

And I am still in my thirties.

Sincerely,

L. L. J., care Moving Picture World, New York City

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURES

Hobart Bosworth in "Fatherhood"

Written and Produced by Hobart Bosworth

Thirteenth Prize Release. Broadway Universal Features Released Oct. 4.

Further proof of the uniform excellence of Broadway Universal Features is shown in the vigorous and absorbing play, "Fatherhood," which features Hobart Bosworth in a notable character portrayal. Mr. Bosworth is always to be depended upon for a play with a punch that appeals to an audience through its intense human interest. Rarely indeed, does a Western play get over as big as this feature, which was both written and produced by Mr. Bosworth. The story deals with a large-hearted ranchman, who partly from lonesomeness and partly through pity, marries a girl much younger than himself. Through his absorption in his ranch duties, the wife suffers from neglect, and the husband is awakened to the fact that she is showing more than a friendly interest in a handsome young range rider. How he is brought to a sense of his own responsibility, and saves his wife's honor, through the advent of a little son, is beautifully and sympathetically told in four reels of swift action. In settings and costumes the play is both realistic and convincing, while the heart interest provides some big scenes in which Hobart Bosworth's genius is given ample opportunity. This good feature is aptly described by the phrase—"as big as all outdoors."

"The Silent Battle" with Hobart Henley and Agnes Vernon

Directed by Leon Kent

Prize Regeneration Drama Gold Seal Three Reels Released Oct. 5.

Vigorous young manhood never made a stronger appeal than in this cleverly written and realistically staged and acted drama which features that virile young actor, Hobart Henley. The continuity proves the excellence of the directing and the story is swiftly unfolded in a way that holds the interest throughout. Hobart Henley as "Wild Bill" Lovett, the scapegrace son of an Eastern millionaire, is disinherited and leaves home to make a man of himself. In the hands of the average posing leading man the story would be ordinary only, but the athletic Henley, riding the bumpers of a freight train; sawing wood for his breakfast, engaging in a free-for-all fight with a bunch of bullies, and his silent battle to overcome his craving for drink, gives us scene after scene with the punch that thrills and satisfies. A splendid picture and one that will stand a lot of boosting.

Mary Fuller in "The Woman Who Lied"

Direction of Lucius Henderson

Prize Emotional Drama Victor Three Reels Released Oct. 6.

Lovers of Mary Fuller, and they number millions, will see that many-sided and most charming actress in an entirely new character as Cleo Martel, in the strong play "The Woman Who Lied." As an actress with more self-indulgence than character, Miss Fuller gives a portrayal that will astound those who have hitherto seen her only in "sweet" parts. Her strength in the big emotional scenes with which the play abounds, marks her work as far beyond the ordinary. To shield a lover, Miss Fuller in the part is guilty of the conviction of an innocent man, and her work in this and in the climax marks a wonderful advance in her more serious work. This is a play that will delight all who care for a meaty plot with strong emotional acting, and it will go big anywhere and everywhere.

"The $50,000 Jewel Theft" with Murdock MacQuarrie and Adele Farrington

Direction of Murdock MacQuarrie

Prize Detective Drama Big U Two Reels Released Oct. 7.

Murdock MacQuarrie is another sterling actor who knows the value of vigorous characterization. He has created in old Sparks, the detective, a character that will live. Looked upon by his chief and fellow officers as a fine man and a good detective, "but too old," Sparks shows them what experience and an alert and keen mind will do in a battle to outwit a bunch of crooks. The interest is much better sustained than is usual in plays of this character, and Mr. MacQuarrie's directing as well as his acting in the leading part leave nothing to be desired.

"The House with the Drawn Shades" with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips.

Direction of Ben Wilson

Prize Heart Interest Drama Rex Two Reels Released Oct. 8.

Heart Interest is but faint praise for this beautiful picture in which Ben Wilson adds notably to his long list of artistic characterizations. The outcome is a startling and truly climactic ending, and the whole gives Wilson an opportunity that few other screen stars could so well seize and make the most of. The growing popularity of this favorite Universal actor is largely due to his almost uncanny sense of appealing to the sympathies of an audience. His work in this regard is always sure and faithful.

"The Queen of Jungle Land" with Edythe Sterling, Wellington Playter and Rex de Rosselli

Direction of J. J. Franz

Prize Animal Drama 101 Bison Three Reels Released Oct. 8.

The work of the animals at Universal City Zoo under capable direction is proving that an animal picture can be something more than faked jungle scenes, caged animals and a plot in which the animals play both unwilling and unnecessary parts. To see Edythe Sterling, stroking the head of a full-grown leopard or making a pet of the biggest lion in the zoo is a thrilling sight,—one rarely found in the usual so-called animal picture. Miss Sterling's work with animals is a new experience to her, but her fearlessness as shown in this strong picture leads to the belief that she has found a new outlet for her capable activities. This picture should go big with any audience because there is a plot with a punch, a good climax and the animal feature is a necessary part of the whole.

"A Bath House Tragedy" with Hank Mann and Peggy Pearce

Direction of Pathe Lehrman

Prize Comedy Scream L-Ko Two Reels Released Oct. 10.

New antics by the funny L-Ko comedians will give the fans two reels of hilarity in this ridiculous picture. There are more new stunts than ever before have been crowded into one picture, and every one of them is a scream. The life saver at the swimming pool has a trained fish which leaps through his arms like a circus rider through a hoop; the fish tackles a bather and grasps his bathing suit with a bulldog grip; a wheeled bath chair is sent bump against the coping of a twenty-story building, and spills a bunch of policemen over the edge. Aside from the comedy, there is some remarkable acrobatic work, and that on the roof with the moving traffic in plain view a hundred feet below will give the most hardened fan a thrill. Should be on the program for a big comedy night.

The wonderful UNIVERSAL
the Exhibitors of the en

THIS double page advertisement is published to explain the great UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME to Exhibitors, and to show how simple it is and why your patrons will become fascinated with it. The following explanation is just a general description which may be applied in any town where the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is used. 1st—The Newspaper will publish, either every day—4 times, 3 times or twice a week, a pen and ink drawing, such as you see illustrated by figure No. 1 on the next page, which will suggest the title of a Photo-play, book-story or novel. This pen and ink drawing will be surrounded by a decorative film border and will contain spaces underneath the drawing for Name of the participant, address, etc. See figure No. 1.

Now then—the readers of the paper will try to suggest the best titles to fit the illustrations every day as they appear in the newspaper. For example. Note figure No. 1 again. This pen and ink illustration shows a man leading his bride. Sticking out of his pocket is a check. To the left stand two men who are commenting upon the luck of the bridegroom. Notice now that under the picture is the space left for your patrons to insert their suggestion as to the best title to fit the illustration, name, address, etc., etc.

Now—if the person who plays the MOVIEGAME desires to have assistance in getting the best titles for the different illustrations as they appear,—he may secure such assistance by purchasing a catalogue from the newspaper, which contains over 3,000 titles of stories, plays, photo-plays, books by popular authors, etc., etc. This catalogue will contain ALL of the best titles that will fit ALL the illustrations used in the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. These titles will be mixed in with all the other titles. If the player wishes to secure more assistance in suggesting the best titles, he may do so by seeing short moving pictures in your theatre which will illustrate the pictures that appear in the newspaper daily.

It will not be necessary in either case to buy a catalogue nor to see the moving pictures to enter into this game, for anyone can suggest titles to every and all pictures as they appear in the newspaper. The publishing of the catalogue and the showing of the moving pictures in the theatre are done to assist patrons in suggesting the best titles for the illustrations as they appear in the newspaper. The catalogue will be placed for convenient reference and free for usage to all,—at the newspaper office—library—prominent news stands, etc., etc. Also the catalogues will be on sale at these same places, or purchasable direct from the newspaper that runs the MOVIEGAME.

Take a glance at the cuts below. These are miniature reproductions of entire full page ads that constitute the opening advertising campaign that the newspaper expects to conduct. These big full page ads will give every detail necessary to the public to cause them all to play the great UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. Note the headings and matter. Then we have prepared a series of 5 column ads and 4 column ads, also 3 column ads to be used by the newspaper to keep the game going and growing each succeeding day.

Figure No. 1 shows you the style of the illustrations as they will appear either every day—4 times a week—3 times a week or twice a week as the different newspapers see fit to publish them. This is up to the newspaper. Each illustration will show a different picture every time. Under the picture is left a space for the best title to the picture. Also a space is left for name, address, etc. These are cut out of the newspaper and mailed in to the newspaper (after the game is all over). To the person who sends in the largest number of best titles for all of the illustrations published in the newspaper, that person will receive the largest award. The person sending in the second largest number of best titles will be awarded the next largest amount and so on down the line.

There is no restriction as to the number of titles to each picture sent in by one person. A person may send in one, five or a dozen titles to each single illustration. But each must be written on a picture clipped from the paper. No one can write more than one suggestion on one picture clipped from the paper. Each suggestion must have name, address, etc., etc., of the participant.

NOW—In each city where the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is to be used, there will be exhibited in a theatre, the moving pictures in short strips of about 50 to 75 feet which will assist the participants in applying the best title to each illustration as it appears in the newspaper. The Theatre will announce through the aid of posters and by tacking on to the large full page ads of the newspaper that the titles to THE FASCINATING UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME PICTURES that appear daily in the _____ newspaper can easily be solved by seeing the moving pictures at the _____ Theatre every night, 4 times a week, 3 times a week, or twice a week as the plan might call for. Heralds are distributed broadcast that explain the rules of the game to all. On the back of each herald and in the newspaper ads appears this announcement, "SEE the MOVIE GAME has taken tire country by storm..

To the Trade

DESPITE the destructive fire which occurred last week at the studios and laboratories of the Famous Players Film Company, and the tremendous losses which have resulted, we can definitely assure the trade at large, and Paramount exhibitors in particular, that all plans for productions formulated before the outbreak of the fire will be immediately continued and matured without interruption. We are glad that the loss is ours alone, and that exhibitors will in no way be affected by it. For, though the greatest disaster that has ever befallen a producing company in the entire history of the industry, we are totally undismayed, and can substantially state to all exhibitors that the unrivaled standard of our past productions will not be lowered in the slightest degree in our forthcoming releases.

The erection of the new studio and laboratory buildings now in the course of construction on our recently acquired tract of ground in upper Manhattan will be rushed to completion at a maximum speed. We intend these studios and laboratories to be the most modern, efficient and comprehensive plants ever devoted to the production of motion pictures, and under these unparalleled advantages we are wholly confident that we will not only continue, but by far excel, our record of achievement, which from the very inception of our organization has been a tradition in the trade.

The Famous Players Film Co. expresses its sincere gratitude and appreciation for the messages of sympathy received from thousands of exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers, and determinedly assures them that it will emerge from this temporary inconvenience stronger, greater, and firmer than ever.

Altered Schedule of Future Release Dates!

NOTE: Due to the necessity of hasty removal and the unavoidable delays occasioned by the fire, we deem it feasible to rearrange our forthcoming productions on the Paramount Program. The production of Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," scheduled for release Sept. 20th, will be postponed to Nov. 15th, the original date to be filled by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.'s production of Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer." Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming-Bird," intended for Oct. 4th, will be issued Nov. 18th. The official schedule of our forthcoming releases is now as follows:

Sept. 30 John Mason and Hazel Dawn in "The Fatal Card"
Oct. 4 Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper."
" 7 Mary Pickford in "A Girl of Yesterday"
" 11 Pauline Frederick in "Zaza."
" 28 Hazel Dawn in "The Masqueraders"
Nov. 4 Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters"
" 8 Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly"
" 11 John Barrymore in "The Red Widow"
" 15 Marie Doro in "The White Pearl"
" 18 Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and Humming Bird"
" 29 Pauline Frederick in "Bella Donna"

It is needless to add that we are determined to rise—Phoenix-like—upon our ashes, greater in artistic strength and prestige, even more efficient and progressive, but with all the old ideals that have made our name synonymous with feature history and advancement!

"THE MAN TRAIL"

has set every heart throbbing to the call of the wild.

It is a man's picture, where great deeds are done without counting the cost.

It is a woman's picture for what woman does not respond to the heroism in man that recks not of life to win her love?

It is a boy's and girl's picture, for every child is close to nature and yearns for the thrilling action of life in the open.

Skeletons of the Dead Past Stalk Boldly Forth "In the Palace of the King"

Cruel, fanatical, revengeful, Philip II was one of the most hated monarchs of history. Plots and intrigues characterized his reign. Tortures of the inquisition and the executioner's axe were resorted to without mercy.

In the midst of this reign of blood and horror, the king lived in daily fear of usurpation and death. He shrank from the skeletons that filled the royal closets, from the grim ghosts of his own conjuring.

But romance lived, for knights were bold and ready to risk their lives for the love of a woman.

F. Marion Crawford wove a thrilling romance around Philip the Second's reign of terror in his novel "In the Palace of the King." This great drama, in which Viola Allen won such a success on the stage, has been made into a wonderful spectacular six act photoplay by Essanay.

Five thousand persons appear in the various scenes. There are 1,000 horsemen, 1,000 foot soldiers, peasants, courtiers and royal personages.

The all star cast includes E. J. Ratcliffe, the noted actor; Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man; Arleen Hackett, who plays opposite William Faversham in "The Hawk" next season; Lewis Edgard, famous on Broadway; Ernest Maupain, Nell Craig, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. Directed by Fred E. Wright.

WARNING!

OWING to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays, many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution or every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

First Triangle Model Theatre

THE Knickerbocker Theatre in New York will open Thursday Evening, September 23rd. The opening has been moved forward from September 20th, the date mentioned last week, not because it would be impossible to give the first presentation of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett plays then, but because the Triangle Plan requires that every detail shall be plus-perfect.

These details have been most carefully worked out, not only because the Triangle offerings deserve the best, but for the purpose of setting a standard that shall bring out the highest qualities of this newest dramatic art.

Effects wholly new to the art have been devised to set forth the supreme qualities of these coming Triangle Plays.

The special music for each picture, written by William Furst, will be interpreted by an orchestra of 30 musicians under the personal leadership of the composer.

The initial three part bill made up of a splendid five reel Griffith-supervised Mexican drama, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the title role, supported by Seena Owen; a stirring five reel Ince-supervised Alaskan love play, with Dustin Farnum in the leading part and Enid Markey as his chief support; and then the Sennett-Keystone three reel farce, "My Valet," with Raymond Hitchcock as the star, supported by Mabel Normand.

At a date later to be announced, the Model Theatres in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago will open with first offerings to be presented with the same care and artistry.

You will find much of value and interest in the new methods of presentation which have been devised.

The Story of an EXHIBITOR

SINCE the day when first a "moving picture" was thrown on the screen the exhibitor has been tossed about by scores of various forces intent on gaining supremacy in the infant industry of America. Giant monopolies have been fighting for their manufacturing leadership. The exhibitor has been the last consideration—the exhibitor who is the prime factor in the whole chain—the exhibitor who knows the ultimate public and is to decide what shall be given.

No business in all the history of the world has gone through such transformations. There have been developments, evolutions, changes of all sorts. And they have come so rapidly that we have had none of us scarcely time to realize just what was happening.

It might be said that we have been working in a sort of fog. But, men with the interests of the exhibitor in mind have been gradually clarifying all the problems and after years of investigation have rebuilt the whole structure with the exhibitor as the prime factor.

The Associated Service has chosen to make the exhibitor the leading element of its distributing plans because it believes that in so doing it has won the confidence of the controlling elements of the business so that the Associated Service is bound to win an immediate showing.

This is what the Associated Service has done for the exhibitor:

It has brought together a group of producers of exceeding excellence, each manufacturing varied types of pictures essential to a well rounded and finely balanced program. These manufacturers have thrown together their sales problems and have co-operated in a mutual distributing channel, retaining for the pictures the majority of the appropriation and cutting the overhead to a trifling fraction of what it was before.

Result: Better pictures at lower prices for the exhibitor.

Furthermore, the Associated Film has so limited its program that the Exhibitor can use it as the basis and the leader for every week's showing. The exhibitor's hands are not tied. He is at liberty to select additional features from the great thousands of pictures being made. He is not forced to shelve parts of his program that he is paying for, in order to do this. The pictures of the Associated Program are not fillers in any sense of the word, because they can be shown at any time as headliners. This program was laid out along exhibitor lines, with the exhibitor in mind, and the program was not made as a sure dumping ground for any productions thrown into it.

Moreover, Associated Program is bound to retain a certain standard of quality because every picture is censored by a committee of all manufacturers represented, who, jealous of the general quality will not permit a black sheep to enter the fold.

Further, Associated Service owns no Exchange except its central office. This means that no picture is thrown to a manager who must accept anything that comes, but is passed on by an independent owner who has his own standards and his own exhibitors to satisfy and who has in addition his own business to maintain.

But not only on quality of the pictures does this new arrangement bear merit. The exhibitor again has been kept in mind. There are no overhead charges to enter into the prices of the film for the exhibitor—no rents, salaries, tremendous organization plans. The independent exchange buys for you at the best possible price.

Associated Service is the rebuilded structure of the entire motion picture fabric—distribution, manufacturing, advertising is now made with the exhibitor first in mind, the producer second and the exchange last.

TRILBY

Was announced as the biggest and most profound success, before it was shown.

NOW READ WHAT THE PAPERS SAID

"ZIT"
in the NEW YORK JOURNAL
Said:
"It is greater than any other 'TRILBY,' and I've seen many. It is the final word in filmdom."

New York American
Said:
"The screen play of "TRILBY" is in every sense a masterpiece. In many ways they have accomplished things impossible in other companies.
It is gripping and entrancing."

NEW YORK HERALD
Said:
"Equitable made "TRILBY" live again in all its picturesque charm."

THE EVENING MAIL
Said:
"It is a temptation to say that "TRILBY" is the greatest offering of the screen drama. It relies on a powerful closely knit theme, splendidly produced and played.
It is unbelievedly vivid."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
Said:
"The result obtained in TRILBY places this motion drama among the finest examples of its kind. It takes a firm grip on the emotions and elicits a stronger response from the hearts in the audience"

The World.
Said:
"TRILBY is a genuine masterpiece. The camera work is faultless, the portrayals without a flaw."

The Evening Sun.
Said:
"TRILBY captured a huge audience and held it to the finish. The picture would have amazed Du Maurier himself. Svengali was greater and TRILBY finer than ever in the spoken drama."

The Evening Post.
Said:
"TRILBY makes Du Maurier live again. It is most impressive."

NEW YORK CLIPPER
Said:
"TRILBY assures the future of Equitable. It met the unqualified approval of a blase, critical audience."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Said:
"Everybody went away with the impression that they had seen the best picture in years."

CRAUFURD KENT

In the Four-Act "BROADWAY FAVORITES" Comedy Drama

THE PRETENDERS

Although Craufurd Kent has appeared in some of the foremost successes Broadway has known, he has never been seen in a role better suited to his peculiar talents than that of "Dick Mason," in this comedy drama. Among Mr. Kent's metropolitan vehicles, were "The Pink Lady," New Amsterdam; "Adele," Longacre; "Our Miss Gibbs," Knickerbocker, and "My Little Friend," New Amsterdam.

Released in Regular Service, Monday, October 4th. Special 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color lithographs.

Whitewashing William

A pair of blood-thirsty rivals, a maid, her father and a whitewash bucket become entangled in one of the most laughable mix-ups ever filmed.

Facts and Comments

AN APPRECIATIVE woman reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in a letter to the editor takes up the question of a correct portrayal of social usages. We have progressed considerably in adhering on the screen to the proper social "caper," but no doubt there is room for improvement and we think in the use of the right kind of stationery considerable change for the better might be made. Our correspondent suggests a social secretary or social arbiter as an aid to the director. Some of the directors, we are very sure, are in sore need of such assistance. To quote our friend: "I know that 'kind hearts are more than coronets' and all that sort of thing, and people of the highest character know no more of social usage than a puppy, but he fact remains that ignoring personality or character certain people born and educated in certain circles invariably do or do not do certain things as a matter of course. Therefore, when people born in educated and well-bred circles, whether villains or heroes are shown on the screen, their correspondence should be that of those circles."

IN ESTABLISHING a bureau of information for the special information of men about to buy motion picture theatres the exhibitors' association of Philadelphia has done a splendid thing. In the course of an inevitable evolution more and more motion picture houses of a certain variety are foredoomed to extinction. There are always scores of men hanging on the outskirts of the film world possessed of a little money or having friends with a little money who want to go into the motion picture business. The moribund houses are sold to these more or less unsuspecting men. Another start is made, new film bills are contracted, there is some advertising of "the new management" and the end is a foolish loss of savings. The organized exhibitors of Philadelphia now give due warning to all prospective investors and will, it is understood, prepare a list of "dead" houses, containing in detail the sad history of each failure. Such a proceeding not only protects the bona fide exhibitors against foolish competition, but it helps the reputable exchanges as well.

THE order barring films absolutely from passenger cars on the railroads has gone into effect and is working infinite hardships on exhibitors all over the country. A very large number of exhibtors depend upon messengers as the trains with baggage cars are too few to insure prompt arrival of films. Here is a subject which the organized bodies within the industry ought to grapple with at once. It is too bad that things ever went to such extremes, but it is still time to protest and to agitate for a removal or at least for a subsanial modificaion of hese regulaions.

A DISTINGUISHED writer in an article on the progress of the motion picture says in the Sunday supplement of a great New York daily paper: "* * Another pioneer in this direction was Charles Klein, who foresaw the coming market and produced 'Quo Vadis' on the screen." The fact speaks louder than any comment.

FROM the classic shades of Patchogue, L. I., comes the news of a contest between the preachers and the motion picture theatres. The local clergymen all "thundered" against Sunday pictures in their various pulpits, but there has not ben the slightest decrease in the atendance of the picture theatres. Clean programs are offered containing distinct educational values, and the public like the entertainment. "Thundering" in the pulpit is not quite as egective as it used to be. It devolves on the clergymen to fill their churches and if they find motion pictures more powerful than their sermons, perhaps a little self-introspection will do more good than "thundering."

WE ARE glad to note that the exhibitors of Portland, of whose censorship troubles mention was made recently in these columns, have scored a decisive victory over the censor "cranks." The newspapers of the city took up the issue of censorship and printed interviews with a number of prominent citizens, all of whom, without exception, ranged themselves on the side against censorship. In addition to this every newspaper defined its own editorial policy along strict anti-censorship lines. The newspapers are beginning to realize that censorship is an issue which has more than an academic meaning for the press of the country.

Methods of Work---Beginnings*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

BECAUSE there is no surety that the methods of one author will prove a safe guide for another, and because any didactic effort to stimulate creative work may sterilize it, or lead to dull imitation, illustrative examples are of doubtful value. The idea of a story should germinate in the author's brain and be accorded large freedom from technique in its growth. Essayists dwell on the subject of technique because it affords them the joys of a voyage of discovery—it is ever new. Each born story teller originates methods of manipulation entirely his own, but, if one torch lights another in the matter of artistic execution, a few examples from feature plays may do no harm.

1. A five-reel adaptation from a successful stage play. There was little promise of suspense necessary to hold an audience through five reels, and the unsatisfactory ending was a handicap, but its reputation insured a good sale, and it was up to the adapter to conceive of a method which should not wholly disregard the author's purpose, and, at the same time, please the millions of people who might see it on the screen. The story—

A weakling employee with a sweet wife steals from his employer, a self-avowed old sensualist, a hard, cruel and unscrupulous sea captain. The weakling's defalcations are discovered, to the delight of his employer, for the latter has long been infatuated with the former's sweet young wife. The weakling, knowing what to expect if his wife falls into the power of the captain, deliberately sends her late at night to the latter's den to adjust matters so that he will not have to go to jail.

What would a man of the captain's character do? He would act in accord with the qualities which had distinguished him through life unless there was an unrevealed soft spot in his hard heart. Why not closely examine that character, open up some wild experiences aboard ship in the past, and expose his relations with the sweet young wife, while exciting curiosity and assembling forces for the high scenes?

He is discovered in the first scene recovering from a debauch in a private dining room. In a moment of self-disgust, he recalls some former experiences. In the interim a jeweled hand issues from portieres at his right, the beckoning hand of sensuality. Down at the root of his character is the cave man. He rises in contempt and opens a window at his left. A light streams in, the light shed upon his mind by the influence of one pure woman, the one given in marriage to his weakling clerk. He sits down, lights a cigar and pictures experiences in her presence, as covetous as ever, dominated by the predatory instincts of the male, yet it could be seen that her refinement might hold him.

That first reel, devoted entirely to characterization, held as well as the high scenes, though it was entirely out of the stage version. Its meaning was not thrust upon the audience by sub-titles, but was felt. The photoplay was a decided success and proved to be one of the most profitable of the year.

2. Like it in financial returns and artistic success was an adaptation from a stage play which had failed in New York and was comparatively unknown throughout the country, the story of a woman driven by the cruelty of a gambling husband, the loss of her only child, and by ill-health, combined with extreme poverty to the verge of suicide. The stage play drifted away from the first and main line of interest to the operations of a gang of swindlers aboard a transatlantic liner in mid-ocean and became badly tangled through the introduction of minor characters and a lot of irrelevant matter. The dramatist apparently had a first conception of merit and went astray in an attempt to please a Broadway following with picturesque variety—he thought he had his finger on the feverish pulse of his public. There was an immediate question of elimination involved. The cast was cut in two and the main line of interest thoroughly established for photoplay purposes before "picturesque variety" could get in its deadly work.

Scene First is decidedly impersonal. All that is in view is the top of a table on which a small bottle of poison and a white rose in a half glass of water. The rose is drooping and several of its petals have fallen. Scene Second, in larger scope, shows the same table, and presently a thin and trembling hand reaches for the poison. Then the woman is revealed and, by double exposure, her reasons for committing suicide. She is saved in this first attempt by the sudden coming of a former suitor, an ex-gambler who proves to be the Nemesis of her dissolute husband, but she is finally induced to take the poison by her husband, and he leaves her for dead, failing to join her in ending their lives together. The contents of the bottle are not poisonous; the woman recovers she crosses in the same ship as her husband, and he becomes mastered by the idea that his dead wife is haunting hm.

Clever piece of double exposure in this photodrama, one which drew a round of applause at the Strand, was devised by the writer of the scenario, but ingeniously developed by the director. The haunted man is looking over the side of the ship and sees his wife's accusing face in the water, a face that vanishes in the foam and reappears in the dark water.

3. A modern five-reel feature, dealing with a vital phase of the European War, presents a strange condition in the first reel, a marriage between a daughter of Polish nobility and an American attached to the Red Cross service, which could be disclaimed by either of them, though it is legally performed in the presence of many witnesses, including the bride's father. The wedding has been hurried by the approach of military operations, and a distant battle is in progress during the services. Miles away from the private chapel in which the young couple are being united a small battery of artillery has been thrust forward to search out the movements of enemy troops. One of the guns is elevated to find the range, and the shell from it drops into the wedding party at the altar immediately after the bride and groom have passed into an adjoining salon. The shell fatally wounds the father and kills all others in the chapel.

The swift series of events that now follows is entirely dependent upon one chance shot from a masked battery. The play opens with an inanimate scene, that of a cluster of bushes. No human being is visible at any time in this scene. Slowly the muzzle of a cannon is thrust through the bushes, and it is covered by a few branches. At various times during the progress of the first reel, the menacing muzzle of the weapon is shown; its "roar of death" may be expected at any moment: it strikes a keynote of the story, arouses anticipation; and is the unconscious factor in the lives of important people, if not in the destinies of a nation The determining factors of a story spring from a source—"the point of attack."

Put Your Trust in the Slide

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHATEVER the censors might attempt against your motion picture they are powerless against your slide. Some day, just as sure as the sun rises in the East, the motion picture will be as free as the slide. There is no reason on earth why it should be otherwise.

Until that day comes, keep hammering with your slide. Out in Cleveland, Ohio, an exhibitor, who has been a fervent and consistent opponent of official censorship, showed a set of strong anti-censorship slides. The censors did not like these slides at all. They love to censor other people, but they themselves abhor even the slightest criticism. That's why they fell upon these slides, which held up censors and censorship to well deserved and unflattering comment.

Some one has said it's no use "berating the censors." Any foolish system makes fools of those who seek to carry it out. In their official acts the censors provoke public comment and most of it is distinctly unfavorable. Censorship as a theory is but a piece of academic folly. Censorship as a reality is highly injurious and the men who embody the folly are the most legitimate of targets, for discussion and criticism. They cannot help doing foolish things. Censorship breeds absurdities just as stagnant water breeds mosquitoes. Criticising and "berating" censors are two different and distinct things. The very moment a man sets himself up as a judge of other men's morals, he challenges criticism and makes his own personality and his record an issue of the discussion. If ever the "argumentum ad hominem" (the argument addressed to the man), is both applicable and justifiable it is in the case of the censor. Look up history and you will find that in all ages and under every form of government the censor has been excoriated. You cannot temporize with the man who expounds and who lives by a bad principle.

To get back to the slide. The aforesaid exhibitor called the wrath of the Ohio censors down upon himself and his theaters by reason of those anti-censorship slides. The censors threatened and attempted to punish this exhibitor for exhibiting the objectionable slides without submitting them to censorship. The exhibtor, however, knew that he was well within his legal rights by showing these slides. He knew and the censors conceded that these slides were not indecent or immoral and that the censors might just as well try to prevent him from displaying a newspaper on the screen as try to stop the slides. He therefore kept right on showing his anti-censorship slides. The censors finally made an attempt to stop them, the exhibitor appealed to the Mayor, and the Mayor, who, of course, is familiar with the fundamental law of the state, sustained the exhibitor. The slides are still there and we hope they will be displayed in every theater in Ohio.

By the way the proposed referendum against censorship in Ohio has not materialized. On careful consideration I do not think that the exhibitors are to blame. The politicians of the Buckeye state have tasted the sweets of censorship and they see a great source of profit and political prestige in trying to control the industry. While censorship for the moment seems to have a new lease of life, the time will come when Ohio will be rid of the pest of political censorship of motion pictures.

Ohio has the unenviable distinction of being the first American state which has forgotten the traditions of the country to the extent of establishing a previous legal restraint upon the most important medium of expression. Ohio must redeem herself. The exhibitors of Ohio who are outside of manipulated conventions overwhelmingly against censorship owe it to themselves to go on fighting until they win the final and complete victory.

An Important Mission of the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE president of a great American university had much to say in a recent lecture on the lack of artistic instinct and artistic development in this country. He said, in substance, that as a people we were lacking in those fine perceptions and in that inborn love of the beautiful which is the birthright of the Latin nations.

In a general way this is true, but the defect is susceptible of a remedy. We are an intensely active people; most of us from necessity, some of us from habit. We pass over things here because we are in a hurry, but when we are in Europe with plenty of leisure we admire these same things. To go no further than New York: If the Hudson River were in Europe we would class it with the Bay of Naples, but as it is right at our door and we see it hurriedly on an excursion to Newburgh, we take it for granted that the Bay of Naples or the Rhine must be far superior to our own wonderful river.

The remedy is the motion picture. Perhaps we are in too much of a hurry about that, too, but we take at least an hour or two to look at a variety of pictures and we begin to see and to think and to get away from our infernal habit of hurry and we begin to suspect that there is something in life outside of adding one dollar to the other. I would not dare to attempt estimating the influence of the motion picture upon the artistic perceptions of its vast and growing audience.

If, however, we may judge the nature and quality of water by a raindrop just as well as by the restless flood that pours down the Niagara Falls, I like to recall my own experience in a small Jersey town some years ago.

Before they had motion pictures in the town the intellectual and artistic life of that community was "void and without form." The saloon was the social centre and the male youth and manhood of the town were experts on "applejack." The men gathered—weekdays and Sundays—on the two principal corners and their only service to humanity consisted in a succession of stupid stares directed at all passers-by. A stranger attracted as much attention as a white man in the heart of China or Africa. Conversation was as limited as it was inane or vulgar. Six months after motion pictures had come to the town, even occasional visitors noticed a change. The people were no longer hopelessly dull, heavy and inert. It was as if the curtain had been moved from the theaters of the world and the natives experienced wholesome and unwonted sensations. They began to understand the greatness and the beauty of their own country and something of the history of mankind percolated to their brains.

One yokel, resisting the regenerative influences of the motion picture, misbehaved at the theater. He felt like the porker excluded from his sty. A few were like him. I created a sensation by refusing him admittance to the show. At once his friends fell from him and were on their good behavior, at least in the theater. "A little later," as they say in motion picture titles, a committee pleaded with me to admit the man, assuring me he had reformed and was ready to apologize. The fold was accordingly opened and he became an example to all.

The case is typical. The cultural mission of the screen is performed very quietly indeed, but it is going on all the time, and it is bound to have deep and wide results.

The newspapers even are finding it out. Magazine writers, full of criticism, but at times a little short of facts, are dilating on it. When the history of our development as an artistic nation comes to be written I am sure the historian cannot afford to overlook the motion picture. It has stimulated the soul and the imagination of our people in a far greater degree than the press and the pulpit and the library rolled into one.

Schools of Motion Pictures

An Appreciative Study of Modern Dramatic Kinematography Both Here and Abroad

By W. Stephen Bush.

ARTICLE I.

THE following series of articles, which attempt to outline the general characteristics of our American schools of motion picture art, are based on observations and experiences which the writer shares with all the old friends and admirers of good motion pictures. The traditions and the development of our art are highly instructive, and a complete comprehension of the meaning of American kinematography is impossible without some knowledge of the subject. The principal object of the articles is to aid the exhibitor in his judgment and in his selections of what he needs for his program. If he knows the taste of his patrons, whether present or prospective, the next thing is to cater to that taste. These articles may help him to safety amid much variety.

America's Share in Improving the Motion Picture.

It is still the fashion in the cultured capitals of Europe to speak of American art with shrugs of the shoulders and with ill-concealed merriment. "These Americans," we hear it said, "are clever, they have energy; they erect tall buildings; they have subdued the wilderness; they have created a new world, but it is a world without art. In art your beautiful and interesting country," thus spoke to me a highly gifted Italian journalist, "is barren."

I thought then—two years ago—that I might fall back on our motion pictures, but I knew my friend denied the dignity of art to the motion picture. "Quo Vadis" had just loomed on the kinematographic horizon; "Cabiria" was but a bold conception, though on the hills of Torino, on the suburban banks of the Po, the first steps in the great enterprise had been taken. Italy has not rested on her laurels, but our own country has, I think, advanced substantial arguments in support of a sound American taste for art.

Special Merits of American Films.

There are people who think that art in a democracy is impossible, but the history which tells us of Greece and medieval Italy confounds them. Art may be aristocratic in its aspirations, but to fulfil its best and noblest mission it must be democratic in its appeal. As an observer of the development of the American motion picture and as an ardent lover of it I have been struck with this great fact: We have within the last two years developed dramatic kinematography to a gratifying extent. In doing so various schools of motion picture art have been shaping themselves. In some things we still have to learn from Europe, especially from Italy and France, but in other respects we have advanced beyond all European models and have made new departures. These new departures, which more and more justify us in our claim that the motion picture is both a useful and a fine art, may be briefly summed up in this enumeration: We have won for the screen the best histrionic talent in the country; we have to an unprecedented degree utilized the realism of the screen; we have specialized in the picturization of atmosphere following consciously or unconsciously the example of the world's greatest scenic and "genre" (character) painters; we have discovered more of the psychological subtleties of the screen; we have found means of imparting great thoughts swiftly and dramatically to the mind of the beholder; we have built up a school of motion picture acting which, in its power of expression, comes nearer to the spoken word than was thought possible and which in a variety of moods soars high above all the aids of diction and elocution and far surpasses the spoken word.

The vociferations of the press agent have somewhat obscured the facts. The mad desire for publicity regardless of merit have exalted some films far above their desert: there has been such a reckless use of superlatives that a judicious appreciation of quality seems as difficult as it is necessary. The exhibitor in these days is more than ever thankful for any advice or suggestion which will aid him in improving and diversifying his program. To help him and to give due recognition to the ambitious producer these articles have been written.

The Vitagraph School.

In beginning this series with the Vitagraph School I want to emphasize the fact that it is the oldest, that it has been steadily progressive and that in the development of the purely dramatic uses of the screen it has never been surpassed. It was the first in the old licensed group which successfully filmed the classics in single reels. Almost all the great Shakesperean tragedies were adapted for the screen, a most daring thing in the days when the unwashed boys in front dominated the audience and the cowboy reigned supreme. I mention the fact because it was characteristic of the spirit and the tendencies of this company. Earlier than any other company I know the Vitagraph began to originate specialties of the screen. They perceived not only the novelty of the motion picture, but also its power as a medium of dramatic expression. They clearly saw its peculiar advantages. Having recognized its proper place in human psychology and in human amusements they applied themselves to the study and the practice of the new art. Hence came at an early period an ease of dramatic manner and expression, a smoothness and a swiftness of motion which exhibitors and the public generally began to recognize as a distinct merit of all Vitagraph pictures. Strength, verisimilitude, fidelity to life, a vigorous and at times a bold handling of social and political problems are distinguishing marks of the Vitagraph school. In its approaches to the depth and the mystery of the human heart the Vitagraph school has scored great successes. With a hammer-like directness in all dramatic movements the company has often united pathos, sweetness and simplicity of soul. The primitive emotions skillfully stirred are still the strongest, and in the stirring and playing upon all the elemental movements of the soul the Vitagraph School has been singularly successful. Let it be understood that I feel justified in predicating all this on the basis of its single reel work no less than upon the basis of its feature work. The most remarkable achievement of this school was its ability to adjust itself to the feature situation and to meet all competition in feature quality.

"We Have Our Formulas."

"How do you manage this complete mastery of light and shade, how do you bend the camera to your will in this absolute fashion?" I asked of A. E. Smith, who helps to guide the destinies of the Vitagraph school. "Where have you discovered the art of revealing a situation or an episode or a passing mood or a fleeting thought with all the quickness and the completeness of a searchlight? We admire that strong, short, but all sufficient glimpse which shows us just what you want us to see no more and no less, and then passes on to the next vital point of the story?" The answer of Mr. Smith was puzzling in its plainness and simplicity.

"We have discovered our formulas," said he, "the formulas evolved from the long and hard grind of experience. There is a formula for the director and there is a formula for the cameraman. It is not an unchangeable formula and the men we ask to follow the formulas are free to work out improvements. They are expected to make the proper adjustments, but on the whole they are expected to follow the formulas."

Perhaps the expression "formula," which is something denoting a permanent mold, is misleading when applied to Vitagraph art. Indeed I have often felt that the Vitagraph school was the best argument against the theory that the motion picture is something essentially mechanical. If there is such a thing as the spirit of the screen the Vitagraph school has found the means of giving it a local habitation and a name.

The Vitagraph School of Acting.

The most notable feature of the Vitagraph school is its development of the motion picture actor as distinguished from the actor of the speaking stage. A recent article in "The New Republic," discussing the inferiority of the motion picture with much complacency and little wit, categorically denies the title of the motion picture to be classed as an art, dwelling upon the lack of the spoken word as a fatal defect in any medium of dramatic expression. Now, nothing is less dramatic than a dialogue. The words have no value whatever except as the vesture of action, and stripped of this vesture the action is more often all the stronger, all the more dramatic. There is not, with some exceptions in the Greek drama, a finer dialogue than the quarrel between Brutus and Cassius. It is one of the great gems in the world's literature, but its dramatic value is of the slightest. The quarrel between the two conspirators was shown in the old Vitagraph film, "Julius Caesar," and who will say that its dramatic purport was not fully brought out on the screen? Words are by no means the final or even one of the best tests and portrayals of character. Emerson says that he could not hear the words of a man who spoke to him because his manners and his actions spoke so much louder than his words. Juries and judges regard the demeanor of the witness rather than his words, the words only impress them as they are supported by the character of the witness shadowed forth in a hundred little peculiarities in the expression of the features and the pose of the body. If we had not this intrinsic evidence as to the relative value of actions and words, the Vitagraph school of acting would supply the extrinsic evidence in plenty. Not all the productions of a company are of the same degree of excellence, but I am willing to let the reader select any Vitagraph feature he wishes and this power of the unspoken word will appear, the power to suggest and the power to impress by a look, by a turn of the head, by a slight tremble of the frame, by the hardening or softening of the mouth, by the innumerable ways in which every human emotion mounts to the surface before it finds expression in words. We can choose and control our words, but it is infinitely harder to disguise our emotions. How often do we read our answer in the eye long before it rises to the lips. Our friend in "The New Republic" says that this is "pantomime." "Pantomime," quite regardless of its true original meaning, is today understood to be exaggerated gesture.

The acting of the man before the camera is the very opposite of exaggerated gesture.

There are, I grieve to say, "actors" who thus "pantomime" before the camera, but most of them are recent recruits from the speaking stage. The rest belong to a school that has almost outlived itself. Limitations of space forbid an excursion into details, but I may be permitted to choose one example to illustrate my contention that manner and action, far more than words, reflect the soul. A woman takes part in some social function, which is attended by two rivals for her hand. She knows herself to be the observed of all observers, and she does her utmost to conceal her true feelings. Now her words may not betray her, but if she feels attracted by one and repelled by the other of the rivals, something in her attitude will indicate her preference. To seize upon that subtle something is the essence of the Vitagraph school of acting. A concrete example is Norma Talmadge in "The Battle Cry of Peace," the Vitagraph chef d' ouevre, which we owe to Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, who helps to guide the course of the good ship "V." To visualize the undefinable and mysterious instincts of the woman, revered by the Greeks and honored by the old Teutons, is fully within the power of the screen. Is not this a supreme test?

Variety of Characterization another distinguishing feature of the Vitagraph school.

It is characterization of the sort that descends to and embraces the slightest detail. Here Vitagraph is suggestive of Rembrandt as it shows its power to make the spectator see only that which is essential. If characterization is the special glory of the modern drama we see an abundance of it in Vitagraph films. There is scarcely a patron of motion pictures who cannot instantly recall notable examples of this fine art of characterization. What could be finer than the wolfish, ruthless rich manufacturer in "The Silent Plea," or the struggling American widow in the same play. When it comes to characterization there are no minor parts in the Vitagraph plays. The most trifling part, seen perhaps but for a few seconds, fits marvelously into the harmony of the whole. This peculiar merit of Vitagraph films is widely, if not always consciously, appreciated.

Realism for the sake of realism has been one of the weaknesses and reproaches of dramatic kinematography. The realistic incident was too often exalted into the feature of the story and the plot was deliberately subordinated. Odd and sensational things were made the pivot and the dramatic values were quite a secondary consideration. From this besetting sin the Vitagraph school has kept itself scrupulously free. Though it has staged scenes of realism which have never been surpassed the incident always fitted the plot.

The realism of the Vitagraph school is remarkable for two things: It is daring in the extreme and it is always incidental.

It was subordinated to the plot. It was staged to make the plot stronger. Catastrophe is but a synonym for drama; it may be a climax for an episode; if it is realistic, it shows where the silent drama conquers the limitations of the conventional stage. Screen realism, to attain its fullest aims, must therefore be perfect and incidental. These vital requirements the Vitagraph school meets to the limit. On occasions, and especially within more recent times, the Vitagraph Company has aimed at enlisting the spectacular element in aid of the drama. It has been strikingly successful, but it has always held the spectacular in subjection to the dramatic aspects. The specialty of the Vitagraph school is the development of the silent drama. It has reaped the rewards of concentration. It leads the film world in its exposition of the screen's dramatic power.

Hence the international character of its success.

Vitagraph pictures uphold the universal and international value of the screen in Paris, London, Berlin, Rome and Barcelona. I might conclude this hasty sketch with a roll of illustrious actors and actresses who have come out of the Vitagraph school of acting. The school is as active and as fertile to-day. It is beyond any doubt the ideal school for training men and women of the proper talents to the very special and difficult work before the camera.

MRS. KLUG-SCHULTZE RETURNS TO ITALY.

During a Short Stay in This City She Made Profitable Arrangements for Marketing Ambrosio Films.

A FEW years ago a bright and active young girl came here all the way from Italy to look over the American film market and to acquaint herself with conditions generally. She came directly from Torino, the loveliest town in old Savoia and the great film center of Southern Europe. Her name was Frieda Klug. Miss Klug is as observant as she is energetic, her manners are engaging and she soon showed very important qualifications for the successful transaction of business, i. e., tact and patience.

Mrs. Frieda Klug-Schultze.

Recently Miss Klug had become the wife of a successful young engineer, Mr. Schultze, who, despite the name, is a native of Italy. Mrs. Schultze did not for a moment lose her interest in film affairs. The heads of the Ambrosio Company had great confidence in the business judgment of the young woman and in her familiarity with American conditions. They had several fine films which they were anxious to sell in the American market. About a month ago Mrs. Schultze and her husband came to this country with these films, which had much of the old Ambrosio quality in them. She succeeded in selling a number of negatives to the Universal and advantageously disposed of others as well.

Mrs. Schultze sailed for Italy in the company of her husband on board the steamship "Principe Tomaso di Savoia" on September 9. She says that arrangements have been made with J. A. McKinney, former manager of Warner's Features, for handling future productions of the Ambrosio Company. The Ambrosio has always enjoyed great popularity in this country. Mrs. Schultze assured the representative of The Moving Picture World that the firm is now engaged in the preparation of some splendid features which will be ready for release in the near future. During her stay in this country Mrs. Schultze has added to her hosts of old friends and has made valuable business connections.

"The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America."

A New Organization of all The Motion Picture Interests of the Country—There are Six Classes of Membership, Electing a Board of Ten Directors—Plans and Policies of the Board

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE foundation of a permanent and representative organization embracing all motion picture interests, was laid on September 15 at the Hotel McAlpin in this city. Application will be made to the Supreme Court of the State of New York for leave to incorporate under the "Membership Corporation Law." The name proposed for the approval of the court is "The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc." The petition has been signed by the following prominent film men, representing all the great interests within the industry:

John R. Freuler, 71 West 23d St., New York.
Samuel M. Field, 71 West 23d St., New York.
J. W. Binder, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.
Walter W. Irwin, 1600 Broadway, New York.
Winfield R. Sheehan, 130 West 46th St., New York.
Arthur James, 1465 Broadway, New York.
Ferdinand W. Singhi, Lubin Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Paul Gulick, 1600 Broadway, New York.
Carl H. Pierce, 220 West 42d St., New York.
Albert E. Smith, Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
J. Stuart Blackton, Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
S. L. Rothapfel, Broadway at 42d St., New York.
Wm. A. Johnston, 220 West 42d St., New York.
Max Stearn, Majestic Theatre, Columbus, Ohio.
John Wylie, 17 Maidson Ave., New York.
W. Stephen Bush, 17 Madison Ave., New York.
Julian M. Solomon, Jr., 220 West 42d St., New York.
John F. Chalmers, 17 Madison Ave., New York.
Joseph E. Graef, 317 East 34th St., New York.
H. B. Cannock, 317 East 34th St., New York.
L. W. Atwater, 317 East 34th St., New York.
J. M. Lakin, 847 West End Ave., New York.
Thomas Wiley, 67 West 23d St., New York.
Fred. Hawley, 80 Fifth Ave., New York.
Siegmund Lubin, Lubin Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Ed. J. Mock, 1253 Monadnock Bldg., Chicago, Ills.
J. E. Brulatour, 5 West 32d St., New York.

The objects for which the corporation is to be created are as follows: To foster trade and commerce among its members and to promote the business interests of such members; to reform trade abuses on behalf of its members; to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions; to diffuse among its members accurate and reliable information as to the standing and character of those engaged in any or all branches of said industry and to supply other information concerning said industry; to settle differences between its members and promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between them and to do and perform all such acts as may tend to promote the welfare of the industry at large.

According to the plans of the incorporators the membership of the new organization will be divided into six classes, as follows:

Classes.

1. Manufacturers' membership, including therein importers and exporters of motion pictures. $100 initiation, $500 dues.

2. Those engaged in dealing in supplies and equipment relating to said industry. $100 initiation, $300 dues.

3. Those engaged in operating selling exchanges of films used in said industry. $10 initiation, $50 dues.

4. Publishers' membership, including those engaged in publishing information and data relating to said industry, and periodicals devoted thereto. $25 initiation, $25 dues.

5. Exhibitors of motion pictures, including therein all classes of such exhibitors, irrespective of whether said exhibitors exhibit for profit or for educational or other approved purposes. Exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 500, $5 initiation, $5 dues; exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 800, $5 initiation, $10 dues; exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 1,000, $5 initiation, $15 dues; exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 1,400, $5 initiation, $25 dues; exhibitor owning theater seating more than 1,400, $5 initiation, $50 dues.

6. Miscellaneous. This class of membership shall include and consist of directors of motion picture productions, scenario writers, actors, operators and the employees of each and every branch of the said industry, $2 initiation, $1 dues.

The rest of the plan of organization comprises a board of directors, two chosen by and from each of the classes of membership, except the publishers' class, which is not represented on the board.

Each theater for which an initiation fee and annual dues are paid entitles the owner or representative of that theater to one vote for the two directors of his class.

Each exchange paying initiation fees and annual dues is entitled to one vote for the two directors of its class.

The liability of members of the board is specifically limited by the by-laws to the amount of initiation fee and annual dues.

The annual meeting will be held on the second Monday in January of each year. Directors elected at the organization meeting serve until the next annual meeting.

At the meeting held in the Hotel McAlpin all the incorporators with two or three exceptions were personally present. In addition there were many other persons present who were interested in the project, among whom were P. A. Powers of the Universal, William A. Smith of the Nicholas Power Co., William Sherrill of the Gustave Frohman Co., William A. Coulfal of the Novelty Slide Co., E. A. McManus of the Hearst Selig Weekly, and William M. Seabury, who acted as attorney for the incorporaters.

The meeting was called to order by Jacob William Binder, who gave a brief outline of the object of the new organization. He said in the course of his remarks that he had been asked by representatives of all the great manufacturing interests for space to sign as charter members. To give them an opportunity to sign in person or by representative and in order to have the election of directors made by as numerous a body of voters as possible, the charter was kept open for signatures up to 2.30 P. M.

The election of the Board of Directors resulted as follows:

Class 1—Manufacturers—J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph; Carl Laemmle, Universal.

Class 2—Supplies—J. E. Brulatour and Schuyler Colfax.

Class 3—Exchanges—P. A. Powers, W. W. Irwin.

Class 4—Exhibitors—Max Stearne, Columbus, Ohio; S. L. Rothapfel, New York.

Class 6—Miscellaneous—J. W. Binder and William A. Johnson.

These directors are to serve for one year, or until the next election of officers.

A representative of the Moving Picture World had an interview with Mr. Jacob W. Binder, the chairman of the organization committee.

"This organization," said Mr. Binder, "owes its existence to the necessity of protecting the interests and all the interests of the motion picture industry. The National Board of Censorship has been called into being for the purpose of establishing a voluntary censorship. It soon developed that the board had to turn its activities in new directions. Voluntary censorship still remains its first and foremost object but just in the degree that voluntary censorship means the fighting and abolition of official censorship the National Board had to extend the original scope of its work. The producers were the first to recognize that here was a new line of cleavage. The National Board could not continue combining its voluntary censorship work with active and effective opposition against official and oppressive censorship. It was therefore thought best to create a new organization, different and distinct entirely from the old board, and to devote it to fighting not only the evil of censorship but protecting moving picture interests all along the line. We propose to start a campaign of publicity which will provide the press of the country with all the essential facts of the motion picture industry. Our bureau of information will offer its services to the press of the country. In this way we hope to get the truth about motion pictures before the public, to combat prejudice, to conquer ignorance and to diffuse a knowledge of the truth. We also propose to be heard in the halls of legislation, opposing all unjust and oppressive laws aimed against the motion picture interests but submitting at the same time constructive and beneficial legislation, for we believe that the true interest of the industry and the true interest of the public are identical. Our offices will be located at 18 and 20 East Forty-first street.

Famous Players Studio Destroyed

Flames Which Start Below the Quarters of the Film Company Rapidly Spread, with Resultant Heavy Loss.

FIRE which started in a braid works on a floor under the studio of the Famous Players Film Company, at 213 West Twenty-sixth street, New York, on the evening of Saturday, September 11, quickly extended to the third and fourth floors, occupied by the picture company. The blaze was discovered at 6:55 o'clock, and before the conflagration was under control five alarms, an unusual number for New York, had been sent in. Practically the entire equipment of the Famous Players was destroyed. The studios, offices, dressing rooms, property rooms and projection rooms were wiped out. The only department left untouched by the fire was the laboratory, wherein raw stock is converted to finished film. That this division, situated on the third floor, should have escaped the flames is a demonstration of the adequacy of the measures taken by the company to safeguard this side of its business. The flames were all about the laboratory, but it remained immune.

The blaze spread so rapidly that three employes of the film company had difficulty in escaping even with empty hands. Headed by Frank Meyer, laboratory manager, they groped through the smoke and escaped by way of the roof of the tenement adjoining on the west. The firemen had a hard task in confining the flames within the building, which one time served as the armory for the Ninth Regiment. When it was seen that the building could not be saved, all efforts were bent toward preventing an extension of the blaze to the surrounding tenements. An enormous crowd collected.

One of the great losses sustained by the company is in its property department. President Zukor, since the beginning of the organization, three years ago, has steadily accumulated a great line of furniture, of all periods, and at large expense, believing it the best investment his company could make. It was totally destroyed. While many negatives of unreleased subjects were in safety vaults elsewhere, there were several negatives, in the office vault, of nearby releases, and the partial loss of these is much regretted. One of these alone represented a cost of considerably above $50,000. The negatives of subjects that have been released, beginning with the first one, "The Prisoner of Zenda," are safe. It was necessary to wait three days after the fire before opening the negative vault. Some of the subjects will be useless. Retakes will be necessary in the case of "The White Pearl." Undamaged were "A Girl of Yesterday" and "The Prince and the Pauper."

The insurance on the property is proportionately negligible. The loss will not be known definitely for some time. While it will, of course, be large, it will in no way interfere with the activities of the company; the plans that had been formulated will be carried out. On the day following the fire, President Adolph Zukor called his directors and aids about him. The first move was to secure office quarters, and these were taken in the Columbia Bank Building, at 507 Fifth avenue, on Monday. The same day production was under way at the Yonkers studio and the printing of the first film on the newly-arranged schedule began at another laboratory.

In a formal statement, the Famous Players announces the company is already in a position to assure the trade that the only change of schedule will be that arising from the necessary delay in printing and assembling the scattered negatives rescued from the fire or the retaking of such subjects as have been partially or wholly destroyed. This includes the postponing of release of Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," scheduled for September 20, which will now be issued on October 11; the indefinite postponement of Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," and the rearrangement of the next two months' program. The original release date of "The White Pearl" will be filled by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's production of Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer." The first Famous Players release on the revised Paramount schedule will be John Mason and Hazel Dawn in "The Fatal Card," which will appear on September 30, to be followed by Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper," October 4; Mary Pickford in "A Girl of Yesterday," October 7; Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," October 11; Hazel Dawn in "The Masqueraders," October 28; Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," November 4; Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," November 8; Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," November 11, and John Barrymore in "The Red Widow," November 15.

The immediate result of the fire has been the rushing to a speedy conclusion of the plans for the erection of the studios and laboratories on the newly-acquired tract of land at Two Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, west of Broadway, overlooking the Harlem and Hudson Rivers.

"Every contingency which could possibly arise in a fire in the studios which we are now building has been anticipated and provided for," said Treasurer Edwin S. Porter. "Last week's fire has not disclosed the necessity for any safeguard that had not before been anticipated and planned. The lessons of the fire prove conclusively that the fire prevention measures which we had already contemplated are more than adequate to cope with any situation which could conceivably confront us."

"We are undaunted by our tremendous loss, and will abate no effort to continue to hold our place as the foremost producing concern in the world," declared President Zukor, when seen at his temporary offices. "With the Yonkers studio as our production headquarters, we will quickly obtain the use of other studios in the vicinity of New York, where all our work will be rushed with the maximum speed compatible with the high standard of artistic production which has always been our watchword.

"One of the great revelations to us is the immense advantage to be derived from a schedule of productions making possible the completion of a film long before it is to be released—a policy we have always striven to maintain. Had we not had several films ready for almost immediate release, our organization would have been badly hindered, and our distributing system demoralized.

"It is with the most heartfelt appreciation," added Mr. Zukor, "that I acknowledge in behalf of the Famous Players the innumerable telegrams from exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers offering sympathy and, in many cases, the complete studio facilities and organizations of the senders. The Famous Players can never express in words the gratitude and pleasure which these sincere tributes from the members of the trade have afforded them in this hour of great trial, but it is particularly gratifying that the organized resources of the company made the acceptance of these offers unnecessary."

Tyrone Power

FEW picture fans have not wondered at times if their favorite players really lived the parts in which they appear. Because of the consistently interesting work they do it would seem that their whole heart was wrapped up in their work; but when one considers that they must work all day, six days a week, it would seem that they would in time come to regard their efforts merely as "work" and not pay so much attention to quality.

Tyrone Power, featured star of the Selig Polyscope Company, who recently made his debut in this company's Red Seal Play, "A Texas Steer," made an interesting statement anent this matter recently.

Tyrone Power.

"The question of commercializing art," said Mr. Powers, "is largely a question of individuals. As in other pursuits the stage has men whose sole aim is the dollar mark. Luckily, however, these are in the minority and the men and women who place their art before all else are numerous. There is no reason why an actor or actress should deny himself and herself any of the necessities of life in order to better art, but there is less reason why they should neglect their art and use it merely as a means to gain financial reward.

"It is the player who strikes a happy balance between commercialism and art that is the real success, both on the stage and in real life. He gives his entire time and thought to his work while engaged in it, and lives every part he portrays. Away from the studio or theater, however, he is like all others—just a man—and there is no reason why he should not have gained sufficient rewards for his labors to follow his inclinations, as others do."

Big Opening for Vitagraph Feature

"The Battle Cry of Peace" Is Shown to Crowded House—Many Prominent Men Present.

THE first regular exhibition of "The Battle Cry of Peace" was held at the Vitagraph Theater on the night of September 9. Present to see the big Vitagraph picture and to show by their attendance their indorsement of the propaganda of preparedness against war were many men prominent in the public and civic life of the country. The exterior of the house had been elaborately decorated with large electric signs in colors. The magnitude of the display caused even Broadway pedestrians and riders to take notice. Although it was 8:30 before the show began the box office was besieged by crowds an hour before that time. The result was that when Captain "Jack" Crawford came on the stage for a preliminary talk there was a line behind the orchestra rail. The stage effects had been arranged by S. L. Rothapfel. These included the roaring of mobs behind the screen at timely moments. The scream of a woman at one point intensified the horror of a situation already close to the straining point.

Accompanying the production was a full orchestra. During the battle scenes the organ contributed its deepest and loudest tones. There may have been differences of opinion as to whether the widely varying effects added to or detracted from the illusion of the subject, but there could be none as to the enthusiasm of the house, many times manifested by hearty applause, as to the great merit of the picture and of the importance of the principles for which it stood. In the beginning Captain Crawford stirred his listeners when he referred to his abhorrence of the song that set forth "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier." This was especially true when he told of his own four wounds and how his "Scotch-Irish daddy" had been wounded, had been nursed by his mother, and then sent back to fight.

The big house sat tight until the close of the remarks by Hudson Maxim, who was introduced by J. Stuart Blackton at the conclusion of a talk on the making of the picture. Among those in the audience were Mayor John Purroy Mitchel, Major-General Leonard Wood, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Major-General John F. O'Ryan of the New York state guard, Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, William T. Rock, Admiral Adolph Marix, Justice Bartow S. Weeks, Lee Schubert, Roy McCardle, William Fox, Samuel Grant of Boston, the Rev. Thomas Dixon, Colonel S. E. Allen, Alan R. Hawley, Rex Beach, Louis Reeves Harrison, Carle J. Blennar, Phil Lang, Edwin Markham, Walter W. Irwin, E. W. Lynch, Jacob W. Binder, Colonel William M. Black, John F. Chalmers, General Horatio C. King, Brigadier John C. Eddy of the New York state guard, William F. McCombs, Charles Richman, who played the lead in the picture; Miss Gladys Hanson, Robert Edeson, Miss Florence Reed, Colonel John H. Foote and John E. McCooey.

In opening his remarks Mr. Blackton said he had been so impressed on reading Hudson Maxim's "Defenseless America" that he had been impelled to write the script for the picture which had just been shown—he realized the book might be read by 50,000 persons, but he wanted to see the subject of preparedness against war brought home to fifty million. He said the making of the picture had been a joy and an inspiration to everyone who had been concerned in it, from the leading man to the humblest extra. He said every one of the men and women had seemed to have been instilled with enthusiasm. He praised Wilfred North, who directed the subject, and Mr. Richman, who so capably had taken the leading part.

Mr. Blackton held in his hand a letter he had received during the day from Theodore Roosevelt, in Canada, expressing the former President's regret that he could not be present. Then Mr. Blackton related one of the developments of his connection with the picture, and the telling was listened to with even added interest.

"I have lived in this country almost all my life," he said. "I was born in the old mother country. I have married an American girl. I have two American daughters and two American sons—one of the latter is 6 foot 2, and I may say here he is now attending a military school. When I realized the great importance of this propaganda and what it meant to the United States and realized also that I had never been naturalized I hurried down and took my oath of allegiance to this country. And I hope that through no act of mine will it ever be said that citizenship has in it anything of the hyphenated variety. (Applause.) I do hope and pray that this picture will crystallize the elements that will make for a nation-wide movement which will prevent the horrors of warfare ever being visited upon this country—which will make it impossible for war ever to come to this country."

Mr. Blackton extended his thanks to the many men in high official station and prominent in private life who had contributed so much of their knowledge and experience to the making of "The Battle Cry of Peace"—"who have given their advice so that this subject could go out to the American public as a proper picture," he continued. "Among the chiefest of these is my very dear friend Hudson Maxim. He is the man who put the Battle in 'The Battle Cry of Peace.' He is the man who started me on this job." Mr. Blackton left the stage, went to the box where Mr. Maxim was seated, and escorted the famous inventor to the front of the house.

Mr. Maxim was given a hearty greeting. "It is a noble thing for a man to die on the firing line in defense of his country and his home," said the speaker. "It is a far nobler thing for him and for his country to prepare against war so that he will have no need to die on the battle field. The quickfiring gun is the greatest life-saving element in the world. There are many men being influenced in the United States at the present time by good-intentioned persons who want to lessen our preparation against a just war. If these men could only see what would result to this country if their propaganda could be effective they would be undeceived."

Emelie Polini

STILL another star of the first magnitude on the speaking stage has turned to acting for the motion picture camera, the latest one to take up motion picture work being Miss Emelie Polini, who gained fame on both sides of the Atlantic in the leading role of "Hindle Wakes."

There are few persons who follow the English-speaking stage productions who do not vividly recall "Hindle Wakes," offered first in London by the famous Manchester Players, and later in New York by the same organization. So, the announcement that Miss Polini is soon to be seen in the motion picture play, "The Little Church Around the Corner," produced by the World Film Corporation, should prove of more than passing interest.

Emelie Polini.

Few plays have aroused more interest and comment than "Hindle Wakes" during its run in New York City. It was but natural that when Miss Polini left the Manchester Players to play opposite Holbrook Blinn at his Princess theater, she took with her a large following of enthusiastic theatergoers. That this same following will be deeply interested in her career as a motion picture actress seems most probable.

Already Miss Polini has decided that she prefers acting before the camera to the speaking stage. She believes that the photodrama affords even greater opportunities for true interpretation and has announced that hereafter she will devote her best attention to her newer art.

HOLBROOK BLINN IN THE "THREE-A-DAY."

Holbrook Blinn is said to have been the busiest man in filmdom for the last week for all during that time he has been "working three a day," day in and day out. His work has kept him so much on the jump that his directors have wondered at times just how the eminent star could remember which play he was working in.

In the first place Mr. Blinn has been finishing "The Family Cupboard," in which he was working with Frank Crane. Secondly, he was working in "A Butterfly on the Wheel" in which he and Miss Vivian Martin are to be starred. This is under the direction of Maurice Tourneur.

Besides this Mr. Blinn had to rehearse "Moloch," the play which opens at the New Amsterdam theater shortly. Outside of this Mr. Blinn had nothing to do.

Kleine-Edison Program

Many Important Features Will Be Released During October and November—Mrs. Fiske a Big Card.

FOR its October and November programs the Kleine-Edison feature service announces a series of big multiples well in keeping with the splendid reputations of both manufacturers and fairly illustrative of the present aims of the new service. October 6 marks the initial release for that month and the first of the Edison subjects to be handled through the Kleine offices. Needless to say, the Edison Company has been particularly anxious that its first release should be thoroughly representative of its future plans and ideals. With this in mind, Mrs. Fiske was engaged to portray her familiar role of Becky Sharp in Thackeray's immortal classic, "Vanity Fair."

Aside from the immense advertising value of both Mrs. Fiske's name and the well-known title of the novel, "Vanity Fair" will prove an especially attractive "buy" from an exhibitor's standpoint because of the elaborate campaign arranged for its exploitation. All forms of advertising and publicity material will be utilized. The paper display is unusually handsome, having been prepared by one of the best-known artists in New York. A wide variety of styles and sizes, all of it beautifully colored and given seven printings, is now ready, in addition to artistic portrait posters of Mrs. Fiske. Newspaper advertising, press stories, electrotypes, prepared advertisements for exhibitors, window cards and a host of other "publicity helps" will be at the disposal of exhibitors for preliminary advertising. Some idea of its pretentiousness may be obtained from the cast, which includes more than four hundred people. The grand ball given by Lady Richardson in Brussels the night preceding the battle of Waterloo and which is interrupted by the appearance of a mud-bespattered courier who staggers into the great ballroom with news of Napoleon's attack is a dramatic and spectacular bit of picture-making. "Vanity Fair" will undoubtedly eclipse all former Edison productions in point of public favor.

On October 13 "The Magic Skin" (Edison), a delightful romance, founded on the story of that name, will be released. Booklovers the world over are familiar with the drama, tragedy and mysticism of the quaint French romance and will exult in the announcement that it is to be seen in film. How the idealist, on his way to the river to commit suicide, stops at the antique shop where the dealer gives him the magic skin; how he uses that wonderful skin which grants him every wish and shrinks in proportion to the wish gratified, is a story as uncanny and weird as it is novel and interesting.

To portray the difficult role of the idealist and dreamer, Everett Butterfield, who is now playing the leading juvenile part in "The Last Laugh," at the Thirty-ninth Street theater, was engaged. Mr. Butterfield is also well known for his work in "Ready Money," "The Man of the Hour," "The Misleading Lady," and others. He has played more than seven hundred difficult parts on the American stage and is extraordinarily well suited in physique, nature and experience for the nervous, high-strung, temperamental idealist and dreamer. The leading feminine role will be handled by Mabel Trunelle.

On October 20 George Kleine's "The Green Cloak," featuring Irene Fenwick, will engage the attention of theaters handling the Kleine-Edison program. "The Green Cloak" is one of Owen Davis' best stories and affords Miss Fenwick an opportunity of which she was quick to avail herself, viz., to appear in the role of a real tragedienne. The story opens sensationally with a long, thin, nervous hand reaching into a pocket. From this start the story rapidly enters complications in which the dramatic verges strongly toward the tragic. In the role of the girl accused of murder, Miss Fenwick has given a magnificent performance which will, no doubt, add greatly to her fame as a screen artist of the higher kind. As usual, an all-star cast, including Richie Ling, presents the story.

The November program covers two Kleine features and one Edison. "The Politicians," that inimitable stage farce by Aaron Hoffman, has been filmed with the funniest of funny comedians, Bickel and Watson, in the title role. If these laugh-makers were funny in "The Fixer," they are doubly so in "The Politicians." It is a farce of many ludicrous situations, the central theme of the story pivoting on the adventure of two typical New York ward-healers who, by happy chance, are thrown into power in a small, conservative, stifly Republican New England village. From this situation many laughs are produced. "The Politicians" marks the second appearance in film of Bickel and Watson.

The offering for November 10 will be Edison's "The Purple Dawn," by Mary Rider. This is essentially a heart-interest story, containing many extraordinary views of the New York ghetto, featuring that popular favorite, Viola Dana. "The Purple Dawn" possesses many powerful scenes and plays close to the heartstrings from title to tailpiece. A young woman, adopted in her babyhood by rich foster-parents, grows up in luxury. Suddenly, one day, she is made aware of the fact that both her real parents are living. She goes to them, only to find them coarse and illiterate and devoid of her own fine sensibilities. The contrast between her former station and her present one is drawn with a masterly hand. The East Side dance hall, the poverty and misery of the slums and their effect on this delicately-reared creature make a story of ever-increasing interest. It is an earthy story, very human and very understandable.

"The Sentimental Lady," a Kleine-Edison production, featuring Irene Fenwick, is scheduled for release November 17. Owens Davis and Henry K. Webster are joint authors of "The Sentimental Lady," the theme of which is less dramatic but no less interesting than "The Green Cloak." The story has to do with the controlling interest of a great gas company. Miss Fenwick plays the familiar role of the wealthy orphan girl who holds the necessary balance of the stock and who is quite sentimental in matters of old-fashioned business honesty. Much of the action takes place at fashionable summer resorts and on a deserted island used only by stray fishermen. This subject fairly sparkles with tense moments and clever situations. "The Sentimental Lady" was Miss Fenwick's last picture, made prior to her road tour with "The Song of Songs."

The Kleine-Edison September program is meeting with unsurpassed success. George Kleine's "The Woman Next Door," release of September 1, is the subject of much praise on the part of exhibitors, many of whom have played to capacity business and are booking return dates. "The Money Master," Kleine release of September 8, threatens to smash booking records because of its well-known story and remarkable cast. This production features Frank Sheridan, Fania Marinoff, Paul McAllister, Anne Meredith, Sam Reed, Malcolm Duncan and Calvin Thomas, one of the most pretentious aggregations of stage stars ever engaged for a single feature. "The Fixer," Kleine release of September 15, featuring Bickel and Watson, bids fair to establish a new standard for comedies. Elaborate interiors, a Broadway cast which includes in addition to the comedians such well-known players as Nitz Edwards, Ben L. Taggart, Ruby Hoffman and John Nicholson, has made "The Fixer" one of the most costly of film negatives.

READING NEWSPAPERMAN JOINS PARAMOUNT.

Charles E. Moyer, formerly the dramatic and motion picture editor of the Reading Telegram and News-Times, has deserted the newspaper field for motion pictures, joining the Paramount Pictures Corporation as assistant to Tarleton Winchester.

Mr. Moyer brings to his new position a clear understanding of the needs of the smaller town newspapers. The publicity, advertising and sales departments of Paramount will continue to work as heretofore in the closest co-operation possible to the end that the best of the world's literature and drama may be brought within reach of the smallest town exhibitor and theatergoer.

CHANGES IN LASKY RELEASE DATES.

Circumstances have made it necessary to change the release dates of some of the early productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, released through Paramount Pictures Corporation. The productions and the dates of release until the end of the present quarter year are Lou-Tellegen in "The Explorer," September 20; Donald Brian in "The Voice in the Fog," September 27; Laura Hope Crews in "Blackbirds," October 11; Lasky all-star cast in "The Chorus Lady," October 18; Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Sin," October 21; Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," November 1, and Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West," produced by Cecil B. DeMille, November 22.

BIG PATHE CONTRACT AT SEATTLE.

The Pathe Seattle office has just closed a contract with the new million-dollar Pantages Theater in Seattle to run "Neal of the Navy" a full week for each episode. This theater is the first in the West to run a picture for a full week. The same office has also closed a contract with the Liberty Theater of Seattle to run the Gold Rooster plays on a yearly contract running into large figures. Manager Quimby writes that "The Galloper" and "Via Wireless" are the greatest features ever released in his territory.

Associated Program Ready

Several Interesting Pictures Included in First Week's Releases—A Five-Part Feature.

WITH a regular program of twelve reels a week and extended features, to be known as Grand Prix Photoplays, for special attractions, the Associated Film Sales Corporation is now in the market and ready to supply exhibitors. The new corporation is well supplied with Associated exchanges covering the more important sections of the country, and, judging from the pictures selected for the week of September 13th, there is a fair supply of interesting photoplay material awaiting distribution.

At a special showing, attended by a representative of The Moving Picture World, the complete first week's program was run, in addition to a five-part drama, "Her Atonement," in which Lillian Wiggins is the featured player. Of the popular appeal of this production there can be no question. It is in the main western melodrama with a wealth of convincing atmosphere and a deal of excitement in depicting the life of the gamblers and cowboys that frequent the frontier saloon.

The story is melodrama with a moral lesson at the end; for after the audience has seen the author's characters at their worst, and some of them are pretty bad, the possibility of reformation and atonement for past misdeeds is strongly emphasized. Though somewhat artificial in several of the convenient turns given the plot, the picture has so much that is convincing in environment and characterization that one may overlook the few scenes which appear forced rather than natural. Miss Wiggins gives a telling performance as the girl that lives a hardening life and in the end makes ample atonement by sacrificing her own interests for those of her friends.

Coming to the regular releases we find an assortment of films that should appeal to the exhibitor looking for an evenly balanced program containing a fair division of drama and comedy. There are four two-reel dramas, one two-reel comedy and two single-reel comedies. Artistically as well as numerically, the first week's offering seems to indicate that the Associated Service is strongest in its dramatic department. "Love and Installments" and "Curing Bill," the single-reel comedies, are slapstick affairs of small moment and "Fast and Furious," the double-reel comedy, although rather better than its briefer program companions, is not a picture of remarkable quality. None the less, it contains a burlesque ring encounter that is certain to entertain an audience. Rube Miller, who plays the lead in "Fast and Furious," is bound to be a favorite comedian in the productions of this concern.

For dramatic pictures, General Manager Arthur Bard has assembled a likely company of players and competent directors. In "The Price She Paid," Fritzi Brunette gives a performance of considerable feeling; Charles K. French and Lucille Young are seen to distinct advantage in "For His Wife's Sake"; Lillian Wiggins has a congenial role in "A Shattered Romance" and Emory Johnson is the most prominent of the well selected cast that presents "His Masterpiece." The tone of these two-reel productions is generally melodramatic, but wholesome, and in each instance there is an exciting story to tell. All of the pictures have plenty of action and in almost every instance reveal painstaking direction.

OHIO STATE LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Cleveland will entertain several hundred Ohio motion picture theater managers and owners October 19 and 20, on occasion of the state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Local members of the organization are proceeding with arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors and the accomplishment of some important business.

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, president of the national organization, of which the Cleveland league is a part, was in the city Friday conferring with Ben J. Sawyer, president of the Cleveland local, and other prominent exhibitors. He voiced the opinion that Ohio exhibitors should take advantage of the present opportunity to push an active campaign against legislation injurious to the business. He suggested that the activities of the Ohio league be broadened and kept constantly alive and that it be the aim of the coming convention to promote such organization.

HARRY FISHER WITH MOROSCO.

Harry Fisher, the well known juvenile lead, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and is now at work at the Los Angeles studio in support of Blanche Ring in a screen version of her greatest stage success, "The Yankee Girl."

Essanay Making Poe's "Raven"

Director Brabin, Henry Walthal and Company of Players Spend Week in New York Getting Important Scenes.

WHAT Essanay believes will be one of its greatest productions is now in the process of making in the form of a six-part subject based on Edgar Allan Poe's poem, "The Raven." In order to procure scenes taking in some of the relics of the famous poet, a company of Essanay players, including Henry Walthal, and under the direction of Director Charles Brabin, spent the week of September 11 in New York. Several scenes were taken in and about the old Poe cottage at Fordham, in the Bronx, and of the bust of Poe now in the Players' Club, New York City. The photograph of the bust will be dissolved into the face of Walthal, who bears a striking resemblance to Poe. It is also planned to take scenes in Baltimore, where Poe died.

The play was written by George Hazelton and put into scenario form by Charles J. Brabin. It involves the tragic life and death of Poe and will depict him in all his various moods. The plot contains a beautiful love romance—Poe's great love for his invalid wife and his heartbreaking mourning for the lost Lenore. Mr. Walthal is exceptionally fitted for portraying these scenes, having all the emotionalism and vivid imagination of Poe himself. His temperament naturally attracted him to Poe's works and he has made an exhaustive study of all his writings. He has read and reread them, until he is steeped in Poe's every mood and thought.

Mr. Walthal and the company returned to Chicago on September 11, but Mr. Brabin remained in New York for several days working with Mr. Hazleton on the scenario.

The subject is scheduled for a November release on the V-L-S-E program.

"Busy Izzy" in Pictures

THERE isn't anybody from a newsboy up in any town boasting more than a thousand inhabitants west of Pittsburgh who doesn't know George Sidney, and who hasn't known him for a good many years. "De Guy what made Izzy Busy," they call him. And that is because George Sidney created the famous role of "Busy Izzy" in the comedy of that name, which has visited every town in the West during the week that every county and every State is having its annual "fair" since comedy ever was—almost. In fact, George Sidney is just about the creator of the Jewish comedian type on the stage. With "Busy Izzy" and his funny pranks, the comedian established the popularity of the Jewish comedian in all of the cities in the United States, and,since the day that "Busy Izzy" first made his appearance, the "Busy Izzies" of comedy, burlesque and vaudeville stage have fairly out-Charley Chaplined Charley Chaplin.

George Sidney.

George Sidney in his famous role has just completed a motion picture version of "Busy Izzy" for the Gaumont Company, which will be released through the Mutual Program. This picture will serve not only to introduce Sidney to the Mutual screen, but will introduce a brand new form of picture from the over-growing studio of the enterprising Gaumont Company. It will be the first comedy of a series of "All-Star" comedies in two reels which it is the purpose of the company to release in which famous comedy stars will be supported by famous comedy stars in making photo-comedies par excellence.

George Sidney will be remembered by New Yorkers who have forgotten the days when "Busy Izzy" was in its heydey, by his excellent portrait of the Jewish manager of the theatrical company which went stranded, in the play in which Douglas Fairbanks and Patricia Collinge were so popular last winter, "The Show Shop." In the early days, before he went into business for himself as "Busy Izzy" he was for years one of Ward and Vokes' leading comedians and played in all of the leading comedies which that company produced.

Tracing Film Thieves

Mutual Causes Further Arrests and Recovers Large Quantities of Film.

DEVELOPMENTS are multiplying in the fight being waged by the Mutual Film Corporation against film pirates and thieves. The latest outcome was reported on Wednesday, wherein representatives of two small New York City exchanges voluntarily returned to the Mutual through an attorney six thousand feet of film, which was accepted without promise of immunity. The attorney said his principals held some sort of a receipt from a man in Seattle, but there has been as yet no trace found of the Seattleite. It is said the facts associated with the transaction are now within the knowledge of District Attorney Perkins.

Jacob Schonbrun, who was two weeks ago dismissed from his position as manager of the Mutual's Newark (N. J.) exchange and for whom there had been a warrant out for five days, has been arrested in Brooklyn and held in bonds of $7,500 pending extradition proceedings. Schonbrun was charged by Arthur F. Beck, manager of the Mutual's Twenty-third street branch in New York, with the larceny of 149,000 feet of film. The film has been recovered, 75,000 feet of it now being in the Mutual's New York offices and the remainder in the custody of the Newark police. Schonbrun's arrest followed admissions made by Samuel Glauber, formerly a clerk in the Mutual Exchange, who was arrested in Newark charged with larceny. He was held for the grand jury in the sum of $3,000.

The first intimation received by the Mutual that things were seriously wrong was the discovery by Mr. Beck following his assuming charge of the Twenty-third street branch that there was a shortage of a quarter of a million feet of film. Investigation developed the fact that film had been taken from exchanges or an exchange in the vicinity of New York at the rate of nine to fifteen reels a day. Detectives were engaged, some employees were dismissed and replaced and a checking system instituted.

In the search for outlaw film the Newark detectives examined three rooming houses that had been rented, but were unable to locate anything. Mr. Beck, who accompanied them, remarked that there might be no film there, but he was sure he could smell it. It was a real scent, and he located the booty.

With the 6,000 feet returned in New York and the 149,000 feet recovered, the Mutual now has a total of 155,000 feet. The search still continues, and will be prosecuted in every territory in which there is reason to believe any of the property of the company has been unlawfully removed. It is alleged that the film illegally taken from the vaults of the company has been rented to smaller houses and in direct competition with the exchanges.

The Mutual has issued a circular letter to every exhibitor in the territory surrounding New York City asking cooperation in the effort to stop illegal practices. It is said that practically every subject for which there has been any particular demand has been duplicated.

It has been discovered in the course of the current investigation that old film that had been sold to junk men to be disposed of to refineries had been patched up and again put on the market in competition with Mutual exchanges. The company is considering now a process that will destroy the emulsion on wornout film and effectively stop this particular kind of leak. It has also been learned that some of the stolen film has been sent abroad after the alteration of titles and substitution of false casts. The Mutual officials say they have no reason to believe other manufacturers have escaped the depredations of which they are complaining and hope they will be given full co-operation by their fellow-producers.

KALEM PICTURES PLEASE HOOSIER WOMEN.

Score one for the management of the Arc theater, of Delphi, Indiana! So high does that photoplay house rank in the esteem of the people of that city, that when Mrs. Henry R. Wilson, leader of local society, decided to entertain her friends at a motion picture performance she rented the Arc theater for the afternoon.

Being a person of prominence, Mrs. Wilson is naturally an object of interest to the Delphites. As a consequence, her special performance was accorded generous space in the local papers. That this publicity has had a beneficial effect upon subsequent receipts of the Arc theater is attested by Mrs. Belle B. Gardner, secretary and treasurer, in a letter which she wrote to the Kalem Company the other day. It might be mentioned that the picture shown to Mrs. Wilson's guests was Kalem's three-act modern drama, "Prejudice." Mrs. Gardner writes:

> The inclosed clipping and program speak for themselves. The picture shown was "Prejudice," and one of the best ever seen in this theater. The ladies who were entertained enjoyed it so greatly that they sent the members of their families to see it that evening and we did a big business as the result.
> We also show a Kalem three-act subject every alternate Wednesday, and they surely are fine. We find the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series increasing in popularity, while "Ham" and "Bud" draw big houses every Thursday. Keep up the good work. You are putting out pictures that help exhibitors get the crowds.
> Incidentally, the function of which I have spoken might contain a suggestion for exhibitors all over the country. Why not acquaint them with it? It was a big thing for us.

The program to which Mrs. Gardner refers is an attractive four-page affair, printed on a fine white sunburst stock and 4¾ by 6 inches in size. The clipping contains the story of the event. Because of its length, only a part of it can be given here:

> In honor of a number of out-of-town guests who visited at the Wilson home this week, Mrs. Henry B. Wilson entertained a number of friends at the Arc theater on Wednesday afternoon. The entertainment consisted of four reels of motion pictures, interspersed with songs by Miss Madge Dritt, of Logansport, accompanied by Miss Emma Lathrope, at the piano, and Miss Josephine MacLucas, violinist. During the serving of refreshments, Misses MacLucas and Lathrope gave a short program.
> The pictures for the afternoon were especially fine. The first was a three-reel drama by Kalem Company, entitled "Prejudice," a clean, modern story, well acted. The picture is brim full of both humor and pathos and one which leaves a lasting impression because of the moral it contains. The all-important art of "playing the pictures" is understood by no one better than by Mrs. Gardner and her music for "Prejudice" was especially good.

That the Arc theater was selected by Mrs. Wilson is an indication that that house is regarded as the best in Delphi. It is another striking demonstration that intelligent management invariably pays. We venture the opinion that the Arc is a power in its community.

A FOUR-PART V-L-S-E PRODUCTION.

The V-L-S-E, Inc., Seattle branch office has four married employees, and each of them has one child. Tom North, the branch manager, has discovered that the children bear names the initials of which form V-L-S-E. For instance, Mr. Jones, of the projection department, has a little girl named Violet; Mr. McRae, of the shipping department, has a little boy named Louis; Mr. Hanson, of the booking department, has a little girl named Sarah, and Mrs. Goodrich, of the stenographic department, has a little boy named Edward—thus forming the name of the company, V-L-S-E. The above picture represents the four children standing on the shipping cases of the firm whose initials they represent. In looking the children over very carefully we can truthfully say they are in as healthy a condition as the V-L-S-E. Inc., itself.

The Alphabetical Kids, Holding Down the Family Jobs.

Pierce vs. Ohio Censors

Bosworth Representative Has Run in with Board at Columbus on "Hypocrites."

NUMBERLESS as have been the requests from exhibitors and public in the State of Ohio for a view of the Bosworth, Inc., masterpiece, "Hypocrites," as yet only the dramatic critics of the newspapers of Columbus, together with a very select few of the best people in the town, have had that privilege because the Censor Board having refused—the film people are inclined to believe through spite—to pass the picture, no opportunity offers.

This situation has been accentuated by the renewed refusal on the part of the Censor Board to pass the picture after Carl H. Pierce, using every effort to get the censors to see the film in the light of every other state in the Union, had presented the film for review for the third time.

The film was rejected on Tuesday last. Mr. Pierce protested. It was reviewed again, but all to no avail. The board then issued a certificate of rejection over the signature of Charles G. Williams, chairman, stating that the film is harmful.

Mr. Pierce, who had been joined on Friday by James Steele, president of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati and Chicago, took the case to the next higher authority, the Ohio Industrial Commission, but here again they met not only with a refusal not only to pass the film, but even to look at it.

The introduction to the commission having been made by Mr. Harmon, general manager of the Neil House, one of Columbus' most respected citizens, during which Mr. Harmon took occasion to express the hope that Wallace D. Yaple, chairman of the commission, would use his efforts to pass the film because it was a fit film to pass. Mr. Yaple replied that he did not have time to look at it because he was going fishing, and furthermore he felt that if they made an exception in the case of "Hypocrites" by allowing an appeal, they would be overrun by other appeals, and he stated that the board was too busy to consider such a situation. He offered, and did, however, introduce his visitors to George L. Stoughton, who under the Ohio statute is secretary of the Censor Board. Mr. Stoughton refused to look at the film; said he would use his best endeavors with Mrs. Miller to get a retraction, and later in the day reported that Mrs. Miller was obdurate. "Would you not like to look at the film yourself?" asked Mr. Steele. "No, I'm too busy to take the time," declared Mr. Stoughton. "Besides the Censors are appointed to look after the film and we like to have them attend to that business and not bother us."

An opportunity for an appeal in that direction having been denied them, Mr. Steele and Mr. Pierce consulted Henry Gumble, one of Columbus' most successful attorneys, to ascertain the best way to proceed in the making of an appeal to the courts. Meanwhile, Mr. Steele having found it imperative to return to Pittsburgh, Mr. Pierce has engaged the Majestic Theatre, one of Columbus' best motion picture theaters, for Saturday morning next. A vested choir has been engaged from Trinity Church, in Columbus. The old Trinity organist and a specially selected pianist has also been procured, and it is proposed to give a private showing to a few of the best residents of Columbus, to obtain their views on the picture.

"If you feel about "Hypocrites" as the fifty odd thousand people feel whom I have seen at the theaters where "Hypocrites" has already been shown," said Mr. Pierce, "I believe that they will agree with such women as Mrs. E. M. Platt, president of the St. Joe (Mo.) Federation of Women's Clubs, who wrote us: 'The picture is purity itself. The allegory is deeply religious, beautifully conceived, beautifully set, and it touches many phases of life, all tending to inspire the beholder with a greater love and reverence for the truth,' and Colonel Alice V. Herron of the Volunteers of America, who wrote: 'I truly and sincerely hope that every man, woman and child will witness this wonderful, inspiring photoplay, "Hypocrites."'"

When asked what plans he had for the future, Mr. Pierce replied that these would be made public shortly. He added that they were thorough and included the canvassing of the largest cities and the best people of Ohio.

"UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES" MUCH IMPROVED.

The Universal feature, "Under Southern Skies," which has recently been reviewed in these columns, has been rearranged and re-edited by expert hands. In consequence it is much improved, the dramatic sequence of the scenes has gained considerably and it is much easier to follow the development of the story. This is the feature which has Miss Mary Fuller for its star, the part being especially suitable to this popular actress.

W. C. Fields

W. C. FIELDS, world-famed star of vaudeville, now a star feature in Ziegfeld's "Follies," New York, will be featured in another single comedy, "The Pool Sharks," to be released on the Mutual's program September 19. This comedy is being filmed by the Gaumont Company and will be the first of the star comedy releases of that company.

As Mr. Fields' contract calls for his exclusive service, it is only through the courtesy of Florenz Ziegfeld that the Mutual Corporation is enabled to present this star feature on its regular program.

W. C. Fields.

Mr. Fields was born in Philadelphia in 1880 and made his first appearance in vaudeville there when he was sixteen years old. He continued in vaudeville with a single exception until his present engagement with the "Follies." Ten years ago, in 1905-1906, he broke away from vaudeville and was featured with McIntyre and Heath in the original production of "The Ham Tree," under the management of Klaw & Erlanger. During this engagement he became a favorite with theatergoers all over the country.

Mr. Fields' popularity is not confined to the United States alone. He is well known on the Continent, having performed in all the principal vaudeville houses from Naples to Petrograd, and has given command performances before most of the crowned heads of Europe. He has also toured India, Austria and Australia.

Mr. Fields will accompany the "Follies" when the company starts for its annual tour of the Pacific coast next month.

SING SING INMATE WINS UNIVERSAL PRIZE.

A prize of $50, offered by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the best name for a picture which was recently shown at Sing Sing under the title, "A Photoplay Without a Name," has been awarded to Oscar Cartaya, an inmate of the prison. The play in question was released on March 5, last, and has had a wide showing, bringing replies by the thousands and from points as far distant as Australia. When the replies were finally passed upon it was found that Oscar Cartaya had offered the best title. Accordingly a check for $50 was made out to him and Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, took it to Sing Sing where it was presented to Mr. Cartaya. After thanking the Warden and Mr. Brandt, Cartaya donated $15 of the sum to the Mutual Welfare League, an organization among the inmates started by Warden Osborne, that has done much good. "Folly's Crucible" was the winning title.

Picture Problems

By Horace G. Plimpton.

THE following is written in no spirit of criticism. With the extremely rapid growth of the film business, problems have been created differing from any that previously existed. The study of facts can surely do no harm to anyone. I have been trying to bring together the facts gained by an experience of over six years very hard work over stories, directors, actors, camera men—and so on down the line—to see what bearing they might have on the problems of today. Most prominent in the changes of this time is the waning power of those who first produced film stories in a serious way, and, who, by reason of priority and control, were apparently in an unassailable position. That their fortresses have been broken down and their territory invaded is a fact apparent to the most casual observer. This, then, is our first subject:

Unscientific Distribution.

Nature has her laws for the breaking of which she exacts a severe penalty. The child soon learns that fire burns and sharp edges cut. As he grows older he discovers other laws, more complex but not less exacting. And every transgressor learns—sometimes too late—that the punishment for infraction is certain. So commerce has its laws as well. The seller of goods finds that

1st. His goods must sell on merit,
2d. He must make a friend of his customer,
3d. He must give his customer what he wants.

All these laws were broken in the distribution of film in 1909 and 1910. The manufacturer or producer of motion picture film has not, except in rare cases, dealt directly with the exhibitor. It was probably impracticable that he should do so. A varied program demanded calling upon more than one manufacturer and this led to the establishment of the jobber or "exchange." So far so good. But the exchange found that it was not going to have very much to say about the matter or rather that its action could not be specific, but must be general. Leaving aside the exaction of a fee to be collected from each theater showing films made by any one of a group of manufacturers—a subject upon which I do not propose to touch—we come to the first infraction of the laws.

The Standing Order.

X, Y, Z are film manufacturers. They have arranged to issue a subject, we will say, on each Tuesday and Saturday. They go to the exchanges through the country and ask them to place orders in advance, sight unseen, for the subjects. A certain number do so. Now, then, orders hold or are cancelled without any regard whatever to the merits of any particular subject. The Tuesday subject may be ever so good—it sells no more than the Saturday one, which may be correspondingly bad. Again the exchange has no knowledge upon which to base a program for one of its customers, nor has the latter any opportunity of selection. The "first run" customer on Tuesday takes the output for that day. They may be all comedies or all tragedies—his patrons have to sit through them and maybe blame him when he is helpless. Thus the goods did not sell on merit. There was no encouragement to spend any special money—or pains—on any particular subject except for the indirect benefit it might have on the general output.

The Customer.

Of course the "ultimate consumer," with films as with anything else, is the great public. But the public is hard to reach. In only rare instances has it been possible to issue a film in such a way that public expression was reflected as it is with a new play. Ordinarily the profit in the business depends upon making a considerable number of prints of a new subject and having them shown at a great number of places. The manufacturer's profit depends upon the number of prints of which he disposes, that of the exchange upon constant circulation and that of the exhibitor upon filling his house. Thus we may, in dealing with film subjects, consider the exhibitor as the customer or "ultimate consumer." Now the friendship of the exhibitor was not gained. Our second rule of commerce was broken from the start and consistently. Too much dependence was placed upon the then limited source of supply, and, with the absorption of the majority of the exchanges by a large company, a bad matter became worse. This is the country of monopolies, but I lay it down as a general rule that the successful monopolies are those that have depended, not upon the apparent impossibility of competition, but upon making friends of their customers. I am fond of quoting, in this connection, the telephone company operating in New York and its vicinity. Never was there a more complete monopoly, but they have hundreds of thousands of satisfied customers. Efficient service, uniform courtesy, giving a little more for the money from time to time, liberal advertising—all these, which make up constructive work, have brought them to such a point that a competitive telephone company in New York can hardly be regarded seriously.

It has not been so in the other case. The work has not been constructive. Suppose Mr. Smith wanted to open a theater in a good location and with ample capital. He went to a prominent exchange and told them he wanted the best and was willing to pay for it. But he was informed "We cannot take on a new first run customer at present. To do so would involve buying more prints and we should not know what to do with them after you had used them." Now, there may be a thousand good reasons for this position, but I insist that it is not good business. I should say the exchange ought to take that customer and devote its energies to finding others to keep the films in circulation. What happened?

The Breaking of the Barrier.

Now our third rule of commerce was broken. The customer, real or prospective, was not given what he wanted. So he went elsewhere. Others who were dissatisfied, rightly or wrongly, joined him. A mighty impetus was given to competition in producing and distributing. The whip of patent control was held over the heads of such producers, but it never descended with any force. Finally the decisive break came. A prominent theater in New York, which had for years used only films made by a certain group of manufacturers, exhibited one produced by an outside company. Despite all threats the offending film was continued and the exclusive service received its death blow. Today the theater gets its films where it will. The inevitable process of selection has been set up, haltingly and incomplete as yet, but working to its logical end. And those who make friends instead of enemies of their customers are going to profit by it.

A TRAVELING PICTURE SHOW IN THE CATSKILLS.

Far surpassing the dancing bear and the hurdygurdy as first aid to the harrassed hotel keeper is the Pathescope with its handy store of non-inflammable films. The combination—for showing in the big hotel dining room of an evening—has been making a most decided hit in the southern Catskills this past summer. Many of the hotels are often five or six miles from a regular picture show and it takes a mighty big automobile to get the "bunch" there and back, and the ride costs accordingly. But S. H. Anderson, of the Pathescope Company, easily solved the difficulty from his headquarters at the Glenbrook Hotel at Shandaken in Ulster County, by taking his apparatus from this hotel to that as the proprietors desired and giving shows in the house. These were advertised by posters put up in the village post office and on the trees along the road, and the village folk and the summer cottagers would come in at from fifteen to twenty cents a seat.

The primary object was to advertise the parlor motion picture machine to patrons of the big hotels. The whole apparatus stood in full view of all while the lights were on—the machine, its storage battery and the rolls of film. All could see how easily it was manipulated and those who could afford one for home use or were interested in school work would often come up and ask questions about it. The program was made up of European Pathe films, and, though they were excellent, one felt the desirability of more American-made pictures. Mr. Anderson remarked on the program difficulty to a World man who happened to be rusticating at the Glenbrook and we quite agreed that American-made films would have been even more popular than the French and Spanish ones he had to choose from.

PICTURES UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

The company of Quality Players, headed by Miss Marguerite Snow, has returned from Calexico, Cal., where they have been taking scenes for Francis X. Bushman's story, "A Corner in Cotton." The suffering the company withstood because of the heat came near putting the picture on the shelf for several weeks.

WORLD FILM PHOTOGRAPHY.

Those who understand these things, and there are many in the community, are admiring the photography of the World Films, "The Ivory Snuff Box" and "Trilby." Some very novel light effects are seen in both of these pictures—notably the concentration of the light on the head of Holbrook Blinn in the first named release, where Richard Duval is being tortured by the fiendish Dr. Hartmann. The double exposures of "The Impostor" have also caused much favorable comment.

A Bigger House---How to Finance It

Suggestions for the Solution of a Problem That Must Confront Every Successful Exhibitor.

By Samuel M. Field, Secretary Mutual Film Corporation.

ARE you running a 500-seat house in a 1,000-seat territory? A lot of motion picture exhibitors are guilty of just that mistake. You may wonder how it would be possible for you to get a bigger house. There is a way. If you have succeeded in a small way, there is a way to do it big. The success of today does not insure success for tomorrow unless you keep step with tomorrow.

You are familiar with the experience of business men in other lines. You have seen the man with the little cigar stand or the little restaurant, long contented with what he called a "steady business," finally put out of business by some enterprising chap who dashed in with a shop that was really designed to serve the needs of the community. The point is that the stranger, being a stranger, came in and saw things with an eye unclouded by familiarity with conditions. He saw the possibilities all fresh and new, not like the man who had walked down the street every morning for years and opened up his little shop to handle every day's business in just the same old way. The same thing is happening in the motion picture business every day.

This motion picture business is a rapid-fire business. You have got to grab off the business right as opportunity offers. Every day is a new deal, with new possibilities fresh every morning. Arthur Brisbane, the great New York editor, once said that the newspaper man was like a hen, "because he has to lay a perfectly new egg every day."

That is to a considerable degree true of the motion picture exhibitor. You have to stay fresh and young in the game. It means keeping alive. Now, no amount of push and effort and advertising and publicity and fine pictures are going to help your business if you haven't the business capacity to handle it. In the exhibition business it means having a show worth seeing and enough seats to handle the people when they want to see it.

Patrons are quick to learn and pay attention to the capacity of a house. How often do they say as they get to coffee at the family dinner table, "There's a swell picture at the Empress tonight." And then somebody breaks in with, "Yes, but we'll have to stand up outside until the ten o'clock show." That means that the Empress will lose its business to some other house and probably it also means that somebody with an eye to the main chance will build and give the Empress a hot line of competition right across the street.

Now, as I said in the beginning, there is no reason why an exhibitor confronted with these conditions cannot have a bigger, better theater and take his rightful share of the business that he has built. It is of his creation and it is up to him to build the machinery to take care of it and take in the profits at the box office.

We will take up the case of Bill Jones—which isn't his name at all—who operates a motion picture house with a great deal of success in a certain midwestern city. Bill Jones had a lease on a house with 450 seats. He was doing pretty good business and, as the word went, "didn't have to worry none." But Bill got uneasy. He heard rumors that this fellow and that was talking about putting a big house in the district to make a big splash and go out after all the business. This worried Bill considerably, because he knew conditions well enough to realize that a little competition could do him a lot of harm. He felt his program was all right and he knew he could push his advertising and publicity stunts and get more business, but in his little house he could not handle much more. One day a bright light broke in on him. "Why not build that big new house myself." Of course he hesitated some over that. He had been doing fairly well, but he hadn't accumulated enough money to finance a big house at all. How was he to do it. He felt sure he could handle it if he only had it. The neighborhood bank occupied his attention for a while. The bank had money. Money was what he needed. He knew that other business men borrowed money on their business. One day he got bold enough to approach the head of the bank—one of the regular patrons of Bill's theater by the way.

"I've been doing pretty well, so far," he explained. "But I see a chance to do better with a better house. And if I don't do it pretty soon somebody is going to beat me to it. I was wondering if there was any way you could help me get a better house, one that I could handle the business in? I don't exactly like to go in debt, but I'm pretty sure I can make it pay out."

The banker, with considerable money that was "willing to work" on his hands, saw opportunity. He reflected that in the last few years he had always noticed a pretty fair run of business at Bill Jones' theater, and recalled that he had often wondered just how strong this motion picture business was. Also he knew from his close personal knowledge of the bank's affairs that Bill Jones had a modest but healthy account. He encouraged the motion picture man to bring his books. The showing that was made there resulted in the bank's management of a deal that gave Bill Jones his new house, the Empire, three months later.

The Empire is a regular theater, and it seats 1,200 people. Bill Jones is doing business there with a wide smile and a wonderful consumption of ticket rolls. The formula is very simple. There is nothing hard to understand about getting credit. The bank financed the deal and took Bill Jones' paper because he had demonstrated his ability to run a picture house and make a profit. He had done it with a small house. His business demanded expansion. The bank came in for its normal function of financing business expansion. The bank stood no chance to lose. In the first place, it knew Bill Jones for a careful, successful exhibitor. His books and his history proved the worth of the business. It was a certainty he would pay out. But, failing that, he had convinced the banker that the business was there. This being true, since the bank held mortgages on the new house as security, it was another certainty that if Bill Jones failed to deliver, somebody would be found who could deliver with that property—since it was established that there was an actual demand for that theater and its service. That gave Bill Jones his opportunity. Now he has a big paying house, a long term lease on the site and is rapidly acquiring ownershpi of the building.

There are a dozen ways such situations as his may be worked out. Often an exhibitor looking around for room to grow into can find a real estate owner with idle property eager to improve it with a chance of increased earnings. As, for instance, in a case I know of where an exhibitor with just enough money to pay a year's rent got a house built for him and put up the rent in advance by way of encouraging the owner. In another case an exhibitor leased the bare ground for a long term, borrowed money on his lease and put up a theater. Another exhibitor had enough money to buy the ground he needed. By loans on his ground and the new building he was able to borrow enough to put it up. In yet another case an exhibitor was given a deed to the land by the owner. The exhibitor mortgaged the land for the cost of the theater building. Then he deeded the land back to the owner, subject, of course, to the mortgage. Then the owner of the land gave a bond for the deed subject to payment of the price of the land and the cost.

Really it all goes back to the question of whether or not the exhibitor has demonstrated his ability to conduct a show properly and to make it pay a profit. If he has done that, he can get more credit, I believe, than a man doing the same volume of business in any other line. The country is full of money looking for a place to work. This is one of the results of the war. The motion picture business is the only big important thing that has not suffered through war and trade conditions. Other lines of trade and industry have been halted, or at least delayed, in the natural process of expansion, and these lines have not absorbed the available capital.

The demand upon bankers for loans have therefore been much lighter than normal. There is more money to be had, and interest rates are low. Money is cheaper. Also there is a very general recognition of the past successes of the motion picture business and its future prospects. People generally have the impression, a pretty well grounded one, too, that there is money in motion pictures. The whole situation is one that makes conditions ideal for the already successful exhibitor who wants to expand his business to keep pace with the growing demands of his patronage.

Besides some of the ways that have been pointed out for expansion the exhibitor should be alert to other possibilities. For example, it may be possible for you to lease the biggest "legit" theater in your district and put in pictures. Don't ever get the idea that there is anything too big for motion pictures. Even if you did start with one of the old time "store shows," remember that the business has grown up. It is man size now and one of the very biggest businesses in the country.

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

THE ACME THEATER, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A Most Cosmopolitan Photoplay House—Entertains Large Motley Crowds Each Day—Doing Excellent Business.

SAN FRANCISCO is known all over the world as one of the most cosmopolitan cities to be found anywhere. To the average visitor, one of the charms first noticed is the wonderful array of races to be found here, the many foreign districts, the restaurants just a little different from those in other cities and a foreign atmosphere suggestive of a dozen different countries. Less than seventy years ago the city was but a drowsy Spanish hamlet, to spring suddenly into life with the coming of the gold hunters. Following this came an era of great wealth, the development of a great commerce, and finally a rebuilding following the disaster of 1906. Isolated throughout this varied history from the home lands of its diverse peoples and compelled to work out its own social standards, the city has evolved an individuality and a versatility peculiarly its own.

Down in the section of the city just beyond the Stockton street tunnel is the Acme theater, conducted by I. L. Marks & Son, and the letterheads used by the firm proudly proclaim the fact that this house is the most cosmopolitan theater in the world. It is just beyond Chinatown, and not quite in Little Italy, with the French section on one side, the Spanish quarter just around the corner, with Nob Hill, the home of millionaire merchants, but a few steps away. The theater itself is not a wonderfully remarkable one, being of simple, refined design, with a seating capacity of about three hundred. Music is furnished by an orchestrion and a player piano and a wide range of pieces is kept on hand to satisfy visitors from many lands.

The operating room is equipped with a Power's Cameragraph, No. 6A, and this end of the business is ably handled by H. F. Ericsson, who was operator there before Marks & Son took possession of the house, five years ago. A year ago the theater was remodeled and a small balcony put in, enabling the operator to reach his room without the use of a ladder. The balcony is not used, except on rare occasions. Since taking over this house, the proprietors have faced much competition, a number of large houses having been erected in the neighborhood, but the theater is patronized by the same people, week after week.

A more motley crowd than visits this theater in the evening would be difficult to conceive. Chinese, Japanese, French, Italians, Filipinos, Hindus and Spanish form a large part of the audience, but they are very orderly. Occasionally parties from Nob Hill visit the place to study the different races and to see pictures out of the ordinary. The best business is in the fall, when the salmon packets have returned to San Francisco from Alaska, filled with foreign workers well supplied with ready money.

Patrons of this house demand pictures full of life, and expect that the posters on the outside will be of the same class. If the posters shown do not suggest a lively picture, the attendance is apt to be light. The manner in which these are regarded may be judged from the utterance of a Chinese patron of long standing, who, after a long inspection of the advertising matter on the outside, said to Mr. Marks, "Wassa malla, no kille today?" The Chinese attend the theater in numbers and are very satisfactory customers, especially the Chinese women, who throng the house on afternoons. The admission price is five cents.

Ralph Marks, junior member of the firm, is well known in Coast exhibiting circles, having for a long time been secretary of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, and for a time secretary of the state organization. He is also secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco and was one of its founders.

COLONIAL THEATER, MONTREAL, CANADA.

One of Montreal's Pretty Picture Houses—Opened Two Years Ago—Herbert G. Teal, Manager.

ONE of the finest little photoplay houses in Montreal is the Colonial, on St. Catherine street, west of Victoria. It is a handsome, cosy and clean house, and caters to a fashionable clientele. The Colonial is located in the very center of the shopping district and has played to good receipts ever since its opening, a trifle more than two years ago. The building is three stories high and presents a neat and attractive exterior. The upper stories are of red sandstone with dark green trimmings. Fire-escapes face upon the street, but these by no means mar the beauty of the exterior; they have been cleverly fashioned and disposed so as to appear like balconies. The entrance to the lobby is wide and ample, and the top and sides are of terra cotta, serving to make a neat and striking effect. Two electric signs blaze forth the theater's name, and two powerful arc lamps further aid in brightening the front at night. The display of paper is in keeping with the remainder of the theater—neat and inviting.

Herbert G. Teal.

The floor of the lobby is of marble tile, the lower parts of the walls bing likewise marble-lined. Near the ceiling, which is dome-shaped, and immediately above the cornice, pastels have been placed, running around the three walls. Admission to the orchestra seats is obtained through two doors; the balcony can be gained by a flight of stairs opening into the lobby. The auditorium is lofty and spacious, and has seats to the number of six hundred and forty. Not a single post mars the view of the screen, since the balcony is supported by the cantilever system. Loges are disposed at the edge of the balcony. Singers' platforms, with pillars supporting a dome on each in the shape of a pavilion are located on each side of the screen. The general color scheme may be defined as dark green with trimmings and tracings in gold. The ceiling's color gives a faint suggestion of the sky.

A steady and clear picture is projected on a plaster screen by two Power's 6A machines. The projection room is large, well ventilated, and the portholes are wide and fitted with automatic shutters. Musical accompaniment is given the pictures by a piano. The prices charged for admission are ten and fifteen cents, and a quarter is the rate for box seats.

The manager of this handsome and popular house is Herbert G. Teal. Mr. Teal is young, energetic and has had but little experience in the show game; yet in his present position he is meeting with success. He is an Englishman by birth and has spent several years in western Canada in engineering camps.

INSTALLS LARGEST WURLITZER INSTRUMENT.

Samuel Baxter Purchases Biggest Hope-Jones Orchestra in United States for His Isis Theater in Denver.

THE immense Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra that has just been installed in the Isis theater in Denver, Col., is attracting a lot of attention. It is said of this instrument that it is the biggest installed in any photoplay house in America and that it cost $50,000 to construct. The Isis theater is one of the best and one of the prettiest moving picture houses in Denver, and its owner and manager, Samuel Baxter, is one of the pioneers in the business in that city. There are pipes in this instrument so large that a man could crawl through them on his hands and knees. To be exact, some measure thirty-four inches in diameter. One diaphone pipe alone consumed a thousand feet of yellow pine. There are three different sets of vox humana pipes, located in different parts of the building, which will enable the organist to get exquisite echo effects. This will also enable the organist to produce singing effects, both solo and chorus.

The Isis organ is a cathedral organ, magnificently versatile in itself. It even includes a complete orchestral piano, twenty feet away, but operated from the keyboard of the organ. Although handled from the organ keyboard, every shade of tone and expression can be as well secured as if the performer were playing from the piano direct. There are two large harps built into the organ, but each situated in a different part of the building. The two largest sets of cathedral chimes ever placed in an organ are in this one. The largest drum and the largest crash cymbals ever used in an organ are also to be found in this wonderful instrument. One of the organ's stops is dedicated entirely to reproducing simply the sound of a bee on a window pane; the wind and rain machines are so accurate that no ear could possibly detect their artful fraud. There is even included in this organ, an electrical device for producing the effect of lightning flashes to accompany the thunder.

The ten-horse and the twenty-horse power electric blowers, weigh four tons, and the instrument is voiced on the highest wind pressure. Its tones have virility and clear intensity.

The consule, or key desk, of the organ has four manuals of sixty-one notes, including the pedal manual, and two complete semi-circles of stops and couplers, numbering about one hundred and fifty in all. There is an additional feature in the second or double touch. By the use of this, the organist may bring on many individual pipes at a moderate tone and when the key is pressed down, a full volume of tone is had which accentuates or segregates the melody of the piece from the accompaniment. The acompaniment is then softer than the solo part.

The organ is built in four different parts, two main parts being in the balconies on each side of the main part of the theater; the antiphonal, or commonly called echo part, in the back of the theater, over the main balcony, and the large diaphone, or basic parts, up above the curtain next the roof. Each part of the organ is enclosed in a small but soundproof room. The temperature is regulated by an elaborate system of electrical radiators and thermostats, which keep it within one or two degrees of variation. The work of installing the instrument required many weeks.

Not only is Denver fortunate in having such an unusual instrument, but also is she fortunate in having such excellent musicians to handle it. Mr. Baxter has made contracts with two eminent musicians, Henry Bernard Murtagh, and Clarence Albert Tufts. Mr. Murtagh was born in Springfield, Mass. He studied there under John J. Bishop, who was a pupil of Leschetizky, and of Dudley Buck. Later he studied in Quebec under J. Arthur Bernier, a pupil of Saint-Saens, of Guilmont and of Marmontel. He is an all-round musician, and has had a varied musical career. Mr. Tufts, as well, is an unusually splendid musician. Before becoming a unit orchestra player, Mr. Tufts was a well-known Brooklyn organist, and later was the pupil and assistant to the well-known Dr. Wm. C. Carl, of the "Old First" Presbyterian Church, New York City. Mr. Tufts holds degrees from numerous organ and piano schools.

Daily noonday concerts, aside from the music accompaning the pictures, are drawing large crowds to the Isis. The organ has proven itself to be, not only an accompaniment to a picture entertainment, but an entertainment in itself.

THE QUEEN, OWENSBORO, KY.

Bleich's Latest Picture House Is An Acquisition to Its City.

THE George A. Bleich Amusement Enterprises, of Owensboro, Ky., has opened another moving picture theater. The name of the new structure is the Queen, and we published a photograph of it herewith. The theater was opened on May 27 last, and has been playing to good business since. It has a seating capacity of 500 and is equipped for the presentation of vaudeville and motion pictures, but so far has been devoted to the latter exclusively. The house was formerly known as the Peoples, but Mr. Bleich had many extensive improvements made that it cannot be recognized as the old Peoples, for it bears all the resemblance of a newly constructed theater. The electrical wiring conforms with the city regulations, and the ventilation is such that there is no stale air in the auditorium at any time.

Queen Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

The decorative scheme in the interior is beautiful. Old rose and ivory predominate, and the lighting lends quite a charm, giving all a soft pleasing effect. The house is equipped with all modern conveniences. The exterior is done in stucco. The entrance with its frame of heavy plastic mould and hundreds of electric lights is very brilliant. Epitomizing the features of the Queen it can be said that it is a distinct acquisition to the city and deserves a goodly share of prosperity.

The Bleich Amusement Enterprises also owns and operates the Empress in Owensboro and the Princess in Henderson, Kv. The former mentioned has a seating capacity of 830, while the latter can accommodate 650. Both are devoted to photoplays exclusively.

Advertising for Exhibitors

A Jo'burg Journal.

EVIDENTLY they like brickness in South Africa to judge from a couple of copies of the Carleton Chat, Johannesburg, sent in by a correspondent. The oddest thing about the four page issue is that it does not say anything about its programs. There is a picture of the theater taking the part of the front page not occupied by the heading, but this is the nearest they come to advertisement. The other three pages are miscellany, much of it decidedly good. A feature is the answers to correspondents done in the British style. This is not a department for replies to film inquiries but presumably replies to those who have written on various matters, but a note in one issue suggests that the editor himself asks the questions for one issue comes this reply:

> MIRIAM LEVEY—We have received your impassioned declaration of undying affection for Mr. Francis X. Bushman, but my dear girl, for goodness sake do be careful, or you will get us into trouble. See letter in next issue. You Devonshire girls are so impulsive.

But evidently a real owner of the name did not like this, for she must have been responsible for this:

> The charming young actress who is known to Jo'burg theater goers as June Langley—is in private life Miss Miriam Levy. She is in no way connected with the "Miriam Levey" who is supposed to have written to us on the subject of Mr. Francis X. Bushman. In fact to be perfectly candid, in the words of Betsy Prig, "there ain't no such a person."

There is some really good original stuff, reminiscenses of an old time cameraman now located in South Africa, and other original contributions, some of which have much the flavor of the Sporting Times.

The idea seems to be to give the patrons something really interesting and trust to the picture of the house for the rest. Surely a program or small advertisement would not intrude too much. On the other hand the capitally written sheet is a good advertisement by itself and those who get it will feel grateful to the house. Generally when an amateur writer tries to be smart he is merely offensively personal. This is another sort of copy and is brightly done.

Contrast.

The program of the Calhoun theater, Minneapolis, seems to have been cut down to the single side of a card instead of the four pager they recently have been running, possibly because they are getting out window bills. We think that we would try and do both. If not both, we would use the vest pocket form, but make it work harder by making it talk more on the page used for chat.

The underlines on the two four pagers sent in give a nice study in display. As will be seen from the cut, one underline uses the same type all the way through. The other uses a bold and a light face. It is easy to be seen how a smaller but blacker type will stand out and give emphasis. This is the whole secret of making your advertising shout instead of whisper. It is not the size of the type but the relative size and blackness of the important lines that counts. Study these and then see that your printer gives you what you want instead of what he wants.

Rather Too Much.

The advertising manager of the Grand theater, Durant, Okla., sends in a photo of the house with the signs all set for the matinee. His name seems to be Linely, but the signature is not plain. He writes that he tries to get a good arrangement of signs.

Rather Too Much.

Reference to the cut will show the lobby pretty well filled and twelve sidewalk boards of various sorts. If we had that much paper to work with, we would send some of it up and down the street to talk to the possible patron before he came to the house. Paper makes business, but too much paper in one spot makes waste. Those three sheet boards would make more business in prominent locations. They will not do much toward making business in front of the house since by that time people have either decided to go or not to go.

Something New, But—

The Bijou, Racine, Wis., has something new in contests in connection with a daily paper. It is the usual balloting stunt, but the balloting is for the most popular cast of players from leading lady to "Villain's Wife": which is something new in dramatic classifications.

The prizes are three scholarships in a Chicago dramatic school.

The stunt is a good one for the moment and will make money for the paper and advertise the house, but what will happen along about the time the winners get their diplomas and get kicked off the steps of the photplay studios? We have never seen a studio yet where a diploma was not a detriment rather than a recommendation, and at least three Racine young people are going to be stung by the bees in their bonnets. We are afraid that the scheme will have a reactionary effect rather than a permanently good one.

Duplication.

The Regent theater, Philadelphia, gives each entering patron a really good card program. On the front is an original design giving the program for the week, features alone being used. This is excellent, but turn the card over and the same thing is repeated in type without the mortise cut. A good tale will bear repeating, but not when there are other things just as interesting to be said. The back of the program should carry other and more general text. It is a waste of space as it stands.

Telling the same fact twice might hammer the idea in, but it would be better to use the back of the card for some talk that will cause the reader to turn over and read the front page a second time. It can be done and is being done right along.

Been Busy.

We wondered what had become of George A. Bleich. His advertisements have been missed. It seems that he has been busy building a new house down in Owensboro, Ky., the Queen, a sister to the Empress. Now he has a feature house and a small reel house and can cater to both tastes, the Empress running the features.

But it does not seem that the advertising has the old tang, the zip that made the money that in turn made the new house possible. We hope that Mr. Bleich comes back.

Greetings and Good Luck.

J. W. Llewlyn, who used to have the Vaudette at West Point, Ga., has carried out his intention of touring the state with an open air road show and to judge from the press notices he gets he must have a good one. We have missed the inventor of the one piece coat hanger and other clever devices and we hope that before the snow flies he will have settled down somewhere with a new house and some more of the same ideas. Salaam!

Udells.

Dave Udell, of the Majestic, Paxton, Ill., sends in another batch of good advertising. Exhibit A is a pseudo news item that reads:

A PAXTON GIRL SHOT

out the front door when she heard the price was lowered from 25c to 15c at the Majestic tonight. She came right down town to see what the matter was. Same old trouble, just when we have a good show, one of our acts had to return to Chicago, leaving Collier & De Walde, the world's greatest roller skaters, Dale & Entrup, comedy musical act, and five reels of pictures, and therefore compelled to lower our price to 15c.

There will be no show at the Crystal today. Matinee and all at the Majestic. Excellent program for 15c. Children 10c.

The headline will catch the attention and while the "sting" is too quickly apparent, still it is gingery enough to carry the reader along. A double column advertisement. It can only be suggested in the space we can afford, but the idea will show.

Mr. Smith dodges one common error and does not use a glazed paper. His stock is stiff because it has fibre in it and not because it has been doped with clay. It is planned to stand handling without falling apart. The front page shows a good display except that the date is merely "Sunday, June 6," or whatever it is instead of June 6 to 12. There is a line above this that runs it is for the week commencing on that date, but this line is an eight point against a 24 point date and gets lost. It would be better to drop the "Sunday" and say "week of June 6-12." It will take no more space. Inside the pages are divided into quarters, for the house runs two bills on Sunday, the matinee and night bill being different. At first these were divided by one point rule but later issues show a frame of one point and four panels within this space. This necessitates a smaller size of type being used for the titles, but it gives both the program and the titles a better display. This may seem untrue to those who have given the matter little study, but the fact remains that the smaller type stands out as well and is more easily read. Comparisons will show that while the larger type seems to be the better, the smaller is more legible because less crowded. It would be even better if, where possible, the titles are opened up with thin spaces between each letter.

The back page is reserved for house chat. One is a letter supposed to have been written by Charles Chaplin. It is an imitation of the usual misspelled "Rube" letter, but is scarcely complimentary to the comedian and not effective, because it is not the way that Chaplin might be expected to write. Unless a freak letter can be made genuinely humorous, it would be better not to use it, and this is too palpably an advertising stunt. Straight house talk, such as is carried in the other samples sent, would have been better. And these, in turn, would have been better had the attractor cuts been dropped. The effort to write to the cut spoils the introductory paragraph, the most important paragraph of the page. Attractor cuts, such as are supplied by cut services, are all right in their proper place, but generally the proper place is back in the cut foundry. It would be better to use an ornamental initial and run straight text without an effort to allude to the cut.

Paramount Publicity.

Paramount has just issued a handsome booklet of cuts which will be given those using Paramount service. Some of them—like most of the free cuts—give too much space to the Paramount in proportion to the house name, but other mortises give plenty of space to the exhibitor. Enough of these can be had to do intelligent and telling work and the scheme makes it possible to use cuts as against all type at the type price. Even a cut signature or heading will cause an advertisement to stand out above type display, but the cost of cuts and cut copy is a factor that must be watched. Universal has done much to make business with their cut advertisements and much of the Paramount advertising will be decidedly helpful.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.06.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Side Lights.

WE are not going to start a school of photoplay writing other than this department, but if we ever did start, say a college course, most of the first term would be laboratory work.

We would have a studio and a company. We would have some capable actors and a few stupid ones. We would have a quiet, painstaking director and one with plenty of temperament. Then we would have the pupils write scenes and produce them on the stage with varying combinations of actors and under each of the directors.

We would have them write a half page scene minutely describing the business in detail, including a lot of facial work and small but important gestures. Then we would take the temperamental director and let him try to tell the stupid actor what to do to realize the script. We would let the author sit and watch the director getting to the end of his patience, and we would let him keep on until temper went by the board and the director, in sheer despair, let the scene go as best it would.

Then we would take the patient director and let him put the scene through and show how much time could be wasted.

After that we would take the same scene, condense it to the vital action and show that the director could get enough of it over to the actor to get the rough effect before his temper boiled over. We would also show the patient man working up the business from the real action to the fully-developed scene.

We think that about a month of this would teach the author to write briefly, clearly and directly. He would not say: "Jim takes ten steps toward the table with his right hand extended for the box of cigarettes. He reaches the table, takes up the box in his right hand, transfers it to the left, takes out a cigarette, lights it—takes one whiff, realizes what he has done, throws the cigarette from him, and sinks down on both knees with his arms on the table and his head on his arms, sobbing as though his heart would break."

He would know enough to brief it. He would say: "Jim crosses to table. Takes cigarette, lights. Thinks of his promise. Kneels at table weeping."

Then the director would put his own business in. If he had a stupid actor, he would not give him much to do. If he had a capable man he would build up the scene with byplay.

We would, as well, have him write a crowd into a small set and let him see the director trying to handle a dozen people in a space that would not hold four comfortably. We would write in dissolves and fades and things and let him see those made. We would have him write a costume scene and then send him out to get the costumes. We would do a lot of things like that, but the most important lesson he would learn would be the vital necessity for brief, but fully explanatory, action. This is what so few know.

It is to be presumed that a director can write action as well as an author. He may not be able to write a script, but he can write the action without the story. In the same way, having the story and the major action, he can add the details. But the director seldom decides that one action and one action alone shall be the only way the scene can be played. He tries a scene from two to a dozen different ways and selects the best. He does this with the actual action in front of him. It follows, then, that the author who merely visualizes action, cannot always write in detail the action that will look best in the set in which it is to be used with the players who are to sustain the parts.

Close Up Again.

We have said several things about close-ups lately, but comes a letter that states the student's viewpoint very clearly:

> Properly, of course, an insert is anything, action or inanimate material, added to a scene or the film to increase the value of the story. But in considering the number of scenes should close-ups be counted separately or just the full scenes be estimated for the length of the film (number of scenes to the reel)? That is, does a 40 scene reel mean that the parts of a scene are counted in that estimate or that just full scenes including the close-ups are considered?
> For instance:
> Scene 1—Some set or exterior.
> The action and then (A) close-up of a character to emphasize facial expression perhaps. (B) Action of full scene continued. (C) Close-up or enlargement of something. (D) Action of full scene continued.
> That properly is just one scene. Would the manuscript enumerate the parts of the broken up scene? If so, then it would be five scenes.
> Now suppose an editor or a director wishes to eliminate one or two of the parts for straight action or other inserts, wouldn't the successive enumeration be somewhat confusing with parts 1 A and 1 C (or scenes 2 and 4) cut out, whereas technically that which is eliminated is really a portion of the scene No. 1? Some companies number all inserts consecutively with the scenes, which form, if adhered to, may lead to confusion in the joining room.

In the first place, it is the action and not the number of scenes that determines the length of the film. The action quoted above will give about the same footage for four scenes as for one. The number of scenes has nothing whatever to do with the length of the action and this talk about forty scenes to the reel or any other set number of scenes is the purest rot. It is the sort of foolish clinging to rules that keeps the beginner in a hole. He is more intent on getting the stated number of scenes per reel than he is on getting the story down and so the story is bad. The editor or director does not estimate the number of scenes. He estimates the value of the story and its development. Any time scripts are bought merely for the number of scenes, we'll sell them for $2.50 each. The purchaser studies the idea. He knows that if the scenes are too few, he can build them up; if too many, he can cut them down. He does not worry about scene numbers.

Take this skeleton scene the correspondent offers. Suppose it to have been written as this writer has it, but without the identifying letters, of course. It is written as one scene and numbered as a single scene. The director sees his chance to break up. He plays down to A and then moves the camera into the scene. He makes the close up. Going back to the original viewpoint he works from B to C. Now he moves into the scene again for C, coming back for D, and completing the scene. Where two cameras may be had, the regular camera will be left standing for the big set and the second camera will be moved about for the close-ups. Where but one camera is used, the marks of the three spikes in the tripod will be chalked and the camera moved back to these exact marks. Sometimes the position of the players at the time the close-up starts will be noted and the close-up played afterward.

In any case the director's assistant will note the fact that four scenes have been made on one number and when the joining sheet is prepared five numbers will be used.

Reversing this, suppose that the author had written each of these as a numbered scene. The director does not believe that he needs the close-ups. The four scenes are played as one and entered on the joining slip as one. The successive enumeration this correspondent refers to would not be somewhat confusing because the joining slip would not be made up from the original script, but from the original script plus the assistant director's notes and the scene numbers on the author's script are not noticed at all in preparing to join. The author's script is never sent to the joining room. A special joining slip is prepared by the assistant in complete harmony with the action as played.

All that is required of the author is that he tell his story in a clear synopsis and in well planned action detailed by scenes as he sees them. The director, in realizing the script will probably make changes, but this should not worry the author.

Double Exposures.

Here's a nice point raised by a correspondent who asks:

> Where an actor plays two characters, in the same scene, is it easier to do double exposure outside or in the studio?

The reply was that the only difference was that generally the background and lights could be better handled if an interior set were used. Otherwise the double made no difference.

There are two kinds of double exposures. One of these is to mask half the lens and take half of the picture, then reverse the mask and take the half that was covered the first time. In this the double never crosses the middle line of the stage. Jones when he plays Tom is on the right hand side of the stage. As Harry he occupies the left hand side.

The other, and more common double, is to play all but a main character in the set or location. Then the figure of the double is worked in, the actor playing before a "cave." This is nothing more than a shadow box lined with black cloth. The cloth alone, even velvet, would give off some light if merely used as a drop against which the actor worked, but by boxing in the drop with black the camera gets no reflection. In this work, it will be seen, it does not matter whether the straight scene is played indoors or out, since the manipulation, in either case, is done in the studio.

But don't do much double work unless you are asked to.

Held Up.

Those who sent their dollars to "Photoplaywrite" of Los Angeles for his little booklet, have had their money returned with the explanation that publication has been held up. Naturally the letter does not explain whether the financial support was too small or whether the genius' employer sat down on him. He says he will issue later on. We shall see. Possibly the gifted author wants a little more time in which to master the spelling book. His circulars are far from perfect in this direction.

Foolish.

A recent inquirer writes that he sent a two reel comedy (in 65 scenes) to the Famous Players and had it returned with the annotation that it was too short. He thinks he can bring it up to 95 scenes and wants to know if that would do any good.

Here is a man trying to sell. He is either too lazy or two stupid to study his market. He does not know that Famous Players do not make farce comedy. He does not know that Famous Players do not make two or three-reel releases. He only knows that he saw that

Russell Smith was buying original stuff of the highest grade, so in goes his story that is completely and utterly unsuitable in theme, class and length.

If you don't know what a company wants, read up on them and find out. Every script writer should know the character of Famous Players releases as a part of his business equipment. Would you go into the dairy business not knowing whether tailors or shoemakers were the proper buyers to approach with your product?

Plotting.

"Positively I've not had an idea for three weeks," writes a correspondent. "I cannot seem to find one anywhere. And it is not that I have not thought hard and looked everywhere."

Then we put down the letter and picked up a paper. An item announced the retirement of Julia Marlowe. This suggests the actress who gives to the stage the self she should have given her husband. She breaks down and then fears that he will no longer love her since she is no longer the idol of the thousands. To her surprise she finds that it is herself and not the reflected glory of her career that he wanted. Or perhaps she spurns love for fame and finds fame less constant than love. Perhaps we reverse the idea and feature a man who believes himself irresistible. Then comes his retirement. The glamor of the stage is gone. His wife comes to him, but he realizes in bitterness that she is doing her duty, not following the dictates of her heart in offering comfort. He has had his dashing career, but he has paid for it with his last chance for love. These are just a few of the stories that a one-line heading suggests. There are many others.

The front page is largely given over to war and to a storm that had been sweeping the Atlantic Coast, but a heading runs: "Fuses Kill Three in U. S. Arsenal." That is good for a dozen assorted suggestions; not for war plays, but for plays based on the furnishing of munitions to the allies. Perhaps some crazed reformer blows up the place in the futile hope that others may follow his example in other plants. Back of this is the love story of the reformer's daughter and the foreman of the factory. The paragraph says that the exploding fuses were time fuses. This gives another lead, the timed explosion and, of course, the miscreant's daughter is either threatened or blown up. But does it have to be the daughter? It does not. It might be a western mining story and one man might throw the machine down the shaft to kill his partner. He falls down the shaft himself and, with a broken leg, is unable to drag himself to the fuse. His partner comes in time to be told how to stop the explosion and in the moment he was face to face with death, the other's heart is purged of hate and lust for gold. Just because it started in a munitions factory, it does not follow that the story must stay there. The fuse might be on an aeroplane and the explosion avoided because the moisture of the upper strata of the air dampens the fuse.

Another story tells that a woman in a street car accident was supposed to be badly wounded because a tube of paint she was carrying home was burst and stained her waist. This might be a comedy as it stands or it might be turned into an intense tragedy. A man has done murder and has escaped detection. A can of paint on the floor above is spilled and drips through the ceiling, reproducing the scene that followed the murder as the murderer sat in his room beneath the scene of the crime and saw his victim's blood drip down.

That is just one page of a paper mostly given over to war news. It's simple once you learn how, and the way to learn how is merely to keep plugging at plots until the plotting becomes a habit. Once you get the habit to its fullest development you can write a tragedy from a radish. It's simple enough. The radish suggests not a radish but a ruby, the ruby suggests a struggle for the possession of a stone as large as a radish. This comes, of course, from the eye of an idol in India. This is rather too stale. It is instead the most cherished possession of a woman of society. A man whose advances she has rejected seeks to gain possession of the stone. He is helped in his scheme by a second woman who hopes, because of this assistance, to dispose of a rival and gain the man for herself. The stone is shown the man the woman really loves. He taxes her with having given the other man the stone. This she denies, but the stone is gone. Later it is secretly returned. He believes she got it from the other man. This serves to drive them still further apart. The woman commits suicide, the man kills himself and the woman accomplice is thrown over by the villain. The radish has disappeared and there is a tragedy in its place, a rough draft of an idea that with a little development would serve. It is all a matter of practice, yet so many writers want to do a single script and regard themselves as authors.

Preparedness.

Do not send your stuff out but half done on the supposition that the director may change it anyway. Do the best you can each time for you cannot tell when some particular script may procure you an offer to go on staff or keep from you a most advantageous proposition. Even if the director does change the run of action, it does not argue that he will approve your half-finished job. He may note and approve your action and then do it some other way for reasons entirely foreign to the action script. He may even be sorry that circumstances do not permit him to follow your story and may be looking for the next script you send. If it comes in badly prepared, you'll be marked down as an in and outer and forgotten.

Needless Breaks.

An observant author writes that he makes a point of following the production of his story with his cript. He adds:

> Now and then I come to a scene that puzzles me. I can understand that frequently a director may cut one scene into another either to quicken the action or to gain additional contrast, but sometimes there will be a single flash cutting into a scene that would be better if played straight. The flash is meaningless and I can't seem to figure out why the director cut in.

If the author could stand beside the camera as the scene was taken he would understand that the flash was not for the artistic effect but to cover up. No matter how perfectly a scene is rehearsed, the people are apt to go wrong when the camera turns. Perhaps the ten foot scene stretches into forty because the people delay. Ten feet still cover the essential action, but there are five feet at the opening of the scene and another five feet toward the middle. These are cut out of the full length, a five foot flash separates them and there are but fifteen feet instead of forty. The director did not want a flash, but he would rather have a flash than twenty-five feet of dead action so he cut into the scene.

Some such situation as this will explain ninety per cent. of the seemingly foolish flashing. It is not choice, but necessity. The other ten per cent. is done by directors who have a sort of passion for cutting in.

No Scripts, Please.

Will readers of this department please take notice that we are not in the market for manuscripts and that we are not in a position to assist in any way, shape or fashion in the disposal of manuscripts. Scripts sent with a stamped and addressed envelope will be returned. Others will go into the waste pasket.

"Back to."

A correspondent wants to know if it is necessary in writing cuts to name all the players on the stage at the opening of the scene. It is not. If the action is merely the continuation of a previous scene you mark "back to" such a scene and the director will either play the two scenes as one or with so brief an interval of time that it will not be necessary to name the players and their position. Sometimes the two scenes of a series are played as one. Sometimes they are played as a separate scene but with no greater break than comes from running down a few feet in blank or marking a scene number. When run in blank the cameraman merely puts his hand over the lens. He turns a few feet. This will come out clear in the negative and mark the break.

Extra Casts.

Someone comes to the fore with an idea of casting the extra people by scenes. This is not new. It is advised in Technique of the Photoplay and by other writers. Persons employed in but few scenes are listed as Man in 9-32-34-76.
Girl in 12-15-26.
Then the director knows what scenes they are needed for and can, at a pinch, use them to double with.

A somewhat newer wrinkle is to write a major and a minor cast, listing in the first all who sustain parts throughout the play and in the other giving the lesser parts and the scenes they play in.

But the principal point is to name or designate each person employed no matter how small the part, that the director may prepare his cast accurately and without the possibility of an error.

Perhaps.

Mrs. Bertie Moyers suggests that editorial departments have their rejection slips printed on blotting paper that the feelings of the author may be salved by the fact that he can at least put them to some good purpose. Anyhow, a straight rejection slip on blotting paper would be better than a checked rejection slip filled in by the office boy.

Specially Written.

One good way not to sell a story is to write the editor you know he'll buy it because you wrote it just for him. He will resent your overconfidence.

Pyrotechnics.

A rocket looks pretty when it is going up, but no one watches the stick come down. Let your climax and your finish be simultaneous and there will be no falling stick for an anti-climax.

Typewriter Type.

Get a machine with the regulation pica type and avoid both the ten and fourteen point. One is too small and the other too large. And let your first machine be a second-hand one. After that you'll know which you want.

Local Union No. 330, Fort Worth, Texas.

V. Wood, president; J. H. Spark, vice president; L. D. Spranger, financial secretary; L. K. Friedman, recording secretary; James Trout, treasurer; C. M. Fox, business agent; L. Murray, guard. Meetings held first and third Sundays, at Labor Temple, third floor, Motor Mart Building.

Local Union No. 355, Sioux City, Iowa.

Clair Hilgers, president; Robert J. Marksbury, vice president and business agent; Will J. Fallon, secretary and treasurer; Fred Androy, sergeant-at-arms. Meetings held first and third Wednesdays of every month in the Labor Temple.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 103.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Given two plano-convex lenses of the same diameter, quality and equal price, but one tapering to a thin edge and one having an edge 1/8 inch thick, which would you select? Of what optical value is the glass between the two surfaces of a lens? What is the "critical" angle and what is its effect as applied to the condenser?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 97.

The Roll of Honor on Question 97 consists of Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

I have selected the reply of Brother Solar for publication, partly because of the completeness of the answer, and partly by reason of the excellence of the drawings. Friend Smith also sent in a very good reply. I have supplemented Solar's reply by the reply of W. C. Crawford, because, while not very complete, it puts a portion of the matter in very simple language.

Reply to Question No. 97.

By John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.

The Question:

Suppose a plano-convex and a meniscus-bi-convex each be placed four inches from a given light source; which will transmit the most light, and why? Which one of them will have the greater amount of axial spherical aberration? Which one will have the greater amount of chromatic aberration?

The Answer:

The meniscus lens will transmit more light than the plano. It will collect more rays as shown a^1, B, a^1, B^{11}, Fig. I. The percentage of reflected light will be considerably greater with the plano than with the meniscus. The greater the angle formed by the ray of light and normal (normal is perpendicular with the surface at the point intersected by the ray of light) the greater the amount reflected, up to the angle of transmission 40 degrees and 43 minutes. A ray of light striking a dense at this angle would be entirely reflected and would not pass through the lens. If we compare the angle formed by the ray A, c and normal c, D, in Fig. 1, with the angle formed by the ray A, B, and normal B, E, we find a great difference in the size of the angles. That of the plano being greatest, it follows that it would give the greater amount of reflected light; similarly angle A, c^1, D^1 (30 degrees) and angle A^1, B^1, E^1 (7 degrees) differ greatly. There will also be a greater amount of reflection at the second surface of the plano, as shown in

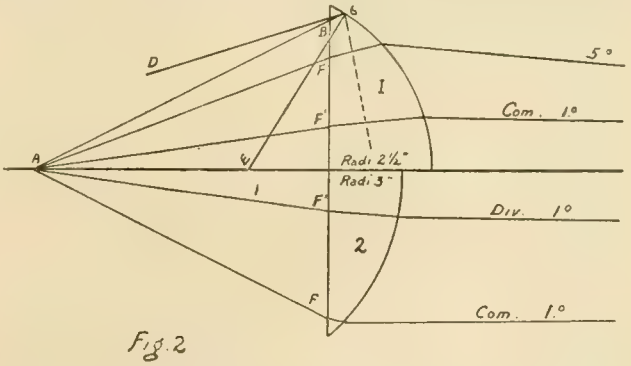

Fig. 2

Fig. 2. Fig 2, lens 1, the ray of light A, B, will be refracted through the first surface in a direction D, c, the angle E, c, D about 42 degrees is beyond the angle of transmission, and the light will be wholly reflected through the lense in the direction of the dotted line.

Spherical aberration is increased with increasing lens curvature, or, in other words, with the shortness of focal length. In Figs. 2 and 3 I have drawn the outer curvature of lenses 1 in each figure to the same radius, and lenses 2 in each figure to the same radius. The greater the difference in angles of the refracted ray, the greater the spherical aberration of the lens. Lens 1, Fig. 2, the ray A, F, after being refracted is at an angle of 5 degrees with a horizontal line through the center of the lens. And ray A, F^1, at an angle of 1 degree. Lens 1,

Fig. 3, the same outer curvature ray A, F, is at an angle of 7 degrees, and ray A, F¹, an angle of 5 degrees, in this case the plano has the greatest spherical aberration. If we compare lenses 2, in Figs. 2 and 3, we find the spherical aberration greatest in the meniscus lens. Lens 2, Fig. 2, ray A, F¹, diverges 1 degree and ray A, F converges 1 degree, the refracted rays are nearly parallel with the axis, and the spherical aberration will be small. Lens 2, Fig. 3, the ray A, F, after refraction is at an angle of 17 degrees diverging, and ray A, F¹, 8 degrees diverging, the spherical aberration of this lens will be greater than the plano 2, Fig. 2.

Chromatic aberration will vary with the angles similar to spherical aberration. We are not to consider the above to apply to plano and meniscus lenses in combination with other lenses. In laying out a diagram of these figures many lines, angles and circles are required to obtain the angles of refraction. To avoid confusion I have traced in only the rays of light and the form of the lenses.

The index of refraction used is 1.525. That is, as the sine of the angle of refraction is to the sine of the angle of incidence, so is unity to the index of refraction, or as 1 is to 1.525.

The radiant point in the three figures is 4 inches from the lens.

Reply to Question No. 97.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

If a plano-convex and a meniscus-bi-convex each be placed four inches from a given light source, the meniscus-bi-convex will transmit more light because (a) less glass in both lenses, hence less absorption, (b) as the surface of the meniscus is more nearly perpendicular to the light rays, there is less loss from the reflection of the polished surface of the glass. The meniscus-bi-convex, being a three-lens combination, corrects to a great extent axial spherical aberration and, to some extent, chromatic aberration.

Get Out Your Hammers.

I am springing the light ray dope practically just as it was written. Get out your hammers, and get ready!

Brothers Deutsch and Armstrong object, but I am convinced they are in error. Some others believe the tables are essentially correct and agree with the rest of it, except the two-ray theory. Nearly everyone objects to that, but I think it is because they don't quite grasp the idea. Some who have tested these tables have been enthusiastic. Some object because present equipment is not such that the conditions demanded by the tables can be met in all cases. This is true, but cannot be helped. If these tables are found to be right, as I believe they will, it will be up to the machine manufacturers to so build their apparatus that the lamphouse can be gotten further back (I think it will be necessary to get the condenser 24 inches from the film in some cases), and up to the lens manufacturers to give us lenses of proper diameters.

Well, we will sit back and listen to the anvil chorus. However, mark what I tell you, after the dust settles you are going to find that the tables, and the theory, while probably not absolutely correct in all details (that would be altogether too much to hope) to be fundamentally right, and to point the road we must travel.

In closing this little prologue, let me say that I have almost worked my brains into a froth on this particular proposition, and have gone just as far as I can go with it at this time. Other matters are too strongly pressing, therefore I will ask those who criticise to be very careful that they first "get the viewpoint" of myself and Brother Griffiths; also if you try the tables and they don't seem to always work out right, be very sure before you condemn that you have met all the conditions. I want these articles criticised, but I want the criticism to be unprejudiced, and I ask that critics approach the matter with an absolutely open mind. I might add that no less person than Professor Simon Henry Gage, Cornell University, has examined the matter and finds nothing wrong with the conclusions arrived at, though he did want me to get some expert in physics to go over the text and harmonize it with optical laws. I concluded not to do this, however, through fear of complicating the text and making it hard to understand. I prefer understandableness to technical correctness.

That's Easy.

W. C. Denney, Omaha, Nebraska, writes:

> The remarks of J. T. May, issue of July 31st, are entirely uncalled for as regards projection in Omaha. Possibly the gentleman was the least bit out of humor with himself when he took his notes; also, perhaps his intention was to teach we—natives the art of projection. We will admit that some of us are working under unfavorable conditions, but we are getting the very best results possible on the screen, and, as a matter of fact, Mr. May admitted as much to me while he was here. Furthermore, you will do us a favor by publishing your knocks on projection in Omaha instead of merely hinting at, or presuming they were so, and thus give us a chance to defend ourselves.

With regard to the last clause in Brother Denney's letter I will say that his request is in the nature of the impossible. I would have presumed that what he calls my "knocks on projection in Omaha" were fully justified by reason of the fact that at least a dozen different men have at different times during the past two or three years, reported projection in Omaha as absolutely punk. Now, I do not, myself, know, because I have not been in Omaha for twenty years, nor am I going to certify the thing as a fact until I have actually seen it with my own eyes. I submit, however, that with something like a dozen reports to go on I am justified in saying that I believe it is so.

Prior to the receipt of Friend Denney's letter, however, Brother Smith, of Fort Worth, Texas, reported on Omaha, and I am willing to back up what Smith says. He has been a correspondent of this department for a long time, and I have never known him to write anything that was not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true. He says that in some of Omaha's theatres the projection is splendid, and that in other theaters—well, you have already seen and read the article, I guess, so why repeat it?

I would like to remind the Omaha operators of one fact: this department is open to all comers, provided they confine their language to ordinary decency, and I am glad to say nearly everyone does that. These reports on Omaha have been published at different intervals covering a period of at least two years, and if they were not true it was a perfectly easy matter for the Omaha men to deny them and their denial would be given due credit. Moreover, the Omaha union has been in existence for some little time, and it could have officially denied it. There was absolutely nothing in the I. A. law (now repealed and done away with) to prohibit this.

The question may be asked: why it is we publish these things when we cannot positively know as to their truth? Well, I will tell you. The publication of things of this kind, in my judgment, serves a distinctly good purpose. It may make the boys angry—yes, but it is more than likely to stir them up to some extent and keep them from getting too self-satisfied. If the charge is unjust they can have all the space they require, within reason, to dispute it. I don't publish all the reports of this kind that come in—not by any manner of means. I only publish those which appear on the face of it to be genuine and by way of remark, I might say that I believe Brother May to be thoroughly reliable. I think he merely wrote what he believed to be the truth. And Brother Denney practically admits that it is at least partly true by saying that some of the boys are working under unfavorable conditions. Why did he not explain this some years ago, when the first reports of bad work in Omaha were published, thus placing the blame on the Omaha managers, if it belongs there?

If any of the Omaha managers are compelling their operators to work under conditions which render high class projection impossible, then those managers are a detriment to the moving picture industry as a whole, and are perpetrating that which comes very nearly being an outrage on their patrons. There is absolutely no valid excuse for the manager who fails to supply his operator with everything necessary to put on high-class projection, nor is there any excuse for a manager in a city the size of Omaha for not paying a salary sufficient to obtain a high-class operator. If his business is not sufficient to enable him to do that, then, for the good of all concerned, his theater ought to go out of business. It will be a pleasure to me to do the Omaha men full and complete justice, the same as I try to do to other operators in any other cities, but if they lack sufficient energy or enterprise to defend themselves when bad reports are sent in, why I don't see that it is up to me.

An Envelope Full of Thanks.

Will J. Fallon, secretary and treasurer of Local 355, Sioux City, Iowa, writes:

> Page 809, July 31 issue, appeared an article from Brother May, Bartlesville, Okla., in which he said projection in Sioux City was good and that all the boys he met were good fellows. I have been instructed to write the projection department and thank both yourself and Brother May for the send-off given us. What Friend May said with regard to the good fellow end of things is just about right, as Local 355 certainly has the right sort of membership. The men all seem to pull with one another, and although we were only organized August 15, 1914, still we have one or two of our union men in every theater, with the exception of two suburban houses, in one of which the manager runs his own machine. The other employs an operator, and we have been trying to get him to join, but he does not seem to be very anxious, although he has repeatedly told our business agent he would appear for examination. He has always had some excuse, however, and we have ceased to bother our head about him. And now I want to ask a question. Does it make any difference in the picture if you use a lens which projects a 20 foot picture at 100 feet and use it on a 12 foot picture at 50 feet? I contend that it does not.

Well, Brother Fallon, you are wrong in this particular. It does make a very decided difference, because of the fact that with the lens projecting smaller picture at the shorter distance it would have to be moved very much further away from the film, and this would call for an entirely different condenser combination and lamphouse location; also I believe it would be impractical to get the best results from a lens working under such widely varying conditions.

As to the man who fails to join, why he is very foolish, to say the least. Suppose you ask him whether or not he thinks the banker is a smart man—a man of brains. He will undoubtedly answer yes, whereupon call the fact to his attention that the bankers have an iron-clad, copper riveted union, although they do not call it a union. You might also call his attention to the fact that the attorney has a union so strong that it practically controls even the courts. Ask him if he thinks the operator is not fully justified in doing what practically all the professions do. Why the doctors have a union so strong that they actually succeed in getting court action which shuts out anybody outside their union from practicing medicine. The architects have a union, and so has practically every profession or trade which amounts to anything, and the best men in those professions and trades invariably belong to the union.

I appreciate the kind words of Local 355 in thanking the department and Brother May, but, so far as the department is concerned, it is a distinct pleasure to say such things, and I am sure it was also a pleasure to Brother May to make the report he did. We have to do a lot of knocking, or rather criticising. It is not a pleasure—far from it, but, being one of those foolish individuals who takes his position somewhat seriously, the editor regards it as a duty, which, although unpleasant, must be performed for the good of the business.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS*

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part II.

IF, however, the lenses be separated any considerable distance, say one-half inch, the light loss would be quite heavy, as is evidenced by Fig. 3, in which the outer ray is much heavier than in Fig. 2.

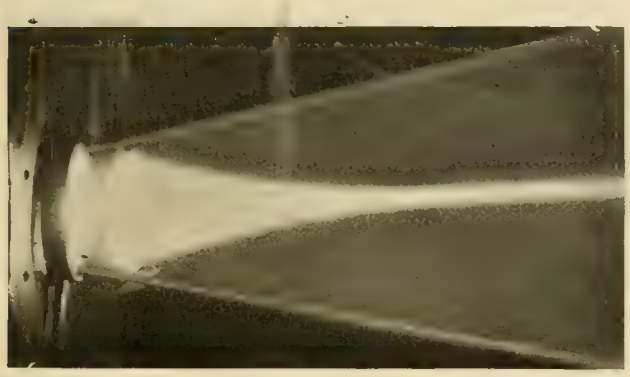

Fig. 3.

It is also of interest to note the difference in the beam from the lens in Fig. 2 and Fig. 3. In Fig. 2 there is a 6½ lens next the arc and a 7½ in front, placed in actual contact with each other. Fig. 3 is the same lenses, with no change of any kind except to space them approximately one-half inch apart.

In Fig. 2 you will observe the beam does not narrow down quite so much as it does in Fig. 3. The meaning of this is that the E. F. of the combination has been altered by spacing the lenses.

And now as to the optical effect of spacing the condensers. Increasing the distance between the lenses simply serves to lengthen the equivalent focus of the combination. The further apart the lenses are the longer will be the E. F. of the combination, but, due to the aforesaid light loss involved, it is a mighty poor way of altering the equivalent focus, also I believe that, in the light of the present knowledge, laying light loss aside, the better practice is to work with a fixed equivalent focus and keep the condensing lenses close together at all times, say not more than ⅛ of an inch apart. It is best to not have them actually touching, due to the fact that the mechanical contact would serve to impart considerable heat to the front lens, through absorption, and that is decidedly undesirable.

The novice would say that, since the light cone is shorter in Fig. 3 than in Fig. 2, the E. F. would be less, but the opposite is true, due to the fact that you measure from a point half way between the lenses, and the lens moves outward faster than the point of focus moves back, hence the E. F. of the combination is lengthened, instead of shortened, even though the light cone itself be shorter than it was before. Actual measurement from the curved surface of the front condenser to the point where the rays begin to diverge from the beam will show that the cone is shorter in Fig. 2 than in Fig. 3, although apparently not so.

It may be stated as an absolute fact that when the condenser is made up of two factors of different focal lengths, as, for instance, a 6½ and a 7½, the better practice is to place the shorter focal length lens next the arc, because, with the arc in operating position the shorter the focal length of the rear lens the more nearly will it come to delivering parallel rays to the front lens, thus reducing light loss to a minimum. See Fig. 1 in proof of this proposition. The only objection to doing this is that the thick lens is more apt to break than the thinner one, but this is very largely, if not entirely overcome by the installation of a modern condenser mount, of which the Preddy and Elbert are excellent examples.

In the course of these experiments it has been determined to be a fact that, provided the front lens of the condenser combination be in line with and square with the aperture and objective, the fact that the rear condensing lens is not exactly square with, or exactly in line with the front one, does not seem to make any appreciable difference, provided, of course, the fault be not too great.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that this condition should be allowed to obtain. The better practice is to have the entire system in exact line, but with present projector mounts this is somewhat difficult to accomplish, and failure to accomplish the lining of the two condenser factors perfectly with each other won't be a very serious matter

Another extremely important relation between the condensing lens and the objective is illustrated in Fig. 4, in which A represents the extreme limit of light from the lower edge of the condensing lens when it is placed 16 inches from the aperture of the machine. You will observe that with the condenser at a distance from the aperture which will place the arc in focus (the point where the condenser ray begins to diverge), which is the point where the picture will receive evenly distributed illumination, the light will pass through the aperture and become a diverging beam. This is clearly shown in Fig. 5, which shows the light beam as in actual projection and is proven in Fig. 6, in which the condenser is covered by a metal plate in which are two holes located diametrically opposite each other and about ½ inch from the edge of the lens. It will be seen from Fig. 6 that the rays from the outer edge of the condenser lens actually do act precisely as indicated in diagram, Fig 4. In Fig 7 the same two rays are passed on through the objective lens.

From this the inevitable conclusion is reached that with the crater in focus at the aperture, the closer the condenser is to the aperture the more rapid will be the divergence of the beam beyond the aperture, though the increase from this cause will be comparatively slight. It will also be seen that the greater the distance from the aperture plate to the objective lens aperture the wider the light beam will be at the point it encounters the lens. See Fig. 8. It therefore is an undoubted fact that

The diameter of the objective lens is an exceedingly important factor, particularly with long focal length lenses, and it is a factor which must be taken into very serious account in the matching up of projector lens systems.

Fig. 7.

Fig. 9 shows the loss of light through using a lens of too small diameter. This loss may be slight, or it may be very great. In many cases it is the latter. In this case the loss is far greater than appears, because the camera only caught the loss which fell outside the lens barrel, whereas the actual diameter of the lens aperture is considerably less than the outside diameter of the barrel.

Exposure Tables for Motion Picture Work.

D. E. Denton, N. Y. C., inquires:

> Can you tell me whether there has been any data given in your publication, the Moving Picture World, regarding correct exposure for the moving picture camera?
> If not, can you suggest any other source of information on this subject?

With a little calculation almost any reliable exposure tables may be used for the motion picture camera. As the shutter revolves sixteen times per second it required one-sixteenth second for the shutter to turn once; if it has an opening which is one-half of the circumference the exposure given is one-half of one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second; a one-third opening, one-forty-eighth, etc. Now the diaphragm numbers on a lens, whether they be U. S. or F system, are arranged so that each higher number gives just half the exposure of the one below it. Also, U. S. 16 and F 16 are equal. Now let us figure: Suppose our table of exposure says that under the conditions that obtain where we wish to work that the normal exposure is one-fourth second at U. S. thirty-two. The next lower stop in U. S. 16, which is twice as fast, therefore, at U. S. 16 we can expose in one-eighth second. Now our cinematograph lens is perhaps marked in the F system. F 11 is next below F 16 with an exposure of one-sixteenth second. The most we can give is one-thirty-two second with our shutter as far open as we can use it, we must open our diaphragm still further in order to get enough light through our lens to make the picture in one-thirty-two seconds. F 8 is the next diaphragm number giving an exposure in half the time as F 11; one-half of one-sixteenth is one-thirty-two, therefore, if we set the diaphragm at F 8 and turn at normal speed we will have a correctly exposed negative.

Exposure meters are simpler yet, as when they are set to satisfy the conditions under which you are working, the correct diaphragm number will always be found opposite a mark which you can make in the exposure column at the spot corresponding to your estimated shutter time.

The Watkins Kinematograph Exposure Meter, invented by Alfred Watkins, is a scientifically accurate exposure meter, which shows in a few seconds the correct lens aperture to use under any condition of light, at any time and in any place, or if the lens aperture is constant, it determines the correct shutter opening. Every operator should have one of these perfect little meters, which is no larger than a lady's watch, and may be carried in the vest pocket.

Besides being an accurate meter, this instrument is supplied with a chain and ball, which can be used as a half-second pendulum, thus making a watch unnecessary for timing. It is also of value in timing the crank revolutions, one revolution per half second being considered standard. The weight, with chain and pendulum is 2½ ounces.

Color Photography.

Probably many of the readers of this department are interested in color photography, and while the following relates only to still photography, it is only a step farther to the motion picture in natural colors. In a letter Nelson, Northwestern correspondent of the Moving Picture World, refers to slides in color made by the Paget process.

> While I am on the subject of photography (I might appropriately call your attention to some natural color slides which Henry Berger of Portland has made of the new Columbia River Highway. Mr. Berger uses the Paget process of natural color photography and the New York representatives of the process advises that he has achieved greater success with it than any other man in the country. Samuel Hill, one of the Hill family owning the Northern Pacific Railroad, has a set of hand-colored slides of the Columbia Highway for which it is related he paid an enormous price, but Mr. Berger's pictures photographed in natural colors absolutely eclipse anything Mr. Hill has. The slides were shown the visiting Shriners in Portland recently. The Columbia River has thousands of splendid color photography subjects and Mr. Berger has selected the best of them for his slides. He anticipates going to New York shortly with the collection under the auspices of the Portland Chamber of Commerce.

Readers of this column who are in easy reach of New York will be well repaid for a visit to the exhibition of color photographs by the Hess-Ives process, a notice of which is appended:

> You are respectfully invited to an exhibition of color photography by the Hess-Ives Process, which we are holding during this week in the Book Shop on the main floor at the 10th St. and 4th Ave. corner of the old Stewart Building. This exhibition will be continued next week in the Wanamaker Auditorium, First Gallery, New Building, in connection with Daily Lectures on Color Photography, particulars of which will be announced in the newspapers.
>
> Having completed arrangements for the territory with the manufacturers, we soon expect to be in a position to lease to professional photographers, the Hichrographic Outfit on yearly rental, which arrangement carries with it a special trade discount.
>
> The direct representative of the Hess-Ives Corporation is in charge of this special exhibition and will be with us during the balance of this week.
> We respectfully suggest that you, as well as other members of your firm, attend this exhibition of colored photographic prints and interview the factory representative, who will be glad to furnish all details in connection with the new Hess-Ives invention for producing color photographs on paper.
>
> Trusting to have the pleasure of personally meeting you, I remain, Sincerely yours,
>
> (Signed) LOUIS JAY GERSON,
> Manager, Photographic Section, JOHN WANAMAKER, New York.

A number of very beautiful examples taken by this new process which Mr. Ives has worked for many years to perfect to a stage within the scope of the ordinary amateur photographer are shown. Unlike the Autochrome, Paget, and other screen plate processes, prints can be made on paper and may also be enlarged and reduced, as is now done with the black and white prints.

The cameras and special tripack plates are now on the market and the color enthusiast can now delight his soul in a riot of prismatic hues.

Shutter Position.

L. J. D., Louisville, Ky., asks:

> (1) Will you kindly advise me if there would be any improvement in a picture projected on a moving picture machine if the shutter were so placed as to cut the light rays in the center of the lens jacket, between the front and back lens at the point where the rays of light cross?
>
> (2) Would this make an improvement over placing the shutter in front of the lens or behind the lens, as is now being done in motion picture projection?
>
> (3) Would it give more light?
>
> (4) Would it give better definition?
>
> (5) Would it reduce the flicker?
>
> (6) Would there be any difference noticeable on the screen?
> (7) Has this method of interrupting the light ever been tried in photography or motion picture projection?

(1) Before answering this question it is well to state that the rays of light do not cross in the lens in the sense that the light rays cross in a point or within a small area. This is a very common misapprehension caused by misleading diagrams which are supposed to represent the path of the light rays in a projection system. The nearest approach to a point where the light rays cross is a place a short distance in front of the projection lens. This point may be found by moving a card back and forth towards and away from the lens until an image of the arc is focused on the card. As the image formed is so exceedingly brilliant that it is difficult to look at, it is well to cut down the light either by a card with a quarter inch perforation in its center placed before the condensers in the slide holder or a piece of heavily tinted glass. For the best results the shutter should operate at this point.

(2) No. (3) No. (4) No. (5) No.

(6). It would require a much larger shutter and present a much more difficult mechanical construction to equal the results obtained by a before the lens shutter.

(7) I do not know if it has been used in projection, probably it has. I have used it for special work in photography and it is not so good except under extra special conditions.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

SQUEALS ON WHEELS (MinA), Sept. 2.—The comic motive of this one-reel farce lends itself to effective treatment on the screen. The fun is kept moving at a lively pace and the laughs occur with gratifying frequency.

CAUGHT (Essanay), Sept. 6.—Political intrigue furnishes the motive for this three-reel drama, written by Charles Bradley. The plot is a complicated one, but the interest is well sustained. A novel railroad scene is introduced, and the production is a heavy one. Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo do their customary dependable work in the leading roles, the cast also including Richard Taber, Robert Russell, Frederick Wood, Thos. Cummerford, F. A. Wade and Peggy Sweeny.

TEASING A TORNADO (Lubin), Sept. 6.—Romaine Fielding is responsible for the scenario and producing of this one-reel drama. Like most of Mr. Fielding's work, it deals with life in the open, and is a decidedly likable photoplay. Jack Lawton and Vinnie Burns act the leading characters with skill.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 71, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 6.—The launching of the U. S. destroyer Porter, at Philadelphia, leads the list and is followed by: National Guard drilling, Boston; S. S. Mongolia leaving San Francisco; fortress in Serbia; Cameron Coffey, four-year-old swimmer, San Francisco; Great Falls, Virginia River, Va.; Rangers catch Mexican bandits, Norris, Tex.; German Envoy, Washington; National Guard and Naval Review, Boston.

THE MYSTIC BALL (Selig), Sept. 6.—The underhand methods of a disreputable bucket shop are unmasked in this two-reel drama, written by Wallace C. Clifton. A touch of mysticism is given to the play by introducing a magic crystal during the action. The drama is interesting, and is well played by George Larkin, Fritzi Brunette and a well-balanced cast.

MRS. JARR AND THE SOCIETY CIRCUS (The Jarr Family Series, No. 18) (Vitagraph), Sept. 6.—Florence Natol as Gertrude, the Jarr servant, is the central figure in this one-reel comedy which cleverly hits off one of the weaknesses of a certain grade of society. The climax is not up to the rest of the reel.

NEARLY A BRIDE (Kalem), Sept. 7.—An amusing burlesque comedy, in which Bud Duncan, Dave Morris and Ethel Teare make most of the fun, this one-reel photoplay may be depended upon to create its share of smiles and laughs.

FINN AND HADDIE (Lubin), Sept. 7.—Frank Moulan, the well-known comic opera comedian, makes his screen debut in this one-reel farce. Mr. Moulan has any number of comic devices in his box of tricks and uses them to good advantage in his first photoplay engagement. Denman Maley is also an efficient member of the cast. The scenario was written by Mr. Moulan and Mr. Maley.

NEVER AGAIN (Selig), Sept. 7.—Tom Mix has turned temperance advocate in this one-reel drama, written and produced and acted in by himself. The story is a natural bit of human experience. Mr. Mix is not the only good actor in the cast, his support including Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan and Leo Maloney.

THE KIDNAPPED STOCKBROKER (Vitagraph), Sept. 7.—A haunted house plays an important part in this two-reel drama, written by Elizabeth Eastwood. The author has handled her material with a practiced hand and furnished a large supply of thrills. Jay Dwiggins, Dorothy Kelly, Louise Beaudet and William Dunk are members of an excellent cast. Miss Kelly, incidentally, shows marked skill at tree climbing.

CARTOONS ON THE BEACH (Edison), Sept. 8.—Three of Raoul Barre's clever cartoons are included in this one-reel offering, "The Kelly Kid's Bathing Adventure," "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland" and "A Sand Microbe Flirtation." They are all up to Mr. Barre's past performances. O. W. Foster and Gladys Leslie are in the cast of "humans."

THE FABLE OF HAZEL'S TWO HUSBANDS AND WHAT BECAME OF THEM (Essanay), Sept. 8.—George Ade was long on title when he named this one-reel comedy, but not the least little bit short on fun. The fable reflects life from a comic angle and drives home several amusing truths. Ruth Stonehouse, Charles J. Shine and Eugene Acker make up the acting trio.

THE SIREN (Vitagraph), Sept. 8.—The buoyancy and pleasing personality of Margaret Gibson does much to make this one-reel comedy convincing. The story is a simple one, but it is not without appeal, and Miss Gibson gives it a strong atmosphere of reality. Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer and Gretchen Lederer are in the cast.

THE BROKEN WRIST (Biograph), Sept. 9.—This one-reel drama involves two doctors and a nurse, and the big situation is brought about by the help of a skeleton. The story is original and grim. Charles Perley, Herbert Barrington and Augusta Anderson are in the cast.

A QUIET LITTLE GAME (Essanay), Sept. 9.—A one-reel comedy in which Harry Todd, Ben Turpin, Margaret Joslin and a clever cast have many opportunities for creating laughter.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 72, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 9.—U. S. troops at Brownsville, Tex.; motor speedway, Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; Wm. R. Hearst phoning to New York and Chicago from his ranch in California; National golf tourney, Detroit; on the Serbian battle line; prisoners welcoming Warden at Ossining, N. Y.; Tennis stars at Forest Hill, N. Y.; Survivors of the Arabic arrive in New York on the St. Paul; alligator farm, Los Angeles, comprises the news items of this number.

THE ROMANCE OF A HANDKERCHIEF (Vitagraph), Sept. 9.—W. A. Tremayne, who has a well-deserved reputation as a playwright of the spoken drama, has not lost his cunning in the making of comedy for the screen. This one-reeler is a rare treat, the acting of Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Van Dyke Brooke bringing out all the good points. Mr. Brooke has also produced the picture with decided skill.

THE LITTLE SINGER (Kalem), Sept. 10.—The romance in this one-reel reissue is very appealing, the excellent acting of Alice Joyce, Earle Roxe and little Adelaide Lawrence bringing out the story very effectively.

JEALOUSY (Lubin), Sept. 10.—While this one-reel comedy employs the time-honored dream motive, it is so cleverly introduced and the rest of the story is so entertaining, that it furnishes its own excuse for being used. Robert Gray, George Routh, Dorothy Barrett and Helen Eddy complete a competent cast.

UNLUCKY LOUEY (Vitagraph), Sept. 10.—Sidney Drew comes very near being the whole thing in this one-reel farce. The theme is a happy one, and Mr. Drew seems to have as much fun playing the part as an audience does watching him.

BREAKING THE SHACKLES (Edison), Sept. 11.—Herbert Prior, Margaret Prussing, Charles Sutton and Robert Brower carry the weight of the acting in this strong one-reel drama, written by Frank Hart. The interest is sustained all through the reel.

NERVES OF STEEL (Episode No. 44 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Sept. 11.—E. W. Matlack has found a new and particularly daring stunt for Helen to attempt in this one-reel drama. She accomplishes it safely and is assisted in the acting by Robyn Adair and Rex Downs.

QUEENIE OF THE NILE (Lubin), Sept. 11.—The spirit of burlesque runs riot through this one-reel photoplay, written by Epes W. Sargent, with a view to giving Billie Reeves full sway for his comic genius. Billie holds sway, all right, and is assisted very effectively by Mae Hotely. This picture was reviewed at length on page 2006, issue of Sept. 18, by Louis Reeves Harrison.

General Film Company Specials.

HIS CRUCIBLE (Essanay), Sept. 7.—This three-reel drama is a trifle slow in getting underway, but once the story is made clear, it proves decidedly worth while. It was written by William H. Lippert, and treats of a gang of smugglers and their efforts to entrap the hero. Nell Craig, Betty Scott, Edmund F. Cobb, John Cossar and Grant Foreman are members of a commendable cast.

WHEN THIEVES FALL OUT (Mysteries of the Grand Hotel, Episode No. 8) (Kalem), Sept. 8.—Hamilton Smith has shown a great deal of originality in plotting this two-reel addition to his Grand Hotel Series. The incidents are full of excitement and demand strenuous efforts from the cast, which includes Frank Jonasson, Paul C. Hurst, Marin Sais and True Boardman.

THE IRISH IN AMERICA (Lubin), Sept. 8.—Sidney Olcott and Miss Valentine Grant have the leading roles in this three-reel drama with scenes laid in Ireland and America. The photoplay is one of the best of its class, and was written and produced by Mr. Walcott.

ROMANCE AS A REMEDY (Lubin), Sept. 9.—A double-headed love affair is carried through the two-reels of this comedy, written by Shannon Fife. The material furnishes a number of good comedy complications and the author has used them to excellent advantage. William Cohill, Lillie Leslie, Clarance, Jay Elmer and Ann Carmichael are the quartet of lovers.

'NEATH CALVARY'S SHADOW (Selig), Sept. 9.—W. H. Lippert's three-reel drama has a well-constructed plot and illustrates the maxim: "The woman always pays." The situation at the finish is a strong one, and the author has not hesitated to deal truthfully with the girl whose life has been wrecked. Wheeler Oakman, Fritzi Brunette and Frank Mayo do excellent work in their respective roles.

WHAT HAPPENED ON THE BARBUDA (Edison), Sept. 10.—No better three-reel drama of adventure on shipboard and on a desert island has been shown on the screen than this photoplay, by William C. Pratt. It has been realistically produced by Langdon West, the company including Gladys Hulette, Pat O'Malley, Augustus Phillips, William West, Harry Linson and Lawrence White.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THE UNSPECTED ISLES (Rialto), Sept. 8.—The first of this series presents Fania Marinoff in a unique role. The scenario is by Rev. C. J. Harris and William T. Haddock, the director, has made a production of considerable merit. The story is about the South Sea islands. Reviewed at length by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 2007, issue of September 18.

BESSIE'S BACHELOR BOOBS (Falstaff), Sept. 16.—A young country girl punctures auto tires in order to get summer boarders. She holds them up for money in various ways. Later it transpires that she and her father are actors on vacation. The plot is very slight and only fairly amusing.

THE TWINS OF G. L. RANCH (Thanhouser), Sept. 19.—This features the Fairbanks twins. Their father sells some horses and when thieves come one of the twins places the bills inside her doll. The other goes for help. The plot is not very new, but is well acted and the story gets up considerable suspense.

SIMON'S SWIMMING SOULMATE (Falstaff), Sept. 20.—The plot of this is quite unique, but the characterizations, with the exception of the old man, are not particularly appealing. The lovers should have been younger. They swim out to a boat containing the justice of the peace, and are married in the water, with witnesses.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), Sept. 20.—A picture of unusual and scenic interesting beauty. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 2006, issue of September 18.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONES.—A cartoon comedy, on the same reel.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

HIS GUIDING ANGEL (Majestic), Sept. 12.—A two-reel number, featuring Chas. Clary, Gladys Brockwell, O. V. MacDairmid and others. This is a western story of fair strength, in which a gambler falls in love with an actress, whose picture he keeps in his cabin. He saves the girl's brother from disgrace and later breaks the bonds of an old entanglement for the girl, whom he marries at the close. The scene in which the girl attempts blackmail to save her reputation, and those immediately following, are quite dramatic. The picture possesses no great novelty, but is well handled and holds the attention.

HELEN'S BABIES (Thanhouser), Sept. 14.—A very pleasing two-reel screen adaptation to John Habberton's famous novel of the uncle who agreed to take care of his sister's small boys. Harry Benham, Lorraine Huling, The Kidlet and another little fellow appear. The children's mischievous antics keep the uncle in hot water all the time and interfere seriously with his love affair. This should prove an appealing comedy number, particularly to the older generation, who will no doubt be glad to see in moving pictures the two kids who "want to see the wheels go round."

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Gaumont), Sept. 17.—A number of strong dramatic interest, with Joseph Levering, Sydney Mason, Bessie Keane and other competent players in the cast. An author in search of material for a novel purposely plays upon his wife's jealousy. The result of this is a murder, for which, by a curious turn of events, the author himself is sentenced to be hanged. In spite of her shattered sensibilities, the wife, by her testimony, saves him from death and there is a happy ending. The story is a strong one and very well presented.

North American Film Corporation

THE SOUL STRANGLERS (American), Sept. 13.—Chapter XX of The Diamond from the Sky, two reels. Powell is still very ill in this instalment, with Vivian, Blair and the other conspirators in charge of him. Esther forces an entrance to the sick room, but Vivian gives the patient a hypodermic injection during her visit, putting him to sleep. Blair begins to weaken when he learns of this misuse of drugs. The diamond is found at the beehive by a mover. He and his pal quarrel over it, and one of them is killed by the falling of a burning tree. The number is entertaining throughout.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 70, 1915, Sept. 1.—The most interesting item of this issue seems to be the wonderful agricultural machines at work. Farmers will surely like to see the power mule. Parisian fashions and the historical items are also noteworthy.

PATHE NEWS NO. 71, 1915, Sept. 4.—Mexican troops make one item of this especially interesting. There are other historical bits that are well worth seeing and the usual Paris fashions in natural colors.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

VIA WIRELESS (Gold Rooster Plays), Sept. 18.—A stirring melodrama offering, whose value comes more from its effective staging and its unusually interesting scenes than from the story, which is weakly constructed and not wholly fresh. The incidents are sensational and are convincingly pictured. It has been reviewed at length in Moving Picture World September 18, 1915.

SOME BABY (Balboa), Sept. 20.—A farce that insures a good many laughs. The situation is first class and the players are lively and amusing. Pretty good.

WORKERS OF THE FRENCH SOUDAN (Pathe Rolin).—On the same reel with the foregoing, it shows intimate glimpses of life in the heart of Africa. The easy skill of these natives in their primitive pursuits is very interesting.

THE TOILERS OF THE SEA (Balboa), Sept. 20. A story of fishing folk, set along the shore. The story is built on a well-known melodrama pattern. The characters are many, and have been well worked in by the author and the players give life to them in a way that raises the value of the picture. This, with its many excellent bits of realism, glimpses of shore life, the ocean and the fishermen's cabins, make it a commendable offering. The photography is not up to modern standard.

THE SHATTERED PARCHMENT (Episode 4 of "Neal of the Navy") (Panama Films—Pathe Program), Sept. 22.—This two-reel instalment of the big serial has the punch of action and justifies the attention the public is giving the serial.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 183 (Universal), Sept. 8.—An exceptionally interesting number, containing war scenes and pleasing features taken in various parts of the United States.

BEACH BIRDS (L-KO), Sept. 19.—A low comedy number, with Hank Mann, Peggy Pearce and Fatty Voss in the cast. Three married couples mix up in a general flirtation, all attired in bathing costumes. The tone is not good and the fun, such as it is, is entirely of a knockabout sort.

HIS HOME COMING (Imp), Sept. 21.—A comedy number by George A. Lessing, featuring King Baggot, Marie Wierman and others. The young wife rents the home during the husband's absence and on his return he creates a sensation by entering the room of another man's wife. Good comedy method has been employed in this and a delicate situation is made, not only entirely acceptable, but very amusing. A good number.

THE HAM ACTORS (Powers), Sept 23. A trained pig act, which will amuse people who have never seen young porkers performing. The stunts are amusing and the photography good.

LIFE OF THE FROG Sept. 23.—An educational subject on the same reel.

WHEN LIZZIE WENT TO SEA (Nestor), Sept. 24.—A comedy number, by Al E. Christie, featuring Victoria Forde, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The fruit girl is abducted by her Italian lover, but Eddie rescues her after many adventures. There is plenty of action in this and the characterizations are of a burlesque sort. It makes quite an amusing offering.

HE WOULDN'T SUPPORT HIS WIFE (Joker), Sept. 25.—A typical Joker comedy, by Allen Curtis, featuring Gale Henry, Bob Vernon and Wm. Franey. The wife has her lazy husband put in jail and watches him work with the other convicts. He escapes and complications follow. Fairly amusing.

EVERY MAN'S MONEY (Powers), Sept. 25.—A one-reel drama by Harvey Gates, featuring Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn. The plot concerns a young man married for his money as the result of an intrigue framed up by the girl's uncle. The young man loses his money, but retains the girl's love. This is well constructed and interesting. The leading man does too much posing to get the best effect on the screen.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE PINE'S REVENGE (Rex), Sept. 19.—A two-reel story of the pine woods, with Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney and Millard K. Wilson in the cast. It pictures the way in which a burning pine tree falls upon and destroys the outlaw who had been starting forest fires. The scenes taken in the pine forest are very attractive and the story worked out in an entertaining manner. The hero comes out on top after many troubles and is made head forest ranger.

UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES (Broadway Universal Features), Sept. 20. Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 1192, issue of August 28.

THE TENOR (Gold Seal), Sept. 21.—A three-reel number featuring Hobart Henly in a double role, Carmen Phillips, Lucy Peyton, Walter Belasco and Gretchen Lederer. The story itself has quite a strong interest, through the picturing of the young doctor as a dope fiend was somewhat over done. The settings are also unattractive in places, notably the cheap studio scene from the office window. The story rounds up well in spite of its several shortcomings and makes a fair production as a whole.

SCANDAL IN THE FAMILY (L-KO), Sept. 22.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring May Emory, Hank Mann, Gertrude Selby, Reggie Morris and others. This begins with a conventional park flirtation with some rather laughable incidents. Later the plot is complicated by Reggie disguised as a flirtatious young lady and a general mixup follows. There is not much novelty in this, but it will bring some laughter.

THE CRY OF THE FIRST BORN (Laemmle), Sept. 23.—A three-reel picture with a tragic story of the Hawaiian islands, written by Olga Printzlau Clark. It brings before the observer a series of scenes so convincingly written that he forgets the weaker features of the production and thinks only of the emotional drama set before him. The story is well constructed and not overdrawn in any way. Its short-comings are in the ordinary character of the settings and the uneven photography. Reviewed at length on page 2006, issue of September 18, by Robert C. McElravy.

WHEN THE CALL CAME (Imp), Sept. 24.—One of Bruno Lessing's short stories adapted to the screen in two reels. The jewess and the minister's son grow up as neighbors and love each other. When arrangements are made for her to marry one of her own people she rebels and flees to her lover. But when the latter, now an ordained minister, is called to take charge of a pulpit, she feels that his way is not for her and returns home. This is sincerely presented and holds the interest closely. The betrothal celebration made a unique feature.

CURING BILL (Banner), Sept. 13.—The author of this picture resorted to a hackneyed situation in which a lazy man, who feigns illness, is frightened into activity by the domineering woman of the household. Passable entertainment for a not too critical audience.

A SHATTERED ROMANCE (Deer), Sept. 13.—The not unusual story of a young artist who is tempted to leave his wife for the sake of the pretty society woman, whose portrait he paints, is presented with some fresh touches in this two-part drama. Early in the first reel the director made effective use of sea-lions found on the California beach, and later on, an eagle plays a novel part in the action. A satisfactory offering carefully directed.

LOVE AND INSTALLMENTS (Federal), Sept. 13.—There is little to recommend in this slapstick comedy. Work as they may, the actors seldom succeed in making their antics amusing.

HIS MASTERPIECE (Liberty), Sept. 13.—Emory Johnson, True Boardman and others, in a generally capable company, present this two-reel melodrama with commendable sincerity. The story of a stolen play and of the return of the rightful author in time to reap the rewards, is made interesting and at times exciting.

FOR HIS WIFE'S SAKE (Navajo), Sept. 13.—While the story in this two-part melodrama may strike an audience as being a bit extravagant, it probably will hold the attention. The hero of the tale robs a stage coach that he may get money to send to his sick wife, not knowing that friendly disposed cowboys have already paid the expenses of a health-restoring operation. William Parsons and Lucille Younge carry the principal roles in this production.

FAST AND FURIOUS (Ramona), Sept. 13.—A burlesque boxing bout that supplies two reels of quick action likely to entertain. Rube Miller is the chief performer. His experiences while preparing for the fight and when in the actual ring encounter, are varied and make good material for a picture of the type.

THE PRICE SHE PAID (Santa Barbara), Sept. 13.—With the opening scene of this two-part melodrama, the spectator is plunged into an exciting story that is skillfully developed. In her effort to save her husband from ruin, a woman goes to the home of a man who has it in his power to aid him. It happens that her host is shot on that very night and, of course, she is accused of murder. Fritzi Brunette and John Prescott give able performances of emotional roles.

LEW WALLACE'S HEIR SUES KLAW & ERLANGER.

The proposed staging in a moving picture feature of the dramatized version of the late Gen. Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur" has bumped into a legal conflict. Harper & Brothers and Henry L. Wallace, only son and sole heir of the author, have filed a suit in equity in the United States District Court praying for an injunction against Marc Klaw and Abraham L. Erlanger, as individuals and copartners, to prevent them from making a feature film of the play.

The original copyright of both book and play ran out some years ago, but in 1908 Mr. Wallace, his father and mother both having died early in this century, renewed the copyright on both productions. For more than twenty years Klaw & Erlanger, under a contract with the author and publishers, have held the exclusive right to produce the dramatized version, written by William Young for the owners and publishers.

At the time this contract was made, moving pictures were unheard of. Lately, with the increase in public interest in the film plays, the leading exponents have been arranging to stage and screen many of the masterpieces of the various playwrights. Klaw & Erlanger, the bill recites, claim the right to produce "Ben Hur" on the screen under their general contractual rights as exclusive producers of the play. They, it is urged, assert that this contract covers any and all kinds of theatrical production. The plaintiffs, however, assert that inasmuch as moving pictures were really undreamed of when the contract was made, nothing in the contract can be applied to cover such an enterprise. The motion for a permanent injunction will be called at an early date.

MADGE EVANS UNDER CONTRACT.

Little Miss Madge Evans, blonde and five and one-half years old, known for her beauty and for her clever work in World Film Corporation Features, has been placed under contract by World Film. That the young lady is pleased could not be doubted by anyone who talked with her for more than one minute.

Fields Makes Counterclaim

Alleges Original Contract with Peerless Company Was Inequitable and Asks $10,000 Damages.

LEW FIELDS has filed his answer in the suit in equity in the United States District Court, filed sometime ago by the Peerless Feature Producing Company, of New Jersey. The bill charges the comedian with breach of contract and demands damages, an injunction to be made permanent on the hearing of the issues to prevent Fields from posing for any moving picture plays for other than the Peerless Company and for any other relief that may be equitable. The bill says $5,000 has already been paid to Fields as an advance for his services and this the company wants back. It also wishes the court to compel the comedian to comply with the terms of his contract.

The answer, made in Chicago, where Fields is playing, was verified under oath and is accompanied by affidavits traversing the bill in some particulars and admitting the facts set up in others. Fields admits he signed the contract set up in the bill; but he says he signed it in a hurry without reading it, on an afternoon when he was rushing to Philadelphia to keep an engagement. When he read it later, he swears, he found it did not carry out the terms agreed upon in the conference with the Peerless people. He says a modified verbal contract was made whereby he was to receive $10,000 flat for posing in two feature photoplays for the Peerless Company.

He says that he was engaged in theatrical work up to and including April 12 last and that this was known and agreed to by the plaintiff company. He was ready and proffered his services after that date, but says the plaintiff was not ready and has never been ready to carry out its part of the contract. He is certain four months is a reasonable time after the time set for posing in which the complaining company should have been ready to proceed. He denies that he should be bound until October, holding that length of time to be unreasonable.

Fields admits having made a contract with the Keystone Company under the terms of which he is to receive some $200,000. He says that the action of the Peerless people has prevented him from lucrative offers; that the contract being exclusive in its terms is inequitable, and that he has been damaged in at least $10,000. He demands this sum on a counterclaim, says the failure of the plaintiff to comply with its contract has hurt him to the amount of the advance of $5,000 which he sets up as an offset and then asks damages because of the interruption of his affairs.

Arguments on the prayer for a temporary injunction were heard Thursday last by Judge Charles M. Hough. On the question of the unfairness of the contract the court remarked that a written contract spoke for itself and its terms were enforceable. Counsel for Fields were granted until the next day to file answer and supporting affidavits and counsel for the plaintiff until Monday to reply. Briefs for both sides were filed Thursday, September 16

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY SUES RELIANCE.

Rev. Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, of Yonkers, has filed a suit in equity in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York against the Reliance Moving Picture Corporation, the Mutual Film Corporation and the Frank A. Munsey Company, alleging infringement of the copyright of the clergyman's short story, "A Child of God."

A peculiar feature of the action is, as set out on the bill in equity, that Dr. Brady's attention first was directed to the alleged infringement by his observing an advertisement in the Moving Picture World, of the proposed projection of the films. This advertisement was printed in the issue of May 1 last. It called attention to the proposed staging of "Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, 'A Child of God'," under the auspices of the Reliance Company as producer and the Mutual Company as distributor. The advertisement is set out in full and is made an exhibit in the bill.

According to the complaint, Dr. Brady sold the story to the Munsey Company in 1906, reserving all book and dramatic rights to himself. Munsey had merely the right of first publication in serial form in his magazine. This was done and the matter closed for the time. Now the minister comes into a court of equity demanding an accounting, an injunction against all the concerns to prevent any further distribution or rental or producing of films and for such damages as may be found justly due. He also asks that the Munsey Company be required to turn over to him as author all book and dramatic rights, asserting that in truth and fact he never parted therewith. The defendants have not yet answered the bill, but the case is on motion calendar for the next call.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

A Slap at the $2 Film Program.

THE St. Louis Post-Dispatch, in the issue of September 9, gives an editorial whack at the $2-a-seat film productions. The whack at the scale of high prices, which the Post-Dispatch fears is impending, is accompanied by a left-handed slap at the moving picture itself, the writer having stumbled on the rather peculiar heading, "Holding the Mirror Up to the Mirror." But read the editorial:

Plans for killing the goose that lays the film show golden eggs are rapidly being perfected. It is the exact plan by which the goose that laid the legitimate drama golden eggs was killed. Elaborate film show productions for which $2 a seat will be charged are announced. Presumably the $2.50, the $3 and even the $5-a-seat movies will make an early appearance.

The movies gained their astounding popularity in part because they showed the possibilities of an ingenious and novel invention, but principally because they were very cheap. The original cost of a production has slight bearing on the price at which the public is permitted a view. A film once made can be reproduced almost indefinitely.

While too sweeping, the statement that the attraction in the "legitimate" which was really worth $2 never existed may have some truth as applied to all but a very small minority of attractions. At least, by exacting more than the traffic would bear, the trust caused the regular theatricals to fall into a bad way. Film show prosperity, great as it is, may fall into the same bad way with an even more resounding thud.

If the legitimate drama holds the mirror up to nature—and very mistily, too, ofttimes—the film show only holds the mirror up to the mirror. Seats at $2 or even more absurd prices are not necessarily an index of the cost of a movies production. They may be only an indication that the proprietors need the money.

The plans referred to, in the case of moving pictures, exist only in the writer's imgination. No filmed production has been ever offered at the $2 price, and down, save "The Birth of a Nation." The plan on which the Griffith production was made was the most lavish ever dreamed of for moving pictures, and the results on the screen are the most compelling, thus far, in the making of moving pictures.

The plan that brought a temporary set-back to legitimate drama aimed directly at the exploitation of theatregoers. Poor plays, with weak, cheap casts and tawdry scenery and effects, were offered at extreme admission prices.

Thus far we have heard no complaints against the $2-and-down prices charged for "The Birth of a Nation," as the production is big enough to stand the strain; but we do fear for the future of the $2 moving picture programs of the Triangle Film Corporation proposed at the Studebaker, in Chicago.

It is difficult to understand what the writer means by the catch phrase, "holding the mirror up to the mirror." The drama, according to the Shakespearean metaphor, was the mirror so held up as to reflect nature in all its forms, passions, moods, etc. By means of the camera, in the taking of a moving picture, the forms, and the expression of moods, passions, etc., are registered on a piece of negative film and afterwards printed on a positive film. By means of a projecting machine these are thrown on a screen and thence reflected on the retina. Where, in this process, have we the action expressed in the phrase, "holding the mirror up to the mirror?" Or is this a roundabout way of drawing attention to the lack of the human voice and real bodily presence in moving pictures?

Moving Picture and Automobile Linked.

The similarity of the effect of the moving picture and of the automobile on human life has been referred to by several writers of prominence lately. Dr. Charles F. Thwing, president of the Western Reserve University, is the most recent contributor to the subject, as shown in the following article.

The automobile and the moving picture, two of the newest material forces in American life, so unlike in themselves, are yet having a similarly tremendous effect on American character.

They represent enlargement of vision, the receiving of new impressions, the enjoyment of unique experiences.

They lessen provincialism and localism in knowledge, feeling and appreciation. They help to make a large citizenship.

The automobile bears one into parts of the world where the railroad cannot easily penetrate, and opens coverts of nature, numerous and entrancing. The result is the enlargement of seeing and of all the forces of observation.

A similar effect is wrought by the moving picture. If the automobile bears one into all the earth, the moving picture bears all the earth to man. He sees, even if he does not feel, and sometimes he feels, all that belongs to man.

Human experiences of war and peace, of wealth and penury, of integrity and intrigue, of statecraft and handicraft, become his.

These are good results, but there are also possible dangers. We must see to it that sensation and sentiment do not kill thought. In other words, that insight is not partially sacrificed to sight.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Jack Pickford stopped over in Chicago Wednesday, September 8, on his way to the Pacific Coast, where he will join one of the Selig companies. Mr. Pickford is only 19 years of age, yet he has acted before the camera for nearly seven years. He was in knee breeches when he appeared in his first role. He can claim experience in the stock companies of Biograph, Pathe, Famous Players and Reliance, in which he has played some important roles. He has appeared in "Wild Flower," "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "The Love Route," "Girl of Yesterday," etc. Mr. Pickford has a delightful personality and a face that shows well on the screen. "I am glad to have the opportunity of appearing in Selig productions," he said while in Chicago. "The artistic aims of Mr. Selig are so well known, and the pleasant environments of the Selig companies so highly appreciated by moving picture actors, that I feel a sense of gratification in the prospect of affiliating with the members." Mr. Pickford, it is understood, will be cast for several important roles on his arrival at Los Angeles.

Arthur Lucas, general supervisor of exchanges for the Triangle Film Corporation, and Henry Walthall, one of Essanay's star players, accompanied A. MacArthur, Jr., New York advertising manager of the Moving Picture World, to Chicago on the Twentieth Century, Sunday, September 12. Mr. MacArthur came to fill the place of Paul C. Hinz, Chicago business representative of the World, who is now spending a well earned vacation in New York City with relatives. Mr. Lucas will remain in the city a few days in the interests of his company, and will then go to the Pacific Coast by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. On the journey, Mr. Walthall told a good story on himself. During the early run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Illinois theatre, Mr. Walthall, who appears in the role of Colonel Cameron in that production, invited five good friends to accompany him to the show one evening. Much to his chagrin, when presenting himself at the box office, he was obliged to decorate the coin sill with twelve good American "bucks." Needless to say, Mr. Walthall's companions enjoyed the show hugely.

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago has announced its next regular meeting for Wednesday evening, September 15. A dinner will be given at the Movie Inn, at 6:30 p. m. Several matters of great interest to the members will be discussed. The reports of the various committees will be heard and a decision will probably be made as to whether or not the club can afford to maintain a room for the exclusive use of its members. Henry B. Walthall, of the Essanay players, will be the star guest for the occasion and will deliver an address on the making of a photoplay. A resolution was passed at the last meeting that each member of the club be required to have his membership card at this meeting, showing that his dues for 1915 has been paid. If any member has overlooked his dues he is requested to send a check to the treasurer for the amount.

W. C. Hoffman, F. O. Nielsen's Illinois representative for "The Spoilers," spent a day in the city last week, after concluding twelve months' work in booking that production. Mr. Hoffman stated that records of 18 and 20 days had been made in several of the prominent cities in the state. He reported a steady increase in bookings for "The Spoilers" during the summer months.

Martin Sachs, manager of the Vitagraph and Biograph theaters, this city, paid us a call last week. He stated that Lubliner & Trinz will open the Paramount theater, 2633-49

Milwaukee avenue, on October 2. In addition to managing the Vitagraph and Biograph theaters, Mr. Sachs will also manage the Paramount. This house seats 1,500 and will charge an admission of 10 cents for programs consisting of Paramount features, V-L-S-E, Kleine-Edison, Fox and Equitable. A pipe organ is installed, which will be accompanied by a seven-piece orchestra. Two Simplex machines are installed. Lubliner & Trinz will open several other new houses about February 1, which will also be in charge of Mr. Sachs. Mr. Sachs reported excellent business for the Vitagraph and Biograph theaters.

James Bradbury, whose work in the role of the absent-minded doctor in "Molly and I," at the La Salle theater, has given much pleasure and amusement to playgoers, is also appearing in the part of the undertaker, in Selig's production of Charles Hoyt's famous comedy, "A Milk White Flag," which is now being filmed at the Chicago studio. Otis Harlan appears in the principal role.

It is understood that the Strand Theater Company will transform the old panoramic structure known as the Globe theater, Wabash avenue and Seventh street, into the new Strand theater, the cost being placed at $100,000. E. C. Divine, president of the Strand Theater Company, made the announcement last week that the Globe had been leased for a number of years. The last presentation at Orchestra Hall under the Strand management will be given Saturday evening, October 9. It has been stated that nearly 1,000,000 paid admissions were made at Orchestra Hall during the last four months, under the Strand management.

A recent cablegram from Paris announced that Sarah Bernhardt would never appear on the stage again, and that she had canceled her American engagement, due to the fact that her artificial leg had failed her. Following closely in the wake of that cablegram, another appeared denying the statement in toto. "I am not abandoning my tour in America," said Madame Bernhardt in the latest dispatch. "I have asked for two months' time in order to form a new company, as all the actors who were with me on my previous tour are serving in the army, four having been killed. Vive la France!" The Photoplay Releasing Company's two-reel subject, "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," has been taking very well in Chicago and surrounding territory, according to President Gollos, of that company.

"The motion picture is no more harmful to the stage than the victrola to grand opera," said Walker Whiteside, the well known actor, to Louella O. Parsons, photoplay editor of the Chicago Herald, one day last week. "The record that preserves the exquisite notes in the prima donna's voice is valuable to history, just as the films which register 'The Melting Pot' and other screen features are something to hand down to posterity. In former years, when death called the actor, we had only an inanimate piece of cardboard with a still picture to recall to our minds the art that had charmed so many. Now we have the film—artistic, wonderful and seemingly alive. Edeson, Mantell and Lackaye are in the 'movies' to stay," continued Mr. Whiteside. "Mr. Lackaye says it is the life for him. David W. Griffith, the producer, was with me in the 'Red Cockade,' some fifteen years ago. He was forever writing or reading something from a manuscript which he carried with him. I used to joke with him about his plays. Several times he did write plays that just missed being accepted. Even then—and Griffith was very young—he had a remarkable personality. I remember he asked for a raise in salary. He was getting $18 a week and he wanted $20. We gave it to him and he agreed to stay with us." Mr. Whiteside had only good things to say of the pictures and hopes, some day, to bring "The Ragged Messenger," his present starring vehicle, to the screen.

"The Silent Voice" with Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow in the leading roles, is on at the Ziegfeld theater during the current week. The daily press, without exception, gives Mr. Bushman unstinted praise for his impersonation of Franklyn Starr, the part played by Otis Skinner in the stage production of the play of that name.

George W. Sammis, the new manager of the Studebaker, under the regime of the Triangle Film Corporation, is again in the city and announces that the first Triangle program at that house will be given the latter part of this month, possibly on Sunday, September 26. The re-decoration and other changes in the theater are now well underway. An invitation presentation of the first week's program will be given Saturday evening, September 25. That program will consist of the following features: Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain" (Ince), Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb" (Griffith), and Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet" (Sennett). It is the intention to change the program weekly, on Sundays.

The Selig-Tribune contest entitled, "Funniest Event in Your Life," has been closed so far as receiving further replies is concerned. The replies have been turned over to the Selig Polyscope Company and the prize will be awarded and announced in about two or three weeks.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Mfg. Co., advises me that the new two-story building added to the Chicago plant will be thoroughly completed about October 1, when the working forces will move into the new offices. The work on this addition to the American plant was considerably delayed by the strike among many trade unions, which was settled several weeks ago.

F. O. Neilsen has informed me that the first presentation in Chicago of "Just Out of College," the sparkling five-reel comedy by George Ade, filmed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, will be given at the Fine Arts theater, Saturday, September 25, and not on September 20, as appeared in his advertisement in this publication in the issue of September 18, through a printer's error. The run at the Fine Arts will be indefinite. Mr. Neilsen is very much gratified with the numerous inquiries that are pouring into the Chicago office, from exhibitors in the five states for which he holds the rights. Over fifty contracts, with some of the best theaters in his territory, were closed last week.

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Neilsen's patriotic five-reel subject, is selling rapidly. The state rights for California, Arizona, Nevada, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, the entire state of New York and northern New Jersey, and Ohio, have been sold up to the present time, September 13. Negotiations are well under way for the sale of the state rights of Oklahoma, Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa, while Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana will be closed in a few days. This will leave in the market the New England states, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota. The rights to the state of Michigan are withheld, as Mr. Neilsen has already booked it extensively from the Chicago office.

F. O. Neilsen has negotiations near completion for the sale of his Kimball and Stevens theaters in this city. Henceforth Mr. Neilsen will devote his entire time and attention to his feature film interests, which have grown to such proportions within a year that he has been forced twice to increase his floor space, and is still cramped for room.

The Bobbs-Merrill Publishing Company has issued a special edition of "The House of a Thousand Candles," filmed recently as a Red Seal Play by the Selig Polyscope Company. The cover presents a late photograph of Miss Grace Darmond, who stars in the Selig production, and the book is embellished with scenes from the play.

The November number of "The Green Book" magazine will contain a very interesting article from the pen of Otis Harlan, the comedian who will play the stellar role in Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," that will be released as a Selig Red Seal Play on October 18. The production will be in five reels and Mr. Harlan will be supported by Grace Darmond, Rita Gould, John Charles, James Bradbury and others. In the article referred to, Mr. Harlan tells of the personal characteristics of Charles Hoyt and of the artistic conditions prevailing in William N. Selig's studios. He illustrates his story with some rare photographs showing Hoyt, Julian Mitchell and others. It may be interesting to note that Mrs. Harlan made an especial journey from Chicago to New York City to unearth these old photographs from an ancient theatrical trunk, for a long time in storage.

MARCUS GETS SOME K. & R. TERRITORY.

Manager Marcus, of the Eastern Booking Offices, 1227 Vine street, Philadelphia, came to New York last Saturday and secured "Silver Threads Among the Gold," the K. & R. Company's new production, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

BIG LABOR DAY FESTIVAL AT THE SELIG ZOO.

Governor Johnson Addresses the Gathering, and the Babies Have a Dress Parade.

COLONEL WM. N. SELIG'S popular Zoo Park was the scene of a gigantic festival on Labor Day when organized labor here held its annual celebration. Many interesting events were provided for the 15,000 or more people which, it is estimated, spent almost the entire day on the grounds. The feature attraction of the program was an address by Governor Hiram W. Johnson of California, who arrived in the afternoon, escorted by the officers of the Labor Day committee. A large number of prominent city and county officials were also present. The Governor spoke at length on labor conditions and California legislation, and was generously applauded by the vast and appreciative audience. Among the many joyful diversions of the day was a baby parade and contest. "Rollo," the wise old Selig trick stork led the parade with a waxen baby in his red beak. After him followed hundreds of infants, some of them in decorated perambulators. Three prizes were given to the prettiest youngsters between 6 months and 3 years of age. Other events were baseball games, races of boys and girls, fat men and fat women, beer drivers and policemen, a circus in which many of the Selig animals participated, and a "jitney dansant" during the entire afternoon. A number of the lively scenes will appear in the Hearst-Selig weekly.

Coming events at the Selig Park are Mexican Independence Day on the 16th of this month, and an Italian Red Cross benefit picnic on the 19th. A number of other events are to follow.

MME. PAVLOWA HONORED.

Lois Weber Gives Big Dinner Party for the Celebrated Dancer.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley gave a dinner party on September 8 at the Alexandria Hotel in honor of Madame Pavlowa, the celebrated Russian dancer, Madame Pavlowa, under the direction of Mrs. Smalley (Lois Weber), has now finished "The Dumb Girl of Portici," the big feature production in which she has been starred by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Among those present were Madame Pavlowa, Mr. and Mrs. Smalley, Mack Sennett, H. P. Caufield, Henry RacRae, Henrietta Crosman, Otis Turner, Myrtle Stedman, Fred Mace, Cleo Madison, Arthur Ford, Douglas Girard, Hobart Henley, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Rawlinson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Le Saint and Mrs. Hobart Bosworth. Following the dinner Madame Pavlowa gave a few of her celebrated dances. Speeches were made by Madame Pavlowa, Mrs. Smalley, Messrs. Mack Sennett, Fred Mace, Otis Turner and others. The dinner was followed by a dance.

BILLY BURKE ARRIVES AT INCEVILLE.

With a few maids, many trunks, and some demonstration, Billie Burke arrived this week at the studios of the Nymph in Inceville. She was met at the train by Mr. Ince and escorted to the camp.

Sir Walter Scott would marvel if he could but see the set that has been built for the first Burke picture, a Scottish story laid in and around old Edinburgh. The main street is that of a quaint village, and is a quarter of a mile in length. It is constructed substantially and cost about $5,000. Artificers have toiled for the past five weeks on this street. One item in the great expense of producing this picture is "props." Three carloads of all kinds of old articles of household use arrived this week, including everything from a bagpipe to a real bottle of "Scots." Mr. Ince has a bundle of real heather on the way over and it will be here in time for the interior scenes which will be made in a few weeks.

ANITA KING MISSES HER WAY.

The "Paramount Girl" Gets Lost in Nevada Wilderness.

Miss Anita King, the plucky little Lasky player, who is crossing the continent in a motor car, lost the road leading from Fallon to Austen, Nev., and almost succumbed from lack of food and exposure. Here is her story as according to a telegram received at the Lasky's studios a few days ago:

Elko, Nev., Sept. 6.—Have been lost and in distress since Saturday. Was stuck in mud up to my waist on Salt Lake Flats, trying to cross Fallon. Worked eleven hours to dig out. Had no food and fell exhausted. Was picked up by three prospectors at 2 A. M. and taken to Lovelock. Started out next day and have not had a place to sleep or found a town until this. Will leave for Salt Lake at once, and if all is well should be there Wednesday. If not, at least I am not a coward. I say I held out to the last breath.

(Signed) ANITA.

As will be remembered Miss King made a record trip of 17 hours and 55 minutes driving alone from Los Angeles to San Francisco.

NO PICTURES WITH MEALS.

Los Angeles City Council Refuses Permission for Moving Pictures in Cafes and Restaurants.

The Public Safety Committee of the City Council has refused this week to consider an application for an ordinance permitting exhibition of moving pictures in cafes and restaurants in Los Angeles. In taking this stand the committee declared that so far as possible one business should not interfere with another.

Chairman Brain of the committee emphatically declared that in his opinion every business in Los Angeles should stand on its own footing and not attempt to encroach upon others.

The attitude of the committee became known when, at the suggestion of Councilman Topham, the committee, by unanimous vote, recommended denial of the request of the Levy Cafe Company for permission to show moving pictures in the Levy Cafe in the afternoon. The application before the committee was to the effect that an ordinance be enacted permitting moving pictures to be shown in cafes between 2 and 6 o'clock in the afternoons.

To grant such permission, the committee said, would be establishing a bad precedent.

"The cafes," said Topham, "have their cabarets. I see no good reason why they should be converted into moving picture theaters."

CHAPLIN AND ESSANAY PLAYERS MAROONED.

Jesse Robbins and Lou Trimbly Nearly Drowned.

While trying to make shore in a small rowboat to secure the services of a launch to take the marooned company from the steamer schooner, Jesse J. Robbins and Lou Trimbly were nearly drowned when the boat capsized just before it reached the breakers. The two men managed to remain atop the skiff and made their way to shore where they were rescued. The company had steamed up from San Pedro to Venice in the 200 foot schooner Vaquero. They had had no food all afternoon and were expecting to go ashore in Venice to eat and stay all night. The gasoline launch that was to have carried them ashore broke a shaft and had to stay in the harbor. No launch was within five miles, so during the early evening Robbins and Trimbly started for shore in the boat, but the accident prevented their successful landing. The hungry company was not rescued until the next morning when two launches were brought from Santa Monica up the bay.

Those who had to remain on the rocking boat all night were Charlie Chaplin, his leading lady, Edna Purviance, Mary Rieger, Lee Hill, Harry Ensign, Bill Armstrong, and other members of the Chaplin-Essanay Company. Director Robbins and Trimbly were the only ones who escaped the ordeal, but they said they would rather have stayed a week on the boat without food than to have fought the heavy surf while saving their own lives. The Venice wireless station tried to signal the ship, but failed on account of the vessel not being equipped with wireless. They semaphored and Chaplin sent back this message: "Help! We're starving and thirsty."

The ship is now lying off Venice and the picture is being made. Scenes are being made for "Shanghaied," the latest funny picture featuring Charlie Chaplin. The entire crew of the vessel is aiding the picture making, and this ought to be a good release.

LUBIN DAY AT SAN DIEGO.

Special Honors to Be Conferred on Mr. Lubin, Who Will Be Present.

THE San Diego Exposition has set aside Saturday, September 25, as Lubin Day, in honor of Siegmund Lubin, head of the great Lubin Manufacturing Company, pioneer producers of photoplays. Mr. Lubin is the only man in his line of industry to be thus signally honored. Not only the city of San Diego and its officials, but the Governor of the State will be there to welcome him and to extend the freedom of the city.

Mr. Lubin left Philadelphia on Wednesday, September 15, and will arrive in San Diego on Friday, the 24th. The same evening the new Lubin studio at Coronado will be officially opened and dedicated by the Mayor of San Diego and the city officials.

Siegmund Lubin.

The next day, Saturday, Mr. Lubin will be escorted to the exposition by President Davidson and the members of his staff. Captain Rifenberick, Military Aide to the President of the exposition, will be Mr. Lubin's escort during his stay in San Diego.

On Mr. Lubin's arrival at the exposition grounds there will be a military parade in his honor and he will review the troops. Then will come a luncheon and Mr. Lubin will be escorted through the exposition grounds and later in the afternoon he will be the guest of honor at a dinner given by the exposition officials.

Mr. Lubin, although born in Berlin, Germany, is essentially a Philadelphian, having lived in the city of brotherly love more than forty years. He arrived in this city with little money but plenty of courage and at once started a little optician store on Eighth street, which still bears his name. More than twenty years ago he began to experiment with animated photography and soon Mr. Lubin's pictures became known throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world. Not only did he make pictures but he invented cameras and projecting machines and improvements to most of those made by others.

Now his various plants constitute a total of the greatest motion picture factories in the world. Besides the great plant and studios at Twentieth street and Indiana avenue the company bearing Mr. Lubin's name has studios at Sixteenth street and Glenwood avenue, a 500 acre estate at Betzwood, Pa., and studios at Jacksonville, Fla., Phoenix, Ariz., Atlantic City, N. J., Coronado, Cal., Los Angeles, and Newport, R. I. Eleven directors and a host of assistant directors and camera men and more than 200 actors and actresses work incessantly. They produce at least two acts of photoplay a day, as well as three to five feature films a month, the largest amount of photoplay produced in a similar plant by any producer in the world.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNES AT SAN DIEGO.

Metro Stars are Crowned King and Queen of Carnival on Motion Picture Day at Panama-California Exposition.

METRO stars shone brightest in the constellation of screen artists that scintillated about the grounds of the San Diego Panama-California Exposition on Motion Picture Day, Saturday, September 11. In a formidable field of starters that included the foremost artists of the screen, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Quality-Metro stars, were respectively crowned king and queen of the great carnival, their selection being made after a hotly waged popularity contest conducted by the newspapers of Los Angeles and San Diego. The public voted for their favorite screen actor and actress on coupons provided for the purpose and Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne won "hands down" with an overwhelming plurality.

Francis X. Bushman.

The royal purple and ermine fitted snugly upon Mr. Bushman as he was elevated to the king's throne in a similar contest a few weeks ago at the San Francisco exposition.

The signal honor bestowed upon Miss Bayne, the newest stellar attraction of the Quality Pictures Corporation, was received with considerable elation by President Fred J. Balshofer and his co-workers of the Quality-Metro forces. Miss Bayne looked every inch the "Quality Queen" of the occasion.

Beverly Bayne.

The keenest sort of rivalry and interest prevailed in the newspaper popularity contest for the "Who's Who" among screen artists appreciated the distinction of being named to don the regal robes and crowns. A committee of representative citizens of Los Angeles and San Diego had personal charge in the final count of the bales of coupons deposited in the contest. This committee was composed of Mayor E. M. Capps of San Diego, Mayor C. E. Sebastian of Los Angeles, G. A. Davidson, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Carl Heilbron, president of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, D. F. Garrettson, president of the First National Bank of San Diego and Marco H. Hellman, president of the Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles.

CAMERAMAN BERT ALLEN DIES.

Bert Allen, 29 years old, who has been in the employment of the Selig Company for the past three years, died this week in Los Angeles. He was one of the best men at the Selig Zoo and had a host of friends. He leaves a bride of but three months who has the sympathy of all the moving picture people here. Mr. Allen had worked only for the Selig Company, learning the camera business in the early Selig days in the West.

FILM BREVITIES.

This week Universal City entertained several hundred orphans from a local home. The company chartered a string of street cars and transferred the little urchins from their big homes out through the mountains to the big picture municipality, where they were given the time of their young lives. The animals performed with added zest for the kiddies. The players worked harder and everything seemed to be going better than usual all because the little parentless children were there, seemingly a million strong. A luncheon was served the youngsters. A merry-go-round that revolved all the time was loaded to the edges with screaming, gurgling miniature humanity that enjoyed itself until the fall of dusk. Between rides the little ones filled up on pop corn, pink lemonade and a stack of cones that would reach from Los Angeles to Universal City.

Cleo Madison who, with George Larkin, was featured in "The Trey o' Hearts," serial for the Universal, is now heading her own company, directing and playing the lead with Joe King, who recently rejoined this firm. The first picture is "The Cowboy Girl."

Ulysses Davis has gone over to the Universal from the Vitagraph and is now directing Hobart Bosworth and Jane Novak. The players have gone up to Bear Valley to stay a week getting scenes for a big new feature picture. Mr. Davis has been with the Vitagraph for some time and has directed many big pictures.

Jack Standing, one of the seven well known Standing brothers, has joined Inceville players and will be seen in coming Triangle pictures. He will be in William S. Heart's newest story as the heavy.

Dave Hartford is another newcomer at Ince's great canyon plant. He will be known as the subordinate supervising director, which defined means overseer of productions. He will be next to the big man in the directing end, putting touches here and there and looking after details and assisting the other well known directors who are making Triangle features.

"Ideas run the world—and Inceville," is the terse but pointed remark that is inscribed on a box placed next to the bulletin board at Inceville. Thomas H. Ince says that everyone of his people have brains, and from good brains come good ideas. He desires every one to strive to better Ince pictures which are a part of the Triangle. Hence the said box.

It would be great if every fan could see Charlie Chaplin at work. The snappy little comedian is a scream off the screen. When he works he cracks jokes and kids his players getting them to do their best work while it seems like play. To those who have been lucky enough to see him work it has been worth while, from a comical standpoint.

At Long Beach the Horkheimer brothers take good care of their players and arrange little parties to keep the actors and actresses in close friendship. This week they held a bathing party one night in the bathhouse plunge. The prominent players present who dipped and dove were Ruth Roland, Lillian Lorraine, William Courtleigh Jr., Lewis Cody and Jackie Saunders, the mermaid with the golden hair.

William C. Dowlan has now finished the five-reel production, "At Watt College," featuring Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven, and is now taking a two weeks' vacation.

Two months spent on the shores of Lake Tahoe has completely restored the health of J. Warren Kerrigan. He is at present working with his Victor-Universal Company in the title role of a two-reel story by Nell Shipman, entitled "The Troubadour of Eldorado."

Grace Cunard, leading woman in the "Broken Coin" serials, was so seriously injured in a scene of this thrilling photo-drama that she had to be removed to a hospital in Los Angeles for an operation. It is probable that she will be laid up for a couple of weeks, and in the meantime the company is at work on scenes in which Miss Cunard does not appear.

A number of thrilling battle scenes have been staged in "Old Heidelberg," a Fine Arts Films production featuring Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid. In one of these scenes 600 men and 200 horses take part.

Helen Ware will make her first appearance in Fine Arts Films in "Cross Currents," a picture story written for her especially by Mary H. O'Connor, and to be produced under the direction of F. J. Grandon. Courtnay Foote, the English actor, has been engaged to play opposite her.

Winchell Smith, the author of "The Fortune Hunter," "The Boomerang," and the present version of "The New Marietta," in company with John Golden, who wrote the music for "Dancing Around," and "The Candy Shop," were recently entertained by Douglas Fairbanks and Director Cabanne at the Fine Arts Films Studios.

May is "some" housekeeper. She puts wood in the stove and lights her fire and cooks her coffee, and does many other things that are right clever.

This youthful pachyderm has a great friend in Miss Bessie Watson, the young lady who takes care of the telephone and the typewriter in the business office. Miss Bessie is carefully supervising Anna May's education and among other things is now teaching her protege to play the piano as we can see in above picture. You ought to hear Anna May play a Jungle Rag on her specially built piano.

Myrtle Stedman is not one of those ordinary persons who act all the time. No, sir! She works in a picture and then contents herself with her garden and her auto for a while to give some other star a chance. She has finished her part in "Jane," and will probably not put on moving picture powder and paint for a week or two.

George Stanley has his hands full with his comedy "He Got Himself a Wife." He has some twenty "mermaids" to manage and is quite ready to admit that for temperament they have grand opera prima donnas left at the post. The worst part of it is the audience that follows George around. In one scene they all dive off the end of the Municipal Wharf in Santa Monica. George tried to make them jump off in a natural manner, but training interfered and they all made most artistic dives. George tried to tell them how to do it, and they all demanded that he do it first and show them how. But George was stumped for once. Webster Campbell, playing the juvenile lead in the picture, was game, and good naturedly did it for them, much to their delight and appreciation. Most of the girls are medal winners and one of them holds the high diving record of the Coast.

Aaron Hoffman and William Jerome have joined the scenario staff of the Keystone Film Company. The Keystone Scenario Department will occupy a building of its own, when the new plant is completed, with private offices, library, consulting room and a reception room.

William Campbell has been recently promoted from the Keystone Scenario Department to the position of director, and is now making a picture in co-operation with Del Henderson in which Fred Mace plays the lead.

A new Monoplane has been added to the equipment of the Keystone Studios. The aviator in charge is Jose Muera.

The Scream Club, composed of picture writers, held another dinner this week at the Sunset Inn in Santa Monica on the ocean shore. Thomas H. Ince was the guest of honor and responded to the toasts with a few snappy words. The members, men from the publicity departments of the companies here and the magazine writers, enjoyed the dinner and after feast speeches.

"Slippery Slim" of the Essanay, known off the curtain as Victor Potel, has joined the Universal and is now at work here. He is under the direction of Roy Clements. For a long time Slippery Slim has been known as a crack comedian with the Indian Head company and the Universal is lucky in securing him for their program.

Wilton Lackaye

AFTER another successful year of professional achievement, Wilton Lackaye, the Broadway star, is spending his usual vacation days at his summer home at Shelter Island, New York. Just after "Trilby" closed Mr. Lackaye played before the camera of the Universal Film Company for the first time in his career. And he has a few things to say about picture acting which deserve a little thought from the many photoplay stars who cannot boast of the long series of roles written in Mr. Lackaye's history.

Wilton Lackaye.

Mr. Lackaye has had a remarkable professional career. He was born in Virginia in 1862 and studied law at Georgetown University in Washington. In that city he became much interested in amateur dramatics and after becoming acquainted with Lawrence Barrett joined that star's company. Later he appeared in "The Merchant of Venice," "Quo Vadis," "Les Miserables," "Shenandoah," and other favorites of the day.

The actor's first Broadway success was achieved in "Allan Dare," and he was later associated with Fanny Davenport, Rose Coghlan, Mrs. Fiske and Amelia Bingham, usually carrying emotional or heavy roles, commonly known as "villain work."

Charles Frohman, W. A. Brady and Augustin Daly had long contracts with Lackaye at different periods in his career. His latest successes were "The Pit," "Fine Feathers" and "Trilby." Wilton Lackaye first played Svengali in 1895 in New York.

"His Double" is the title of the film play in which Mr. Lackaye is featured by the Universal Company. Some of the scenes were taken in Quebec and for several weeks the streets of that old French city were enlivened by the presence of peasants in gay garb, gendarmes, and fine ladies riding in old fashioned vehicles.

"Sunshine and Tempest"

Two Popular Vaudeville Favorites to Be Seen in Rialto Star Feature.

"SUNSHINE and Tempest" will be the title of the three-reel Rialto star feature picture which will be the important Mutual release for October 6. And in this play, full of the clouds and smiles of Tennessee skies, written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, will be featured "Sunshine and Tempest," the two dearly loved little actresses, who since they were children together in the sunny southland, have been associated together on the stage.

Florence Tempest and Marion Sunshine were born in Louisville, Kentucky, some twenty odd years ago. They were sent to the same school, a Catholic convent, when they were four years of age, and, as with a premonition of the days which were to follow when they should be really grown up, they often appearing together in dialogues and other simple forms of entertainments at the regular "Friday afternoons" at the convent.

"Sunshine."

One day they were to give a scene from "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which they had been carefully trained. Bright-eyed little "Sunshine" forgot her lines in the most important part, and immediately tempestuous little "Tempest" turned upon her with such scorn that Father Raffles named them "Sunshine and Tempest." The name has never left them.

When they were six, Lincoln J. Carter starred them in "Two Little Waifs," and offered a reward of $5,000 for any two children who could match them. During this engagement Robert Mantell saw them and engaged them for the roles of the two little princes in his production of "Richard III."

"Tempest."

As motion picture players the charming young actresses are great successes. Their clear cut beauty, their alertness, and their ready intelligence gives them more than the average screen value. In the great Rialto feature picture in which they will appear on the Mutual program, the girls have not only the advantages of their youth and beauty but intelligence to make them unusually successful. They are both cast for roles, and in a setting with which they are perfectly familiar. Although they did not live in Tennessee, their early life in Kentucky served the same purpose, and they interpret the life of the Southern back woods, as only those who have lived near it could.

"Sunshine and Tempest" will be the third three-reel feature made by the Gaumont company under the title of Rialto brand.

New Thanhouser Writers

Scenario Department Strengthened by Addition of Two Magazine Headliners.

WITH the great expansion of operations at the Thanhouser studios, Edwin Thanhouser now announces additions to his staff, which more than justify his reputation as a connoisseur of ability. This time he reached out into the literary field and on his magic thumb came two plumbs, in the persons of Virginia Tyler Hudson and Clinton H. Stagg, both headliners in the newspaper and magazine world.

Miss Hudson is from Kentucky, a graduate of Wesleyan College. She served with such distinction on the Louisville Courier-Journal under Col. Watterson that that famous editor advised her to go up to the big cities, where he took special interest to see that she was properly placed. In Chicago she worked with the McCutcheons, George Ade, Eugene Field, and others whose names today mean the highest of the art. In New York and Boston her work was so signal on the great dailies that she became known as "the only newspaper woman who is a newspaper man." She studied the political field and campaigned with Roosevelt and Wilson, and covered three inaugurations. Then she became press agent; in this capacity she handled the great Brady production, "Life," and also did the work on some Shubert plays. She understands photoplay technique and her first stories prove that she has been a more than casual observer at picture shows.

Virginia T. Hudson.

Clinton H. Stagg.

Clinton H. Stagg, although a native of New Jersey, has made his mark, and those who know him well say that no handicap could stop "Clint" Stagg. He seems to have developed a remarkable aptness for mystery stories, and the millions who read Munsey's, People's, Popular, Adventure, Saturday Evening Post and numerous other periodicals have been thrilled by his tales written during the past five years. His unique record is the sale of a million words a year to his publishers. One of his greatest works is the serial, "Thornby Colton, Blind Detective," which gave the fiction world a new type of detective. Police authorities all over the world have written Mr. Stagg interesting comment on his remarkable conception and the progress of his plots. Another well-known work is his "Silver Sandals," which is now being published in book form in England. But yarns alone have not always been his work. He is a newspaper man of proven worth. He has played a stirring part in the political dramas of New Jersey, but only as a paid lobbyist. It is said of him that he can take either side of a controversy and with equal conscientiousness win. He has been both against and for President Wilson, the latter the more permanent he hastens to admit.

With his unusual conception and cleverness at making situations Mr. Stagg is expected to give filmdom some novelties. His first effort will be seen in a Thanoplay, a Thanhouser three-act feature, but both he and Miss Hudson are so versatile that the Falstaff comedies and Thanhouser brand will also be supported by their work.

Bartlett Making American Features.

Charles Bartlett has been given the direction of the company headed by Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen and will make one and two reel American features.

Helen Pollock

HELEN POLLOCK, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Channing Pollock (Anna Marble), who recently made her debut as a motion picture actress with the Rolfe-Metro forces, comes from a long line of theatrical ancestry. Miss Pollock's grandfather, Edward Marble, was for many years leading support with "Lotta" and was the author of many farces and musical comedies, including "Tuxedo," in which he was associated with Thatcher, Primrose and West. Her great grand-uncle was William Warren, the famous comedian, and star of the Boston Museum. Her great grandfather was Danforth Marble, also a well-known Yankee comedy star of a half century ago. The late Joseph Jefferson was another relative on her maternal side. With such a number of dramatic forbears, it is small wonder that Miss Pollock should have succeeded to hereditary influence and a natural love of the theater. Her latest picture was "When a Woman Loves," written by Charles T. Horan, and produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for the Metro program, in which she appeared as the leading ingenue. The directors of the Metro are unanimous in predicting a bright future for this ambitious young woman.

Helen Pollock.

Edward J. Le Saint Joins the Universal

EDWARD J. LE SAINT, who recently joined the forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is regarded as one of the foremost producers of the day. He combines artistry with dramatic insight and is a stickler for detail. Added to this Mr. Le Saint has the ability to get the best there is out of his company and is a natural manager of men.

He was born in Cincinnati, of American-born parents. He was in business before taking to the stage and his first position was with the Q. & C. Railroad in the auditing office. The life was far too quiet and monotonous and he answered the call of the stage and joined a stock company in his home town under the management of James Neill. For fifteen years he played in most of the prominent stock companies and was traveling with prominent road shows all over the states. He was with the Brady forces for three years and played the stock broker in "The Man of the Hour."

Edward J. Le Saint.

Mr. Le Saint next joined the Kinemacolor company and turned out some of their best pictures. He remained with the company until it stopped production and then accepted a splendid offer from the Selig Polyscope company and stayed with them for about two and a half years, until he took up his position with the Universal, in fact.

While with the Selig Company he produced some wonderfully fine photoplays, including "The Clause of the Constitution," in three reels; "The Circular Staircase," in five reels; "The Poetic Justice of Omar Khayam," "The Lady of the Cyclamens," and "The Blood Yoke."

Plimpton-La Manna

Miss Marie La Manna, Edison Actress, Becomes Mrs. Horace G. Plimpton, Jr.—A Studio Romance.

THAT even the "hardened" cameraman, looking upon beauty with a "picture eye" alone, is susceptible to the girl of real charm is surely evidenced in the surrender of Horace Gordon Plimpton, Jr., cameraman of the Edison Company, Saturday, when he married with some haste the lovely Marie La Manna of that company at the Church of the Ascension, 117th street and Amsterdam avenue, New York City, the Reverend Father Tye officiating.

The romance began less than a year ago, when Miss La Manna was chosen because of her girlish beauty and grace for the part of the lovelorn beautiful princess in the Edison five-part feature production of the widely-known Hanlon Brothers' "Fantasma." It was her first role of importance with Edison, and she made an immediate impression with her refinement of beauty, her willowy gracefulness and a roguish winsomeness of the school girl. For Miss La Manna is but nineteen years and not long out of school books and short skirts, be it known. She is a perfect type of the deep-blue-eyed Irish colleen, though partly of French extraction. She was selected for the Edison stock company shortly after the "Fantasma" appearance.

Marie La Manna.

Since that time, Miss La Manna has appeared in the Viola Dana feature, "The Slavey Student," "A Sport of Circumstances," "A Chip of the Old Block," "In His Father's Footsteps," "Only the Maid," "The Struggle Upward" and "Out of the Ruins."

Mr. Plimpton, though not long a cameraman, is often spoken of as having become proficient at the art in an astonishingly short length of time. He is the son of Horace G. Plimpton, formerly manager of the Edison studio.

MR. ZUKOR HOSPITAL FUND TREASURER.

At a meeting this week of the temporary committee of the MotionPicture Hospital Fund, Adolph Zukor was selected as treasurer. All contributions now in the hands of the several members will be turned over to him. B. P. Schulberg, close associate of Mr. Zukor, was elected assistant treasurer. The members of the committee reported progress. Letters of encouragement and of indorsement were being received, and there was every indication the project would be successful.

Among those from whom contributions have been received are Charles C. Brandt of Philadelphia, Harry R. Raver, Edgar Lewis, Frank Powell, I. K. Willat, Hugh Hoffman, Paul Gulick, C. A. Willat, Frederick Beck, Richard R. Neill, George De Carleton, Edward V. G. Scranton, Walter Macnamara, Norbert Lusk, Hobart Henley, J. W. Johnston, H. C. Judson, Webster Cullison, George Terwilliger, Bert Adler, Billy Ritchie, Edwin August, Harry Spingler, Billy Quirk, Dave Wall, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lang, J. Searle Dawley, Lawrence B. McGill, George U. Stevenson, George Blaisdell, Buckley Starkey, Bert Dorris, Arthur Leslie, American Correspondent Film Company, Arthur Butler Graham, Gladden James, Paul Scardon, T. Hayes Hunter, Stanley Walpole, and—the first of the screen players of the opposite sex—Miss Lillian Walker.

Murdock MacQuarrie, author-actor-producer at Universal City, is staging a two-reel drama, by Burton Wilson, entitled "John Osborn's Triumph." MacQuarrie plays in the title role with Edna Paine playing the leading feminine role.

Stars Added to Horsley's Array.

Myrtle Stedman, Leona Hutton and Margaret Gibson Are Signed to Long Term Contracts.

DAVID Horsley announces the engagement this week, for long periods of time, of the distinguished photoplay stars, Myrtle Stedman, Margaret Gibson and Leona Hutton, to appear in the different length productions which Mr. Horsley is now making for release on the Mutual program.

Miss Myrtle Stedman is a star of stellar magnitude and comes to Mr. Horsley's company after acquiring an enviable reputation by her work in many important productions. She is an unusually gifted actress with a wide range of expression. Fair, with large blue eyes, a wealth of golden hair, and exceptionally beautiful of features, she is a most excellent photographic subject.

Myrtle Stedman.

Miss Stedman was born in Chicago. Possessed of a remarkable voice, she was educated for the opera and stage, beginning her studies when but a child. At the age of twelve she made her first public appearance with the Whitney Opera Company, playing a juvenile part.

Later her family moved to Black Hawk, Col., but in time returned to Chicago where Miss Stedman again joined the Whitney Opera Company, this time, however, as prima donna, her musical education having been completed and her vocal and acting development having warranted the place. She also sang in comic opera and musical comedy, and later toured on the concert platform.

The Selig Polyscope Company first claimed her for pictures. She remained with this company for four years, working as leading woman under the direction of Otis Turner. She then was engaged by the Bosworth, Inc., and appeared in that company's features and also in those produced by Bosworth in association with Oliver Morosco.

Leona Hutton.

It was here that she achieved her greatest success and added much prestige to her already firmly established reputation as a photoplay star. Among the productions in which she appeared was "Hypocrites," in which she played one of the most important parts in that success with such force and understanding as to merit column upon column of favorable comment. "Wild Olive" was another production in which she scored heavily. In this she played the title part. She also played the leading feminine part in "It's No Laughing Matter," "In the Valley of the Moon," and was prominent in the cast of "Pretty Mrs. Smith." Miss Stedman's selection by Mr. Horsley is a very happy one.

Margaret Gibson.

Miss Leona Hutton comes from the New York Motion Picture Company, where for three years she divided her time appearing in the Broncho, Domino and Kay Bee releases made by that concern. In practically all of these she was cast for the leading roles, playing in many instances opposite Walter Edwards. Her work is recognized as being of the highest order and has made her a host of admirers. By a coincidence, Miss Hutton will be under the direction of Jay Hunt, who was her director with the N. Y. M. P., and who is now also with Mr. Horsley.

Like Miss Hutton, Miss Margaret Gibson is a former New York Motion Picture Company player. Aside from her well-known ability as an actress, Miss Gibson is noted for her striking beauty. She resembles Mary Pickford so closely that she is frequently mistaken for "Little Mary," when her picture is shown on the screen.

Miss Gibson began her motion picture career with the Thanhouser Company, later going to the Reliance studios on the Coast as leading woman with their stock company. Following this, she was engaged by the New York Motion Picture Company.

Miss Hutton and Miss Gibson will be prominent in the support of Crane Wilbur in Mr. Horsley's three-reel feature productions, another of Mr. Horsley's new brands, the first of which, "The Protest," will be released September 29 in the regular service of the Mutual program.

Announcement of the name of the brand in which Miss Stedman will appear, together with the release date of the first picture and of the people in the cast supporting her, will be made later.

"Uncle Sam at Work."

Universal Proposes to Release Haskins' Big Feature on Regular Program in Ten Single-Reel Installments.

THE Universal has decided to split the production, "Uncle Sam at Work," into ten single reels and release these on the regular program with the Broadway Universal Features. Each installment will be complete in itself and the Universal will not book the film in the big theaters or sell it on the state rights basis.

The picture is extremely timely, because it deals to a great extent with the question whether Uncle Sam is or is not prepared for war. The film is based on Frederic J. Haskins' inspiring book, "The American Government," of which half a million copies have been sold. The film was taken with the consent of the government and with the active assistance of the heads of the various departments.

Twenty-seven phases of Federal activity, especially in the naval and army departments, are illustrated. Permission was obtained to send a motion picture photographer with the North Atlantic fleet, under command of Rear Admiral Fletcher, during battle practice off Boston and Norfolk. The cameraman was lashed to the fighting top of the battleship New Jersey, his ears heavily bandaged to protect them from the concussion of the big guns.

From this point of vantage he obtained moving pictures showing the mammoth twelve-inch guns being swung into position and fired, and of the entire fleet in battle practice, firing broadside after broadside. Part of the action took place after sunset and the flash of flame spurting from the muzzles of the guns is shown in startling vividness on the screen. Such a picture, it can safely be said, has never before been taken. To build such a fleet of battleships and engage them in mimic warfare would cost three-quarters of a billion dollars.

The other scenes are in keeping with the foregoing. They were all taken with the special permission of the government under extraordinary conditions. The troops at Fort Myer, Va., are shown under field service conditions, attacking, deploying and firing. Gun testing machines with a capacity of 10,000,000 pounds are seen bending great armor plates under a pressure of 390,000 pounds and steel bars, 3½ inches in diameter, are pulled apart like taffy under a tension of 855,000 pounds. A human hair is then placed in the same giant machine and snapped under a tension of 1½ ounces. Such precision and delicacy of measuring power on the part of such a huge machine is hardly believable.

The scenes showing Uncle Sam's sailors preparing a ship for action, unlimbering the big guns and firing at targets and old battleships; the firing of great guns at Fort Totten, at the ships of an imaginary European squadron coming to attack New York and the manoeuvres of our small but highly trained army also are visualized on the screen in a fashion which should appeal to all patriotic Americans who have the welfare of their country at heart.

In assembling the scenes comprising these ten reels every effort has been made to give a consistent impression of the subjects treated.

Equitable's Producing Plans

Numerous Notable Subjects Promised Which Will Feature a Number of Noted Players.

THE first quarter of the new and active Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation began Monday, September 20, with the release of their first production, "Trilby," and ends the latter part of December with the presentation of Cyril Scott in one of his former stage successes, which is now in course of construction at the Triumph Film Studio, a subsidiary of the Equitable.

During the twelve weeks that constitute a quarter with Equitable, twelve players of stellar calibre will be seen in twelve noted works, either adapted from stage productions or popular fiction works.

Florence Reed.

Following "Trilby," which will be seen September 20, Helen Ware will be offered in her most recent stage success, "The Price," which was supplied by George Broadhurst, author of "Bought and Paid For," "The Man of the Hour" and other great dramas. Miss Ware was in active appearance before the camera ten weeks at Triumph's studios and the production, when finally seen, will be elaborate and quite up to the Equitable standard.

Julius Steger in his own great and unique romance, "The Master of the House," in which he appeared for a long season at the Maxine Elliott theater and on tour, will follow "The Price." "The Master of the House" is undoubtedly one of the greatest stories yet transferred to the screen. Its poignant and gripping situations lend themselves admirably to the lens and the fact that Equitable secured the original star, Julius Steger, makes the third release, the most formidable and appropriate of attractions to follow the highly sensational Trilby and the lovely Helen Ware in "The Price."

Molly McIntyre.

Thomas A. Wise, beloved of all, will make his screen debut on the Equitable program in Paul Armstrong's great race track story, "Blue Grass." "Blue Grass" has been directed by Director Charles Seay and was staged in the exact locale of the original script. Mr. Wise has the support of an all star cast in "Blue Grass."

Kathryn Osterman, last seen in a big World Film production, will see the light of screen day with Equitable in "The Bludgeon," another powerful story from the pen of Paul Armstrong. Miss Osterman, supported by Clara Whipple, Frank Beamish and others of equal note, concluded their camera work in "The Bludgeon" this week. "The Bludgeon" will feature the Equitable program about November 1.

Following Miss Osterman and in an entirely different type of play, will come the irrepressible Cyril Scott, whose fame took a great leap by reason of his work in "The Lottery Man." Mr. Scott is now at work in a play, the title of which has not been made public, but which will be in absolute keeping with his standing as a stellar player.

Katharine Kaelred will make her first appearance on any screen in a big, serious play of moment, when she is seen following Cyril Scott. A play in which Miss Kaelred appeared in the spoken drama is being secured for her and work will begin on it at once under the direction of Webster Cullison at the Fifty-second street Equitable studio. Miss Kaelred will have the support of several Broadway luminaries.

Charles Cherry, he of the grandiose poise and elegant manner, whose work from Charles Frohman, made "Seven Sisters" the hit it was, will be seen November 7 in a famous novel, now one of the best sellers and soon to start work under the guidance of director John Ince. Charles Cherry will be supported by Clara Whipple and the Equitable stock company and will work at the Flushing studio.

Leonore Ulrich.

Florence Reed, last seen with the Famous Players and Metro in two big plays, will be seen on the Equitable program about November 30 in "The Cowardly Way" which is now in the last stages under the direction of Cullison.

Margarita Fischer, the American Beauty star, now a permanent Equitable player, will be seen under the direction of her former director, Harry Pollard, who is responsible for the Mutual Masterpictures, "The Quest" and other famous screen plays. General Manager Felix F. Feist has been dickering with Harriet Ford for the screen rights to her plays, including "Polygamy," "The Argyle Case," "A Strange Woman" and others and if he is successful, Miss Fischer will be seen in "Polygamy." In the event of Equitable securing "Polygamy," they have been promised the support and cooperation of the Mormon Church heads and the picture will be staged in Salt Lake City.

Robert Edeson, last seen in feature work in "Where the Trail Divides" for Lasky, will be seen in a visualization of a book, which, according to those who know, say should make a tremendous screen subject. "The City of Numbered Days" is the book selected by Mr. Edeson.

Leonore Ulrich is now at work at Triumph in "The Better Woman" while Katharine Kaelred will be seen about December 15 in William J. Locke's "Idols."

Molly McIntyre, recently seen as star of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," will be seen in the latter part of December in a picturization of that play. The principal scenes will be laid right in that part of Scotland from which Miss McIntyre hails and in which the locale of the piece is laid.

William Courtleigh, George Soule Spencer, Clara Whipple and other noted stars will feature Equitable releases during the following quarter beginning January 1, 1916.

Equitable now has six noted directors, Webster Cullison, John Ince, Joseph Golden and Charles Seay are located at Flushing while Harry Pollard and Marshall Farnum will be in control at Fifty-second street.

President Speigel and General Manager Feist are actively engaged now procuring the material. Marc Edmond Jones and Russell Smith are in complete control of the scenario department of the Equitable with Eve Unsell, former chief scenario writer for Famous Players, in charge of Triumph adaptations.

V-L-S-E HAS NEW PRESS AGENT.

Charles J. Giegerich, who organized the press department of the V-L-S-E, has resigned and his successor is E. L. Masters, newspaper and general publicity man, who comes to his new position from the Hearst magazine syndicate, for which he was promotion manager. Mr. Giegerich is working on plans for the opening of Weber's old theater as a motion picture house and will continue doing general publicity.

RUDD SAILS FOR HOME.

W. T. Rudd, the Australian motion picture theater manager, who has been in New York for the past few weeks, sailed on the homeward voyage, Saturday, September 11, on the American line steamship New York. He will spend some time in London before continuing his trip.

Knickerbocker Star Features Successful

High Class Directors and All-Star Principals in Feature Offerings Mark the Knickerbocker Standard.

THREE months have now passed since the launching of Knickerbocker Star Features—the materialization of the idea of putting real stars in regular service. Many were the pessimists who prophesied a short life for this project; many were the skeptics who declared the impossible was being attempted. But three months have knocked these doubts to smithereens and Knickerbocker Star Features have met with a success that assures them permanency and profit. They are here to stay.

"Everywhere I went," says a representative of the company, who has just returned from an extensive trip, "I found praise for our features. The exhibitors, realizing that now they can show stars on their screen regularly and without added expense, are all boosters for Knickerbocker. Of course the venture demanded an enormous outlay with but a limited return and, to succeed, we needed strong support. It took a very little while, however, for the exhibitors to see the advantage of booking our brand of features and Knickerbocker Star Features are now in demand."

Walter Hampden.

A glance over the releases to date shows that the company has followed strictly the policies originally laid down. Some well-known star has appeared in every subject they have released. Such favorites as Ralph Stuart, the "Strongheart" star; Alice Brady; J. Forbes Robertson of "Hamlet" fame; Mary Nash, leading lady of "The Lure" and "The Sinners"; Lenore Ulrich, late star in "The Bird of Paradise"; Florence Rockwell, leading lady in the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers"—such are a few of the Knickerbocker stars.

Marion Leonard.

At the helm of the directing staff is Stanner E. V. Taylor, a name which bespeaks high quality. Taylor was originally playwright for the Biograph Company, writing for Director D. W. Griffith. From the Biograph Taylor went to the Reliance as author-director and directed such stars as Arthur Johnson, James Kirkwood, Henry B. Walthall and Marion Leonard. For the last year Taylor has been directing independent feature productions, but is now working exclusively for Knickerbocker Star Features.

Taylor has just finished writing a stirring three-reel photodrama entitled "The Dragon's Claw." Preparations are now under way for its immediate production so that it may be released on September 29th. Featured in this production are Walter Hampden and Marion Leonard and the feature promises to even eclipse the high Knickerbocker standard.

Walter Hampden is an old Broadway favorite and gained no little prominence from coast to coast as Manson in "The Servant in the House"—a role which he created. Clyde Fitch's "The City" is another of Hampden's late successes. His appearance on the screen will be welcomed with anticipation and interest by all who remember his splendid work in these productions.

Marion Leonard's popularity as a screen star has been long established. Starting, some years ago, with the Biograph Company, Miss Leonard now makes her reappearance on the General Film program in this Knickerbocker feature. Miss Leonard left the Biograph to star in Reliance features. Later she was starred in Rex productions. Always popular with the picture going public, the name of Marion Leonard in connection with Knickerbocker Star Features adds to their laurels.

The policy of the Knickerbocker Star Features is to release a star feature every other Wednesday on the regular program of the General Film Company.

Florence Natol

FLORENCE NATOL brought a wide and varied experience as a stock actress, acrobat and vaudeville performer to the Vitagraph Company when she was elected to stock membership in this famous organization; and the experience has stood her in good stead as a motion picture actress.

Miss Natol was born in Kingston, Canada, March 1, 1880, and was christened Florence Beckwith, Natol being the name she adopted for stage use. Her father was Joseph Beckwith, born in Boston, Mass., whose grandfather was one of the early Hub City settlers. Her mother, whose maiden name was Diana Bushell, came from London, England. Miss Natol received her education in the Normal High School in London, from which she graduated when she was fourteen. As her parents died when she was young, she was compelled to make her own living in the world and her brother-in-law, Harry Lindley, a comedian of note, offered her a position in a stock company of which he was the owner and manager, and it was in this company she began her career as an actress. With the exception of two years, in which she played Aunt Polly in the road production of "David Harum," Miss Natol was in stock and toured every portion of the United States and Canada.

Florence Natol.

Miss Natol's advent in motion pictures was necessitated by the death of her husband. An application to the Vitagraph Company gave her the desired opportunity, and since September, 1914, she has been playing character leads with this famous photoplay producing company. The most important subjects in which Miss Natol has appeared since becoming a motion picture actress include "A Mix-Up in Suit Cases," "A Mistake in Type Setting," "The Conquest of Constantia," Gertrude in the Jarr Family series, and many others. In "Mrs. Jarr and the Society Circus" Miss Natol was given opportunity to appear as an acrobat, and she fully lived up to the reputation this work gained for her on the legitimate stage.

WEST VIRGINIA HAS FILM COMPANY.

J. Frank Baker, producer for the Brinker Croft Film Company of Wellsburg, West Va., is in New York at the present time supervising the developing and printing of the first of his company's productions. These were made on the old Vandergriff estate in Wellsburg, which was secured for a studio by the company following its organization several months ago. The subjects so far finished include 'Life's Stage," a five-part drama; "Grandpa's $5,000 Joke," and "Along the Cactus Trail," two-part comedies; and "When Mother's Plans Fail—Almost," one-part comedy.

The officers of the Brinker Croft Company are W. M. Brinker, Pittsburgh, president; W. Earl Brinker, secretary; C. W. Kyle, treasurer, and Mr. Baker, director. Among the players are Kathryn Baker and Rose Francis, ingenues; Frank G. Long, lead; L. Stanley Price, juvenile.

Another Triangle Play

Harry Booker in "A Gay Old Knight," Is Included in Opening Program at the Knickerbocker.

DIRECTORS of Triangle Film Corporation, which has been making great strides in its giant organization for exploiting the dramas of the Griffithville, Inceville and Keystone studios, met in New York Friday, September 10, and definitely decided on Thursday evening, September 23, as the date of opening the first of their model theaters, the Knickerbocker, in New York City. The openings at the Studebaker, Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia will probably be simultaneous about two weeks later—to be exact, Monday evening, October 4. William Furst reported to the directors that he had brought back the orchestral score of two of the plays, namely, "The Iron Strain" and "The Lamb."

On account of the contracts that the corporation is making with exhibitors throughout the country, it has been decided to present four plays the first week, as well as in the succeeding weeks. That was the original plan, but the desire of Messrs. Sennett and Hitchcock to run "My Valet" as a four-reeler allowed only three plays. Now the original plan has been resorted to. "My Valet," Raymond Hitchcock's medium, will be somewhat abbreviated, and a second Keystone will be added, namely, Harry Booker in the costume burlesque, "A Gay Old Knight." This makes the first entertainment consist of Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and Harry Booker in "A Gay Old Knight." The first "week," by the way, in the four model theaters, will last ten days, and the second "week" will start Sunday matinee, October 3.

Harry Booker's elevation to the select company of Hitchcock, Farnum, Fairbanks, Sennett, Fred Mace and Mabel Normand in the first star combination of the Triangle has been earned by a long and successful career in the legitimate and motion picture stage arts here and abroad.

WORLD AD BROUGHT MUCH MAIL.

The World man called this week on the Caille Bros. of Detroit, who make special theater devices. He was ushered into the office of Sales Manager Smith. "Here are just a few of the letters we have received since our advertisement in the Moving Picture World," said Mr. Smith, showing several big stacks of communications and telegrams. "We have had letters from every part of the world asking for full information about our devices, where they can purchase, etc. Literally, we have been swamped with mail. We are answering all of them as fast as possible and doing everything in our power to turn out more machines. We are now thoroughly convinced that people read the advertising pages of the World. These letters are the best proof."

VITAGRAPH ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The Vitagraph Benevolent Association, which includes in its membership the complete personnel of the Vitagraph Company at Flatbush, will hold a dance at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, on Wednesday night, October 27, in aid of the Hospital and Sick Fund. Every person connected with this famous picture producing company, from the heads down to the office boy, will compete in making this the gala event of the early winter season. On that night the Casino will house individually and collectively, the biggest assemblage of Vitagraphers ever seen together for an occasion of this kind. Already extensive preparations are under way to make it a regal success. A. Victor Smith, the Vitagraph studio manager, will be master of ceremonies.

EDMONDSON CONVALESCING.

"Dick" Edmondson, proprietor of the American Film Releases, 118 Shaftesbury avenue, London, is convalescing on the Cornish coast after an illness of five months, and will pay us a visit in the early part of October. The result of this visit will probably lead to negotiations for the handling of the productions of one of the foremost American programs in Europe.

His indisposition did not deter his firm's activity in exploiting and purchasing American productions. Through his representative, Albert B. Ladick, his recent acquisitions being "Reaping the Whirlwind," made by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, and "The Littlest Rebel," from the trustee in bankruptcy for the Photoplays Productions Corporation.

Massachusetts' Annual Ball December 1

Samuel Grant, Again Chairman of the Executive Committee, Assured by Manufacturers They Will Be Well Represented.

THE annual ball of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be held on Wednesday, December 1, at the Boston Arena, the great structure that was more than comfortably filled at the similar function last year. The Arena is the largest auditorium in New England.

Samuel Grant is chairman of the executive committee this year, the same as last. Mr. Grant performed wonders last year. While the press of Boston had been disinclined to give any advance publicity to the event which Mr. Grant had assured it would be a big one, nevertheless unanimously it agreed the morning after that the ball had been an event unique in the annals of the Hub. Governor Walsh and his staff had attended, and all of them had remained practically until the lights were put out.

Mr. Grant has been in New York for several days conferring with film manufacturers in regard to the attendance of their stars at the ball which, with the prestige of last year's success and the experience gained at that time, gives every promise of eclipsing its predecessor. The chairman of the committee, who will later announce his aids, said early in the week that while he had been unable as yet to reach all the manufacturers, from the assurances he had received it was certain there would this year be a larger representation of stars than last year—in fact, he felt justified in saying it would be the largest gathering of film favorites ever assembled in any city outside of New York or Los Angeles. He added that measures would be taken to see that every player was given a proper presentation to the great throng certain to be present.

KLEINE TO MAKE RUPERT HUGHES' STORY WITH FRANK SHERIDAN.

"Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," Rupert Hughes' famous story which ran serially through the Saturday Evening Post some time ago, is now in course of filming at the George Kleine Studios. Frank Sheridan will be seen as Canavan, the irrepressible Hibernian who begins life in Manhattan's street cleaning department and ends as New York's political boss.

MOROSCO MAKES ADDITIONS TO STUDIO.

The steady expansion in the facilities of the Oliver Morosco moving picture studio at Los Angeles still continues because of the growing extent of the productions. The big Council street enclosure for the outdoor stages has been extended through to First street, giving a depth of a full block and increasing the area to over 120,000 square feet. An extension of the big concrete wing forming the north wall of the glass-roofed stage is expected to be under way shortly, and this will provide the additional quarters for directors' offices and dressing rooms now beginning to be needed. When the studio was built the architects took pains to anticipate what at the time was thought to be any possible growth for the next ten years, but the activity has unexpectedly increased by such leaps and bounds that now at the beginning of the second year there is already an imperative cry for more room.

American Plans for Van Loan Stories

William Bertram Will Direct a Strong Cast of Players in the Famous "Buck Parvin" Series."

WHEN Charles E. Van Loan sold his "Buck Parvin" stories to Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., the latter declared he would have the best director obtainable in charge of the picturization.

William Bertram was his selection, and he it will be who will turn the author's wonderful characterizations into screen personalities, bringing to his task a knowledge of the West and an appreciation of the humorous, necessary to the one invested with the responsibility of picturization.

Director Bertram has seen and felt the West when a six-shooter was the court of last resort, and each man was his own judge and jury. He knows the West. He has lived it, breathed it, felt its stings, and laughed in its sunshine. He is the West's spirit incarnate, insuring to the production of these pictures a definite atmosphere which, with all its accuracy, will yet carry to the fullest measure the poignant humor of Mr. Van Loan's stories.

And Mr. Van Loan, too, is a Western man—a native California son, in fact. No one, unless born and bred in the West, could portray the characterizations which cascade throughout this writer's work, each natural and convincing, yet tinged with a quiet fun—that have proved irresistible to the readers of the Saturday Evening Post, in which publication "Buck Parvin" made his first literary appearance.

In real life he had been famous as "Art Acord, Rider and Roper," for years. This is Art's own modest description of himself. However, he was more accurately weighed by others than by himself, and he became a rider and actor.

It was then that Mr. Van Loan picked him out as a most unusual type of man, a type of the true West—modest, strong and pleasing. Mr. Van Loan knew this type. Director Bertram, too, knows his type; and it is because they both know that these pictures which will be released on the Mutual program under the "Mustang" brand are being anxiously awaited by the trade.

It was Director Bertram's co-operation with President Hutchinson that gathered together Miss Anna Little, Art Acord, E. Forrest Taylor and Lawrence Peyton, each perfectly cast for the parts they will play. To the filming of the Van Loan stories every producing effort will be given; and the first release of the series is now nearing completion. It will be called "A Man Afraid of His Wardrobe."

The charm of Miss Little and the daring of Art Acord, together with the dramatic ability of Messrs. Taylor and Peyton, combine in this picture an offering teeming with thrills and tinged with an honest fun. Mr. Peyton, who essays the role of a motion picture director in the story, is responsible for much of the fun, that has basis in serious action, making it all the more unexpected and compelling.

Fun for fun's sake is not the rule in these stories, but rather fun because the situations could be nothing else—a natural, human kind of laugh-making not as entirely new in pictures as it is infrequently seen. Coupling this fun-making with ruggedness and daring is Director Bertram's task, and to it he lends an appreciation of fun-making and a knowledge of daring deeds that is a possession in itself and an assurance of "Buck Parvin's" screen success.

TRIANGLE GENERAL RELEASE OCTOBER 24.

The subjects of the Triangle Film Corporation will be released to exhibitors throughout the country beginning October 24. The list of subjects to be released at that time have not been announced. This information will come later.

Jay Cairns, Impersonal Booster

He Came to the Motion Picture Publicity Business with a Wide Knowledge of Men and Affairs.

AFTER an absence for over half a year in salubrious Santa Barbara, Jay Cairns will drop in on his friends in New York City next week. It is something like two years since Mr. Cairns left Chicago for New Rochelle, there to take up the publicity work for the Thanhouser company, giving his especial attention to "The Million Dollar Mystery" and later "Zudora." His marked success in the exploitation of these productions was responsible for his engagement by the North American Film Corporation to push "The Diamond from the Sky." That he might have every advantage in this work Mr. Cairns went to Santa Barbara where the big serial was being made, and camped right on the ground. He is still boosting the last named subject as well as other activities of the American Film Manufacturing Company, among them the newly created Mustang brand and the filming of the "Buck Parvin" stories by Charles E. Van Loan.

Jay Cairns.

Before entering motion picture work Mr. Cairns had enjoyed wide experience in publicity lines. Among the interests he had furthered were those of several combinations of western railroads, of President Huerta of Mexico, and of Judson Harmon, former Governor of Ohio, in his pre-convention fight for the Democratic national nomination at Baltimore. Prior to that he had been political editor of the Chicago Record Herald, going to that position from the city desk of the Chicago Inter Ocean. Before that he had done much in the way of acquiring a knowledge of things and matters that interest the public, from fence riding and cattle buying in the West, soldiering in Mexico and Yucatan, magazine writing, reporting and editing. Mr. Cairns' hobby is a horse—a real one, with a Mexican saddle and outfit. With one of these combinations under him he will almost forget business and remember himself; and when he is thinking of business he is thinking of his employer and not of himself. In the mountain trails of Santa Barbara Mr. Cairns had full opportunity to enjoy his chief sport.

It is natural that a man who has met other men under so widely varying conditions should have a good understanding of human nature and of himself. Jay Cairns has that. If you haven't met him be sure you'll like him when you do.

BOSTON TO SEE "CARMEN" FIRST.

Boston will be the first city in the United States to see the Lasky Feature Play Company's production of Geraldine Farrar in a picturization of "Carmen," produced by Cecil B. DeMille. This photoplay, which marks Miss Farrar's debut as a screen star, and which is released on the Paramount Program, will be shown for a limited engagement in the magnificent Symphony Hall, Boston, beginning October 1, or a whole month prior to the announced date of release, November 1.

"Carmen" will be shown in Boston at popular prices—25 cents to $1.50. Symphony Hall has a seating capacity of 2,500, and the pictures will be shown twice daily. S. L. Rothapfel has been engaged by Paramount and the Lasky companies to stage "Carmen." He went to Boston this week with Morris Gest to complete all arrangements and to remain there until the opening night. Mr. Rothapfel has engaged an orchestra of 50 musicians. Special stress will be laid upon the musical arrangements and in this matter the Lasky company has had the co-operation of Miss Farrar herself, who has suggested many valuable things.

Special Lenses for Camera Work

Burke & James, Chicago, Have Recently Placed on the Market Two Special Lenses for the Taking of Motion Pictures.

BURKE & JAMES, who are exclusive agents for the Dallmeyer Company, of England, announce two special lenses for motion picture work which have recently been placed on the market. The Dallmeyer Company has been successful in construction a lens that works at an enormous aperture of F 1.9, which means that it is about four times faster than the speed of the regular lens now used on motion picture cameras.

It can be readily seen that, owing to the great speed, they are most valuable for taking motion pictures in dimly lighted interiors, night parades, fires, or any subject which is poorly illuminated. The use of these lenses often eliminates the expensive and cumbersome artificial light equipments, and will produce a fully exposed negative where an ordinary lens working at a speed of F 3.5 will produce a film hopelessly undertimed. Although these lenses work at a great speed, they possess the maximum amount of depth, which has been found to be sufficient to give good detail. Its covering power is also remarkable and gives good sharp definition.

The mounting of the lens is unique in construction, can be fitted to almost any moving picture camera, and the focusing device is built into the lens, occupying a minimum of space and using an accurate micrometer movement. It is absolutely rigid and works with ease and precision.

The Dallmeyer cinematograph Telephoto Lens enables the operator to secure large images at great distances without the use of impracticable and cumbrous long-focus lenses. The Telephoto lenses are complete in themselves and consist of both positive and negative elements, the positive producing the image, while the negative lens magnifies it many times larger than the ordinary lens.

Contrasting with the slow speed of ordinary telephoto lenses, the Dallmeyer works at the extreme aperture of F 4.5 and produces microscopically sharp definition, and covers the film perfectly to the edges at its full aperture.

The Telephoto has many uses and no camera equipment is complete without this valuable lens. They are now used exclusively by nearly all of the largest film producers in the world. Practically all war pictures that have been produced, were taken with this wonderful lens, its great magnifying power being especially advantageous, permitting the operator to take his pictures at a great working distance from the danger zone.

The Dallmeyer Telephoto Lenses are made in different series having speeds from F 4.5 to F 6. and can be supplied in focal lengths from six to seventeen inches. All lenses are equipped with spiral focusing mounts, which are absolutely rigid and smooth in their working. A special scale is engraved for the various distances, making the operation of this lens very simple.

LEO FISK ON GOOD THEATERS AND BAD.

Leo Fisk, recently with the Elkay Film Corporation, has returned from a business trip through Pennsylvania and Ohio and talked entertainingly to a World man on theaters that do the picture business good on the one hand and of some that are a decided detriment. One of the latter that he mentioned is in a large city in Pennsylvania and is being run by a department store. The manager of the store is no picture man and, though he has a seating capacity of 800, his attendance is small. Yet people who see films there for the first time can only take away a very unfavorable opinion of what picture are and stand for. He is using a lot of old features—rainy, streaked and full of holes. His projection is full of flickers and no one knows how much he will have to pay for admission till he reaches the door as the price changes. Mr. Fisk is a member of the Hudson County Exhibitors' League local and was a member of the committee that got Sunday opening for picture houses in Hoboken. He is looking for a chance to get back into the exhibiting end of the business.

PARAMOUNT HOLDS SWAY AT BROADWAY AND STRAND.

The Broadway theater and the Strand theater are often used for private exhibitions of feature films to which the press or the friends of the producing company or some prominent exhibitors are invited. Both the Broadway theater and the Strand recently showed at private exhibition only certain features of the Metro Company. The Paramount releases still hold exclusive sway in both these famous houses, which have used none but Paramount features ever since a policy of pictures only has been followed.

Metro Gets Wallack Plays

Rare Old Collection to Be Adapted for Use of Metro Stars.

THE entire collection of plays and manuscripts which represent a lifetime of collecting by Lester Wallack, the noted actor and producer, have been purchased by the Metro Pictures Corporation. These manuscripts, many of them so rare as to be without the possibility of duplication, number more than one hundred, and they will be made into feature plays for the screen by the several companies contributing to the Metro program.

At the auction sale of the properties of the Lester Wallack Estate, held at the time when Wallack's theater at Broadway and Thirtieth street was sacrificed to the monarch of office buildings, the manuscripts were bought by a private collector. When President Richard A. Rowland learned of their whereabouts, negotiations were begun and these were completed this week by the purchase of the entire collection.

Rare old plays by dramatists who contributed to the foundation work of the English drama, quaint plots as vigorous and as red-blooded as the most stirring of modern day picture plays and virile dramas that lend themselves admirably to the screen are included in the collection, and these will be adapted to needs of the modern day with such stars as Ethel Barrymore, William Faversham, Francis X. Bushman, Mme. Petrova, Mary Miles Minter, Edmund Breese, Hamilton Revelle, Lois Meridith, Emmy Wehlen, Valli Valli, Henry Kolker, Emily Stevens, Marguerite Snow and other great players now under contract with the Metro companies.

The purchase of the Wallack collection is notable also in that it indicates the appreciation of motion picture makers of the classic standards of the drama and of their desire to perpetuate for all time the great master plays that have made dramatic history. These will be given the advantage of skilled production of which their authors could scarcely have dreamed and will send down to posterity the modern contribution to the perpetuity of art.

The manuscripts have been given over into the charge of the Metro's scenario division, and they are being catalogued and copied for practical uses. Several of the rarer scripts of the plays had been so affected by the passing of the years that they had to be encased in vellum covers to avoid injury to the originals while the working copies were being made.

The list of dramatists included such well-known names as Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Mrs. Chas. Kemble, Dion Boucicault, J. Sterling Coyne, William Brough, John Brougham, Colley Cibber, James Sheridan Knowles and Samuel Foote.

Robert Walker

ROBERT WALKER, the well-known leading man formerly with the Kalem Company, has now joined Edison, where he is now playing leads. In Jacksonville, Florida, he played opposite Miss Alice Joyce, Miss Alice Hollister and Miss Anna Nilsson for three and one-half years with Kalem. He has also appeared for some time with Edison Broadway favorites, such as Miss Fannia Maroniff, Miss Myrtle Tannerhill, Miss Fuller Mellish and Mr. Lawson Butt.

Robert Walker.

Mr. Walker's theatrical career commenced in musical comedy, and he has appeared in "The Balkan Princess" and "The Pink Lady." He is a nephew of the well-known Broadway star, Robert Hilliard, and appeared in his first dramatic part in "A Fool There Was."

Some of Kalem's recent releases in which he appears are: "The Girl of the Music Hall," "The Face of the Madonna," "Don Caesar de Bazan"; and Edison's later ones: "The Awakening," "The Way Back," "Nothing to Do."

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THE BEST indication that the 1915-16 motion picture season will be the banner one in the history of the business is the uniting of the important companies into a Board of Trade which was accomplished in this city last week, while the chief object of the organization is to take an active part in the field of law making it is neither a political organization nor a trust, as some of the anti-motion picture people have characterized it. It might be called with propriety an anti-vice movement because it has been formed to prevent the enactment and combat the enforcement of all laws viciously directed against the motion picture interests. In order that people not directly or indirectly connected with the motion picture business may not be misled as to the true character of the Board of Trade one of the first aggressive movements of the organization should be a campaign of publicity to get before the public the conditions that forced the motion picture to the movement. It is not sufficient that the public patronize the motion picture houses. What is equally desirable is that confidence and sympathy which will bring to the support of the motion picture interests the votes required to defeat at the polls people who are advocates and supporters of pernicious legislation. The idea is to get before the public that such people and those they represent are really of as much injury to the interests of the motion picture patrons as they are to those engaged in the making, handling and exhibition of the pictures. The censorship idea has been forced to such an unfair point that it has resolved itself into a malicious and unlawful interference with the rights of all people. Whenever inequitable and discriminating laws are enacted all people are affected by them, although for a time the direct effect may not be felt by a great many. Patrons of the picture houses may be indifferent as to laws bearing upon the censorship of the pictures. Such laws, they may think, have to do only with the people engaged in the business. Technically the public is right in this assumption, but no citizen can afford to view passively laws that are obnoxious to the fundamental laws of the land.

It is the intention of the Board of Trade to enroll all classes of people engaged in the motion picture business. This will take in the manufacturers, exhibitors, rental exchange men, publishers, directors, actors, writers, projecting machine operators, and even people in miscellaneous departments. The personnel of the enrollment bars any attempt to class the Board with trusts. It is distinctively a mutual protective organization in which all engaged in the business, from the most lowly to the magnate, have a vital interest. When the Board is enabled to get down to business and a call is made for its protection at the polls and in the halls of legislation the strength the organization will display must cause the conspirators against the motion picture interests to sit up and take notice.

Another point to be impressed upon the public mind by a campaign of publicity is that the Board of Trade does not contemplate attacks upon laws simply because they are directed against the motion picture business. The battle is solely against unfair legislation and local regulations. The manufacturers of films and the exhibitors are not opposed to the censorship of films. The former were the first to elevate the standard of motion pictures by censorship. They are opposed to official censorship because they believe it is unconstitutional; because official censorship is class legislation; because it is the idea and instrument of persecution created by bigots whose every demand within reason has been acceded to by the motion picture people. The latter went so far in their test of the constitutionality of the censorship question when the Constitutional Amendments Convention was in session at Albany, N. Y., that they offered to submit to official censorship provided the press was subjected to the same regulation. The constitutional butchers were afraid of the press and ignored the challenge. Most of them have political aspirations. They also knew that if such an amendment were put before the people it would be overwhelmingly defeated. And yet they refused to exempt the motion picture people from the same un-American and pernicious law. The motion picture people declared at the time that they would show their strength at the polls and pay their respects to the inconsistent jobbery done at Albany. So we have the Motion Picture Board of Trade on the job.

The movement, however, is not solely one applying to New York State. It takes in all the motion picture interests throughout the country. The preliminary organization includes all the prominent picture producing companies from coast to coast, as well as the various motion picture publications. A significant feature of this is that the incorporators have apparently decided to allow whatever animosities that may have existed become matters of the past and begin an effective and decisive co-operation in behalf of the whole business. It was, perhaps, the announcement to this effect that gave the enemies of the business an opportunity for declaring the movement a trust for the purpose of controlling prices. It is a plan that has been under consideration for many months, but certain conditions prevented the various interests from getting together. It was not until some of the companies had gone to enormous expense in individual efforts to combat conditions presented by pernicious legislation and regulations in various parts of the country that the interests realized that protection could be secured only by combined action. The enemy has always been combined and has had the advantage of making battle on a basis of sharing the expense pro rata.

If there exists in the minds of any people not connected with the motion picture business any doubt as to the justification for the movement outlined that doubt should be dispelled by conditions existing in the state of Ohio. The Board of Censors at Columbus has refused to pass "Hypocrites." This film has been passed in every other state in the Union; yet the Ohio board refuses to allow it to pass, even with eliminations, claiming that the subject is "harmful." As a source of last resort, the owners of the picture will appeal to the Industrial Commission of the state. One of the most exacting boards of censorship in the Union is the Pennsylvania board; yet it passed the film without any elimination. The Police Board of Censors of Detroit did the same, and the film received the unanimous approval of the National Board of Censorship and the police authorities of this city. With such unanimous endorsements it does not seem that the morals of the state of Ohio would be unfavorably affected by exhibition of the film. This Ohio case bears out the arguments made against official censorship. The manufacturers and exhibitors have really not the censorship laws alone to contend with, but are subject to the whims of bilious and dyspeptic censors who will array their judgment against the entire country. In view of such a case it is not surprising that some exhibitors have declared that the latitude given official censors is such that their authority can be exercised against anyone who may not enjoy the good will of the board, and that authority may be influenced by others having personal grievance against the person seeking a license.

In all the time the official boards of censors have been in existence there has been no movement towards holding a national convention to try and formulate some plan by which the endorsement of one or more responsible boards could be accepted by the boards of other states. Not the slightest inclination toward that end has been manifested, although it has been suggested to give the producers and exhibitors a chance to save some time and money. It has been stated that the real reason for the boards not favoring such a proposition is that they fear it might eventually deprive the members of their jobs. An exhibitor told the writer that when he suggested the scheme to a censor the reply was that "If we took cognizance of certificates from other states the duties of our board would be purely clerical and we would need only an office boy to check up the certificates. The laws of our state require us to examine each film." He was told that the board could still examine the films so as to see that they conformed to the certificate, the idea being that a certificate coming from a responsible board should be given due weight. "Oh," said the censor, "I get you; but I cannot agree with you. If all the certificates came from the National Board of Censors the people of our state might get the idea that our board was a useless expense to the taxpayers."

GRIFFITH ENGAGES GILMORE.

Paul Gilmore has been engaged by D. W. Griffith for a spectacular five-reel Triangle feature, called "The Penitents." It deals with the days in Mexico when "The Penitents," a religious order, believed in the offering of human sacrifice. The production will be stupendous—cities will be burned and Indian massacres shown.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Man on Watch"

Kalem Two-Reeler in Grand Hotel Series—Interesting Human Story with Exciting Incidents and Moments of Humor.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE story itself is the factor in this two-reel Kalem offering, "The Man on Watch," one of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel." We like it as well as any of this series that we have seen. The basis of the plot is a true slice of humanity that easily quickens our sympathy the more as it is intelligently acted. The emotional role is carried by Marin Sais, as the wife of a crook whom she sees walking in dangerous ways more and more as the time approaches when the little dresses she is making will be needed. She won't even tell him her secret while his mind is closely bent on revenge and robbery. The robbery is exciting and full both of suspense and those little, true crotchets of human mentalities, weaknesses and strengths of character reacting normally to furnish action in the first place and finally to bring the ending that the author's purpose and his plot demand.

In the opening incident, the crook (Frand Johnasson) and his wife (Marin Sais) are at the roof garden of the Hotel. He gets so drunk she can't control him and makes a disturbance. His being fired by the house detective (True Boardman) makes him vindictive and he sets his gang, first to "get" the manager (William West, whose recent death is a great loss) and when that fails, because the crook's lieutenant (Thomas Lingham) is not a sure shot, he plots to rob the house of a silver set. The getting, or almost getting away with these beautiful tea pots and plates and punch bowls, is the red-blood action of the piece. The scene shifts from the roof garden, to the home of the crook, to the den where his gang holds out (this is not realistic) and there are glimpses of scenes along the road between these places.

The characters stand out clearly as characters rather than as mere figures, and this is much. In fact, the whole is so good to watch and so full of truth that, now and then, one wishes it were, in the emotional parts, a little more free from hampering suggestions of effort. Pointing out this temporary falling down in the lesser moments is legitimate criticism. It doesn't burden the picture too much, but it keeps it from being what it ought to have been with the material at hand, literary and human. It suggests the weariness of people who have much to do, who can do it well, but who fail to keep their minds clinched to their subject.

The photography and the scene making are very ably accomplished. The naturalness in the staging of the whole picture is marked. Hamilton Smith, the author, has provided a praiseworthy offering. James W. Horn, the director, has done well with about eighty per cent. of his work; but, as we have noticed, there are points that show either over-training of his players or hurried lack of rehearsing

"Her Oath of Vengeance"

Well Constructed Two-Reel Majestic Production Featuring Pretty Teddy Sampson.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THESE days of unparalleled rivalry in the moving picture field too much stress cannot be placed on the necessity of a well-constructed scenario. No matter how simple the story, if the plot progresses without evident effort, if the characters of the play are well outlined, and are found to be meeting the circumstances which beset them in every day life after the manner of ordinary human beings, a certain amount of pleasure is to be derived from it, provided the director does his part toward garnishing the theme for screen presentation. Such is the case in the present instance.

Elizabeth Lonergan has written the scenario of "Her Oath of Vengeance," which was filmed by Director Grandon at the Majestic coast studios. The production is a melodrama, treating of the attempt of a rival lover to gain possession of a young and religious Russian girl by threatening to expose a crime committed by her father during a political feud in Russia. The various types with which the picture is blessed have been well cast, and in addition to Teddy Sampson, whose work is very charming, there appear on the screen Wilbur Higby, Frank Bennett, Joseph Henabery, Charles West and Elinor Stone.

The picture has been set in part among the orange groves of California, the heroine of the play with her father and lover being employed by a canning concern, for which pretty little Sophia picks, and at her pleasure samples the luscious fruit.

Sophia's father is shot during an attempt by the discarded lover to blow up the cannery, and believing him dead she is about to take revenge on the owner of the cannery for the attack on her father when the similarity of his wife and young baby to the picture of the madonna and child which she wears on a pendant suspended from her neck causes her to desist. A happy ending is given the story when Sophia discovers that her father still lives, and that his blessing is given her union with the man she loves.

"Judge Not, or the Woman of Mona Diggings"

Julia Dean Featured in Six-Reel Broadway-Universal Production, Based on Interesting Western Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN UNUSUALLY strong Western offering is this six-reel production, adapted by Harvey Gates from a story by Peter B. Kyne, and made under the direction of Robert Leonard. There is a slight unevenness in the photography and the events of the last reel are somewhat hurried, but the production as a whole is far above the average Western number. It gets under the surface of things and maintains a tight hold upon the interest throughout.

Scene from "Judge Not" (Universal).

Julia Dean makes a fascinating study of the orphaned girl, whose first kindness comes from the hands of a gentleman gambler. Her struggle to find true happiness, after being hurried into a mock marriage, rouses an intense sympathy with her. The characters are well drawn and do not fall into obvious types. The plot itself escapes many of the usual situations found in the average Western story and works up to a pleasing climax. Harry Carter and Harry Carey both do appealing work.

The first scene pictures the death of Molly's father and she faces a lonely, poverty-stricken existence in a mining camp. Kirk, the gambler, saves her from insult on the public street and he subsequently induces her to marry him. She afterward learns that the ceremony was not a real one, but this information does not come until she has met a college man named Miles. Kirk is jealous of Miles and cleans him out in a poker game. Molly, already in love with Miles, tells him not to be a quitter and starts him out for a new life, lending him money for this purpose.

Miles makes good and sends her a check four years later. In the meantime Kirk's gambling casino is burned; in fact the whole mining camp is consumed. This fire scene is a big one and excellently staged. Molly, believing Kirk dead, goes to the city. Here she again meets Miles. Their friendship ripens. Molly does not tell him her marriage to Kirk had not been real. Kirk himself reappears and matters are brought to a dramatic crisis when Molly shoots him in self defense. Miles, who is an attorney, defends and clears the girl, his father being the presiding judge. She then confesses the facts as to her bogus marriage and Miles remains true to her.

"The Country Parson"

Romantic Story Is Effectively Treated in Three-Part Biograph Drama Directed by Travers Vale.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHILE the inspiration for this drama was found in one of Balzac's works, the picture is not intended to be anything like a complete transcript of the original. A part of the story most suggestive of dramatic treatment was selected and altogether very well carried through to a tragic climax in which Jean, the hero, is guillotined.

"The Country Pason"—a title that bears scant relation to the action—is quite typically French in plot and characterization. Veronique, a highly romantic girl, dreams of the ideal lover who appears in the person of Jean. But it is among the plans of Veronique's father that she shall marry a wealthy man and like a dutiful daughter she obeys. Of course, her life is miserable and it is equally in accordance with precedent that the reappearance of Jean should awaken the old romantic love. In attempting to steal money that they may leave the country together, Jean kills a man and is sentenced to death. On the day that he is executed a child is born to the unhappy Veronique, who recoils from the touch of her husband, while her heart grieves for her lover facing death on the guillotine. The pathos and tragedy in these concluding scenes are well worked up and the emotional acting of Louise Vale is sincerely sympathetic.

Other able performances that merit mention are supplied by Franklin Ritchie as Jean, Jack Drumier in a telling characterization of Veronique's father and Charles H. Mailes as the cruel husband. The picture is in all respects well acted; but first interest necessarily centers in the playing of Miss Vale, for the trials of the unfortunate girl are the dominant element in the story. Of the many fine settings one in particular will attract notice by reason of the lavish furnishings. It is doubtful if any picture has presented a more completely stocked antique shop than that shown in "The Country Parson." Genuine antiques in great number and variety were collected for this most artistic setting.

"The Fascination of the Fleur-de-Lis"

Three-Reel Universal Production Features Cleo Madison in a Story of French Court Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS three-reel number, written by Bess Merredyth and produced by Jos. Degrasse, is romantic in theme and presented in an appealing way. The story tells of a peasant girl who made her way to the French court and captured the eye of the king. Upon her shoulder was a birthmark, shaped like a fleur-de-lis, the royal iris. This insignia came there as the result of her mother's dreams of a royal alliance, in which the flower figured prominently.

The cast is a proficient one, including Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney and Millard K. Wilson. The direction and photography are both good, some very pleasing and artistic scenic effects being achieved.

The story opens with picturesque scenes of peasant life. The young mother has dreamed of higher station and when her child is born the mark upon the shoulder seems propitious. When Lizette has grown a visiting duke sees her, is greatly attracted to her and soon has her consent to marriage. In marrying the duke Lizette throws over her peasant lover, Antoine.

She is taken into the high social life of the French capital and as the Duchess of Saxonburg becomes the darling of the court. Tragic events follow: the king becomes enamoured of her and when her ambition dictates that she try for his favor the duke drowns himself. Lizette then becomes the king's favorite.

Antoine has meanwhile always continued to love Lizette. He also has ambitions, and when the king is ill and an operation necessary a great surgeon is sent for. This turns out to be the former peasant boy. When she sees him, Lizette again feels the power of first love. Antoine has the life of the king in his hands, but manfully pulls him through. A dramatic scene takes place where he renounces Lizette and she tears up the real fleur-de-lis and sears the mark upon her shoulder with a hot iron. Torn with her love for Antoine, she gives up court life and becomes purged of her ambitions; Antoine then returns and declares his love.

The construction is good throughout and the plot makes a satisfying impression upon the observer. Cleo Madison is particularly pleasing in this role and handles the part of the ambitious peasant girl very capably.

"The Ploughshare"

Four-Reel Edison by Mary Imlay Taylor—Produced Under the Direction of John H. Collins.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN OLD-FASHIONED story, reminding one of those written by Mrs. Southworth and Augusta Evans, and long-drawn-out as they were, though "The Ploughshares" has the merit of finishing with a certain amount of consistency and strength. Mary Imlay Taylor has a tendency to scatter her forces—she brings on so many characters that difficulty may easily arise in keeping in mind the main line of interest. The whole story hinges upon a selfish heartbreaker impersonated by Augustus Phillips, spoiled half-brother to a man who becomes governor of the state and marries one of the many ladies infatuated with the heartbreaker. The latter spoils the life of a young girl and shoots her brother when called to account. He is not accused of the crime because another man happens along, pistol in hand, and is convicted of murder for which there was no enforced motive.

The real murderer confesses before the innocent man is hung, but he escapes through the tender mercies of the Governor's wife, one of the many he had fascinated. He finds a refuge in South America and is drowned while seeking a new victim. There are two other death scenes in the play, the lady-author's delight—and the Governor of high sense of duty where a man is concerned swears falsely to save his wife from suffering disgrace. She finally tells the truth and is permitted to go unpunished. The moral is doubtful, and Mr. Collins has not succeeded in covering the story's many weaknesses by his beautiful settings, though it must be admitted that they distract attention at times.

"The Man of Shame"

Universal Multiple-Reel, Featuring Wilton Lackaye in Old French Story.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE theme of this feature has some splendid filming materials which in this version were cleverly used. The plot is taken from a well-known French story. The story hinges on the striking resemblance between two men, one a good, clean man, the other wicked enough to furnish forth three villians in an ordinary melodrama. Both parts are played by Wilton Lackaye. Mr. Lackaye's task is difficult, of course, and he gives a creditable performance.

The feature abounds in thrills and in tense situations which are handled with commendable skill. There is in many scenes a fine attention to details, showing careful, conscientious and intelligent work on the part of the director. The interest in the story never lags, being full of "action" from the start to the finish with the exception of a short part in the first reel where the threads of the story were spun out somewhat haltingly. The cast was good and every member worked conscientiously and with good results. The photography at times appeared flat and almost spoiled some good exterior settings. Of course there was a lot of "double exposure" work which was quite satisfactory, though not always even in quality. The visions of the condemned in the cell were fairly well done, but I think the flash of the guillotine might be omitted with advantage.

"The Red Virgin"

A Three-Reel Romance of a Mythical Kingdom and the United States, Which Introduces a New Lubin Leading Woman of Pronounced Merit.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE are two dramatic situations that have seen long and honorable service in the cause of the novel and the spoken drama; one generous writer of melodrama used them both in one play. The situations are: A brother and sister, unaware of their relationship, fall in love with each other, and a husband, brother, or lover, finds his wife, sister, or sweetheart, on a dissecting-table of the hospital where he is the head surgeon. The first mentioned situation has been used by Julian Louis Lamothe as the main motif of his three-reel photoplay, "The Red Virgin." There is no denying its dramatic worth. Mr. Lamothe leads up to his denouement by having Prince William of Moravia come to America, meet the daughter of a country deacon and marry her secretly. He then returns home. The wife, thinking herself deserted, dies, leaving a baby girl. The prince then marries the Princess Hilda of Sunderland and a son is born to them. He comes to this country and meets his sister, who is known as "The Red Virgin," on account of her reputation for fascinating men and then throwing them aside. She attempts his ruin, in accord with her determination to avenge her mother in this manner. When she learns that her father did not intend to desert her mother, she goes to Europe with her father and brother and starts life anew.

The author has told this highly romantic story with considerable skill, but it is chiefly valuable for the opportunity it affords for a new leading woman to come to the front in the Lubin studio. Helen Eddy is the name of the young woman, and the quality of her work places her among the best actresses of the silent drama. She appears in a dual role—the American wife of the King of Moravia, and her daughter, "The Red Virgin." Miss Eddy is obliged to run a wide gamut of emotions in the two parts; a task which she accomplishes with authority, ease and a compelling amount of personal magnetism. Other members of the cast who do excellent work are: L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Jay Morley, Melvin Mayo and George Routh.

"The Man Trail"

The Red-Blooded Story of the North Woods, by Henry Oyen, Told in Six Thrilling Reels by Essanay.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

NO MATTER how old or how staid one may become, a red-blooded story of the northland will stimulate the heart like an injection of nitro glycerine, and will enable one to jump back over the long span of years that separates him from boyhood. "The Man Trail," by Henry Oyen, which has been filmed by Essanay, is just such a story, and its treatment by the Essanay players increases rather than detracts from its strong, melodramatic atmosphere. The code of the woods is carried out in practice to the letter, under circumstances in which high animal courage and brawn are the main requisites for success. And, as in all elemental stories, the villain gets the worst of it and the hero triumphs.

Young John Peabody, son of a Philadelphia banker and never born for office pursuits, is the hero. His distracted father is in the last ditch, so far as governing the young man is concerned, when a letter arrives from his brother, a lumber magnate in the northland, who has won the nickname of "Wolf John," because of his physical prowess and fighting proclivities. The welcome letter reads: "Can use your boy if he isn't a weakling, like yourself. Let the pup come—if he's man enough to get here." And the "pup," scenting an atmosphere to his liking, went.

No better type of photoplayer could have been found to represent this athletic, fearless youth than Richard C. Travers. We watch his career with eager eyes and often with short catches of the breath, with Mr. Travers as his double. His exploits include grilling work, fierce go-as-you-please fights, stand-up pistol contests and a pistol fight to the finish, at the close. The lover of thrills will have everything to his liking in these six reels.

But the hard life of the northwoods is softened by sweet woman's influence. "Wolf John's" adopted daughter, Belle, is the cause of mortal contention between young John Peabody and a giant brute of a man called "Bull" Bart, the overseer of "Wolf John's" lumber camp. At first she thinks she loves "Bull" Bart, but soon discovers that her heart is in the keeping of the handsome youth from the States. Belle finds in Miss June Keith a most pleasing and capable impersonator. In the scene where Belle refuses to marry "Bull" Bart, Miss Keith appears to photographic disadvantage, because of a too close-up view by the camera man.

One will fail to recognize in the forbidding part of "Bull" Bart the man who bore the character of the Rev. Henry Pemberton, in Essanay's "The Blindness of Virtue." Yet Thomas McLarnie has impersonated both characters. His "Bull" Bart is a powerful characterization. Others in the cast who deserve special mention are Ernest Maupain, as "Wolf" John; Arthur W. Bates, as old Nels, the tote wagon driver; John Lorenz, as Curly Joe; John H. Cossar, as Elihu Peabody, and Sam Cramer, as "Shorty" Norby.

"The Ivory Snuff Box"

An Entertaining Adventure Story Directed by Maurice Tourneur for Release on the World Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ALMOST engrossing story of romantic adventure is "The Ivory Snuff Box," a five-part Brady-World Film picture, produced by Maurice Tourneur with Holbrook Blinn in the stellar role. It is a drama such as might well have come from the pen of a French playwright, with its political intrigue, its complex plot entanglements and its nice dramatic contrasts. To argue that the happenings are improbable would be quite beside the point, for "The Ivory Snuff Box" is admittedly fiction, cleverly contrived to catch the attention and carry it beyond the zone of matter-of-fact realism. In being a good tale—exciting melodrama, if you will—it fulfills its mission admirably.

Scene from "The Ivory Snuff Box" (World Film)

In its sharp contrast, effected quickly, though none the less convincingly for that, the first reel is impressive. We meet Richard Duvall, a young American detective, on the day of his marriage. The wedding breakfast is a festive affair presaging happy days to come; but while the guests are in the very act of drinking to the health of the bride and groom, a messenger appears with a summons for Duvall to assist the secret police in finding an ivory snuff box lost by the French Ambassador to England. Without hesitation, he leaves and soon his bride follows, thinking that she may be of use in the search.

Promptly the spectator is plunged into a story of plot and counter-plot that is made sufficiently clear without losing its element of mystery. The snuff box is much more than a container of snuff. The author chose to make it the key to vexed international affairs and he was never at a loss for difficulties to place in the way of its recovery. Much of the most exciting action is laid in a sanitarium, conducted by a physician of questionable motives and unquestionable skill in torturing those caught in his crafty schemes.

For an unpleasant night, it would be difficult to surpass that experienced by Duvall when he is strapped to the floor of a dungeon with a beam of violet light focused on his head. Scenes such as this have been arranged to make the most of their harrowing possibilities. Director Tourneur secured a number of unusual light effects and, in fact, supplied a consistently artistic production. Giving a genuine performance himself, Mr. Blinn is adequately supported by Alma Belwin, Norman Trevor and Robert Cummings.

"Playing Dead"

Sidney Drew, in a Five-Part Vitagraph V-L-S-E Subject, Temporarily Forsakes Comedy for the Drama.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

ON the V-L-S-E program the Vitagraph Company will release on Sept. 20 "Playing Dead," a five-reel drama in which the lead is played by Sidney Drew, supported by Mrs. Drew and Donald Hall. The loss of Mr. Drew's presence in the comedy department means for the time being a gain to the dramatic. His "Playing Dead" possesses steady interest, it makes good entertainment. While it is straight drama, there are lighter touches, characteristic of the comedian—and that of course means that you get them just when you are not looking for them. The script was adapted by Mrs. Drew from a story of R. H. Davis and was produced by Mr. Drew.

In the midst of the agitation which has descended on a number of the states "Playing Dead" may be said to have a certain timeliness, although it is questionable if it will be indorsed by that radical division of society sometimes described as being composed of "long-haired men and short-haired women." In no sense, however, is the story a propaganda for or against the feminist cause. Feminism here by its particular advocate is used as a shield for ultimate libertinism. The underlying theme is the separation by a slick person of a happy and contented wife of three years from her older husband. He uses the same old line of bunk—"together we'll uplift the world" stuff—which seems so convincingly to appeal to the susceptible woman and which fails in its purpose only through the shock administered to the misled wife by the false tale of her husband's suicide.

The opening of the story is auspicious. Mr. Drew is seen as Jimmie Blagwin, man of means, who together with Mrs. Jimmie, portrayed by Mrs. Drew, enjoys life to the full. The two are chums—they ride, drive, drink and dance; they have a beautiful home and they go much to the country club. Following the appearance of Maddox, played by Donald Hall, it does not take the husband long to discover the situation. Moved by his great love he decides to pretend suicide by leaving a farewell note in his steamer cabin, quitting the boat before it leaves the pier, and thereby freeing Mrs. Jimmie. Several months after he is impelled to steal into his old home to locate a will which has been mislaid—and is caught.

"Playing Dead" is well told and splendidly acted. The story hooks up evenly, for every action there is a plausible and a logical reason. If in it there be no tears, at the same time there are grave and gay moments, there are a number of laughs, but there is always entertainment and interest, the kind that will hold a house tight.

Let us not overlook the butler of Isador Marcil. Here is no stiff-backed, preposterous, burlesque of a human being. The butler of the Blagwins oozes good nature. The sight of the head of the house is the signal for the smiles and the prompt production of the tray containing the "makings." His self-possession does not desert him even when he discovers in the nearly strangled intruder the man he had believed at the bottom of the sea. In the tenderest moment of the story, as Blagwin returns to consciousness in the arms of his wife, now solidly his, he gently but confidently separates the faces of the reconciled pair with: Two cocktails. And they drink them to their restored happiness.

"Evidence"

A Shubert-World Film Version of English Drama—Edwin August Directs Picture and Plays Leading Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS a photoplay, "Evidence" lacks the sincerity and something of the restraint that we have come to expect in all save the more frankly melodramatic of feature productions. Written by J. and L. DuRocher Macpherson and produced by the Shuberts in co-operation with the World Film Corporation, these five reels purport to deal with the troubled affairs of a set of titled people in England. But in so far as the characterization is concerned, the author's creations might as well have been given Italian names; better, in fact, for the explosive demonstrations of Lady Una, Curley Lushington and others are more Latin than English.

Lacking the finer points of photoplay workmanship, audiences may still look to "Evidence" for an exciting domestic tangle, rather lavishly staged, and not be disappointed. There is enough emotion, enough weeping, recrimination, villainy and heroic sacrifice, all vividly expressed, to satisfy the most ardent devotee of society fiction, yellowed to the popular taste. It is not improbable that the character of Curley will be deemed admirably noble. He loves Lady Una, but it is an unselfish love that makes him willing to devote his life to reuniting the lady and her husband who has cast her off, suspecting an affair with Pollock. Now Pollock is pretty nearly everything that a man should not be and Curley, aware of this, and confident of Lady Una's innocence, determines that justice shall be done.

Scene from "Evidence" (World Film).

In the child of the unfortunate union, Curley finds a helpful ally. Then a sgned confession from Pollock and all is well in this threatened home of English society. The plot is not extraordinary, but it has some unexpected twists and occasional pleasing touches of fancy. The little boy's longing for his mother is attractively pictured, as is the fairy tale told by Curley. It is said that a select number of young women from the Winter Garden assisted in the spectacular scenes. Edwin August directed the production and acted with feeling—almost too much feeling, one fears—the role of Curley. Lillian Tucker, Haidee Wright and Florence Hackett are other conspicuous members of the company.

"The Case of Becky"

A Lasky-Belasco Feature Starring Blanche Sweet and Theodore Roberts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production is really a psychological study in the form of a drama. To make it acceptable to the motion picture audiences required no slight amount of screen-skill and good acting. The skill is there in abundance and so is the fine acting, making the production fit to rank with the high average Lasky picture.

The acting of Blanche Sweet shows marvelous versatility. The distinguished and popular artiste has cast aside many of her stereotyped ways and displays a power and an originality which will be a revelation to all who imagined that she could never get away from certain mannerisms. This improvement has been noticed ever since she came under Lasky guidance. Added to the charm of her personality these new found powers make of Miss Sweet one of the most accomplished actresses of the silent drama.

The part of Becky surely tried the ability of the actress. She shows the fading of one personality into another with remarkable cleverness. It is really an histrionic tour de force but Miss Sweet never fails to strike the right note. Hypnotism plays a prominent part in the story and as the great but crooked professional hypnotizer Mr. Roberts gave a masterly rendering. In appearance, in manner, in his bearing in every conceivable detail he played the part.

The girl who suffers from a dual personality presents a very remarkable study in psychology and hypnotism. Her dread of continuing in the power of the professional hypnotist suddenly brings out strange qualities. Where by nature seemly modest, quiet and lovely she now through the dread of hypnotism becomes bold, uncouth, morose and vixenish in turn. The workings of the dual personality give rise to some weird and at times humorous situations and gain both the profound interest and the profound sympathy of the audience. The "wicked spirit" is finally cast out by the superior hypnotic powers of a young doctor well played by Carlyle Blackwell. The young doctor breaks the spell of the professional hypnotist after which the work of re-asserting the good spirit is comparatively easy. Needless to say that Theodore Roberts was again a master of his art. There is a strong but by no means unpleasant melodramatic flavor about the plot. Settings and photography are of the general Lasky standard.

Simon, the Jester"

Edwin Arden Appears in Adaptation of Locke Novel—Produced by Pathe for Gold Rooster Brand.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

EDWIN ARDEN appears to be making a specialty of visualizing William J. Locke's fascinating characters. His performance in "The Beloved Vagabond" is generally conceded to be one of the most sympathetic of recent screen portrayals and now he adds to his collection of Locke portraits with a clever interpretation of "Simon the Jester" fashioned after the book of the same name. No doubt there will be more Locke characters in the future, and it is not venturing a great deal to hazard that they will win a high place among Pathe's Gold Rooster Plays. It takes an artist such as Mr. Arden to get under the skin of the English novelist's whimsical creations, and seemingly Edward Jose possesses the artistic feeling required in directing the picture. They work extremely well together.

But granting all the virtues of the five reels in question, and they are many, "Simon the Jester" may be just a bit disappointing to those who compare the film with the book. It lacks something of the spirit, something of the inimitable charm that have given Mr. Locke's novel distinction. Possibly these qualities, as they live in this particular story, are too closely a part of the author's adroit phraseology to be revivified in another medium; perhaps, even, they exist if one has the eye to see them. At all events, a great many people who know of Locke only by name, or not at all, will enjoy the picture immensely. Without bothering about comparisons they will take the photoplay on its own merits and be satisfied.

There is a first-rate story of a quixotic man—wealthy, engaged to a beautiful girl, a member of Parliament—who has six months to live. He arranges his life accordingly, that is according to his odd nature, which is extravagant in all things. It never occurs to him that he will live beyond the allotted time, nor that his aristocratic fiancee will be replaced by Lola, a vaudeville performer, a trainer of cats; but these and other equally unforeseen things occur in the career of Simon the Jester. Mr. Arden gives an able performance and is reasonably well supported by Irene Warfield, Crawford Kent, Alma Pell and Edward Davenport.

"The Purple Night"

Florence Rockwell Is Seen in a Three-Part Knickerbocker Star Feature.

adulation and the polite society in which she moved. She craves for a husband, a man of force; she cancels her engagement to one who was not only her social equal but also considerate of her and takes up with a gangster whose chief recommendation seems to be the lack of those qualities the dismissed fiance possesses.

Miss Rockwell is therefore handicapped in her performance by the lack of appeal that is bound to be the accompaniment of a portrayal such as has been assigned to her. A woman may crave the excitement of the slums, she may find gratification in associating with thieves and the lowest type of unfortunate women, but one who follows her on the screen is not likely to waste much sympathy on such a creature.

Noah Beery is the crook with whom Carol falls in love and to whom she sticks until he meets his death in a hold-up which he has staged to please her. Mr. Beery does strong work throughout and will be liked in spite of his part. He is convincing—he is natural. So, too, is the young woman who has the role of his former "steady."

The picture is well staged, in the interiors showing the homes of wealth and in the back rooms of the saloon. There is a realistic muss in one of these latter, precipitated by the "woman scorned," which will interest. The closing scenes, in one of which the inventor tells Carol the uncovering of his explosive formulas will mean ruin to the Washington government, may be a bit overdrawn, but they contain melodramatic moments.

"Out of Darkness"

A Lasky Production Which Features Charlotte Walker and Thomas Meighan.

THE program of the Broadway Theater describes this production as a "photomelodrama of exciting situations and thrilling scenes." It is all of that and a little more. The plot deals with an old social or rather industrial problem—showing the contrast between the underpaid workers who pile up the wealth of the irresponsible capitalist and the gay frivolities and social inanities of the same capitalist, which in this case is a woman. The rich woman, into whose hands pours all the wealth created by the starved workers, refuses to interest herself in their fate. The manager of the branch, a young man of humane impulses, seeks in vain to touch her heart. She is absorbed in the festivities on the coast of Florida.

While out sailing, her boat is run into and sunk by a steamer. I have never seen a more realistic disaster at sea than this fearful collision and sinking. The shock deprives the young woman of her memory and fate ordains that she become the guest of the very workers whose conditions she had refused even to investigate. She falls in love with the foreman whom she had previously ignored. Seeing the lives of the poor girls and women in her factory she is deeply moved, her better instincts assert themselves. Through an accident she recovers her memory; repentance follows and at last she marries the humane manager.

There are some crudities and improbabilities not usually found in Lasky productions. To mention but one: The heroine rescues the hero and is in turn rescued by the hero. The hero bears the unconscious form of the heroine through a crowd of people. His own hands are badly burned, but no one thinks of helping him and he is allowed to carry his heavy burden unaided to the cottage of the heroine's poor host. Charlotte Walker did justice to her part, though it seemed to me that her previous appearance before the camera had been more successful. Mr. Meighan as usual gave a fine and convincing impersonation.

Narrow Escape of Capt. Bonavita.

Although it is not generally known to the public, Captain Jack Bonavita, who can take the most ferocious of jungle kings and in a few weeks make him eat out of his hand, had a narrow escape during the filming of one of the scenes in "The Rajah's Sacrifice," first of the two-reel Centaur releases in the regular Mutual program. Captain Jack, who appears in the photoplay, entering the "den" to put one of the lions through his "turn," accidentally stumbled at the stage's entrance. But for the quick work of several attendants the lion, in an unusually ugly frame of mind, would have been upon him. Fortunately, one of the guards, by lavish use of his prodded "pole" managed to hold the lion off until Bonavita got to his feet. Then in the true Bonavita dare-devil style he completed the scene, the most unperturbed man in the studio.

Hutchinson Says "It Happened"

Producer of "Diamond from the Sky" and Other "Thrillers" Ridicules the "Revelations" of the Magazine Writers.

By William S. Hutchinson.

IT HAS become a fad for certain writers to rise up periodically, and with much noise and use of ink lay bare what they say are the mysteries of motion picture making. As is usual in such cases, the self-appointed propagandists are particularly uninformed, and it is their own great lack of information that is laid bare and nothing else.

When a magazine sets out to tell the public all about how it—the public—is being fooled, there should be some effort made to ascertain real facts, and, if obtained, present them in a bold fashion that will serve a definite and honestly-meant purpose. But, if such real facts cannot be obtained, the publication of an article purporting to be authentic works to no benefit and only brings ridicule down upon the head of him who meant to ridicule. It is difficult to pass without comment a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post, the writer of which sought to relate how free from danger are dare-devil deeds in pictures and to plant the thought that trick photography is the root of all evil and the backbone of all daring.

In obtaining certain effects of "lighting," the camera is, at times, used differently. But the general and continual use of the camera to trick the "action," as described by the writer in Saturday Evening Post, is more imaginative than practical. At the American studios in Santa Barbara, we are just completing the most "thrill-filled" picture ever produced—"The Diamond From the Sky." In it there is the complete gamut of intense excitement. Each thrill is genuinely so—acted out by real people without subterfuge or recourse to tricks.

I have found, in my producing experience, that a trick can never equal a reality or a deceit mock the truth. And, further, trickery is expensive. In making pictures, it is an economy to tell the truth and that is a good axiom for any business. Trickery is expensive; first, because it requires delicate camera mechanism and time of the cameraman during whose special trick efforts the actors and actresses are idle. Second, when exhibitors begin to learn that "trickery" is being substituted for realism, there is an immediate and well deserved comeback on the manufacturer. And it does not take long for an exhibitor to discover the deceptions.

The writer in the Saturday Evening Post takes a scene in "The Diamond From the Sky" to illustrate his "expose." Not satisfied with citing a scene of which he knows nothing, his misplaced confidence lures him further into an explanation of how it was accomplished.

His explanation is lengthy, as most inaccurate ones are. The scene is that one in which Irving Cummings is shown racing across the track in front of a speeding locomotive. Several paragraphs are devoted by the writer in telling how, by double printing, et cetera, the miracle of escaped death is pictured on the screen.

I can explain it accurately in two words—it happened. There was no double printing nor any trickery, and the camera man did not stand on his head nor did either the racing car or the locomotive pose on the track. Personally, I am glad this writer chose this incident, for otherwise some interesting facts regarding it might have escaped publication.

Officials of a certain Western railroad can testify to the fact that the scene was actually taken as it is shown on the screen, for the scare given one of its employes by the mad ride across the front of the speeding locomotive was such that it was necessary to relieve him from duty when the train pulled into the next station.

Mr. Cummings first appeared on the train engineer's horizon about one-quarter of a mile from the crossing which is the climax of a mad race. The engineer whistled a warning. Mr. Cummings answered, giving the engineer the impression that he would drive his auto up over a nearby hill along a road branching off and away from the crossing.

Naturally, the engineer—confident of this intention—put on more steam. And so did Mr. Cummings. Quick as a flash, the auto sped onto the track, crossed right under the head light, careened off the track, swerved, righted itself and down the road it went out of the scene.

Those who have not seen this chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky," I ask to particularly notice this scene and note that just as the auto crossed the track, the hood of the machine flies up and settles in a crossed position over the engine. This is proof of the realism of it all, for the left front fender of the auto was struck by the locomotive and, flying back, knocked off the hood.

An actor who accomplishes what Mr. Cummings accomplished in this death-defying scene, should not be subjected to the criticism that his daring deed was the result of trickery.

The Saturday Evening Post writer also offers an explanation of how a man goes over a cliff in an automobile in "The Diamond from the Sky." The value of this explanation is equal to the other one for accuracy and just as replete with ignorance of facts.

My two-word explanation however again fits—it happened.

"THE MAKING OVER OF GEOFFRY MANNING" (Vitagraph).

Director Harry Davenport, of the Vitagraph Company, has just completed a Blue Ribbon feature, entitled "The Making Over of Geoffry Manning," in which Harry Morey, as Geoffry Manning, who is featured, had a number of trying experiences.

Mr. Morey plays the part of a wealthy clubman who one evening while at the club is told by a fellow member that if it was not for his father's wealth he would be unable to exist on account of inexperience and desultory habits. This remark strikes home and Manning resolved to go out in the world and make something of himself.

The later scenes were taken in one of the largest iron foundries in the east, where Manning starts work as a fireman and rapidly advances to the position of an expert moulder, Morey portraying all the different parts himself, from fireman to the working of the cauldron that catches the molten iron as it flows from the cupola. He rises to the position of foreman and through an interest he takes in his fellow-workmen prevents a strike at the works by presenting their case to the owner of the foundry, who is really his father and was not aware of his son's going through all these hardships in order to show that by persistent trying you can make good.

The men are granted their demands and Manning is made general manager of the foundry.

GREEK COSTUME DANCES IN AMERICAN SUBJECT.

The beautiful, ever comfortable garb of the Greeks of the olden days, and their wondrously musical dances, are important factors in the story of "The House of a Thousand Scandals," a four-part Mutual Masterpicture produced by the American Film Company for release Sept. 24, in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison are the co-stars.

In one of the scenes, which centers about the activity of a Greek cult who are spreading their doctrines throughout the country with unprecedented success, forty beautiful artists' models appear, in Greek garb, performing a series of fascinating dances under the direction of Miss Margaret Kawkesworth. These dances, which on various occasions have been presented exclusively to the elite of Newport, Palm Beach and New York, have never been screened, thus giving the public for the first time an opportunity to witness that which heretofore had been limited to a favored few.

For the sets in one of the scenes one of the most historic Grecian palaces in existence was copied, and to obtain the proper effect special lighting and mechanical experts were added to the regular staff of the studio.

The costumes of every one taking part in the great ensemble scenes were passed upon by the light experts before the wearer was permitted to enter the scene. As a result there is a wonderful blending of femininity, garments and elaborate designs outlined against the severe Grecian architecture. This expensive attention to detail does not prevent the scene from being demolished by an explosion.

C. AUBREY SMITH—DOCTOR, CRICKETER, ACTOR.

C. Aubrey Smith, who plays the title role in Alfred Sutro's realistic drama, "John Glayde's Honour," produced by the Frohman Amusement Co. for Pathe's Gold Rooster Program, will best be remembered by local theater-goers as the Sir Marcus Ordeyne, in "The Morals of Marcus," when Miss Marie Doro first went a-starring in that play. He made a hit in the role and was recognized then as one of the most finished actors England has sent to America. He isn't a handsome man—in the ordinary sense—but he has an ease and grace that makes one forget entirely the irregularity of his features, and the authority of his acting cannot fail to lend strength to any production in which he appears. Sir Marcus wasn't Mr. Smith's first part in America. He came over the first time with John—now Sir John—Hare, to play "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith." A few years later he returned with Forbes Robertson, and appeared with him in "The Light That Failed," and in "Hamlet," as the Ghost. He is a Cambridge University man, and intended to be a doctor when he left college. He studied for that profession—walked his hospitals and did whatever else it is necessary to do in England to get a license to practice the healing art, but the lure of the stage caught him, and he wasn't strong enough to resist. He is a noted cricketer, too, and twice—an unusual distinction—he has gone to Australia to play on the All-England team. His athletic appearance on the stage and on the screen is due, no doubt, to his experience on the cricket field.

As John Glayde, in "John Glayde's Honour" (adapted from the famous play of Alfred Sutro), Mr. Smith is truly a big man in a big part. He plays the part of a deeply-plotting, all-powerful railroad magnate, whose work has such a claim on him that his neglected wife slowly, reluctantly, but nevertheless surely, drifts away from him never to return. He gets excellent support from Mary Lawton, Ben Hendrick, Ida Waterman, Richard Hatteras, Charley Butler, and a convincing cast. "Body and Soul," a drama adapted from William L. Hurlbut's powerful play, and featuring Miss Florence Rockwell, will be the second release of the Frohman Amusement Corporation under the exclusive distribution contract with the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"THE POLICE DOG TO THE RESCUE" (Pathe Cartoon Comedy).

"The Police Dog to the Rescue," an animated cartoon comedy from the Bray studios, is down for release at an early date on the Pathe program. It is fully up to the standard of its popular predecessors.

Mrs. Dinge, a dusky washerlady, goes to a funeral and leaves her baby behind ensconced in a washboiler and with nursing bottle conveniently near. A wandering calf spies the refreshment and helps itself to it, showing its gratitude by licking the baby's face with its rough tongue. The baby sets up such a shriek that the police dog rushes to the rescue, but is driven off by the belligerent calf. Officer Piffle is hastily summoned by the dog and then finds himself plunged into the midst of some extraordinary adventures.

"MERELY PLAYERS" (Reliance).

"Merely Players," a forthcoming Reliance feature, is a comedy drama of strolling players which presents in light, satirical vein some of the pomposities of stage folk. At the same time it is so true to the life it depicts that it does not fail to note that some of its characters finally arrive successfully on Broadway.

Also, it develops strongly that beneath the sham and the affectations through which one "artist" seems to know another, there is real human feeling.

"Merely Players" begins in a "tank town" of the Middle West, with the King Dramatic Company in very hard case indeed. The merry villagers will have none of dramatic art as exemplified in the melodramas and tragedies these mournful Thespians love to "present."

The attempt upon the non-interest of the village public is begun. The leading woman appears at the appointed place on horseback, while the tragedian hurries up to carry out his part.

But the leading man has not been told. He chances on the scene and believes, as probably the villagers wouldn't, that all he sees is real. He rushes in and rescues the distressed damosel much to the disgust of the editor and the chagrined tragedians. This particular leading man has been regarded as the blunderer and jinx of the company. The company is now confirmed in its opinion of him.

The editor refuses to print the story and so the troupers are more stranded than ever.

Eventually, however, leading lady, leading man and villain reach Broadway and a noted theater. Walter Belasco, brother of David, who strongly resembles him, plays the part of the manager of this theater.

V-L-S-E STRONG IN MICHIGAN.

The office of the V-L-S-E, recently opened in the Peter Smith building, Detroit, Mich., and in charge of R. R. Hutton, is very busy these days. Theater owners in every section of the state are daily writing in for time, and Manager Hutton is more than pleased with the splendid reception which V-L-S-E features are receiving from Michigan exhibitors. The interesting thing about V-L-S-E in Michigan is that exhibitors are booking the features for two days or longer. In very few instances are V-L-S-E features being shown one day only. Manager Hutton states that he had a little trouble at the beginning in trying to convince exhibitors that his features were of the calibre that would stand up two days, but as "the proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof," he now finds that exhibitors prefer to book for two days or longer.

The Grand Circus theater, Detroit, has booked "Island of Regeneration" for three days. Manager Simons of the new Family theater, Adrian, reports record-breaking business with Big Four features; Manager Peltier, of the Bijou theater, Mt. Clemens, says the people of his town are responding in large numbers on days when Big Four features are shown; the Palace, on 14th avenue, Detroit, has signed for two days and will raise prices for Big Four features; the new Lakewood theater, Jefferson and Oneida streets, Detroit, opened its playhouse with "Crooky" and will use Big Four features two days of each week; the new Family, Jackson, will run Big Four features five days, according to Manager Springett; the Alladin, Bay City, is using Big Four two days. Manager L. R. Simpson not only uses newspapers to advertise these features, but also bills the town with 50 one-sheets, six six-sheets and hundreds of three-sheets, besides heralds and photographs. He is a firm believer in "It Pays to Advertise."

The new Martha Washington, Ypsilanti, now in the hands of the decorators, will reopen the last of September with Big Four features. Manager Mrs. M. Sigmor comes to Detroit every week to personally look at the features which are shown there. The Family theater, Detroit, has booked V-L-S-E features for fourteen solid days starting Sept. 8. Manager Hutton adds that he finds many exhibitors raising admission prices on days that they show Big Four features.

LLOYD PREPARING "GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA."

Director Frank Lloyd of Pallas Pictures has about finished preliminary preparations for the production of Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman From Indiana." This famous tale of the Whitecaps will serve the ever popular Dustin Farnum as a starring vehicle for the first of the four large productions he will make in the next six months for this firm. It will be the largest and best thing Frank Lloyd has ever done, and some idea of its scope may be gathered from a few of the effects for which he has had to plan.

One episode will require five hundred people. Another requires the construction of a country village and its subsequent destruction by fire before the camera. A still more complicated task will be the creation of a forest in which a genuine rainstorm can be precipitated, and as though rain in rainless California were not enough Lloyd sets himself the task of following it with a lightning storm by night. Then the Pallas wizard is to build a lifesize replica of a courthouse square such as is to be found in any county seat in the Mississippi valley, a printing office of a country town "gazette," not to mention countless "exteriors" peculiar to the Tarkington country. Frank Lloyd has come to the front in rather remarkable fashion, and "The Gentleman From Indiana" will be on the scale in which he has been particularly successful.

FOREIGN TRADE AGENTS.

Manufacturers and others who are giving consideration to export opportunities will be interested in an announcement made today by Messrs. Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., 140 Broadway, New York City, that their Far Eastern Division, organized and equipped to develop markets for America's industries, will hereafter be in charge of Messrs. Joseph J. Keegan and Hilliard J. Rosencrantz as their managing directors. Messrs. Keegan and Rosencrantz have been prominently identified with American trade development in the Far Eastern countries for the past sixteen years, representing American manufacturers.

"THE GREAT QUESTION" (American).

"The Great Question," first of the three-reel American Star Features, produced by the American Film Company, Inc., for release in the Mutual program Sept. 18, presents Harold Lockwood and May Allison, popular young stars on the screen, in the chief roles. "The Great Question," a brilliant story of New York society and the great Western prairies, is of exceptional importance for the reason that it is the first time in the history of the industry that a star of Lockwood's reputation and ability has appeared in a release on a regular program. Previously, Lockwood's work had been confined exclusively to feature releases, two of his greatest successes having been scored as the lead in "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs" and "The Lure of the Mask," Mutual Masterpicture screened at the American studios.

For the initial appearances of Lockwood as a star on the regular Mutual program Tromas Ricketts, director of "The Great Question," surrounded him with a cast of famous screen players, including besides Miss Allison, Eugenie Forde, Harry Von Meter and William Stowell. In "The Great Question," Lockwood has been furnished with a part that gives him exceptional opportunities of displaying the many talents with which he has been gifted.

"AN ORIENTAL SPASM" (Cub).

Aside from its laugh-making powers this one-reel comedy, which is to be released Oct. 1 on the Mutual program, is notable for its particularly massive sets—perhaps the largest and most expensive ever used in a single-reel comedy.

As the title implies, the locale of the story is India, to which land Jerry, the character introduced and made famous by George Ovey, is carried for having in his possession a jewel stolen from the eye of an idol in the Hindoo temple. The Scene from "An Oriental Spasm" (Cub).

Royal Kazabo sentences Jerry to become his slave, a position that involves work, which Jerry does not like. So Jerry endeavors to escape his servitude. He is on his way to success when he unsuspectingly enters the Royal Kazabo's harem. This is an especial attraction for Jerry and he forgets all about the fact that he is an escaping slave until the guards recapture him. Then Jerry has to do his escaping all over again, but this trial is more successful than the first and he finally lands back home.

Scenes are shown of Indian villages, the temple and the royal palace where the action takes place. These are enormous and beautiful and add to the effect of the comedy.

An exceptionlly large cast headed by the funniest man in America, George Ovey, and including Louis Fitzroy, Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully, Gordon MacGregor and Jefferson Osborne, appear in this picture, which is directed by Milton Fahrney.

"THE LITTLE LIFE GUARD" (Majestic).

The last of the single reel child comedies made at the Reliance studios before the children were promoted to features is "The Little Life Guard," which is a mid-September release. It is from the pen of Bernard McConville.

Violet Radcliffe, Georgie Stone and Carmen De Rue take the children's parts. Porter Strong is the only adult member of the cast. Violet Radcliffe, who as usual plays the villain, is Dan in the photoplay.

Scene from "The Little Life Guard" (Majestic).

Dan wins Georgie's little sweetheart, Carmen, away from him. Georgie decides that only deeds of valor will restore Carmen to him. He talks with a life guard on the beach and is told how to be brave in the water. Georgie covers his chest with medals and struts up and down the beach prepared to rescue any damsel in distress.

Meanwhile, little Carmen decides to test the courage of her two child sweethearts. She pretends to be drowning and Georgie rushes to her rescue. She really has ventured out too far and is in danger. Georgie is swept to sea, keeping Carmen afloat. Both are finally rescued by the boastful life guard.

The scenes in which the children struggle in the water are unusually effective since both confessed afterwards that they really were frightened when "The Little Life Guard" was filmed.

"CAPITAL PUNISHMENT" PLEASES ALABAMA EXHIBITORS.

Knickerbocker Star Features are in receipt of a letter from R. B. Wilby, manager of the Strand Amusement Company of Montgomery, Ala., which contains the highest of praise for their release, "Capital Punishment."

"You have the right idea for three-reelers," writes Wilby. "Certain it is that your pictures are overdrawing very decidedly any other three-reel productions exhibited by us."

"THE TERROR OF TWIN MOUNTAINS" (American).

In this story Western scenery affords a wonderfully beautiful setting for a thrilling drama of compelling interest. Helen Rosson, the 17-year-old leading woman of the "Flying A" studio, is seen to exceptional advantage, her great daring being coupled with an unusual dramatic ability.

Opposite Miss Rosson, playing her husband is E. Forrest Taylor, whose performance is admirable in every department. The work of these two stars is such that exhibitors will want to see them again in the future releases.

There of course is a villain, one Ivan, "The Terror of Twin Mountains," played by Roy Stewart, who brings woe to the home of John and Frances. There has been an earlier love affair between the outlaw and Frances—before Ivan had renounced society's ways and trangressed her laws. This theme is prettily woven into the story and around the thrilling stagecoach scene when Ivan after robbing the passengers takes Frances away to his mountain lair.

John, returning, searches for his wife and finds her. The finding, however, is not without numerous thrills and hairbreath escapes. Altogether, this two-reel feature is exceptionally strong, well acted and possessing unusual scenic effects. William Bertram, one of the best-known of Western directors, produced the story, which is to be released September 27.

UNIVERSAL ACQUIRES FILM RIGHTS TO NEW BOOKS.

The Universal this week acquired the film rights to the following books: "The Flirt," by Booth Tarkington; "The Silver Bell of Los Morales," by Eleanor Gates; "Crooked Trails," by William McLeod Raine; "Mavericks" and "The Texas Rancher," by the same author; "The First Lady in the Land," by Charles F. Nirdlinger; "The Diamond Master," by Jacques Futrelle, and "Elusive Isabel," by the same author.

The following famous stories, novels and Broadway plays are already filmed or being filmed by the Universal: "The Garden of Lies," "Scandal," "The Earl of Pawtucket," "Judy Forgot," "Just Jim," "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," "Jewel," "Judge Not," "Under Southern Skies," "The Long Chance," "A Little Brother of the Rich," "His Double," "The Sphinx," "The Campbells Are Coming," "The Intrigue," "Colorado," "The Man Inside," "Son of the Immortals," "Fatherhood," "Business Is Business," "Strength of the Weak," "That Lass o' Lowries," "A Parlor Match," "A Run on the Bank."

Plays, books and stories by the following famous authors are being filmed or have been filmed by the Universal: Justus Miles Forman, Lois Weber, Augustus Thomas, Hobart Bosworth, Clara Louise Burnham, Lottie Blair Parker, Peter B. Kyne, Joseph Medill Patterson, Louis V. Jefferson, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Octave Mirabeau, Grace Cunard, Raymond L. Schrock, Hugh Weir, Eleanor Gates, Booth Tarkington and Jacques Futrelle.

Speer Projector Carbons

Modern Factory Erected for the Manufacture of Projector Carbons—Efficiency Tests Maintained.

THE Speer Carbon Company of St. Mary's, Pa., has begun the manufacture of Carbon Electrodes for projectors in their new plant. This company built its first plant at St. Mary's, Pa., in 1899 and this plant has been devoted almost entirely to the manufacture of dynamo brushes. The Speer Company has always held a position in the front rank among American brush manufacturers.

J. S. Speer, president of the company, has been successfully manufacturing carbon products for twenty-five years, beginning this work in company with J. Partridge, another pioneer in the carbon business. G. P. Fryling has been closely associated with Mr. Speer for thirteen years as secretary and treasurer of the Speer Carbon Company. Recently H. R. Edgecomb, who was with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company as research engineer for seven years and who has specialized on carbon products, has taken up the engineering work of the Speer Carbon Company under the title of chief engineer.

J. S. Speer.

In order that the manufacture of Speer Projector Carbons should not be in any way confused with the brush manufacturing plant and to prevent contamination and intermixing of materials, the Speer Carbon Company has erected a modern factory 60 by 200 feet, built for perfect illumination and ventilation, and arranged as a complete unit for the highest efficiency in the manufacture of Speer Projector Carbons. This factory has been equipped with entire new machinery throughout, most of which has been specially designed for the particular processes required in this manufacture. As soon as the business warrants it, the Speer Company are prepared to add further sections to this factory so that they may have sufficient equipment to enable them to keep up with the demand for Speer Projector Carbons.

G. P. Fryling.

The Speer Projector Carbons are being tested in the Temple theater at St. Mary's, Pa., managed by J. S. Speer, and a number of samples have been sent to several distributors for the purpose of making them acquainted with this new product prior to its commercial introduction. In the Temple theater exhaustive tests are continually in progress. The Speer Company has spared no expense to equip this division of their testing department with efficient apparatus. Tests are being made to show comparisons between the Speer Projector Carbons and those of other manufacturers; these tests covering ampere hour life, illumination, color, amount of flickering and such other characteristics as affect the efficiency of projector carbons. It is the purpose of the Speer Carbon Company to continue testing its product, not only for comparison with the brands of other manufacturers, but also to insure a continuation of the same excellent quality.

"THE HOUSE DIVIDED" (Essanay).

"The House Divided," a three-act Essanay drama by H. S. Sheldon, teaches a forceful lesson to all husbands and wives not to bear idle suspicions against each other and shows vividly the unhappiness that results when one or the other lacks faith. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn in the leading roles of "The House Divided," are the ones who finally bring the couple together and reunite a family divided by a wife's groundless fears. The story depicts a well-to-do business man and his wife, much in love with each other. They have two pretty children. One day a poor woman goes to the husband for aid, and he accompanied her to her home. The wife sees and a separation results. The wife gets the daughter and the husband the son. The children grow up and the son, lacking a mother's influence, becomes wayward and his father, twelve years after the separation, decides to send him to Panama. He writes to his wife that their son is going and arranges to have her say good-bye to the youth at the office of a mutual friend, a young lawyer in love with the couple's daughter. The husband and wife meet there unexpectedly, and a reconciliation is effected when matters are explained. "The House Divided" is a story with a strong moral, as well as a stirring plot that appeals.

EASTERN BURNS HOUSE FOR "CAP'N ERI."

The Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I., last week employed a large force of men to build a house which was immediately burned to the ground. The scenes for which these effects were secured are a part of the film version of "Cap'n Eri," the famous sea story by Joseph C. Lincoln, now being produced at the Eastern Film studios under the direction of George Lessey. Considerable time, money and labor were consumed in the preparation for the event, and an ideal location was selected at Conimicut, R. I., situated at the edge of Narragansett Bay.

Scene from "Cap'n Eri" (Eastern).

A large force of men in two days erected a frame house on the beach at a cost of $500. A battery of four cameras was trained on the structure, and after several preliminary scenes had been made, gasoline and oil was poured over the entire structure and with the blaze at its height, George Bunny, brother of the late John; William Mandeville and Herbert Bostwick, the three principal characters in "Cap'n Eri," entered the building and enacted their parts. The photoplay production of "Cap'n Eri" in five reels will shortly be released to photoplay patrons, featuring George Bunny in the title role.

PAVLOWA FILM SPECTACLE COMPLETED.

After ten weeks of persistent effort in an environment now endeared to her Anna Pavlowa has departed from Universal City to prepare for her tour in the world's leading opera houses. As a matter of fact, Pavlowa's tour has not been interrupted during the more than two months she has acted and danced before the cameras under Lois Weber's direction. Every night Pavlowa has appeared in Chicago and Los Angeles before audiences larger than any she has ever attracted in those cities.

Pavlowa believes that her advent, in filmodm will add to her vogue on the stage, and as proof of this both Pavlowa and her impresario are planning on a colossal scale for the new season, in fact, never before has the Pavlowa entourage been on such lines as will now be in order.

So certain is the dancer that the new public which will see her on the screen will flock to see her in the flesh, also that it is already arranged to cater to this new public. Instead of fearing injurious results, Max Rabinoff expects to vastly enlarge the Pavlowa following. Interest in musical circles is perhaps greater in the Pavlowa production than any other the screen has revealed to date, for Pavlowa is distinctly a musical attraction and it will be a great event indeed in the World of Music when "The Dumb Girl of Portici" is finally released to the screen.

Based on Auber's opera, "Masaniello," it is said that Lois Weber has transformed the one time favorite into a photospectacle so massive and compelling that aside from the role of the dumb girl, old opera goers will be amazed at the completeness of the revision.

SUIT AGAINST MASTERPIECE FILM CO.

The bond on a warrent of attachment procured by Adolph Figman for Max Figman against the Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Co. in a suit for recovery of $1,800 was approved by Justice Donnelly in the Supreme Court.

Figman, who lives at 112 West 72d street, New York, said in his application to the court that the Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Co. directed the Alliance Film Corporation of 130 West 46th street to pay to either of the Figman's $3,000; that he saw Harry G. Kosch, the manager, and that Kosch said that he did not have that much money but expected to get it, and that subsequently all but the $1,800 was paid. The Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Co. is located at Los Angeles and any of their assets in New York is liable to seizure on the attachment writ.

"WHEN HUSBANDS GO TO WAR" (MinA).

"When Husbands Go to War," the MinA release of Sept. 23, abounds in funny situations resulting from the decision of three rubes to go to the burlesque show in the city and the phony excuse to their wives—that they are going to enlist in the war.

This one-reeler will add one more to the list of MinA comedies with a plot. The company is endeavoring to strike a happy medium between slapsticks and polite comedies. "When Husbands Go to War" meets the desired end.

Scene from "When Husbands Go to War" (MinA).

Though only one reel, the action of this comedy flies from place to place, leaving not a dull moment in the thousand feet of film.

"TRILBY" SHOWN ON GOLD FIBRE SCREEN.

The Minusa Cine Products Company made a rush installation of their famous Gold Fibre Screen at the Forty-fourth Street theater for a special two weeks' showing of the feature film "Trilby," which is staged under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel.

Mr. Rothapfel personally sent in the exact specifications for the screen, and the results are most gratifying.

"HEARTS IN SHADOW" (American).

Vivian Rich scores a decided triumph in the one-reel feature "Hearts in Shadow," in which she appears with Louise Lester and Jack Richardson. This is a very human theme, and one of those every-day kind of stories that crop up in the life of a big city and in the hands of three well-known screen stars it is handled so that the maximum of heart interest is forthcoming.

Scene from "Hearts in Shadow" (American).

An unbelieving judge who doubts the story told by Nan (Miss Rich), sends the girl to jail. Meantime, the wife of Detective Burke discovers in the park a young child wandering about in search of her mother. Miss Lester is unusually human here, as the wife of the detective (Jack Richardson), who returning home puts two and two together, with the result that the girl's story is verified.

The judge is immediately informed and the girl is discharged. The role of Nan affords Miss Rich opportunity to display a grief-torn heart with complete effectiveness and everyone who sees the picture, which will be released October 1, will be glad her tears are turned into smiles.

GOOD BUSINESS IN "THE YANKEE GIRL."

Perhaps the most amusing touch in "The Yankee Girl," the film play Oliver Morosco is making for the celebrated Blanche Ring out of her former musical comedy success, is the scene in the Gordon mansion with Miss Ring playing and singing at the piano and the actors dancing into the room in impromptu "one steps," "hesitations" and "maxixes" as they keep time with her syncopated measures. The director got the idea for this novel piece of business from watching the hypnotic effect upon the actors, camera men, stage hands and bystanders when Blanche Ring whiled away a wait between scenes by playing and singing her famous "Dublin Bay." In the midst of the whistling, toe-tapping and swaying of shoulders the director jumped to his feet, clapped his hands for the actors to take places, bade them give exactly the same spontaneous exhibition before the camera and rushed the scene through. Blanche Ring, catching the spirit of the thing, proved graciously obliging and accompanied the sidesplitting antics with a medley of the greatest song hits of her celebrated repertoire.

BIG EXPLOSION IN "HER OATH OF VENGEANCE."

This photograph shows the extent to which Director-General D. W. Griffith of the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation will go in order to secure an effect. The photograph is that of an explosion in the feature, "Her Oath of Vengeance," the photoplay in which "Teddy" Sampson plays the part of a Russian girl. The explosion is of a cannery at the edge of a California orchard. It is planned and executed in the photoplay by a former Russian nihilist, who has tried to incite a strike among the workmen and has failed.

While Director-General Griffith did not build a complete cannery for the purposes of the explosion, he did have one constructed which with very little addition could have been in practical operation.

Scene from "Her Oath of Vengeance" (Reliance).

It was a building of three stories, and as the photograph shows, contained a number of the appliances of a cannery. When the building was finally blown up with dynamite for the photoplay a battery of cameras was trained upon it in order that the costly device might be entirely successful. It was, as the photograph shows.

"BRUTALITY" (Biograph).

Mae Marsh, Walter Miller, Elmer Booth and Lionel Barrymore are featured in this one-reel Biograph reissue under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

Before their marriage the girl gets an inkling of her lover's brutal temper, but he assures her that she will never be its victim. They have been married only a few months, however, when his brutal nature assumes full sway. When his treatment becomes insufferable she attempts to leave him, but he discovers her in the act and forces her to dissemable. The next day he is given two tickets to the theater, and together they witness a great actor's impersonation of the brutal Bill Sykes in Dickens' "Oliver Twist." The tragedy makes a deep and lasting impression upon the husband's mind. Aghast at the thought that some day he, too, may kill the woman he loves, promises to curb his temper, and by strict self-repression succeeds in his attempt.

This story, handled by any other than a skilled director who had every facility at his command, would have degenerated into an ordinary one-reel picture; but as here acted by this capable cast, it becomes a one-reel production that will be a credit to any program.

LOU-TELLEGEN IN "THE EXPLORER" (Lasky),

Mr. Lou-Tellegen, the International star, and former leading man for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, will make his photodramativ debut as a Paramount star of the Lasky Feature Play Company on September 20 in a most elaborate picturization of William Somerset-Maugham's play "The Explorer." This play in stage form has been presented with marked success in England, on the continent and in Canada and the United States.

Scene from "The Explorer" (Lasky).

Mr. Lou-Tellegen will appear as Alec McKenzie, the explorer. He is commissioned by the British government to make explorations in British Africa and to stop for all time the negro slave trade. He takes to Africa with his party a youth who is brother of the girl whom the explorer loves. The boy, George Allerton, disgraces himself at home and incurs the enmity of the native blacks, imperilling the lives of the members of the expedition. In shame George offers himself as the last resistance against the enraged blacks and he dies in honor, allowing the other members of the party to escape.

The explorer returns with the secret of the disgrace untold. James Neill, Dorothy Davenport, H. B. Carpenter, Tom Forman and others appear with Lou-Tellegen.

"THE INTRIGUE" (Universal Broadway Feature).

"The Intrigue," in which Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven are starred by the Universal, is a delightfully breezy romance of college life. Beneath the fun and college boy pranks of the principal (Mr. De Haven) a serious vein runs. Framed up by a college pal, the roistering young blade loses fiancee, inheritance and is thrown out of college. He applies football tactics and strategy to life's game, however, and with the aid of a pretty little slavey who comes to his assistance when things look blackest he manages to turn the tables upon those who have deserted him in his hour of need.

"The Intrigue" is a college boy's story chuck full of fun, exciting adventure and rough comedy of the type in which college boys delight. Two western college football teams actually take part in a football game and Carter De Haven plays quarterback on one of the elevens. A clever burlesque of fraternity life plays a prominent part in the early story when the Out O Detas and the Eta Bita Pis clash in a freshman rush.

Through it all runs a charming romance with the De Havens as principals. A bid on a railroad terminal is stolen by a young ne'er-do-well, who also pays a chorus girl to compromise "the cleverest kid in college." De Haven, in character, recovers the bid with the assistance of the little slavey and by underbidding his father and his father's business rivals cleans up a tidy fortune. Gloria Funda, Universal beauty contest prize winner from the state of Washington, plays her first important role in "The Intrigue" and does it extremely well.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" SALES.

W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative for F. O. Nielsen, who has conducted the advertising and selling campaign in the cast for "Guarding Old Glory," Mr. Nielsen's big Peace and Preparedness picture, reports the entire eastern and southern territory disposed of, with the exception of New England and Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. This territory has all been sold within less than three weeks from the time of the first announcement that the picture would be released on a state-right basis.

The most remarkable thing of all, however, was the quick response of exhibitors all over the country who wired in for immediate bookings, and in nearly every instance in which a state right was sold Mr. Rudolph was able to turn in to the buyer nearly fifty per cent. of the amount of the sale price in bookings.

Reese and Sanuos, of Westminster, Md., purchased the rights for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, and T. J. Howell, of Dover, N. J. bought Eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

A BIG BUY IN SLIDES.

One of the largest purchases ever consummated in the slide business has just taken place. Over 21,000 slides, of world-wide interest and covering a large variety of subjects, have been purchased by the Novelty Slide Company from Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., and will shortly be offered to the trade at below cost price. The purchase of this large stock has made it necessary for the Novelty people to lease an additional floor in their present building, thus giving them three floors at No. 67 West 23d street.

ELABORATE INTERIOR SET DESTROYED.

To suit the purposes of the plot of the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Purple Night," an interior set of an inventor's laboratory, handsomely furnished and full of scientific instruments and glassware, was exploded to smithereens. The scene is a masterpiece in realism and much credit is due to Director Stanner E. V. Taylor for his skillful handling of the subject.

Notes of the Trade.

EARLE WILLIAMS of the Vitagraph Company, is the first of the motion picture players to have the story of his life enclosed between the covers of a book. "The Life of Earle Williams" is just off the press and is claimed to be written in an interesting way with chapters on, "Stage Work," "Thrilling Experiences," "Film Work," "Home Life," etc., covering every part of his life from youth to the present time, and to form a lasting record for the admirers of Mr. Williams.

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of David L. Don as a comedy star. Mr. Don has an enviable record as a light opera comedian, having played leading roles in "The Girl From Paris" with Louis Mann; "Adonis" with Henry Dixey; "The Belle of New York;" "The Merry Whirl;" "The Belle of Bohemia," and other famous Broadway productions.

Mr. Don began his public career as an acrobat with a circus at the mature age of nine. Then he deserted the sawdust and became an interior decorator and scene painter, and eventually a professional ball player, but all these activities held no charm for the future actor, and in the course of time he became a minstrel with the original Barlow, Wilson, Primrose and West Company on their first tour of the country. Now he is being featured in Lubin comedies being filmed by Edward McKim, the new Lubin director.

In days gone by, prima donnas had their diamonds stolen; comic opera stars indulged in milk baths, while still others committed matrimony, or were divorced. But it has remained for a Lubin photoplayer to break all known records. He—for it is a he—is Kempton Greene, who is being featured in a series of twelve picturized "John Henry" stories, which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post, and which are being filmed under the direction of Clay M. Greene.

Clay M. Greene.

So far as is known, Mr. Greene smokes, alleges that he knows how to play poker, has an absolutely normal and healthy thirst, and otherwise disports himself as a human being. It is even asserted that Mr. Greene likes the girls, an accusation which he denies half-heartedly and without any degree of undue enthusiasm.

Nevertheless, Mr. Greene is a "rara avis," which, translated into the common or garden variety of English, means a "bird of an actor," for he is the only photoplayer in captivity, or known to scientific research, who does not own an automobile and does not want one.

Shall Duluth Censor?

Movement for Local Censorship of Motion Pictures Awakens in Duluth—Exhibitor Says City Needs a Great Many Things More Than It Needs a Board of Censorship for Its Theaters—Opinions from Other Film Men.

By Frank H. Madison, Wisconsin Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE local censorship movement again has sprung into life in Duluth. The Woman's Council, which is active in the movement announces that it does not want a board with strict powers of censorship, but a body which will be advisory to moving picture exhibitors and assist them in the selection of films. The subject was discussed last June by the Woman's Council, but the city council was not officially notified. Duluth managers expressed themselves as follows:

James L. Morrisey, of the Lyceum theater: "I cannot see why there should be any apparent need for censorship in the city of Duluth on motion pictures which have every one of them passed through the inspection of a national board of censors—nine picture viewers who have not yet hesitated to cut parts of pictures costing the companies thousands of dollars in redramatization. It is true that 'the public is the best censor.' I present no plays to which children may not with propriety be admitted. I do not oppose the idea—nor do I favor it. I think it is wholly unnecessary."

F. N. Phelps, of New Grand: "A censorship of theaters could be a made good thing if properly applied. However, the little 'if' in a case of this kind is what causes all the trouble in cities which have censors.

"I censor my own shows, both vaudeville and pictures Regardless of other censoring I would continue to exercise my own censorship and would have anything eliminated that failed to meet my approval, whether it had succeeded in passing the censoring board or not."

"Duluth theaters are clean, as will be evidenced by the fact that thousands of men and women, boys and girls, attend them each week, and the general moral tone of the community has not suffered in any way because of what the public has seen and heard in our playhouses. Sufficient authority is vested in the city's executive officers to prevent the exhibition of any spectacle of photoplay that tends to deprave. Duluth needs a great many things more than it needs a board of censorship for its theaters."

P. Furniss, Lyric and Rex: "Advertising shows with minors or children excluded is but an advertising scheme to draw attention of the people. I have never shown and never will show pictures in my house which I would prevent children from seeing. The public itself is the best censor, and if they do not approve the class of entertainment shown at a place, they will not attend it."

CHISHOLM, TOO, MAY CENSOR.

Chisholm is likely to have a local censorship, the city council having instructed the city attorney to draft an ordinance regulating the character of moving pictures exhibited in Chisholm houses. This action was taken at the request of W. B. Brown, humane officer, who wants to forbid all films depicting crime.

ST. PAUL CLUB WOMEN'S PICTURES FOR CHILDREN.

In order to give visitors from out of town, during fair week, an idea of what St. Paul club women are doing in the way of moving pictures for children, the special shows were resumed September 11 at the Park theater. "Little Lord Fauntleroy" was shown for the first time in the Twin Cities. Local womens' clubs, parent-teacher organizations and educators were represented at the matinee.

MINNESOTA PICTURE NEWS.

An unusually appropriate picture "In a Japanese Garden" was shown in the new Japanese garden stage settings at the new Garrick theater in Minneapolis.

Harry and Bert Beyerstedt, whose lease on the Opera house at Winona recently ended, are planning to erect a theater at Fourth and Main streets in that city if the project can be financed. An earlier option on a site in that neighborhood was allowed to lapse. The Colonial Amusement Company now has charge of the moving picture programs at the Winona opera house, but the members of that concern denied the house had been purchased by the company.

"Neptune's Daughter" has had another run in Duluth—four days at the Lyric.

Max Greenberg has reopened the Electric theater at Cuyuna.

Erhard Sandgreen is now partner with Henry Herreid in the operation of the Lyceum theater at Deer River. W. A. Ryan and George Higgins have retired from the firm and probably will open another show in Deer River.

The Lyric theater at Duluth and the News-Tribune of Duluth will put on a local, "Who Will Be Lou?" film. The News-Tribune has joined the Northwest Weekly organization.

J. B. Colombo has purchased the Royal theater from R. A. McLean.

Leo Schueller and Wendell Phillips are now operating the Idle Hour at Mahnomen, the former having purchased the interest of L. J. Killin.

The Orpheum at Duluth began a picture season September 20. Its future as a vaudeville house has been a matter of conjecture.

A. J. Lawrence has remodeled and redecorated the Bijou theater at Fergus Falls.

The Star theater at St. James has been sold to R. E. Gabriel and his sister, Miss Amber Gabriel, of Armstrong, Ia. A new Motiograph has been installed and an orchestra will be used.

E. C. Fargo has sold the Converse opera house at Winnebago City to George Kaupp.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

A Labor Tangle in Milwaukee—New Projects—Recent Hits.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

WHAT might be termed labor troubles may delay the remodeling of the Merrill building in Milwaukee into a theater building. The Badger State Investment Company, which is behind the theater project, declares it awarded the general building contract with the agreement that all union men be employed. A sub-contractor, it is alleged, put non-union men on the job. The investment company got a temporary injunction restraining the contractors from continuing the work. This order was vacated the next day by Judge Williams. Later in the day Judge Eschweler set aside Judge Williams' order. The case was then taken to Judge Fritz and then back to Judge Williams. Meanwhile the union men have been at work by agreement with the investment company.

Fair week visitors to Milwaukee got a chance to see "The Birth of a Nation." It was returned to the Pabst for the week of Sept. 12.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been booked at the Grand opera house, in Superior, for some time in October. The Green Bay booking originally for Sept. 12-19 has been postponed because of extended engagements elsewhere.

Charles Somers, of Cleveland, O., lessee of the Plankinton property in Milwaukee is reported to be interested in a project to erect an eight-story building including a theater on Grand avenue in Milwaukee.

The Lyric theater, at Fort Atkinson, increases its shows in October to Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

The Evening Wisconsin, of Milwaukee, brought Frank R. Roberson with his travelogs to the Pabst theater in that city.

"Neptune's Daughter" ran four days at the Lyric theater, in Superior.

Manager Effinger has sold his moving picture theater at Rice Lake to G. W. McLaughlin, of Eau Claire.

Henry Dahl has sold the Bijou theater, at Grantsburg, to Christ Griswold, and V. I. Cilley, and will attend Iowa University.

Sherwood Bros. have sold the Majestic theater, at Elroy, to Harry Hanson.

A film in the operating room of the Wisconsin theater, 2430 Lisbon ave., Milwaukee, caught fire and the firemen were called. Loss, $175. No one was injured.

A baby show revue matinees was the novelty offered by the Gem theater, at Baraboo.

William Yellman, of Manitowoc, has taken over the management of the Colonial theater at Green Bay.

Censors and Liberty

Cleveland Exhibitor Stands in Patrick Henry's Shoes to Uphold American Rights—State Censors Objected to President Herrington's Speech on His Screen, but Mayor Upholds the Citizen—Place on Censor Board Vacant.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

STATE censors have taken no further action in complaints against Samuel Bullock, Cleveland exhibitor, who presented a picture in his theaters showing Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in an address, with excerpts from his speech interjected at intervals through the film. The censors objected to Mr. Herrington's arraignment of the board, but Mr. Bullock refused to make "cut-outs" on the ground that the right of free speech could be countermanded by no law. Mayor Baker upheld him in this attitude.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller's term as a member of the Ohio board of censors has expired—and more than one hundred citizens of the state want her job. The applications of this number indicate one of two things—being a member of the Ohio board is an excellent occupation, and enviable, or more than one hundred people want to help relieve the exhibitors' burden of "too much censorship."

Undoubtedly many of these applications are inspired from motives friendly to the motion picture industry. Columbus sends word that political interests back some while other letters on file demonstrate many applicants are not capable of filling the position. At any rate, Mrs. Miller is "through" for the time being and it is doubtful about her reappointment. Governor Willis has made no announcement of his attitude, nor have members of the industrial board, under which the censors operate.

ADDITIONS TO MELBA THEATER.

Work on the extensive additions to the Melba theater, Cleveland, has been in progress for more than a week and will be pushed to completion with all possible speed. The Melba is located at Detroit avenue and W. 117th street. The changes include a new auditorium, 60 x 120 feet, and complete rearrangement. The present auditorium will be given over to an enlarged lobby and foyer. A ventilating plant with capacity of 20,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute will be installed. The house will have 1,000 seats, with a tier of seven auto boxes which will seat about forty people.

THREE NEW HOUSES.

Workmen have started construction of the new theater for Theodore Schmitt, well-known Cleveland architect, at Detroit avenue and W. 118th street. The new Strand, in the Erie building, is rapidly nearing completion, as is the theater part of the commercial building under construction for Jacob Babin, in East Cleveland, at Euclid avenue and E. 146th street.

WORLD FILM OFFICES TO MOVE.

The World Film corporation has taken a five-year lease on the entire third floor of the Belmont building, Prospect avenue, Cleveland, now nearing completion. The transaction was concluded on the recent visit of Lewis J. Selznick in Cleveland and the World offices will be moved late in October. Present location of the World and Equitable offices is at 320 Columbia building. The joint motion picture organization, for which Sam E. Morris is branch manager, will have 6,000 square feet of floor space in their new home.

OHIO GOSSIP NOTES.

Daring holdups, thrilling rescues and hair-raising leaps for life comprise a few of the capers which Akron society buds will cut before the camera in a picture production to be staged by the Akron Chamber of Commerce. Miss Miriam Good was selected as leading lady and Edward Handy leading man.

The Liberty theater, Cleveland, had to contend with a double strike recently when stage hands and operators refused to proceed with shows. The stage hands went out at both the Liberty and Gordon Square, owned and operated by the same company. The operators went out in sympathy. An amicable settlement of difficulties was arranged by Harry Du Rocher, manager.

The Metropolitan Amusement Company, owners of the Reel theater, and of which George Hausheer is president, has secured a lease on the Grand theater, Bolivar road and E. 9th street, Cleveland, and will open it with feature film productions about the first of October. The house will be thoroughly cleansed and redecorated at considerable expense.

The News and the Opera House, at Mansfield, are co-operating in the production of a film drama of local interest. F. L. Bennage, director of the McHenry Film Company, was engaged as producer. The cast was selected by a contest in the News and the pictures are to be seen at the Opera House.

GAVE A PART TO CHARITY.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Crescent Amusement company, of Nashville, Tenn., recently advertised that a portion of the receipts taken in during the booking of Miss Mary Pickford in "A Good Little Devil" would be given to the Travelers' Aid Society, one of the worthy charities of Nashville, which has as its object the protection of young girls who come to the city in an effort to obtain employment.

KNOXVILLE SEES KLU KLUX FILM.

F. Charles Aebli, manager of Straub's theater of Knoxville, Tenn., formally opened the theatrical season at the playhouse with Al. G. Field's minstrel show on Friday, September 10. Shortly following the minstrel show the concern exhibited David W. Griffith's famous photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation." Several high-class photoplays will be shown this season in connection with the legitimate plays.

"HYPOCRITES" IN NASHVILLE.

How well "Hypocrites" went with the patrons of the Crescent theater of Nashville, Tenn., may be seen in the fact that the picture was recalled for a return engagement. Prices were advanced for the first run of the pictures in Nashville, and the theater was well filled at all performances. At the second run of the picture prices were on the regular scale. The Nashville Banner, one of the leading papers of the state, gave the picture quite a boost previous to its return engagement.

COMPANY SHOW GREW UP.

W. M. Kerrick, of the Mengel Box company, of Louisville, which operates a picture show at Mengelwood, Tenn., a large lumber camp established a few years ago by the box company, reports that the picture show proved so popular that it was necessary to enlarge the show house a short time ago to take care of the increasing business. When first started the show was for employes of the company, but it was shortly discovered that the country people in the district came miles to see the performances, which are given on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Mengelwood now has a population of 1,500 people, most of whom are employed by the box company. The theater has a seating capacity of approximately 500 people. The admittance price is ten cents and the shows consist of four reels of the Universal program. Cane chairs are fastened together, and are so arranged that they can be removed when the building is used as a dance hall.

FILM COMPANY IN MEMPHIS.

A new film company has been organized at Memphis, Tenn., and has filed articles of incorporation at Nashville, Tenn., under the name of the Mutual Film Corporation. The capital stock of the concern is $10,000. The incorporators are John W. Spence, C. S. Parker, W. C. Chandler, J. S. Allen and C. V. Runyon. The concern will buy, lease and sell motion picture films. It is also stated that the company will engage in the manufacture of motion picture equipment.

TENNESSEE NOTES OF INTEREST.

The old Loudon theater of Loudon, Tenn., which has passed its day of usefulness, is being remodeled into a restaurant and ice cream establishment. The little theater was one of the earliest picture houses in the city, and handled a nice business at one time.

The Elite theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., handles its advertising in a slightly different manner from that of the average moving picture theater, especially among the smaller towns. The Elite has made arrangements whereby it uses the same space in the daily paper each day, and the public has no trouble in locating the theater's announcements. A four-inch space, one column wide, is used. In this space inch type is used for the word "Elite," which appears at the top of the announcement. No general description is given of the pictures. In an inch space at the bottom is given the program for the following day.

Miss Alma Martin, of New York, who has posed for several moving picture productions, has been spending a month with relatives in Nashville, Tenn. Miss Martin will shortly return to New York to take up her professional career again.

The Princess theater of Nashville which showed moving pictures for a portion of the summer has been reopened as a Keith program vaudeville house after a close of six weeks, during which time numerous improvements were made.

The Princess theater of Memphis, Tenn., recently staged the five-reel farce comedy, "Judy Forgot."

LETTER FROM THE PRAIRIE STATES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Iowa Changes—New Houses—Recent Hits.

EXHIBITOR R. M. SHEALLS of Plattsmouth, Neb., has been contemplating opening a new moving picture show in the Higgins building at Decorah.

L. N. Hall, a real estate man of Des Moines has purchased the Zenith at Shenandoah from M. J. Brink, who bought it July 5 from C. A. Hamilton.

The Palace at Cedar Rapids is playing many return dates. Among recent repeaters are Theda Bara in "Lady Audley's Secret" and "The Melting Pot."

George Schaffner of Burlington is manager of the Orpheum theater at Muscatine which opened September 15 with a picture and vaudeville program. The interior has been redecorated.

Free lemonade was served by Sorg & Burkhart on the opening night of their new moving picture theater at Hawkeye. "The Squaw Man" was the initial attraction.

The Princess at State Center, which has been under the management of Hicks Brothers, has been taken over by C. O. Galbraith, who opened it with "Ghosts." The new proprietor was a member of the vaudeville team of Ward & Ward.

A. E. Humphrey has sold the Lyric at Roland to Britson Bros. & Jondall and has removed to Carlisle. The new firm is composed of Arthur, Bret and J. E. Britson and Hosea Jondall. Arthur Britson will be manager and Alexander Eide assistant.

J. J. Taylor of Coon Rapids has purchased an interest in a moving picture show at Jamaica.

Schmitz & Dulton have leased the Virginia theater at Boone for three years from the B. Arie & Son Realty Co.

"The Mating" and "The Blindness of Virtue" were the first two attractions at the New Cecil theater at Mason City. Manager Power will feature his musical program.

The Farmers' Institute is planning to erect an opera house at Glidden.

Nebraska State Fair Pictures—Some Titles—Showmanship Notes.

A MOVING picture show, continuous from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., was conducted by the University of Nebraska at the Nebraska State fair at Lincoln. The list of films shown is remarkable, having a scope of subjects relating to life in Nebraska that has not been equalled by any other state using machines for education and exploitation. Among the films were: Irrigation in Western Nebraska. (A duplicate copy of this reel is being run at the San Francisco exposition to crowded houses in the hall of the United States reclamation service. It is by far the best irrigation reel ever made.) Beet sugar industry of Western Nebraska, Pine Ridge. Journey by boat down the Niobrara, showing wonderful scenic effects along the stream, including a large number of waterfalls. Cattle in the sand hills, showing the roundup, branding and other features of the cattle industry; tuberculosis in milk and dairy herds; parks and playgrounds; hog cholera; the school of agriculture, a two-reel feature showing the life of a boy while in the school of agriculture; the apple industry of the state; the poultry industry; journeys in Nebraska; general reel; University of Nebraska, including drill and football; better babies and power farming.

The Hippodrome theater in Omaha played a three-day return engagement of Mary Pickford in "Rags."

J. W. Blair has purchased a moving picture show at Bristow.

"I am asked almost daily," said A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, "if we are going to show vaudeville with our pictures. We most emphatically are not, as we are picture people. That is our hobby, and what's more, there is a great big opening in Omaha for a theater of the caliber of the Strand." Exhibitor A. H. Blank has remodeled the American theater in Omaha into a high class picture house and renamed it the Strand. The house opened September 14 with "An Alien."

CINCINNATI NOTES.

Harry W. Kress, who had the picture show rights of May's opera house at Piqua, O., during the summer, liked the business so well that he has arranged to take over the entire lease and will operate the house with a mixed booking of photoplay features and dramatic productions.

The Lyric theater, of Urbana, O., and the proprietors of a shoe store in that city, got together last week, with the result that on Thursday evening local youngsters had a chance to go to the theater on free tickets furnished by the shoe concern. The plan was devised as a sort of preliminary to the school term, in recognition of the fact that youngsters need school shoes, coupled with the other fact that they like picture shows, and it worked well for all concerned, it is reported.

Promise in "Veritas"

New Cincinnati Producing Company Has the Material for a Live Wire Film Making Concern—Jacques Jensen, Its General Director, to Have Three Other Directors Producing with Him—In Market for Scenarios.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE newly organized Veritas Photoplay Co., which was incorporated a short time ago, and which will elect officers this week, is looming large on the local horizon as a coming big figure in the producing field, as far as can now be judged. The character of the business men interested seems to guarantee this, and the efforts of John Von Rittberg, formerly with the Selig Company, and himself an actor and dramatist of considerable ability, place the enterprise on a higher plane than the average newly-fledged photoplay company.

Mr. Von Rittberg, who is perhaps better known by his stage name of Jacques Jensen, has remained in Cincinnati since the formal incorporation of the company, busily engaged in attending to the numerous details connected with the gathering of an organization, postponing his trip to New York in quest of players in consequence. He is in correspondence with two dramatic directors and one comedy director, who will probably be engaged, and two local cameramen, William C. Reynolds and O. C. Reifschneider, have been employed, the latter being an expert chemist, who will probably be used in the chemical end of the work as well.

With Mr. Jensen as general director and the other three referred to, it will be possible to work on four productions at once, and this will enable the company to keep up with its program. Its arrangements now contemplate the production of about four large features annually, with several one and two-reel productions a week, which will be released through one of the well known programs.

L. A. Boenig, president of the United States Cinematograph Co., of Chicago, will be general manager of the company. Winifred E. Jensen will be chief editor and will have charge of the work of reading outside scenarios, for which the company is in the market. The first production to appear under the Veritas brand, according to present plans, is by Miss Jensen, whose work is well known. The local plant of the company has not yet been located, as the several sites inspected have been the subject of highly exaggerated "hikes" in price, or have otherwise been rendered not immediately available. This matter will be taken care of, however, in ample time for the beginning of active operations in Cincinnati following Mr. Jensen's trip to New York, where he has designs on several well-known players, whose names would speak for themselves.

THE LYRIC DID WELL WITH FEATURES IN SUMMER.

Following a custom which is becoming quite venerable, the moving picture season at the Lyric theater, in charge of Paul Hillman, closed, and the regular dramatic season opened with two weeks of Lyman Howe, whose travel and educational pictures have attained considerable popularity. This summer's season at the Lyric, according to Mr. Hillman, was exceptionally good, especially in connection with the several attractions, such as "The Christian" and "The White Sister," shown toward the end of the season, for which higher prices than the usual ten cents were charged.

These two productions, for which prices from 25 cents down were charged, according to Mr. Hillman, while "Tillie's Punctured Romance," returning to the downtown section for the seventh time, and the Chaplin "Mix-Up," full of what is commonly called old stuff, were both big successes. Among other productions listed by Mr. Hillman as among the best of the season with him were "Graustark," "The Chalice of Courage," "The Millionaire Baby," "The Juggernaut" and "The Sins of the Mothers." The two weeks of Lyman Howe, which are now bringing the picture season to a successful close and ushering in the dramatic season of 1915-16, are witnessing big audiences, and fittingly conclude the summer's work at the Lyric.

PORTSMOUTH, O., WANTS SUNDAY PICTURES.

The Sunday-closing question, which has so far not been prominent in Ohio, has been much to the front during the past week or so at Portsmouth, O., where, in accordance with the mandate of the local authorities, the theaters have been closing recently on Sunday. In the absence of any real sentiment in favor of closing, and with a very decided demand on the part of many people who believe that good pictures offer an entirely innocent amusement for Sunday, there is some pressure being brought to bear on the exhibitors to test the matter out.

Such authority as the mayor at Portsmouth, or local authorities elsewhere may have to close picture shows on Sunday is lodged solely in an old statute prohibiting common labor on that day; and in order to get around this, and to give Portsmouth people a chance to express themselves on the subject, the exhibitors are preparing to have passed, either by the council or by means of an initiative vote, an ordinance expressly permitting shows to do business on Sunday after twelve o'clock, and expressly declaring them not to be within the statute regarding common labor.

If the council refuses to act, the exhibitors will proceed to file petitions in order to have their ordinance passed upon by the voters, and they have full confidence that they will ultimately be successful in their move.

FILMS TO FILL DARK NIGHTS AT YOUNGSTOWN'S PARK.

According to a recent announcement by Manager L. B. Cool, of the Park theater, Youngstown, O., a unique policy will be pursued by that house this season, which is not only in line with a very decided tendency in dramatic circles, but is one which will keep the house busy during the entire season, with no unpleasant gaps.

With about twenty-five first-class dramatic productions booked, including "Potash & Perlmutter," "Maid in America," Maud Adams, David Warfield, Montgomery & Stone in "Chin-Chin," and the like, Manager Cool will offer to his patrons in the intervals between these some high-grade moving picture features. He inaugurated this season and this policy on Labor Day, showing the George Beban production of "The Alien," based on the Beban play, "The Sign of the Rose." Altogether, Manager Cool is looking forward to a highly successful season, which the plan indicated seems to promise.

NO YOUNGSTOWN PRIZE NIGHTS.

With a fairly mixed chorus of applause and kicks, exhibitors of Youngstown, O., accepted a recent fiat of Mayor F. A. Hartenstein to the effect that all prize contests and similar devices at moving picture theaters must go, and proceeded to obey the mayor's command. As in most cities where the practice, based on "country stores" and similar plans, has obtained a hold, it had become so general in Youngstown as to have lost virtually all its power as a drawing-card, and was a considerable burden to some of the exhibitors who were endeavoring to outdo their competitors. While some, therefore, complained bitterly at this infringement of their rights, as they regarded it, most were relieved.

A New Managers' Ass'n

Theatrical Managers in Virginia, West Virginia and the Carolinas Hold Meeting in Greensboro, N. C., and Organize South Atlantic Theater Managers' Association to Better Theatrical Business—Names of Those Present.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SIXTEEN managers, representing about twenty-five theaters in North and South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginin, gathered last week in Greensboro and completed the organization of the South Atlantic Theater Managers' Association. The object of this association is to better the theatrical business in those states generally, to secure better attractions in the popular-priced theaters and vaudeville houses, and to establish a circuit in this territory.

The idea was originated by L. G. Schofield, manager of the Piedmont and Elm theaters in Greensboro, who was elected president of the association. He states that he has experienced a great deal of trouble in getting the class of shows he desires for those houses. Others have met with similar difficulty. In addition to the sixteen managers present there is no doubt but that others will come into the fold, for a large number of telegrams were received from those unable to attend this meeting, pledging their co-operation and a willingness to agree to any policy adopted by those attending. Prior to adjournment it was agreed that the next meeting be held in Charlotte in January.

Among those who attended the conference were Sterling Smith, of the Elks Auditorium, of Winston-Salem, who was elected secretary and treasurer; W. P. Henritch, of the Roanoke theater, Roanoke, Va.; J. B Trent, of the Trenton theater, Lynchburg, Va.; George C. Hall, of the Colonial theater, Salisbury; John Pryor, of the Majestic, Danville, Va.; R. D. Craver, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Charlotte; Edward P. Gidley, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Charlotte; E. J. Sparks, Spartansburg, S. C.; E. G. Moore, of the Lyric theater, Kinston; Mr. Marsh, of Concord; Dan Michalove, of the Majestic, Asheville; John W. Lambeth, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Thomasville, and A. F. Sammis, attorney for that company, Winston-Salem; P B. Beard, of Salisbury, and H. E. Jenkins, of the Broadway, Columbus, S. C. All of these men are well known in the motion picture field.

SEASONAL NOTES IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Piedmont theater has been reopened for the season after having been closed while being repainted and redecorated. This theater now presents a most attractive appearance.

Dan Michalove, who has been with the S. A. Lynch enterprises for several years and who has lately been the special representative of the Paramount Pictures company in the Southern States, has assumed the management of the Auditorium in Asheville, which office he will hold in connection with similar duties at the Majestic theater in that city. Before going to Asheville, Mr. Michalove opened the Arcade theater in Jacksonville, Fla., for Mr. Lynch. He succeeds G. W. Bailey, who goes to Wilmington to assume charge of the theater in that city, which is on the Lynch circuit.

E. N. Albea, who has been clerk at the Oceanic hotel at Wrightsville Beach during the summer, has gone to Universal City to become a motion picture star. Mr. Albea made quite a hit in the pictures taking in Wilmington in connection with the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of this state. He is seen in fancy swimming stunts and it is this sort of work that he will take up while with the Universal company.

A. D. Neal & Company, of Charlotte, N. C., have taken over the Crystal theater in Goldsboro. This house was formerly operated by J. B. Hales, one of the best-known, and a very popular exhibitor of this territory. The new owners are rearranging the property and state that when the improvements are completed Goldsboro will have one of the finest picture theaters in the South.

C. O. Moss, who has been traveling through this state for the Pathe company, states that he has noticed quite an improvement in the motion picture business during the past few weeks. He reports no little success in the booking of "Neal of the Navy" and is quite enthusiastic over the coming Gold Rooster releases.

VIRGINIA NEWS ITEMS.

Two New Theaters Begin On Labor Day.

By Clarence L. Lenz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LABOR day saw the opening of the Apollo, the new $25,000 motion picture theater in Hampton. This house is owned by Captain W. W. Scott, a widely-known pilot of this section. It will be conducted under the management of George Backus, with Frencis Scott as the assistant manager, and John Garrison as operator. The building is said to be a reproduction of the Imperial, in Newport News, and is modern in every particular. It has a seating capacity of about five hundred and a comfortable gallery. The interior furnishings are in keeping with the attractiveness of the outside of the house. It is equipped with an electrical piano player installed by the Williams Music Company at a cost of $1,200

Another new theater which was opened on Labor day is the New Wells, in Norfolk, one of the largest houses in the South, having a seating capacity of in the neighborhood of eighteen hundred. This is to be a feature house running V-L-S-E and Fox films. The screen is a gold fiber one set in a frame, in a beautiful Japanese background. Two Powers 6B machines have been installed. Safety from fire is one of the foremost features of the house. The seats are large and roomy and a perfect view is obtained of the screen from every seat in the house. The lighting, heating and ventilating systems are of the best and all of the comforts possible have been provided for the patrons. A ten-piece orchestra furnishes the music for the theater. The house is open from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m., and the admission charged is ten cents for adults and five cents for children.

WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER.

New Season's Openings and Changes.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Lyric theater "most popular lady contest" came to a successful termination last week with Mrs. J. A. Phillips, wife of a well-known florist, the winner by 11,000 votes. Nearly thirty thousand votes were cast in her favor and as a result she will be given a trip, all expenses paid, to San Francisco, San Diego and Los Angeles, Cal. The contest has been in operation for three months.

The Leader theater on Ninth street will hereafter be operated strictly as a feature house, booking films for two days or more at a time instead of following a daily change. At the same time the price has been increased to ten cents.

A. N. Waters, formerly manager of the Paramount theater, in Roanoke, Va., and at one time manager of the Apollo, in this city, is traveling through Maryland for the World Film Corporation.

Bernard Debkin, formerly manager of the New Pickwick theater, in Baltimore, Md., is to assume the management of the New Parkway theater, at North avenue and Charles street, that city.

The Casino, on F street, near Seventh street, Northwest, which has remained dark during the summer months, has been reopened as a vaudeville and motion picture house with an admission charge of ten and twenty cents. It will be operated under the management of Louis J. Fosse, formerly manager of Poli's theater here and in Hartford, Conn.

For alleged misrepresentations in the sale to them of the Little Pickwick, moving picture theater, 312 West Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., Irvin and Jack Levine, trading as Levin Bros., sued William Fait and the Baltimore Amusement Company for $1,000 damages in the Superior Court, through Ritchie, Janney & Griswold, attorneys. It is alleged that an Edison operating machine and a lamp house from another Edison machine ere taken away and a worthless machine substituted.

WOULD REPEAL NEW JERSEY BLUE LAWS.

Municipal Heads Asked to Co-operate with Commissioner Arrowsmith of Long Branch.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMMISSIONER of Public Safety Thomas V. Arrowsmith, of Long Branch, has sent over 100 letters to the different heads of New Jersey municipalities asking for their co-operation in the introduction of a bill repealing the old "blue laws," which make it a crime to give Sunday shows, and prohibits all other amusements. The commissioner contends that the bill, enacted in 1854, contains many absurdities.

"Just to show the absurdity of the bill," Commissioner Arrowsmith stated Saturday, "in Bayonne moving pictures are open Sundays, while in Jersey City pictures are closed, and both under the provisions of the old law, showing conclusively that each city interprets the law to suit its own desires"

Mr. Arrowsmith believes that the ministers of the state would be in favor of a standard, workable law. The commissioner intends to call a meeting of the heads of the different cities in October or November, at which meeting some plan of procedure at the next legislature will be formulated.

STRUCTURAL CHANGES IN LYCEUM.

Building Inspector Daniel E. Romine, of Morristown (N. J.), has ruled that several changes in the structure of the Lyceum theater, that place, must be made before it can be opened to the public. The inspector has found, he charges, that the mortar is in a crumbled condition. He has notified the Lyceum Realty company, owners of the building, that pilasters must be built either inside or outside the building to carry the weight of the two roof trusses.

PARAMOUNT SHOWS BABY PARADE.

Oscar A. Morgan, resident manager of the Paramount theater, Broad and Hill streets, Newark, last week showed 800 feet of film of the recent baby parade at Asbury Park. The picture was taken especially for the Paramount by the Pathe company. Mary Pickford, the popular little actress, was shown several times in the course of the film. Tali Esen Morgan, director of the Auditorium, Ocean Grove, has purchased the picture for his mammoth show house.

A Trade Paper with a Purpose

BORN with the Moving Picture Industry, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has watched the new baby in the profession of entertainment wax strong.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD believes that it has helped materially in this growth—and its help has been because the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has ever been "A Trade Paper with a Purpose"—"Dedicated to Service."

ITS aim has ever been to bring about the lasting prosperity of the industry as a whole. In its dedication to service the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has always been guided by the real needs of the growing thousands either directly or indirectly engaged in the vast business of entertaining the public through the medium of the projector and the screen.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, with its various departments conveying each week information and suggestions worth hundreds of dollars to the exhibitor who uses them thoughtfully and intelligently, is a leader in value given among trade papers in all fields.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, because of this "dedication to service" and the resulting esteem with which it is regarded wherever moving pictures are shown, has no competitors as an advertising medium.

avenue, in the Forest Hill section of Newark. The total cost will be about $17,000. William H Richards, formerly owner of the Clinton Square theater, and now owner of the Palace, on Mount Prospect avenue, is the owner.

PROCTOR THEATER OPENING.

Although Labor day went by without seeing the opening of Proctor's new $1,000,000 theater on Market street, Newark, it is expected that the handsome new structure now in course of construction will be thrown open to the public Thanksgiving week.

PASSAIC'S STRAND OPENED.

The Strand theater, Main street, Passaic, was opened last week with high-class feature photoplays. Frank G. Hall, manager of the Strand, has made several improvements in the appearance of the playhouse. A string orchestra has also been obtained to furnish music.

COMFORT POLICY AT ODEON.

Abraham Wengrinovitz has been appointed assistant to William Okin in managing the Odeon theater, 100 Springfield avenue, Newark. Mr. Wengrinovitz stated yesterday to the World correspondent that he had inaugurated a policy of comfort, that is, he allows patrons to remove their coats and collars during the hot weather. This policy, he stated, had made him many new patrons. Although the Odeon is a "jitney" theater, it shows as high as fifteen reels.

BREWSTER FILM CORP. LEASES FACTORY.

F. K. Nixon, president of the Brewster Film corporation, represented that concern last week in negotiating for the leasing of the entire second floor of the factory building at 50 Spring street, Newark. This space will be used for the development of films devoted to a new process in experimental photography. The premises, secured by the film company, were leased through the factory department of Louis Schlesinger, Inc., for George L. Smith.

NEWARK SAFETY FIRST FILM.

About 125 employees and officers of the Public Service corporation and its subsidiaries, saw Friday night for the first time, an exhibition of a new safety first film produced by the Edison company in co-operation with the Public Service companies. A bit of romance adds to the interest of this useful feature. The picture shows a number of Public Service employees from the general superintendend down. The film was a pronounced success.

SINGER'S FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

Leo Singer, manager of the Pathe Exchange, 288 Market street, recently observed the first anniversary of his wedding. Singer is one of the most popular men in the exchange business in Newark. In honor of his anniversary, the exchange manager gave a dinner at the Achtel-Stetter Hotel to a few close friends, among whom were several film men, including Samuel Goldstein, manager of the Royal Feature Film Company.

"ETERNAL CITY" SCORES HIT.

"The Eternal City" drew capacity houses all week at the Strand theater. It was shown at the regular prices, 10c. and 15c. This was the first time that the Famous Players' Film Company's picturization of the famous novel was exhibited in Newark.

AIRDOME TO CLOSE OCT. 17.

Vailsburg Park, an open air amusement place, under the management of E. J. Carpenter and F. V. Peterson, has announced that it will remain open until October 17. Vaudeville performances will be given Saturdays and Sundays. Motion pictures will also feature the outdoor program. One other open air park, Hillside Park, Washington avenue, Belleville (N. J.), also remains open.

JERSEY JOTTINGS.

Oliver W. Jackson, owner of the Orpheum, 352 Broad street, Newark, is having alterations made to his concrete block theater at an estimated cost of $300.

Ed. Apter, of 100 Morton street, Newark, the local comedian who returned yesterday from a trip to Lake Hopatcong, where he rehearsed with a film company, dropped in to see the World man upon his return. He said it was certainly fine to see the World after several weeks' absence from the city.

A motion picture entertainment under the auspices of the Craftsmen Club of the Belleville Lodge of Masons, was held at the Alpha theater.

Marie Tempest was featured last week in "Mrs. Plum's Pudding" at the Orpheum. This was the first appearance of this picture in Newark.

John Donato, of Gergen street, Plainfield, fell asleep while watching a moving picture show in a Plainfield theater. A watchman discovered him about midnight. He was arrested on suspicion but was released when he explained the situation.

The Colonial theater, 37-39 Bloomfield avenue, Newark, owned by Samuel Goldfarb, has been leased through Harry Stevens, of 478 Central avenue, to the Did-Nell Amusement Company, of Jersey City, for a number of years at a rental aggregating $10,000.

The week's attractions at the local theaters include: Paramount, "The Case of Becky;" Strand, "A Yankee from the West;" Carlton, "The Soul of Pierre;" Goodwin, "The Italian."

The Olympia theater, Norfolk and South Orange avenue, Newark, has closed down, presumably on account of lack of patronage.

TRIANGLE'S ST. LOUIS OFFICE.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Triangle Corporation has established an office in the second floor of a new building that is being erected at 3316 Locust street, and it is said that St. Louis is to be head office and distributing center for the southwest. The Olympic, the oldest straight dramatic house in St. Louis, and heretofore devoted to the best in the speaking stage field, will probably be the house that will be devoted to these films and may begin on Oct. 1.

LAST OF FREE PICTURES.

The free municipal moving pictures were shown for the last time in St. Louis this season on Labor Day, Sept. 6. Rumor has it that exhibitors will not be worried with free picture competition next summer. If they are shown at all, the schedule will be arranged in such a manner that theaters and airdomes will not be affected.

RENOVATED GRAVOIS REOPENS.

The Gravois, a large south side house on Gravois and Jefferson avenues, opened for the fall season on Sept. 4. The Gravois is an all-picture theater under the management of the McKean Brothers, sons of G. W. McKean, of the Paramount Exchange. The Gravois, although closed for several weeks this summer, in order to have some necessary repairing and decorating done, gave performances every Saturday and Sunday nights so that the patrons might keep up with two serials that had been started earlier in the season.

PETTY THEFT AT THE CABANNE.

The Cabanne, 5815 Suburban avenue, was broken into on Sept. 3 and robbed of several photographs of actors and actresses and the coins out of the telephone box. W. J. Hall, manager of the Cabanne, reported the theft to the police, giving them as a possible clue to the robber an old felt hat.

DAILY SHOWS AT THE LINDELL.

The Lindell, Grand and Hebert streets, which was open only on Sunday all during the summer, will begin showing a daily program again on Sept. 12. The Lindell shows many large features and vaudeville.

THE KING'S BEGINS.

The King's, on Kingshighway and Delmar Boulevard, opens under the management of Harry Koplar on Sept. 12. Mr. Koplar formerly operated the Montgomery at 15th and Montgomery streets. The King's will run moving picture features and vaudeville.

NEW HOUSE IN PROSPECT.

A large moving picture theater is being projected for north St. Louis. The site is selected, and takes in an area of five different lots. Four of the lots have been purchased, and until the fifth has been acquired the promoters will not divulge their names.

THE MARQUETTE ENLARGED AND BEAUTIFIED.

The Marquette theater at 18th and Franklin avenues, opened again on Sept. 5, after undergoing extensive alterations and improvements. George Pliakos, the owner, says he has spent more than $10,000 in making the Marquette a modern and up-to-date theater. The interior dec-

M. H. HOFFMAN VISITS.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges, visited St. Louis recently while on a tour of inspection of the different exchanges under his supervision. Mr. Hoffman claims that business is excellent despite the keen competition in St. Louis, and he says that the outlook for future business is very promising. Mr. Hoffman is taking this trip with a view of becoming better acquainted with conditions in the different territories covered by the Universal exchanges.

WERNER HERE WITH METRO.

Charles Werner, who left St. Louis some time ago to take charge of the Kansas City office of the Kriterion Film Company, returned last week to handle the Metro features in the St. Louis district.

THE RUSSELL REOPENS.

Manager Richardson, of the Russell, or Russell and Broadway, opened his house on Sept. 7 for the winter season. At the beginning of the summer the program of the Russell was transferred to the Michigan avenue airdome in Carondelet. On account of inclement weather the outdoor theater closed on Aug. 17. The interval of time between the closing of the airdome and the opening of the theater was devoted by Mr. Richardson to superintending a thorough overhauling.

DR. DENKO'S SHOWMANSHIP IDEAS.

Dr. Denko, manager and proprietor of the Shenandoah theater, at Broadway and Shenandoah avenue, has some ideas worthy of being passed on to other exhibitors. He is always well up on the advance matter sent to him about films, and whenever death scenes, or anything of a gruesome nature occur in a play, the blue pencil is used to cross out that film as not to be considered for his program. Another plan of his is to run light features and comedies on Sunday.

Young men and their sweethearts and many children form the major part of his audiences on that day and night, and they like bright and cheerful subjects; no tragedies or heavy dramas, and absolutely no sex problem plays for them. Another thing about the Shenandoah is the arrangement of the lighting system. It is possible to stand at the door of the theater and find any one in the audience.

A MICHIGAN MAJORITY SNOWS ON SUNDAY CLOSERS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OPPONENTS of Sunday moving picture shows in Traverse City who sought to checkmate the exhibitors appear to be in the minority. The moving picture men started a petition for Sunday opening. The opponents started another. When they were filed, the exhibitors had 2,632 signatures and their opponents only 1,168.

CLOTH SIGN LAW ENFORCED.

Cloth signs in front of moving picture theaters in Michigan are now absolutely forbidden by Fire Marshal John H. Winship. Municipal authorities throughout the state have been instructed to enforce the ruling. It became effective July 1, but theater men were given until September 1 to dispose of signs they had in stock. Only paper posters framed in glass will be permitted.

ABOUT MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS.

The Temple theater at Blissfield has been opened with moving pictures.

O. W. Lamb, of the Paragon Feature Film Company of Omaha, Neb., left Grand Rapids, where he made a local film for Akron, Ohio, to put on another.

T. J. Tubbs, manager of the Colonial theater at Owosso, has leased the New Montague building in Ovid and will open a moving picture theater there.

The new Martha Washington theater at Ypsilanti is under construction.

Bert Silver of Crystal has leased the Grange theater in Greenville and will play moving pictures and theatrical attractions.

Litigation over the Family theater at Owosso has been ended and Arthur Black and Milo Rickle again are in charge of that house.

Frank O'Donnell, in charge of the Columbia theater at Grand Rapids for the last three years, will be manager of the Majestic theater at Ann Arbor this year.

Landis & Yeagla have sold the Crystal theater at Sturgis to Thad S. Wait. J. M. Gusky, formerly with the Universial Motion Picture Company, will be in charge.

Guy Goodrich, manager of the Palace theater at Grand Ledge, and Miss Ruth Shepherd of that city were recently married.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

Dakota Notes—Houses Change Hands.

THE opera house at Alpena, S. D., has been opened under the management of Rev. E. Dye.

Conrad Binks of Marinette, Wis., has taken a lease on the Lyric theater at Dallas, S. D., from Mrs. Jennie Gentzler and will manage the house.

Walter Arthur has leased the Coteau opera house at Webster, S. D., from W. C. Happe.

Coen, Durham & Woelz have leased the Clayton building at Whitewood, S. D., and will operate a moving picture theater.

The opera house at Roslyn, S. D., has been sold to A. T. Romerieu and Herbert Meyers.

Charles A. and Frank S. Key of Willow City, N. D., have been contemplating opening a moving picture show at Anamoose, N. D.

MUSIC MACHINES IN LOUISVILLE.

Only three moving picture houses of Louisville are now using regular orchestras in their theaters. The others are all using mechanical orchestras or ordinary pianos. These three theaters are the Orpheum, Casino and Majestic. The first two named have five-piece orchestras, while the latter has a nine-piece Hungarian orchestra. Several months ago the suburban theaters quit employing orchestras when the musicians threatened to strike for higher wages.

Can Lexington Bar Films?

Mayor Cassidy, of Lexington, Kentucky, Disturbed Over Showing of Picture He Had Banned—Was Out of Town and Commissioners Would Not or Could Not Act—City Solicitor Investigating Picture and the Laws.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT Lexington, Ky., an official investigation has been ordered by the city authorities concerning the recent exhibition of "Hypocrites" after the City Commissioners and Mayor Cassidy had forbidden the showing in the city. At a meeting of the City Commissioners Mayor Cassidy stated that "the dignity of the city government had been insulted" by the Colonial theater.

Mayor Cassidy demanded an explanation from the police department for not suppressing the show. Commissioner of Public Safety Walter Hunt, who, with Mayor Cassidy, was in Cincinnati at the time of the exhibit, stated that on his return to the city he at once took the matter up with J. J. Reagan, chief of police, and Malcolm Brown, chief of detectives, who informed him that Deputy Sheriff Ben Freckman was ready with a court restraining order to tie the hands of the city authorities if any attempt had been made to interfere with the exhibit, and that City Solicitor Denny had given an oral opinion to the effect that the city had no legal right to stop the show.

Mayor Cassidy asserted that in view of the unanimous action of the Commissioners in refusing permission for the picture to be shown, the department of public safety should have enforced the order and have stopped the picture at all hazards.

Commissioner Hunt moved that an investigation be made, and if the picture was obscene or immoral in the opinion of those making the investigation, the license of the Colonial company should be revoked. Commissioners J. T. McCarthy and C. H. Wilkerson, who, with Commissioner K. G. Pulliam, were the only members of the board in the city at the time the picture was shown, explained their attitudes in the matter.

Commissioner McCarty, who was acting mayor, said that he had learned that the theater people had secured an injunction, and as City Solicitor J. G. Denny had stated that the city had no legal right to interfere with the performance, he had not thought it advisable to call on the police to stop the show.

Commissioner Wilkerson assumed a similar attitude on the matter, while Commissioner Pulliam declared that he had tried to have the show stopped, but that McCarty and Wilkerson would not sustain a motion which he had made to that effect.

The discussion ended by Solicitor Denny being instructed to investigate the character of the offending picture and to prepare a written opinion as to whether or not the city government had a legal right to prohibit undesirable pictures at any of the theaters in the city in the future. At the previous meeting of the commissioners Mr. Pulliam said: "I move that our action of last Monday in refusing the show a permit be rescinded. I want that action to be enforced or rescinded. Let us back up and admit that our ordinances and resolutions are jokes."

The Lexington Women's Club has been criticising the press for having handled advertising for the show. The Colonial theater, in advertising the show, used excerpts from matter appearing in the Moving Picture World following the successful run of the picture in Louisville.

CHANGES AT MUTUAL OFFICE.

Announcement has just been made of a change in the management of the Louisville Mutual office, whereby Robert H. Haines is promoted to the management of the company's Cincinnati office, which is one of the division offices, and one of the largest which the concern maintains. Norman M. Dixon, who formerly was on the road out of New York for the Universal, with the two big films "Traffic in Souls" and "Neptune's Daughter," and who for the past few months has been with the Mutual Corporation's Indianapolis office, has come to Louisville to take charge of this office. Arthur Smith, formerly of the general office at New York, has been appointed traveling representative in Kentucky and Indiana for the Indianapolis office of the Mutual.

INVENTS A NEW SHUTTER.

Projector Shutter with Diaphragm Effect —Increases Illumination.

M. C. Fullenlove, of 425 West Chestnut street, Louisville, recently made a demonstration of a motion picture machine shutter at the Novelty theater, to an audience of about twenty-five moving picture men, and others who are interested in the outcome of the new invention. This shutter is intended to assist in the elimination of flickers on the screen. The invention consists of a revolving shutter, placed before the projecting lens, which automatically gives a diaphragm effect and eliminates entirely the parithial rays or rays of confusion, thus giving a sharp definition without the sacrifice of light. It is claimed that the Fullenlove shutter not only maintains the normal illumination, but increases it to a mellow brilliancy at least twenty per cent. greater. At the private exhibition it was stated that not the slightest flicker was observed. Operators at the Novelty and Majestic theaters, where demonstrations were given recently, pronounce the shutter a great improvement. Mr. Fullenlove expects to promote a company to manufacture the shutter, on which he holds patents, in this city along with other patents which he holds.

L. J. DITTMAR VISITS NEW YORK.

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Majestic Amusement company, is on a visit to New York, where he will spend about two weeks. It is understood that on his return a movement started a few weeks ago to charge additional prices for admission at night motion picture theaters will be worked up, and it is generally thought that it is only a question of a short time before all of the members of the Louisville Photo Play Association will adopt such a policy.

THREE PARAMOUNTS A WEEK.

The Majestic theater, which for some time has been making only two changes a week in its Paramount program, will hereafter make three changes. The pictures will be changed on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday.

IRVIN SIMONS IN LOUISVILLE.

Irvin Simons, connected with the Western Vaudeville & Picture association of Chicago, who is also interested in the Orpheum and Casino theaters of Louisville, was a recent visitor to the city. Mr. Simons was one of the pioneer picture men of Louisville, and was connected with the old O. T. Crawford holding in Louisville several years ago. At that time Crawford operated the Princess, Casino, Bijou and Dreamland theaters, as well as the O. T. Crawford film exchange, which was a branch of his St. Louis exchange. Mr. Simons is interested in two show houses in Chicago, and reports that he is doing nicely.

"Carmen" Opens in Boston

Lasky "Carmen" with Geraldine Farrar to Be First Seen in the Center of Culture—Begins Friday Night, Oct. 1, and Runs for Twelve Matinees and Nights—Symphony Hall Chosen by Star—Rothaphal to Manage It.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON has been selected as the first city in the United States for the photoplay debut of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen." The initial picturization of the opera will be given in Symphony Hall, Massachusetts avenue corner of Huntington avenue, on Friday night, October 1. The production is scheduled to play for twelve matinees and twelve nights. A special operatic orchestra of fifty pieces will render an elaborate musical accompaniment. Prices will range from twenty-five cents to $1.50.

Arrangements were closed during the past week by C. A. Ellis and Morris Gest, through whom the Lasky Feature Play company obtained the services of the famous prima donna to appear in the title role of the screen version of one of the greatest operatic dramas in the world.

The choice of the city where the production was to be first projected had been left to Miss Farrar. She claims that she chose the Hub because Symphony Hall would lend to the occasion a musical and artistic value in keeping with what the star and producers have tried to impart in the photoplay.

S. M. Rothapfel, formerly managing director of the Strand theater, New York, has been specially engaged to come to Boston and will have personal supervision of the projection of the film. Miss Farrar will assist in arranging the musical accompaniment for the film.

"HE COULDN'T MAKE HIS BRAIN BEHAVE."

A special motion picture play, entitled, "He Couldn't Make His Brain Behave," made in Boston, and with an all-star cast of Boston people, was shown during the past week at the Boston theater. Among the scenes pictured are Adams Square, Beacon Hill, Franklin Park and Winthrop Beach.

The principal role is portrayed by Miss Katherine Ward, the chief usheress at the Boston theater, where the film is to have its initial performance.

Other members of the cast include Frederick Murray, formerly of the Boston, Orpheum and Keith's theaters, Portland, stock companies; Will Carlton, of the Castle Square Theater stock company; Ella May and Harry Flynn, children of Commissioner Richard R. Flynn, of the Massachusetts Commission of Aids and Pensions and several other well-known Bostonians.

Ed Payne, creator of "Billy, the Boy Artist," a cartoon in the Boston Globe, is the author of the scenario.

S. P. C. A. SCENARIO CONTEST CLOSED.

Dr. Francis H. Rowley, president of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has received about twenty manuscripts in a contest for a prize of $25 offered by the society and the American Humane Education Society for the best scenario for a moving picture film illustrating kindness to animals. The contest closed September 15.

NEW CHARTERS GRANTED.

The following moving picture corporations were chartered in Massachusetts during the past week:

Kriterion company of Boston, with capital of $1,000. The incorporators are Bernard M. Corbett, Thomas H. Mullen and Frederick G. Bauer.

United Amusement company of Boston, with a capital of $25,000. The incorporators are Ernest F. Pierce, Herbert W. Pattee and Oliver J. Millett.

Thomas M. Taylor company, Boston, with capital of $10,000, by Thomas M. Taylor and Albert A. Richards.

The Morning Star Film company of Fall River, with capital of $100,000. The incorporators are J. Alfred Fredette, Joseph A. Rivet and Victor H. Robillard.

Under the laws of Maine, the Portsmouth, N. H. Photoplay company of Kittery was chartered with a capital of $100,000. This company will produce and exhibit moving pictures and photoplays. Horace Mitchell, H. A. Paul and M. G. Mitchell are the incorporators.

VINCENT ASTOR PICTURE FAN.

"Dick" Sears, New England cameraman for the Hearst-Selig Pictorial News, made pictures of Vincent Astor in his hydroplane at Marblehead during the past week.

The young millionaire greatly impressed the cameraman by his democracy. "Dick" was turning the crank of his machine when he was suddenly halted by young Astor, who came over to his boat. He told Sears that he was very persistent in his work and why not allow him to pose for some good pictures. This was agreeable to Dick, but the millionaire stipulated that he must be presented with a copy of the film when it was developed.

Astor then posed for several pictures. He drove the airboat around the harbor, alighted, floated on the water and other stunts. He was anxious to know when the film would be released.

That night Dick was a patron at a ten-cent picture show in the town and seated in front of him was the young millionaire, who informed him that he was fast becoming a confirmed picture fan.

OPERATORS' LOCAL 182 HAS OUTING.

The third annual outing of the Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union, local 182, was held at Paddock Island, Boston Harbor, Last Sunday. The party left in the early morning and on their arrival at the island enjoyed games and sports.

The Boston Union made a remarkable showing in the Labor day parade in Boston. Over 170 men were in line. Fifty of the members carried a large American Flag through the streets. A Simplex and Powers float were the features of the entire parade, with the Spirit of '76. President James Burke is to be congratulated on the enthusiasm of his men.

NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

Mr. Charles Cole, recently in charge of the booth at the Globe, Brockton, Mass., took charge of the shipping department of the New England Branch of the Fox Film corporation during the past week.

The Grand opera house, Boston, which for the past two seasons has been devoted to burlesque, will reopen with pictures in the near future under the management of Herbert Pattee.

Manager Samuel Pinanski, of the Modern, Boston, reports that, despite the warm weather of the past week, he did an exceptionally good business with the Fox feature "The Two Orphans."

Doctor Murphy, proprietor of the Columbia hotel at Stockbridge, Mass., is building a moving picture theater on the lot adjoining his hotel. The playhouse will be up to date in every detail and will have a seating capacity of 500. The installation of an expensive organ is planned.

The new Harvard theater, Cambridge, Mass., will open its doors on September 20, with "Lady Audley's Secret."

A new stage setting, one of the most beautiful in New England, is to be seen at the Shawmut theater, Roxbury.

Manager Thomas Sorerio, of the Gaiety, Providence, R. I., visited Assistant Manager Samuel Moscow, of the New England United Film service during the past week and contracted for the United program.

Manager Harry F. Campbell, of the New England branch of the Fox Film corporation, broke all business records during the first week of the new Fox policy of one a week. He expects to break his own record in the near future.

TRANSPORTING FILMS IN NEW YORK STATE.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (229 Oxford Ave.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE New York State Public Service Commission announces that the principal railroads have issued new regulations under which motion picture films will be transported in baggage cars and charged for at the regular excess baggage rate for gross weight, with minimum collections of twenty-five cents for any shipment.

BRUCE FOWLER TO MANAGE THE OLYMPIC.

Bruce Fowler has been appointed manager of the Olympic theater, Buffalo. He features vaudeville and moving pictures. This house is on Lafayette Square, one of the best locations in that city.

ROCHESTER CAUGHT INDECENT. FILM.

The sub-committee of the Rochester, N. Y., Ministers' Association has praised the city authorities there for their way of recently handling a case involving the showing of an indecent film at a local theater. The report of the ministers showed that officials had covered these points in handling the case:

"The destruction of the film and prosecution of the owners.

"Punishment of the one responsible for bringing it to Rochester.

"Revocation of the license of the theater.

"Vigorous reprimanding of the police officers who were present and did not stop it."

HOWARD A. BATES DIES.

Howard A. Bates, a prominent showman of former days, is dead in Buffalo, N. Y. In 1881 he and George Bunnell opened a theater in the old St. James hall in that city. Mr. Bates managed the house until it was destroyed by fire.

EDWARD L. HYMAN TO MANAGE THE COLUMBIA.

Edward L. Hyman, formerly assistant manager of the Strand moving picture theater, Buffalo, has been appointed manager of the Columbia theater in that city. Mr. Hyman's first printed program of attractions is a fine typographical effort. His slogan on his program is: "The Columbia, for those who demand everything worth while."

SUNDAY SHOWS AND ELECTIONS AT BINGHAMTON.

Moving pictures will play a part in the coming municipal elections in Binghamton, N. Y. Among the questions which taxpayers will ask of candidates is this: "Are we going to have a fixed policy in regard to Sunday movies? It is within the power of the next administration to settle that question."

Frank H. Truitt, a candidate for nomination for Mayor on the Republican and Prohibition tickets in Binghamton, has boiled down his views on the moving picture question as follows: "Theatrical and movie licenses should be issued for six days per week—shows closed on Sundays—proper regulation—ventilation and sanitation for protection to patrons."

EDEL INTRODUCES HIS ORCHESTRA.

Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand moving picture theater, Buffalo, has given his patrons a decided novelty. Mr. Edel had a special set prepared at the Teck theater in that city. On Tuesday he assembled the Strand orchestra of ten men on the stage of the Teck, which is commodious and well adapted for the taking of moving pictures. These musicians appeared in full dress, and as each made his introductory bow and took his place in the orchestra, his movements were recorded by a moving picture camera. After the musicians were seated George Bouchard, director, raised his baton and the orchestra played an impressive overture. The pictures of this event developed perfectly, there being about 750 feet of film. Later in the week they were shown at the Strand, Mr. Edel's theater, and made a decided hit. On the film were subtitles announcing the names of each player, as he appeared, and giving his part in the orchestra. The identification was complete. When the pictures showing the orchestra playing the overture faded away, the same musicians in real life took up the selection, which they played with artistic skill. Everything was given at the psychological moment and the spectators showed their appreciation by applauding vigorously.

PHILADELPHIA JOTTINGS.

Joe Wood, John McGuirk and A. Sablosky have applied for the charter of an intended corporation to be called Wood's Amusement Company, to purchase, own, produce and present and license others to produce and present theatrical plays, moving picture exhibitions and amusements.

The Majestic, 2424 Kensington avenue, has reopened for the coming season under the management of E. L. McHugh. The entire theater has been remodeled and redecorated and eighty more seats have been installed in the moving picture house. A Wurlitzer organ has also been added.

Jacob D. Lubin, one of the pioneer exhibitors in Philadelphia, and proprietor of the Empire theater on Frankford avenue for many years, also the first man to open an airdome adjoining his theater, recently paid a visit to Philadelphia. He is now in the optical business and travels from coast to coast.

The Howard theater, Front and Ontario streets, has reopened for the coming season and presents an entirely new appearance to its patrons. Many new features have been added to the theater and considerable equipment has been installed.

A charter has been issued by the state of New Jersey to the Paragon Films, Inc., of Fort Lee. The object of the new company is the manufacturing of motion picture films, and it has been capitalized at $100,000 by William H. Woolley and Arthur B. Graham, of New York, and Richard O. Phillips, of Yonkers, New York.

V-L-S-E APPEALS ON "MORTMAIN" CENSORING.

An appeal from the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, which had withheld its approval of the photoplay entitled "Mortmain," was recently filed in Court of Common Pleas No. 5, by the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig Essanay, Inc. In order to give ocular evidence to the court in support of the contentions that certain scenes ordered by the censors to be eliminated from the picture are not offensive to public morals, it was arranged to show the film in Select Council's Chambers. President Judge Martin, after listening to protests made on behalf of the Board of Censors, decided not to view the picture at the present time. The case was postponed until further notice.

Against Time Contracts

Philadelphia Exhibitors Irritated by Awkward Method of Booking Features Imposed by Manufacturers—Keeps Them from Making Week's Offering Conform to Week's Special Needs—Steps Taken to Organize Against It.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Philadelphia News Service.

A MARKED feeling of unrest is prevalent among local moving picture exhibitors due to the policy of many film producers to hire out their pictures only by time contracts of from three months to a year. This system was inaugurated by the Fox Film Corporation and was immediately followed by the Famous Players company. One large exhibitor here, in reviewing the situation from the exhibitors' standpoint, said:

"The majority of Philadelphia moving picture theaters, no matter how small the photoplay house may be, at some time or other, desire to exhibit feature pictures for their patrons. Now every week of the year produces a different situation which faces the proprietor of a moving picture theater and, in accord with such a condition of affairs, it may be his desire to cut down current expenses during a certain week for special reasons. But this being forced to contract for their feature films so far ahead make this practically impossible.

"Large film corporations argue that they are forced to adopt such a policy to protect themselves, as their pictures involve an enormous expenditure and that were it not for the above-mentioned method, they would not be able to conduct the production of feature pictures. We are unwilling to accept this explanation as being satisfactory and think we are right in believing that we are subjected to a gross injustice through this practice of film corporations.

"Feeling has become so intense that steps have already been taken to form an organization of exhibitors in order to effectually combat this condition of affairs. While nothing permanent has as yet been decided upon, some drastic action in the matter may be looked for in the near future and it is our firm belief that we will surely gain our point."

IGNORANT NEGROES PROTEST.

Policemen recently dispersed a crowd of about 200 negroes who came marching up Broad street, loudly protesting against the exhibition of the film known as "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest theater, Broad and Sansom streets. A detail of police, headed by Lieutenant Bausewine, of the 12th and Pine streets station, took up a position across Pine street and, when the negroes approached, they were asked to display their permit for parading. Upon being unable to comply with this request they were immediately dispersed.

The colored folks had assembled at Broad and South streets, and a plain-clothes man, stationed there to give warning in case a demonstration was made, telephoned to the station house. Meanwhile news of the gathering had reached the Forrest theater, and the management had sent to headquarters for protection. An additional force of detectives were scattered throughout the audience in order to insure being able to cope with any situation that might arise. Three negroes were arrested in the theater for hissing scenes that they claimed to be objectionable. All negroes in the audience were scattered in groups of twos and threes and the detectives immediately stopped any conversations between white and colored folks.

Murmurings can be heard in many sections of the city which tend to indicate that the negroes will go to extremes in their endeavors to have the picture forbidden for exhibition purposes in this city. However, those in charge of the theater and other noted figures in the moving picture field in this vicinity, are of the firm belief that the picture will be allowed to continue unmolested. It appears that it is only the extremely ignorant negroes and the supposedly educated negroes who object to the film, the middle class being apparently perfectly satisfied with the picture.

CONSERVATION AND HYGIENE FILMS AT STATE FAIR.

For the entertainment and instruction of the public, the various state departments will have exhibits at the Trenton State Fair, which lasts from September 27, until October 1. The state department of health will give a free display of motion pictures intended to instruct the general public in means of safeguarding themselves from disease and also in the most effectual manner in which to fight disease. A special picture will be shown which portrays a way in which the spread of tuberculosis may be checked.

Successful results gained in the past few seasons from an educational display on the fair grounds has led the department of conservation and development to further enlarge its work at the Fair. Pictures portraying the protection and development of the New Jersey forests will be thrown on the screen and methods of fire-fighting will be thoroughly illustrated.

TRENTON THEATERS BOOK "NATION" FILM.

Montgomery Moses, manager of the Trent theater, Trenton, N. J., has booked D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle in motion pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," for the week of September 20. This announcement has created quite a stir in moving picture circles in the Jersey city and interest in the films is running high, on account of the reports heard from other cities of the wonderful qualities of the immense production. Manager Moses expects to show to capacity houses and is making his plans accordingly.

NO FILMS IN PASSENGER CARS AFTER SEPT. 15.

Commencing Wednesday, September 15, the Reading Railway Company will prohibit the carrying of moving picture films in that part of any car used for the transportation of passengers. Station and train employes have received the most explicit orders to prevent anyone carrying such articles from entering passenger cars. This custom will cause considerable inconvenience to moving picture exhibitors and has stirred up a storm of protest in all quarters of the state of Pennsylvania. Steps are being taken to make a formal appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission to put an end to such an unfavorable ruling.

HEALTH OFFICERS BAR YOUNG CHILDREN.

Proprietors of moving picture theaters and other places of amusement in the vicinity of Erie, Pa., have recently received orders to exclude children under twelve years of age from performances at their houses. This is due to the epidemic of infant paralysis which has swept over that section of the country, forty-four new cases having been reported since the first of August and fifty cases since the new year. State Health Inspectors and an expert from the Rockefeller Institute have arrived upon the scene and are working industriously in endeavoring to check the spread of this dreaded disease.

METRO PICTURES

ROLFE PHOTO PLAYS, INC., Popular Plays and Players, Columbia Pictures Corporation and Quality Pictures Corporation are the makers of the great, big, artistic and dramatic successes that have made Metro a synonym for the best pictures. These separate and distinct forces in picture making are united by one great bond in their ambition to make the greatest pictures in the world. They have made pictures that lead the feature offerings of the day and they are making pictures that anticipate the demands of tomorrow.

They are the pace makers of the picture field with the courage of their convictions and the real practical experience and ability to do better things tomorrow than they do today.

The Metro Pictures Corporation is proud of the product of the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., of Popular Plays and Players, of the Columbia Pictures Corporation and of the Quality Pictures Corporation and selects this time and space to say so.

NIXON THEATER WINS PERMANENT INJUNCTION.

Judge Reid, of Pittsburgh, Knows No Reason for Forbidding Griffith Spectacle.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

JUDGE REID has made permanent the injunction which restrains the mayor and police of Pittsburgh from interfering with the production of the photo play "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon theater, for the full period of its time scheduled here, which is five weeks. This injunction was granted to the Nixon Theater Company, Monday, Aug. 30.

BIG BUSINESS AT THE PENN.

The Penn theater, at 3414 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, opened last week and Walter Artzberger, the manager, reports that he is doing a tremendous business. This makes the fourth theater that Mr. Artzberger has opened. The first was opened about ten years ago in Rochester, Pa., and was known as the Van Dome. The second was on Mt. Washington, Pittsburgh, and was called the Casino, and the third was the American, on Fifth Avenue, which he sold recently.

MILES THEATER SHOWING FILMS

The Miles theater, on Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, which has been famous for its 10 and 20-cent vaudeville, will be a home for high-class photo-plays this winter, its regular season having opened last Friday night with Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot."

TAKING PLAYGROUND FILMS.

Pittsburgh's municipal playground activities are to be put before the public by means of motion pictures in a very short time. W. F. Ashe, superintendent of the bureau of recreation, is directing the taking of the films which will be shown in the picture theaters throughout the city. The Industrial and Domestic Film Company, of this city, is doing the work.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND MOVES.

Richard A. Rowland, a well-known resident of Pittsburgh and president of the Metro Picture Corporation, has moved his family to New York, as the Metro's big success indicates a prolonged stay in that city.

CHANGES AT FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE.

Manager Bachmeyer, of the Pittsburgh branch of the Famous Players' Film Service, Inc., announces that the following changes and promotions in the personnel of his force went into effect Sept. 1:

Russell Smith, heretofore in charge of the old Famous Players' productions, has been promoted to assistant manager of the branch.

Mr. Langdon has been put in charge of the department formerly managed by Mr. Smith.

Miss Hilda Lissman, who has been in charge of the schedule of the Paramount program, has been put in charge of all detail work.

A NEW PROJECTION LAMP INVENTED.

After eight years of constant effort two Erie, Pa., electricians have produced a moving picture lamp that they claim will discount latest inventions. A. H. Smith and H. A. Sterrett, employes of the Erie Malleable Iron Works, have succeeded in patenting a moving picture lamp which, in addition to simplicity in operation, will save, it is said, at least thirty-three per cent. in current consumption. One of these lamps has been thoroughly tested out in two State street picture theaters and proved a success, both in the way of light projection and low voltage.

HENRY POKE BUYS HOMESTEAD THEATER.

Henry Poke, a well-known Pittsburgh theater man, has purchased the Palace theater, in Homestead, after giving it a two-months' trial. The Palace is a new and up-to-the-minute house of about 500 capacity and prospects are good for it becoming a big success.

SMOKY CITY GLEANINGS.

The Idle Hour theater, Diamond street, Pittsburgh, has recently been improved to the satisfaction of Manager Christ Vollmer. New seats have been installed and the repainting and redecorating with the addition of a new sheet-metal ceiling, have transformed the house into a very neat little picture theater.

R. Einstein, of the Blairsville opera house, in Blairsville, attended the Screen Club banquet in Pittsburgh recently, and while in this city ordered some supplies, as well as contracting for film service. Mr. Einstein opened his house for the winter season the beginning of this month. He runs road shows five days a week and pictures only on Saturdays.

The Weiland Film Exchange, of Pittsburgh, which has about 45 copies of Charlie Chaplin films, reports that they have received a large consignment of original paper on all subjects. Mr. Weiland states that there is no limit for the demand for these pictures.

Henry Tennyson, justice of the peace in a mining town near Burgettstown, Pa., reports that he will soon open a new house in that section. The house will have a capacity of 300 and will be complete in every respect.

The Princess theater, at Donora, near Pittsburgh, which was opened Aug. 25, has been taken over by Harry Cox and he has added a new run of pictures and an increased equipment.

B. Barnett, formerly connected with the Harold Ives Company as district advertising manager for the Bull Durham motion pictures, is now affiliated with the Noted Plays Feature Company of this city.

Work on remodeling of the Oakland Natatorium, in Oakland, was started last week. This building is to be converted into a motion picture house and will be under the control of Rowland & Clark, of Pittsburgh.

B. F. Jones, heretofore manager of the Wheeling, W. Va., office of the Universal, is now on the road for the Grelle Feature Film Company of Pittsburgh. He will work in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

H. C. Kliehm, of the Lawrence theater, in Butler street, Pittsburgh, has installed two new Powers 6-A motor-driven machines.

Arthur Hyde, formerly connected with the Metropolitan Booking Offices, of Pittsburgh, has been transferred to the Philadelphia branch of the same company.

The Camden theater, in Parkersburg, W. Va., which has been closed for two weeks for improvements, has again been re-opened. "Hypocrites" was the main attraction of opening night.

ATLANTA A FILM CENTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA was pronounced the most important film distributing center in the south and one of the largest in the country by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal Film Corporation who spent Monday in the city en route to New Orleans. Every film concern in the industry is represented in Atlanta, he stated, and it was rated by all the big producing companies as an indispensable center of activity.

Mr. Hoffman stated that the business done by the Universal Company through its Atlanta office amounts to $56,000 monthly, and that business is increasing so rapidly in the Atlanta territory that his company is planning to enlarge facilities.

Mr. Hoffman left Monday night for New Orleans accompanied by William Oldknow, manager of the Universal Company's interest in the southern states, and Joe Marienette, manager of the Atlanta office of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, where the trio will attend an exchange men's convention being held in that city.

FIVE NEW THEATERS THIS YEAR.

Since Jan. 1 five new moving picture houses have opened in Atlanta, which speaks well for this city as an amusecent center.

SCENES FOR THE GEORGIA PICTURE.

The Georgia Chamber of Commerce, which has instituted a "Seeing Georgia" tour over the state in automobiles, left Atlanta Monday. The scout car carried a camera man to take moving pictures for the Georgia film now in the making for the Georgia Chamber of Commerce. Motion pictures were made to-day at Milledgeville of the institutions there; at Eatonton of the co-operative dairy; at Madison of the Agricultural School, as also the State College of Agriculture, with its herds of fine cattle and fields; at Milledgeville the old Governor's mansion, the old, before the war capitol and the prison farm were taken.

TO IMPROVE THE ALPHA.

Manager Fowler of the Alpha theater has closed a contract with the W. E. Browne Decorating Company for a new front to his theater. Other extensive changes are also to be made. An attractive color scheme will be carried out in the foyer and the seating is to be rearranged.

SHARPE TO MANAGE THE SAVOY.

William Sharpe, formerly secretary of the Atlanta Baseball Association, and one of the best amusement men in the south, has succeeded James Jackson as manager of the Savoy theater. Mr. Sharpe has already taken charge and is planning new innovations for this popular theater.

After being in charge of the management of the Savoy theater for three years Mr. James Jackson has tendered his resignation and will take a much needed rest.

"NEAL OF NAVY" ARRIVES.

The first installment of "Neal of the Navy" was given at the Vaudette theater on Whitehall, and at the Selecta theater on Peachtree street Monday. The greatest crowds ever attending a moving picture theater in Atlanta gathered. At the Vaudette the crowd waiting to enter the theater was so dense that officers were needed to keep the crush down.

FIRE NEXT DOOR TO STRAND, AT AUGUSTA.

Manager Schrameck of the Strand theater, Augusta, Ga., Monday averted what might easily have been a panic in his theater. It was 9.30 and the Strand was crowded to the doors. Smoke had been seen issuing from next door and an alarm of fire had been sent in. Just as Manager Schrameck realized the situation a small boy was on the point of rushing into the theater with the alarm of fire. Manager Schrameck stopped him, then had the picture stopped for a few minutes and told the audience there was a fire next door and asked that they move out quietly. The audience arose and moved out with the least excitement. It is of interest to know that at least fifty of the audience did not care to even go out and look at the fire.

MAYOR OF QUINCY REFUSES TO BAN "HYPOCRITES."

Does Not Think Opinionated Minority Should Rule.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MAYOR ABBOTT, of Quincy feared that the city might be involved in a damage suit if he acted on a minority request of the local board of censorship and refused to issue an order stopping the showing of "Hypocrites" at the Empire Hippodrome.

Objections were made to the picture by local Catholic clergymen. A private exhibition was made for the censors, the mayor, the chief of police and several priests. After this, George Luther and Professor McHugle, members of the censor board, made a written request for its suppression.

In denying the request Mayor Abbott said that he saw nothing objectionable in the picture.

MISS OGLE BUYS THEATER.

East St. Louis has its first woman proprietor in the person of Miss E. A. Ogle, who has taken over the old American theater on Missouri avenue and reopened it as the Central theater. Three weeks was spent in making the house attractive with new decorations. H. O. Green will be local manager. Multiple reel features, including the World Film Corporation service, will be shown at a general admission of five cents.

FURNACE REFUSED DUTY.

Declaring he lost business because people would not patronize a cold theater, Grant Huth, proprietor of the opera house at Plano, has sued a Peoria furnace company for $2,000 damages. He alleges the company guaranteed the furnace would heat his building to 70 degrees in the coldest weather and it failed to do this, depriving him of his patrons.

THE PRINCESS AT WHITE HALL BEGINS.

After the weather held up construction six or seven weeks, the new Princess theater at White Hall was opened with "The Christian" as the attraction. The new house, which was erected by the White Hall Theater Company, is 40x138 ft., of hollow tile, brick and concrete with a front of Alsey matt-face brick, trimmed in cream terra cotta. It will seat 500. C. A. Ruckel is president of the corporation, Earl Lowenstein, treasurer and manager, and Joseph Lyman, secretary. "Neptune's Daughter" was booked for September 15.

PORTABLE PROJECTORS IN ILLINOIS.

Rural community clubs and county farm bureaus in Illinois are taking an interest in the portable projector which C. B. Lloyd, of the Active Motion Picture Company of Chicago, is demonstrating at various places in the state. Lloyd recently filmed the big tractor show at Bloomington and the farmers in that vicinity see a possible use of the machine for agricultural education.

PUTS ITS MONEY INTO PROJECTION.

The Olympia theater at Tuscola is playing up its projection to an extent seldom done by theaters in cities of that size. It proudly claims that it has "more money invested in our operating equipment than in the whole show of most theaters in towns of this size." It does not rely on its projection alone, but plays a feature every night.

WHAT ILLINOIS PICTURE MEN ARE DOING.

The Child Welfare League at Peoria has announced its satisfaction at the special Saturday morning shows for children given at the Apollo theater. A series of nature films will soon be added to the special programs at the Apollo.

The secretary of state at Springfield issued a license to the De Vry corporation of Chicago; capital, $15,000; moving picture machines and accessories; incorporators, Herman Adolph De Vry, Bertram W. Rosenstone and Oscar A. Ross.

Manager Burnstine has installed a new stage and scenery in the Star theater at Lincoln and expects to give vaudeville in connection with his moving picture shows this winter.

The Central Theater company of Chicago was licensed by the secretary of state at Springfield, to carry on a general theatrical and amusement business. Capital stock, $30,000. Incorporators, Stanley Kubreener, Arthur B. Clements and W. G. Bentley.

Snider & Belaski have decided upon the Princess at the new name for the Vogue theater on Broadway at Lincoln, which they acquired. It has been re-equipped and remodeled. Mutual service will be used and it will be a ten-cent house.

"The Christian" was shown at the Wildey theater in Edwardsville as a benefit for the cottage girls of St. Mary's church.

A juvenile auto is the capital prize and ten two weeks' tickets additional prizes in a voting contest conducted by the Elite theater at Petersburg.

The Village airdome at Averyville was temporarily closed because of the death of E. S. Bresee.

The Aceo Theater Company of Chicago; capital stock decreased from $40,000 to $20,700; decreased number of directors.

Manager Henry Zimmerman of the Grand theater at Galena was the first downstate exhibitor to run "Racing the Deadline," the film made by the Chicago Tribune in its own office and with its own editorial staff, to show how a big newspaper really does handle a story.

Edward Burns has opened a new moving picture theater at Elizabeth.

In order to install a new front, redecorate and garnish it with plants, Glenn Reynolds closed the Princess theater at De Kalb for a week.

The Capitol theater at Pekin will send two ladies from that city to the California fairs, conducing a popularity voting contest.

A safety-first campaign aimed at school children was conducted at Peoria by H. L. Brownell, safety inspector of surface lines in Chicago, who had the cooperation of the Duchess theater in showing 3,000 feet of pertinent pictures.

Edward T. Dolly, formerly of Rock Island, had opened the Pattee Opera house at Monmouth, using three acts of vaudeville and several reels of pictures. He will have a four-piece orchestra.

Fred Wendell has opened a moving picture show in the town hall at Campbell Hill and will give exhibitions every Friday night.

NEGROES IN INDIANA LIKE "THE NIGGER."

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

AT Logansport, Ind., "The Nigger" was shown to a committee of colored people, the same committee that presented a protest to the Mayor and city officials against its exhibition. The Mayor, the clergy and the press also were invited. The colored people present were the first to admit that they had been misled as to the character of the film. If the negro protests that are being made everywhere in Indiana against "The Nigger" are the result of press agenting, it's a good jog. However, the press agent who claims it as his own handiwork, should be made to prove it, because it bears all the earmarks of spontaneity.

THIS WEEK IT WAS WILLIE.

The Indiana sleeping boy prisoner of the picture house for this week was Willie Kidwell. He was found, or rather he started the customary yelp in the dark, at 2 a. m., Sept. 6, in the theater run by Hugh O'Donnell at Washington, Ind. Thinly clad appearance by O'Donnell.

GETS CONTRACT FOR THE CENTENNIAL.

The Buschmann-Traub Company, Indianapolis, has contracted for the Indiana Centennial celebration in 1916. The company is a new one, and recently made the "War in Indiana" pictures a national guard stunt to raise funds for an armory and to awaken interest in national defense. F. W. Buschmann and C. R. Traub compose the company. Mr. Traub was one of the first camera men for the Hearst-Selig weekly.

MANAGER INGERSOLL TALKS ABOUT IT.

Manager Ingersoll of the Knickerbocker Amusement Company, Gary, Ind., has installed a new Wurlitzer orchestra. Ingersoll is full of enthusiasm and phrases like "chromatic flexibility," "tone beauty" and something that sounds like "the gay staccato of the drums." His friends think the Wurlitzer salesmen must have given him an injection of the get there selling spiel known as "home-run langwitch." But at that it is a good orchestra and it's helping patronage.

Business is good with Manager Ingersoll, yessir; he is taking a page at a time to advertise his weekly program. It is packing the house nightly.

GARY'S MAYOR BEGINS FILM CAMPAIGN.

Mayor Johnson of Gary, a candidate for governor of Indiana, is using films to show how his fellow-townsmen love him. If he can just get a picture drama showing how badly the state needs a financier and then get a picture of himself as the best little financier available he can win. There are exhibitors who believe such a film would pull at the box office.

INDIANA CUES AND CALLS.

The Inland picknickers crowded the Gem theater at Indiana Harbor, Ind., to see themselves in a picture of the picnic.

The Lyric theater, Sullivan, Ind., has been turned over to a Sorority Society for Monday the 13th. The sorority will show some pictures taken at the chautauqua, a musical program and two other film productions, one a comedy.

Clarence Jessup, of Muncie, Ind, has bought the Dreamland theater and has taken possession. Jessup is experienced and will continue the success of this house, it is believed certain.

Harry L. Troutman took over the management of the Grand opera house Septemper 1 and announces that he will continue the same picture service for the present. Some vaudeville is being shown, and occasionally a road show is booked.

The Gem, Indiana Harbor, Ind., is being remodeled and redecorated. It was recently sold to Nik Doich, formerly proprietor of the Oriental Hotel.

The Thursday night free moving picture shows at Odon, Ind., have been discontinued.

L. E. Wheeler, for many years superintendent of schools at Wolcott, Ind., is the latest educator to enter the moving picture business. He has bought a house in Lawrenceville, Ill., and expects to leave Wolcott soon.

The New Palace theater, Ft. Wayne, Ind., which has been running pictures all summer, has reopened with vaudeville, and is not using as much picture service as during the summer.

Lincoln J. Carter, the writer of melodrama, is handling a picture production at Huntington, Ind. Carter predicts that the time is but a little way off when moving picture machines will be in the homes, everybody owning a picture machine.

"Trilby" has been a good drawing card for Fair week visitors at the Keystone theater, Indianapolis.

FOR $5000 A YEAR

So here then is a simple story lifted from the limping lives of the many millions. Love leans on love lounging down the laggard lane to the very lips of disaster's abyss, while rags rub ruffles with riches and knaves conspire to wreck the kith of Kings.

And in and out the scampering shuttle sings its wondrous way with warp and woof of tangled lives and weaves a teeming tale of trickery, tears and triumphs.

Salt Lake a Film Center

Growing in Importance as a Distributing Center for Motion Pictures—Universal Establishes Its Headquarters There—Will Cover a Wide Territory—Centrally Situated for Quick Distribution—Other Indications.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

As a motion picture distributing center, Salt Lake received another boost last week with the announcement of the Universal that headquarters for the western territory would be established in this city, eventually to annex the district extending from the eastern Colorado line to the Pacific Coast.

As it is, the move from Denver to Salt Lake headquarters has already been made and C. A. Clegg, for a number of years with the Canadian forces of the Universal, and as special representative out of New York, is at the helm in this city. He was accompanied to Salt Lake by N. Paul Stoughton, traveling auditor, from the New York offices, who set about the task of establishing a system of accounts for the new western sales headquarters.

Heretofore, Salt Lake has been the distributing center for only a small town territory, other offices being maintained by the Universal in Butte, Denver and El Paso. Under the new arrangement, all these offices become subsidiary to the local office and the distribution of films for the Portland, Spokane, Seattle, Denver, El Paso, Butte and Grand Junction districts will be directed from the Salt Lake office. Eastern California also comes under the jurisdiction of the Salt Lake offices.

It is believed by many motion picture men that the Universal's decision may be copied by other large concerns. Transportation facilities, east, west and northwest, are important factors in the selection of Salt Lake. Likewise, the representatives of the Universal in this city are but one day removed from the actual production centers on the Pacific Coast.

Recently, William H. Swanson selected Salt Lake City as headquarters for his chain of theaters and started the western territory with his purchase of the American, Rex and Liberty theaters in Salt Lake. His activities, which had been directed from New York and Denver, were transferred to Salt Lake. Though Mr. Swanson was at one time connected with the Universal and recently sold out his exchange holdings to that concern for a large figure, it is stated that the latest move of the Universal is not connected in any way with Mr. Swanson's theatrical ventures.

ANITA KING PASSES SALT LAKE.

Anita King, the Paramount-Lasky girl who is endeavoring to make the trip over the Lincoln highway by automobile from San Francisco to New York, arrived in Salt Lake after harrowing experiences on the Nevada and Utah deserts. Miss King strayed from the trail over in Nevada and had the misfortune to get stuck in a deep mudhole. After working alone to extricate her heavy car, Miss King fell exhausted and was found some time later by two men who chanced to pass along the lonely trail. She was taken to Elko and, without sleep, started again to make up her schedule. Two days later she was lost in the desert near Tremonton, Utah, and was found steering her car away on the highway by Harry S. Sims, manager of the American theater, who had become alarmed at the delay and organized a rescue expedition. Lacking sleep for two days and three nights, Miss King arrived in Salt Lake for a rest of three days.

THE AMERICAN REOPENS.

The American theater, where things have been happening in the remodeling line, had a sort of second grand opening one night last week. The concert orchestra, under the direction of J. J. McClellan, had been enlarged to twenty pieces and Willard Weihe, one of the foremost violinists of the west, appeared as soloist and concertmeister. Prof. Weihe will also be assitant director. The house has been thoroughly redecorated and an advanced scale of prices has been announced. The advance, it is stated, is made necessary by new bookings of the big Swanson house of some of the two-hour feature productions.

SALT LAKE GOSSIP.

The Empress theater in Salt Lake, which has, during the past three years, run the gamut of success and failure, closed last week as a combination musical comedy-motion picture house and opened last Sunday as a stock theater. A. S. Hatfield, formerly manager of the local Pathe office, is house manager at the Empress.

William Mason, actor, dropped off in Salt Lake between trains last week and hied him to the Broadway theater, here to see himself for the first time in the Ring Lardner baseball series, the first release of which was being produced that day. Mr. Mason left for California, where he will work in support of Bushman.

PORTLAND, ORE., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MAKES REPORT.

Both Sides of Local Censorship Discussed—Prominent Club Women Interviewed.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A COMMITTEE from the Portland Chamber of Commerce, before which the exchange men placed their grievance against the censorship ordnance and the censorship board, has investigated both sides of the controversy and laid the facts found before the Board of Governors of the Chamber. The members of the committee called on the motion picture men to hear their side of the case and also on the Mayor to get the city's side. It is not within the province of this committee to make any recommendations, this matter being left to the Board of Governors.

S. D. Vincent, chairman of the reporting committee and president of the Portland Realty Board, when interviewed by the writer on the findings of the committee, stated that inasmuch as it was left to the Board of Governors to make the recommendations, the findings would not be made public until the Board had acted.

"Personally, however," said Mr. Vincent, "I believe the film men should have what the spirit of Americanism guarantees to every American citizen, namely, the right of appeal. But I believe in a sane censorship. I believe it is one of the safeguards the film manufacturer has against himself.

"Let me cite the express companies as an example. For many years they had things their own way; their rates were exorbitant, their profits enormous; they overdid a good thing. Today the law curbs them at every point, even denying them a legitimate profit. The pendulum of adverse sentiment has struck them in its swing and that pendulum in the hands of the American people swings a long ways. So with the moving pictures. Unless the producer voluntarily curtails pictures that tend to breed immorality among the youth of the nation, or a sane censor board does it for them, that same pendulum will swing against motion pictures and strike a blow just as hard."

Club Women Interviewed.

Mrs. Millie R. Trumbull, chairman of the Oregon State Federation of Women's Club, secretary of the Child Labor Commission of Oregon, and a member of the advisory committee to the National Board of Censorship, advised the writer that she was not in accord with all of the workings of the present censorship ordinance.

"Co-operation with the film men is the keynote of successful censorship," declared Mrs. Trumbull. "A picture which would be a decent drawing card if exhibited in the North End might not be proper in the residence district, yet that picture should not be barred from exhibition in the whole city and be a dead loss to the exchange for that reason. The locality in which a picture is to be exhibited is to be considered."

Mrs. Jane Nissen, probation officer of the Juvenile Court, who is in touch with the exhibitors by reason of her office, when questioned upon the feeling existing between the administrative officers and the film men, advised that the latter without exception treated the officers of the juvenile court with the utmost courtesy and that by co-operating with the film men she has been able to enforce the rulings of the juvenile court without any antagonism being aroused.

RENT TROUBLES AT SALEM.

Through a misunderstanding between F. L. Waters, lessee of the Wexford and Ye Liberty theaters, Salem, Ore., and the owner of the buildings, Mr. Waters found both of his houses closed for breach of the conditions of his lease when he returned from his vacation recently. It seems that the same lease covered both houses and Mr. Waters had made an oral agreement with the landlord respecting the rent of one of the houses and later a misunderstanding arose resulting in the closing of both houses.

BUSINESS OPENS UP.

With the passing of the vacation season the photoplay theaters in Portland, especially in the suburbs, are feeling an impetus in business as are the houses in the smaller towns. The Star at Echo and the Gem at Elgin, both in Eastern Oregon, have reopened and Charles Beals, of the Rex theater, Cottage Grove, reports he is adding 200 seats to his house, also a Powers 6A machine.

The Peoples' Amusement company reports that they have sold the Star theater, Medford, to A. C. Burgess.

EUGENE MANAGEMENTS MERGE.

The Savoy, Rex and Folly theaters, Eugene, Ore., hitherto separately owned, have merged their managements, E. L. Campbell, of the Savoy, having become a partner with A. H. McDonald. The partnership now controls the picture business in Eugene with the exception of the Opera House, which will run independently to pictures when road shows do not hold the boards.

CENSORS REPORT.

The report of the Portland Censor Board covering the month of August submitted to the city commission shows 352 subjects viewed, comprising 710 reels, in which there were 25 eliminations and 3 subjects barred. The board made no recommendations for this month.

TRAFFIC ENGINEER BECOMES FILM SALESMAN.

A. S. Kirkpatric, for two years municipal traffic engineer under City Commissioner Robert Dieck, has resigned that position to become exploitation and efficiency expert and film salesman with the Mutual Film corporation in its Portland office. Mr. Kirkpatric is the man who introduced the red and green safety first signs to our city and laid out the chalk lines for the people to walk on at the intersections. He received his early film experience with the Selig company, later being connected with the Colorado Motion Picture company and several state right exploits. The Mutual looks forward to big results in Mr. Kirkpatric's department.

PORTLAND AND SEATTLE ITEMS.

The Telegram and the Journal, two of Portland's evening papers, were hosts to the newsboys on two different evenings recently when the boys were their guests at the Heilig theater to view "The Birth of a Nation."

Upon the passing of this picture by the Portland censor board, B. J. Lewis, of Seattle, who is interested in the lease of the picture, received a wire in New York that it would be safe to take unto himself a wife and accordingly Lauretta Cort, daughter of John Cort, became his bride. The picture is a money-getter in Portland.

Portland visitors were: George Endert, of the World Film corporation; C. A. Kleg, special representative of the Universal, with headquarters in Salt Lake City; C. E. Small, Majestic, Corvallis; A. E. Sparks, Family theater, Estacada; H. J. Cummings, Sunset, Astoria; E. R. Saunders, Bell theater, Ilwaco, Wash.

W. Bicknell, a Portland photographer, has purchased a motion picture camera and will take pictures of the Walla Walla roundup to be held soon.

L. E. Patterson, cameraman for the Northwest Weekly, is at Crater Lake making pictures for Mr. Olness' set of Oregon scenic films.

The Apex Feature Service of Seattle has closed with the Cort Film Corporation, for Joe Bloom, their booking agent in Seattle, and F. M. Simonton of the Apex Feature Service of Portland, Ore., to handle Washington, Oregon and Idaho on Walker Whiteside "Melting Pot" and the feature. They have booking in for a week's run in each town, Seattle, Portland and Spokane, Tacoma also handling the feature for the whole Northwest on "Sarah Bernhardt at Home."

The new Coliseum theater, Seattle, that is being built at a cost of $500,000 has all the steel and concrete work in and the roof on the building.

The Alaska theater had contracted for the Paramount service to be run in their house. The Alaska is one of the finest theaters in Seattle, seating 1,000 people and managed by Mr. O'Neil.

Joe Bloom has just finished a tour through the whole Northwest and reports one of the best booking trips of the season. All exhibitors in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana are well satisfied with business conditions.

Mr. F. M. Simonton of Portland, who is handling "Prohibition," is visiting Seattle office and taking bookings on "Prohibition."

IN CALIFORNIA.

The C. L. Williams Company, successor to the Blinkhorn Photoplays corporation in this territory, is receiving many new subjects and is now getting men out on the road with these. Manager C. L. Williams is still devoting a portion of his time to the management of one of the large concessions at the Exposition.

Suit has been brought by the owners of the Pastime at Fresno, Cal., against Lizzie Wright and James A. Jackson to collect $480 alleged to be due as back rent and expenses of maintaining a watchman on the premises. It is alleged in the complaint that Jackson leased the theater in 1913 for a period of five years at a monthly rental of $250 for the first two and a half years, and $300 for the rest of the time. In June, 1915, the lease was transferred to Mrs. Wright. G. W. Peck is made a party in the suit as he claims an interest in the mortgaged fixtures.

Small Town Business

In the California Back Country There Is a Growing Distaste for "Junk" and a Demand for the Best Films—Fig Features at 50 and 25 Cents Are Making Profits Even in Mountain Mining and Logging Towns—Local Helps.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN spite of the talk of quiet business in the mountain and interior towns of California there has developed this summer a demand for better films, even in some of the places where moving pictures are shown but two or three times a week. Vendors of what they themselves term "junk" films have in the past placed a large part of their bookings in interior cities where moving picture exhibitors felt that they were compelled to present shows at the same prices that prevailed in San Francisco and other large cities and therefore could not afford to give their patrons high-class subjects. Bookers of these films are not securing their usual volume of business in the country districts at the present time and declare that trade is very quiet, but exchanges handling high grade productions are taking on new customers every day and are highly elated with the increase in the demand for good subjects.

In mining and logging camps in the Sierras where there are not more than two or three hundred people, with a pitifully small territory to draw from, big feature productions are being shown regularly at a profit to the exhibitor, where inferior films costing much less have failed to make expenses. These exhibitors have found it necessary to charge from twenty-five to fifty cents for high-class productions, whereas San Francisco exhibitors show them for ten and twenty cents, but their patrons are willing to pay the difference.

The Club theater at Weed, Cal., a lumber camp in the northern part of the State, is showing two Paramount features a week and is only open three days a week. The Arlington at Tracy, Cal., the Angels at Angels Camp, the Auditorium at Grass Valley, the Broadway at Nevada City, the Bradley opera house at Elko, Nev., and dozens of other houses located in small communities in this territory have adopted the policy of showing high grade feature productions, finding that there is a demand for these, even at higher rates of admission. Local improvement clubs are coming to the rescue of exhibitors in many places and are assisting in securing better films by guaranteeing a certain attendance for certain productions and in exhibiting an increased interest in moving pictures. The small places are rapidly ceasing to be the dumping ground for "junk" films and in many of these just as good productions can be found as in the large cities, the only difference being a slightly increased admission price.

SCREENERS MAKE PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM.

The Screen Club of San Francisco is planning to hand down to future generations the likeness of all of its early members, and photographs are now being taken of all who are affiliated with it and these are to be mounted in a large album. There are those who with irreverent wit refer to this collection as the rogue's gallery, but it is an honor to have a place in it.

MUSIC MEN ON FILM ROW.

F. K. Ricksecker and J. B. Munjar, photoplayer experts from Chicago, have opened quarters at 52 Turk street, San Francisco, as the Manufacturers' Music Company, and are making a specialty of musical instruments for moving picture theaters. They are in the heart of the film exchange and theater supply district and are meeting many of the local exhibitors.

K. & D. FILM CO. GETS PERMIT.

The K. & D. Film Co. of San Francisco, recently incorporated for the purpose of featuring Kolb and Dill, prominent local comedians, in moving pictures, has been granted permission by the State Commission of Corporations to issue stock to C. William Kolb and Max M. Dill, who have contracted to give the corporation their exclusive services for film purposes for two years. Maude Lillian Moulin, also a stage favorite, has a half interest in the new company. Work will be commenced at an early date on the first production, which will probably be one of the great stage successes of this team.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

George Bird, who recently opened the Princess theater at Oak Park, Cal., closed shop and left town without notice, after conducting the house for about two weeks.

The Turner & Dahnken circuit of San Francisco is preparing to install a new ventilating system and make other extensive improvements at the Richmond, Richmond, Cal., the work to be under the direction of Manager Hunter. A. W. Cornelius, of San Francisco, is preparing plans for the changes.

The National Film Corporation of Los Angeles has been granted permission by the California Corporation Commission to sell shares at par to net the concern at least seventy-five per cent. The concern proposes to secure the services of a prominent moving picture actress and make feature productions.

Anita King, a moving picture actress of Los Angeles, came to San Francisco recently to start from the Exposition grounds on a cross-country trip in an automobile. She will make the trip from San Francisco to New York unattended and will strive to break the record for a woman driver.

The new Lyric, which was opened recently at 1041 J street, Fresno, Cal., tendered a special Exposition program on the opening day. The attraction was a film showing the arrival of the historic Liberty bell at San Francisco, the parade through the streets and the crowds at the Exposition gathered to honor the relic. Pictures of Art Smith, the aviator, in action over the Exposition grounds were also shown. The musical recital given by Prof. J. H. Lyons on the pipe organ is one of the features of the program at this new house.

The first bids for the construction of a new theater at Turlock, Cal., for Mrs. Cora Johnson to replace the Wonderland, destroyed by fire, were rejected as being too high, but changes were made in the plans and a contract has been awarded. The building to be erected will cost about $16,000 and will include the theater, three stores and a lodge room on the second floor. The theater will be completed and work will be rushed in order that it may be ready for occupancy by the time rainy weather forces the airdome to close. It is believed that it can be made ready for use by Nov. 1, and the entire building by the first of the year.

F. A. Young has been appointed manager of the Peoples' theater at Martinez, a thriving town in Contra Costa county.

Irene Whorff of Mill Valley, Cal., proclaimed to be the most beautiful girl in California in a newspaper contest held recently under the auspices of a moving picture concern, was married a short time ago at San Rafael to Harry Jones, who is employed by the California Motion Picture Corporation.

CHARLES R. GILMOUR HEADS LOCAL WORLD FILMS.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER CHARLES R. GILMOUR, a former Denver man, has come back to his home town to take charge of the Denver exchange of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Gilmour has been in Salt Lake managing the Salt Lake branch of the World for the past year, where he made a splendid success.

Denver moving picture men will be glad to welcome Mr. Gilmour back into their ranks, and it is safe to say he will as soon make good in this capacity as he has in the other positions he has held, since he has gone into the moving picture game.

F. CARMICHAEL BACK.

Manager F. Carmichael, of the Fox Film exchange in Denver, has just returned from a two weeks' trip through New Mexico, Texas and southern Colorado. Mr. Carmichael found business booming, so came back with nothing but good reports.

MANAGER COHEN PROMISES SPECIAL MUSIC SCORES.

Mr. H. M. Cohen, the manager of the Denver branch of the Paramount Film Corporation, returned Tuesday night from Chicago where he attended the meeting of all the exchange and advertising men of the Notable and Paramount companies.

The meeting was really a "get together" proposition, for the men to discuss advertising methods, and advertising propositions, and business of the company, in general

Paramount is from now on going to release one comedy a week. Another innovation is that with each feature there is to be special music. A New York music company has taken the contract to write special music for every feature that is put out.

E. W. BIEDERSTADT OPTIMISTIC.

Mr. E. W. Biederstadt, the manager of the Denver office of the Kleine-Edison concern, is just back from a ten days' business trip through the territory of which he has charge. Mr. Biederstadt has charge of territory extending through Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico, also a part of Nebraska. He is enthusiastic over the way business is booming, and expects big things of Kleine-Edison productions in Denver and the surrounding country.

SOUTHWESTERN NEWS LETTER.

Workmen's Compensation in Oklahoma —Other Southwest Notes.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

EMPLOYEES of the moving picture theaters in Oklahoma comes within the provisions of the new Workmen's Compensation Act, which became effective Sept. 1. This ruling was announced by the Oklahoma State Industrial Commission.

MID-WESTERN CO.'S CONTEST.

Voting contests to select 100 Oklahoma girls to take part in "The Isle of Life," which will be produced at Medicine Park by the Mid-Western Film Mfg. Company in a great many Oklahoma theaters. The contestant gets her expenses paid to Medicine Park. The contest closes September 30. One vote is given with each ticket to the theaters interested.

A SOUTHWESTERN PICTURE.

"From the Cotton Field to Congress," the first Afro-American moving picture, has been produced by the Commercial Film Company at Houston, Texas. "The journey of the industrious hero through various experiences in his rise from obscurity forms the various scenes of the play. The scenes are all local—the first the Emancipation park, where the film was started June 19, the heaviest and best, a court room in the Harris county court house. All the characters in the film are chosen from negro residents of the city. W. H. Broyles, a local attorney, is one of the leading characters."

SOUTHWESTERN ITEMS.

The new Princess theater built by Frank L. Nordhaus at New Deming, N. M., has been opened under the management of T. S. Hull.

F. M. Watterson, of Purcell, Okla., has been making arrangements to open a moving picture show in the Thorn building at Maud, Okla.

The New Yale theater at Muskogee, Okla., gave a special matinee for women at which the corset-fitting film, "How Marjorie Won a Career," was shown.

The Majestic theater at Fort Smith, Ark., played a requested return engagement of "The Mating."

Pottinger & Shannon, of Chicago, have opened the Pastime theater at 626 Central avenue in Hot Springs, Ark.—the first five cent picture show in the city. Charles and William Lawson will assist in the operation of the house. It has two new Powers 6-A machines and is newly equipped throughout. It seats 450.

EXHIBITORS HELP RED CROSS FUND.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THROUGH a suggestion originating with Mr. Watson of the Avenue theater in the Oak Bay section of Victoria, L. J. Quagliotti, proprietor of the Variety, Romano and Empress theaters in Victoria, and Mr. Watson have agreed to turn over the sale of matinee tickets at their houses for the last two weeks of September to the Oak Bay branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society. Many prominent people already have bought tickets in lots of fifty and upwards, to be presented to children in various institutions, inmates of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, etc., thus giving these people many pleasant hours, and at the same time contributing directly to the Red Cross fund. The society will be under no expense whatever, as the managers have agreed to pay all the running expenses of the theaters.

ALASKA EXHIBITORS GET IN WINTER FILMS.

Ed Victor has again taken over the management of the Orpheum theater at Dawson (Yukon territory) and reopened at 9:10 p. m., on Aug. 17, showing Licensed pictures at 25 cents and 50 cents—the regular prices in Dawson. Mrs. George Craig is pianist. Walter C. Creamer, proprietor of the Dawson Amateur Athletic Association's theater, is also showing Licensed programs, while the Auditorium (McHenry & Drake, props.) is using Mutual service. The managers here will soon be getting in their winter's supply of films, as the river freezes up during November, and anything brought in before the next spring is transported by dog teams at a charge, I am informed, of about $1 per pound. Wilfred Leivers of Juneau went to Fort Yukon on the S. S. City of Seattle, as assistant to the cameraman accompanying the excursion party.

CENSORS SPOIL "COL. CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE."

After the subject had been rather heavily advertised for some time, "Col. Carter of Cartersville," which the Dominion Film Exchange brought in for the Dominion theater, arrived in such a condition, presumably through the activities of an eastern censor, that the picture was rendered absolutely unintelligible and could not be used. Fully one thousand feet of the picture had been cut out, and probably through an oversight the cuts had not been returned before the reels left Montreal. The Dominion management substituted "The Man Who Found Himself," which was shown at this house some time ago.

I. SOSKIN GOES TO CALGARY.

I. Soskin, who for some time has been in charge of the Vancouver office of the Famous Players' Film Service, Ltd., has recently been transferred to Calgary, where he will take charge of the company's premium coupon system. After a preliminary trip to the Calgary headquarters, Mr. Soskin left Vancouver Sept. 10 to take up his new duties. His brother, Ben Soskin, remains in Vancouver, and will probably become manager of this office.

WESTERN CANADA JOTTINGS.

During the run of the Vitagraph feature, "Shadows of the Past," at the Majestic theater, Winnipeg, photographs of Julia Swayne Gordon, the star, were given to ladies attending matinees.

A month's pass to the Rex theater at Regina was one of the prizes given at the picnic of the Trades and Labor Council at Saskatchewan Beach.

The Lyric theater in Calgary reopened for the winter season with a week's showing of the Camp Sewell military pictures.

Manager Andrew P. Keegan of the local Pathe office reports that the "Exploits of Elaine" serial, which has just been brought in by his office, has opened at Nelson, Grand Forks and Rossland, B. C., and bookings for other points are being made.

R. J. Lydiatt, manager of the Grand, Calgary (playing Pantages vaudeville) was a visitor last week, and contracted for a weekly split reel consisting of Col. Heeza Liar and educational subjects for this house and for Pantages at Edmonton. According to Mr. Lydiatt, it is planned to institute Saturday morning performances for children at both these houses, using high-class comedies and educational pictures.

M. Alberts of the Westholme opera house, Prince Rupert, was a recent visitor to Vancouver exchanges, and before returning north booked "The Diamond from the Sky."

On the occasion of the showing of the first Black Box episode at the Star, Roseland, B. C., a special free performance was given late in the afternoon for children.

The fall theatrical season at Winnipeg opened on Sept. 6. It is significant, however, that the booking for the second week of the season at the Walker theater, the city's finest legitimate house, was Selig's nine-reel feature, "The Spoilers."

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

New Theaters—Reopenings—Optimistic Trade Reports.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

MANAGER PEARSON of the V-L-S-E company at Kansas City is very much enthused over the the replaying of many of his films at the various houses. The "Chalice of Courage" is replaying at the Iris theater at Denver, Col., and many others have been signed up for return engagements at Kansas City theaters.

The Grand theater at Sioux City opened recently with the "Blindness of Virtue."

A. H. Blank and H. M. Thomas recently opened the American theater at Omaha, Neb., which they are now calling the Strand. The theater is using the releases of nearly all the leading companies in the territory.

Mr. Root, manager of the Majestic theater at Osawatomie, Kan., has recently completed the redecoration of the theater.

PICK-UPS BY A DETROITER.

Manager Miller of the Family theater, Detroit, wishes to deny emphatically the rumor that that playhouse would shortly return to vaudeville. "We are doing so well with pictures—much better than we did with vaudeville—that we haven't the slightest intention of making a change. In fact, business seems to be getting better all the time. We find that features draw better with us after they have been shown at some other house. We spend no money for advertising, hence first-run pictures are really no advantage to us."

The "Arc Controller" made by the Speed Controller Co., Inc, of New York City, is being used by the Majestic, Washington, Knickerbocker, Broadway-Strand and other leading theaters in Michigan. By use of this machine pictures are given perfect illumination.

Moving pictures will be used to help teach the English language to Detroit's foreign population. The Ford Motor Company has offered the free use of its moving picture department to the cause.

The Avenue theater, which ran pictures during the summer, has returned to dramatic stock for the winter months. Manager Drew says pictures will be resumed next June. In connection with his newest project, the Drury Lane theater, in course of erection on Woodward avenue, Mr. Drew expects to open it by November 1 or thereabouts. The house will seat 600.

All of the moving picture theaters in Detroit report record breaking business on Labor Day. In spite of the rain a long line of patrons stood before every box office and the motion picture houses could not begin to handle the crowds that wanted to get in. The rain shut off outside sports and drove people inside for shelter and amusement.

The Majestic theater showed its first Metro picture the week of Sept. 12, the film being "The Silent Voice." Manager McGee announces the appointment of W. L. Cooper as assistant.

The Forest theater, Woodward avenue, near Forest, is now under the same management as the Your theater, on Forest avenue, near Mt. Elliott. Many improvements are being made to the Forest.

The Detroit Journal, acting upon a suggestion made some time ago by the writer, is now conducting a page every Saturday devoted to motion pictures. It is receiving splendid support from the exhibitors who have contracted for advertising space. Ralph Holmes is editor. It will not publish news of a local nature only. The "movie" news must be of general interest.

W. G. KALISKA TO RUN PALACE.

William G. Kaliska, former manager of the Royal theater for John H. Kunsky, has been appointed manager of the Palace theater, 1352 Fourteenth street.

TWO THEATERS ARE TWINS.

Two new theaters held their openings on Saturday evening, Sept. 4. They were crowded for both performances, the S. R. O. sign going out long before the last show was ready. In a later issue of the World these theaters will be fully described and photographs shown. The Strand was one of the new houses. It is located at Grand River and Fourteenth streets and seats close to 1,400 people. John H. Kunsky is the man responsible for the new Strand, which he considers the handsomest of his entire chain of theaters. The policy will be the same as at the Alhambra—daily change of features. Admission prices are 10 to 25 cents. The manager is Arthur C. Hoganson, formerly manager of Mr. Kunsky's Garden theater. The house has been doing capacity since the opening.

The Lakewood is the style of the other new theater opened at Jefferson and Oneida avenues. It also seats about 1,500. The cost was $100,000. C. J. Roberts is vice-president and manager. John Cutler is president of the company.

Fire Deputies Inspecting

Michigan's Regular Semi-Annual Fire Marshal's Inspection On—Detroit Will Keep Deputies Two Weeks—New Cloth Sign Regulation Being Rigidly Enforced—Bulletin No. 16 of State Insurance Department.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.), Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE semi-annual inspection of Detroit motion picture theaters by deputies of the state fire marshal's department to see that theater owners live up to the rules and regulations of the department started September 1st. It is the first under the new law, passed by the legislature last spring, and becoming effective Aug. 24. Under its provisions all moving picture theaters must be inspected at least twice a year to see that all safeguards against fires are maintained. Each owner must pay $10 or each inspection, but not more than $20 in any one year. It will take until the middle of the month to cover Detroit.

The deputies are explaining the new rules to the theater owners and advising them that they must be lived up to absolutely. All cloth signs are being ordered down, and all paper signs must be under glass.

More About the Cloth Sign.

In Bulletin No. 16, issued by the Insurance Department of Michigan attention is once more called to the cloth sign regulation. The exact wording of Insurance Commissioner on this subject is as follows: "Owners of moving picture theaters in Michigan should bear in mind section No. 15 of the State Fire Marshal's regulations which prohibits the use of cloth advertising signs in front of stores, vacant buildings and upon bill board applies to all classes of business and will be strictly enforced. The use of such signs is considered by all authorities, including the fire chiefs of the state, to be a decided fire hazard and a menace to life and property, and it was only after a careful investigation that they were prohibited. In the past these signs have covered entire buildings, and there are a number of theaters where most of the front is covered and the exits obstructed by such advertising. Several parties interested in the theaters throughout the state have written to the State Fire Marshal protesting because of the enforcement of the law for that reason that they would be required to adopt different methods and thereby be compelled to go to additional expense. Where human lives and valuable property are at stake the Fire Marshal Department refuses to discuss the enforcement of the law or regulation from a dollar and cents standpoint. The regulations will be enforced.

SEESTEDT NOT INTIMIDATED.

Considerable interest has been manifested during the past few weeks in the "fight" at the Northwestern theater, Grand River and Missouri avenues, Detroit, where the motion picture operators' union has been trying to force the management to accede to certain demands. It seems that at the beginning of the summer Charles Seestedt, manager of the Northwestern theater, decided that he would not give matinees on Sundays during the hot months. He took the matter up with all of his employes, including the operator, and it met with instant favor. They were "tickled" to have Sunday afternoons to themselves, with the understanding that they were not to be paid for that time. The operator was a union man.

Early in August delegates of the motion picture operators' union called on Mr. Seestedt and insisted that he pay his man for Sunday afternoon, whether the man worked or not. This Mr. Seestedt refused to do owing to the mutual understanding between him and the operator. The next day men with a large banner declaring the Northwestern theater to be "unfair to labor" marched up and down Grand River avenue in front of that play-house during the afternoon and evening shows. They went still further, passing out handbills telling the same story all over the neighborhood. Mr. Seestedt stood firm, however.

About ten days ago, during one of the evening performances, some one cut the feed wires, the lights in the theater went out and there was a panic. Some one else hurled a brick which struck the operator in the booth. Several attempts have also been made to injure the operator while going to and from the theater. Up to the time of writing, policemen are guarding the Northwestern theater. Mr. Seestedt has been assured that he can have police protection as long as he needs it. Mr. Seestedt is willing to employ union operators as proved by his action in the past, but he wants to have the say of how his house shall be run. He feels that the question of paying for Sunday afternoons (when no shows are given) is one that involves only the theater and the operator. In other ways, Mr. Seestedt is paying the full union scale.

UNIVERSAL'S DETROIT EXCHANGE.

The photograph below shows the outside of the new Universal Film Exchange at 159 West Jefferson avenue, Detroit. The company occupies the entire first floor, the front part being the general offices, the shipping and receiving rooms being in the rear. A special vault has been built in the rear for keeping the films. The Universal was the first to have a first floor exchange. The new location is convenient to all car lines, and is only a stone's throw from Woodward avenue, which is Detroit's leading thoroughfare.

NEW HOUSE AT WYANDOTTE.

Contracts have been let for the new theater to be erected at Wyandotte by the Harris & Warren Amusement Co. All doors will be covered with metal, making the building fireproof. An organ costing $10,000 has been ordered. All seats will be upholstered in leather. The new house will be ready about November 15.

HARRY GOLDBERG BACK SOON.

We are in receipt of a letter from Harry Goldberg, former manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., and who is now in New York City, stating that he expects to return to Detroit this fall with some big features. Mr. Goldberg has a lot of friends in Michigan who will welcome him back in the business.

THE ETERNAL FEMININE (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 20).—John Strong refuses to espouse the suffrage cause, despite the fact that his rival candidate for governor, Colonel Foster, is ardent in the cause of suffrage. Strong loves Helen, the daughter of Colonel Foster, who is enthusiastic in the cause of woman's rights. Helen is also beloved by Charles Philips, a social butterfly without an ambition in the world. The last heart of the unfortunate Charles Philips accompanies Helen to hear Strong make a political speech. Later, Charles endeavors to address an assembly of suffragettes, and his pitiful effort is mentally compared by Helen to the masterful discourse delivered by John Strong. Strong is elected governor of the state.

Mrs. Brentwood, a wealthy widow, who secretly loves Strong, gives a reception for him. There Strong again meets Helen. He proposes to her and is rejected. "You have in me a suitor who refuses to be rejected," says Strong, who leaves Helen's side for a time. Helen, in the moonlight, falls into a reverie. Her thoughts go back to the Stone Age, and she thinks herself a queen of that period, ruling the Clan Feminine. Strongarm comes from a far country and cannot understand the abject servility of the men who are ruled by a young woman queen and her women. He expostulates with them, leads an uprising, and the men overpower the women.

Strongarm refuses the offers of marriage made to him by a widow, and takes possesion of the beautiful Queen Helen, and carries her to his cave. The widow and the weakling, who bears a strong resemblance to Charles Philips, and who loves Helen, the queen, trace Strongarm to his cave. There they discover that Strongarm has won the love of the queen, proving his masterfulness. Helen Foster awakens with a start and remembers that she is at a social function. Governor-elect Strong returns to her side. She goes slowly toward him and places her arms about his neck. Mrs. Brentwood and Charles Philips see this action on the girl's part. A glance of understanding is exchanged, and softly they leave.

THE RANGE GIRL AND THE COWBOY (Sept. 21).—Tom is given the position of Cowboy on Sid Jordan's ranch. Vicky, Sid's daughter is annoyed by Buck, the ranch foreman, who is discharged and Tom is given the position. Buck decides to get even with Jordan, and with other cowboys starts to rustle Jordan's cattle.

Vicky sees Buck and the others change the brand on a calf. The outlaws shoot at her and her horse drops pinning her to the ground. They take the girl a prisoner. Tom, in search of the rustlers follows Vicky's trail. He overcomes the cattle rustlers in an exciting revolver duel and rescues Vicky who can no longer withstand Tom's offer of marriage.

THE BLOOD SEEDLING (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Thomas Santschi, Leo Pierson, Thomas Bates, George Larkin, Lafayette McKee and Marion Warner.

Allen Golyer, a well-to-do young farmer, is a neighbor to Saul Cheney and his family. He frequently remonstrates with Cheney because Cheney's son, Gershom, is permitted to absorb the works of Swedenborg and to fill his head with "spirit notions." Mrs. Barringer and her daughter Susie live nearby. Golyer and Susie keep company, and Golyer asks Susie to marry him just before the girl leaves for a visit with her Aunt Abigail. Susie, although she loves him, refuses him a definite answer. Bertie Leon, a traveling salesman for a ribbon firm, is in the general store where Aunt Abigail and Susie are buying silk. Leon gains an introduction to Susie. When Susie returns home, her attitude to Allen Golyer has changed. No longer does she dimple and smile when the young farmer approaches, but instead she seems to endeavor to avoid him. Bertie Leon follows Susie to her mother's home.

Colonel Blood has presented Allen Golyer with a sapling. In honor of Colonel Blood he calls the sapling "The Blood Seedling." The day comes when Susie tells Allen that she is engaged to Bertie Leon. Bertie Leon bids farewell to Susie and leaves the village. As time passes and no letters come from him, Susie believes that he is fickle. Much to the delight of her mother and Aunt Abigail she breaks the engagement. By her woman's wiles, she again tempts Allen Golyer to her side and she tells him of the broken engagement. Then it is that Golyer proposes and is accepted by Susie.

For twenty long years Allen Golyer and his wife live together in perfect happiness. On the neighboring farm Gershom Cheney achieves more than local reputation as a soothsayer. Golyer with others is invited to the Cheney home in the evening when Gershom is to hold a seance. As Allen Golyer and his wife repair to the Cheney home, Susie recalls that twenty years ago that day Allen had planted the "Blood Seedling" and that she had given him the "mitten." Gershom Cheney, in a trance, asks for pencil and paper. As he holds Allen Golyer's hand, he writes: "A spade, a man you hated, a grave beneath an apple tree." Then it is that Golyer breaks down. He says: "Twenty years ago today, I was working in the orchard. The man Leon came to me and boasted and laughed because I suffered. I killed him as I would have killed a rat. I buried him in the hole I had dug for the blood seedling. All I ask is that my wife be spared the knowledge of my crime."

Allen Golyer then staggers from the Cheney home. He goes to the "Blood Seedling" and removes a knife from a cleft in the tree. At Allen's home his wife kneels in prayer before she retires. At the Cheney home Gershom again, in a trance, writes hurriedly. Those present read the paper. They rush to the Golyer farm, and there, under the "Blood Seedling," they find the lifeless body of Allen Golyer, who has taken his own life.

THE AUCTION SALE OF RUN DOWN RANCH (Sept. 25).—Bill Herrick, owner of "Run Down" ranch, finds the land is worthless and arranges to sell it at public auction. Tom Hickey, the foreman, and Vicky, the rancher's daughter, who is Tom's sweetheart, assist.

Isaac Goldplate prospects on the land for oil. A demijohn of oil has been broken, and Isaac Goldplate, arriving on the day of the ranch sale, spies the oil scattered on the ground and is convinced that oil is oozing from the earth. He offers $5,000.00 for the property. His offer is accepted, but Goldplate soon discovers that he has been duped out of $5,000. He starts for town to stop payment on the check, but is stopped by Tom Hickey, who gets the check cashed and returns with the money. Herrick gives Tom and Vicky a thousand dollars each with which to start housekeeping.

THE RUNT (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Wheeler Oakman, Edith Johnson, Frank Clark, William Machin, William Gillespie, Harry Lonsdale and Gertrude Ryan.

Tom Reynolds is defrauding the Government, and Joe Wilson of the Internal Revenue, sends word to Tom to escape before he is arrested. He sends word to Tom through the mediumship of the Runt, the homely, down-trodden little scullion of the fisher village. The Runt, in her humble way, secretly loves Tom Reynolds. Bidding his beloved Edith Bates, a fond farewell, Tom leaves the village.

Two years pass and Joe Wilson wins the love of Edith Bates, who has heard nothing from Tom, and they are engaged to be married. In the meantime the Runt, who is abused by old man Bates, Edith's father, is taken in charge by Daddy Reynolds, who gives the poor girl a home. Together Daddy Reynolds and the Runt stand at the seashore and look across the vast expanse of water with longing in their eyes, wishing for the return of Tom.

And one day Tom returns to the fishing village. He is seen by Jack Stark, who tells Joe Wilson. "If you do not arrest Tom Reynolds, I will." Tom goes to old man Bates' home to greet Edith. She tells him that she is to marry Joe Wilson. Heartbroken, Tom returns to the seashore. He sits upon a rock, in meditation. The cowardly Stark, fearful of Tom's physical prowess, is hiding behind a distant rock, levels a revolver at Tom and fires.

At that instant, the Runt, who has followed Tom, springs into the path of the bullet and sacrifices her life for the man she loves. As life ebbs away the Runt whispers to Tom, asking him to kiss her before she crosses the Great Divide. He does so and then turns and sees Jack Stark. As Tom reaches for a stone, Stark again fires and Tom falls dying. He turns to the prostrate form of the Runt, who gave her life for him. He crawls to her side and with an arm thrown over the lifeless body of the Runt, his spirit too goes over Yonder and there side by side, Daddy Reynolds, Joe Wilson and others of the fisher village find the lifeless bodies of Tom Reynolds and the Runt.

HER SLIGHT MISTAKE (Sept. 28).—The cast: Tom Mix, Howard Farrell, Leo Maloney and Mrs. Chrisman.

Bill, a cowpuncher, who wants to get married, answers an ad in a matrimonial journal. After seeing the picture of the girl, he decides to call it off, but receives a letter from the old maid's lawyer to the effect that Bill can be held to the marriage. Jack, a friend of Bill's, wires back that Bill has gone crazy, but receives a reply that Muriel is on her way to nurse her future husband. Bill, at his wits' end, allows his cowboy pals to rig him up as a wild man and he goes into the hills in this condition. Muriel arrives.

In the meantime, a naturalist professor, who has been collecting bugs in the hills, comes out of the tent in his sleeping suit to find that his clothes have been burned up from the rays of a strong magnifying glass. He starts off in his sleeping suit, is seen by the old maid, who gives chase. Bill, who has been wandering around the hills, sees the fleeing professor and starts back for home. Muriel overtakes the professor and starts for town with him. When she tells him that she has $50,000.00 in her grip, he falls upon her and they embrace. They are married by a justice of the peace just as Bill's cowboy friends come upon the scene. They encounter Bill and tell him not to worry, that the old maid is already married. Bill does a joy dance until they come to the part where Muriel has $50,000.00 in her grip. This is too much for Bill; he tears off his wild man's costume and raves at losing a small fortune.

MINA.

WHEN HUSBANDS GO TO WAR (Sept. 23).—All goes well in the little country town until one of the rubes reads an advertisement of a burlesque show in the city. He and his two friends decide they want to go, but the question is how to get away from their wives. An article in the newspaper, telling of the number of Americans enlisting in the European war gives them their cue. They sneak away from the old town, leaving word behind that they have gone to enlist. The show comes up to their expectations. They enjoy every minute of it. Here the story would probably end happily if the trio did not mix up with three of the chorus after the show and start out for a high old time. The rube trio fall into the hands of the police and spend the night behind the prison bars.

In the meantime, the three wives have compared notes. One of them stumbles upon a copy of the burlesque show ad. They decide to take matters in their own hands and start out "to capture the enemy." They finally find their husbands in jail and win a victory by spanking their naughty husbands. The three hubbies surrender, agreeing with Sherman's views on war. When the next burlesque show is advertised we know of three rubes who refuse to attend.

BIOGRAPH.

THE SEYMOUR HOUSE PARTY (Sept. 27).—Cast includes Augusta Anderson, Charles Perley, W. J. Butler, Clairette Clair, Ilean Hume.

Stanton objects to his wife playing cards for money, but she disobeys him. Their host, Seymour, presents his wife with a costly necklace. The maid steals the gift and, having passed it through a window to her confederate outside, places the jewel case among Mrs. Stanton's belongings, where it is later found by her husband. At the same time Stanton finds a note from one of the guests to his wife, asking her to pay her gambling losses. He becomes convinced that his wife has stolen the necklace. Mrs. Stanton overhears the maid arranging with her confederate to dispose of the necklace, and cleverly gets ahead of her to the rendezvous. The crooks capture her and lock her into a room, where she finds the hiding place of the necklace, drops a message from the window, and gives her captors battle until the police arrive and rescue her.

HIS WIFE'S STORY (Special—Two parts—Sept. 28).—The cast: Vera Sisson, G. Raymond Nye, Jose Ruben, Charles H. Mailes.

Wiliam Courtnay, a rising young lawyer, candidate for mayor, drops into a restaurant and there sees Louise Blair, a cabaret singer. Beckoning the girl to his table, he urges her to give up the unworthy occupation. His words make a deep impression upon her, and she starts homeward in solemn mood. Outside the door of the restaurant a man confronts her, and she gives him money. This man, George Fenmore, has cast a shadow over her life, and now that he has found her again she gives up her position. A few days later she secures employment in a book store. Courtnay had given the girl his card, but she has lost it. Fenmore, picking it up, kept it; and when Courtnay opens his campaign headquarters the blackmailer applies for a clerkship.

By chance Courtnay enters the book store and meets Louise again. She consents to become his private secretary. In his private office she comes face to face with Fenmore, but he reassures her. Henry Bryson, chairman of the campaign committee, discovers him threatening the girl, interferes, and is himself blackmailed by Fenmore, who has a hold on him also. Courtnay urges Louise to marry him, and she consents. Bryson influences Courtnay to discharge Fenmore, and the latter, forcibly ejected from the offices, goes to Louise, vowing vengeance. Courtnay enters and demands an explanation of the blackmailer's presence in his home. Louise tells how, as a young girl, she eloped with Henry Bryson, and how Fenmore, his secretary, discovered that Bryson already had a wife and child. A letter from Bryson's wife, which Fenmore had stolen, afforded ample proof, and she went out of Bryson's life. As she concludes the story Bryson enters with news of Courtnay's victory at the polls. Fenmore, triumphant, asks, "How much will you gentlemen pay to keep this out of the papers?" Bryson, in fury, attacks him, and is killed by Fenmore, who later pays the penalty of his crime.

THE COUNTRY PARSON (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 29).—The Cast: Louise Vale, Clairette Clair, Jack Drumeir, Franklin Ritchie, Gretchen Hartman, Charles H. Mailes.

Veronique Sauviat meets Jean Tascheron, a young man from the next village, and falls in love with him. Her father, a dealer in antiques, has secretly amassed a great fortune, and proposes to give Veronique a fabulous dowry if Graslin, the richest man in the province, will marry her. Forced into a loveless marriage, she becomes dispirited, and only occasionally does she resent her husband's meanness. Jean has left home in search of employment, the good father giving him a letter of introduction to Sauviat, who, impoverished by the payment of Veronique's huge dowry, is now manager of Graslin's jet factory.

Sauviat is stricken while at work, and Jean assists him home. There he encounters his lost Veronique, whom her husband's cruelty has driven to her father's house. The old love affair is rekindled. Jean discovers the hiding place of an old miser's wealth, and resolves to steal it so that he may take Veronique away. She aids him. The miser interrupts them at work, and Jean is forced to seal his lips forever. Jean stamps out Veronique's footprints, but leaves a clear impression of his own shoes in the damp soil. He is trailed and arrested, the money being found under his pillow. Offered clemency if he will reveal his companion's identity, he chooses death. On the day of the execution Veronique's baby is born, Graslin, delighted, would embrace her; but she waves him away with a shriek—for Jean is even now dying on the guillotine.

WINNING THE WIDOW (Sept. 30).—The cast: Gretchen Hartman, Alan Hale, Adila Comer.

The bachelor arrives at the summer boarding house and is assigned to a room. Shortly afterward, he hears a child crying, locates the sound in the adjoining room, and enters. The child stops crying when he soothes it, but breaks out again as soon as he puts it down; so he is forced to continue his attentions. The proceedings are interrupted by the return of the child's mother, a dashing young widow, who gives him the frozen look.

Nothing daunted, he lays siege to her heart, principally through the child, whom he endeavors to amuse. She turns him down flat, however, when he proposes. Determined to win her, he plots to kidnap her child and hold it as hostage until she names the day. He bribes a shoe clerk, whom he has met at the boarding house, to get the child for him. The clerk fulfils his part of the bargain and obtains the promised reward of $500. The bachelor takes the child to a furnished cottage which he has rented, and turns it over to the care of a hired nurse. But the nurse becomes suspicious and, fearing to be involved in the kidnapping, throws up her job.

The bachelor is forced to look after the child himself. Each day he scans the agony column of the paper, in which he has warned the widow to advertise that she will be his. On the fourth day he can stand it no longer, and is on the point of going to the widow when she comes to him accompanied by the shoe clerk, whom she introduces as her husband. Before he can recover his breath, she thanks him sweetly for having taken care of her baby during the honeymoon, and for the five hundred dollars which came in so handy for expenses.

BRUTALITY (Oct. 1).—Biograph Reissue No. 17). The cast: Mae Marsh, Walter Miller, Lionel Barrymore, Elmer Booth.

Before their marriage the girl gets an inkling of her lover's brutal temper, but he assures her that she will never be its victim. They have been married only a few months, however, when his brutal nature assumes full sway. When his treatment becomes insufferable she attempts to leave him, but he discovers her in the act and forces her to dissemble. The next day he is given two tickets to the theater, and together they witness a great actor's impersonation of the brutal Bill Sykes in Dickens' "Oliver Twist." The tragedy makes a deep and lasting impression upon the husband's mind. Aghast at the thought that some day he, too, may kill the woman he loves, he promises to curb his temper, and by strict self-repression succeeds in his attempt.

HER RENUNCIATION (Oct. 2).—The cast: Claire McDowell, Hector V. Sarno, Isabel Rea, Laura LaVarnie.

Overwork at her art had undermined Miriam Drayton's health, and the doctor recommended sea air. In a fishing village she boarded with an old couple whose granddaughter, Lucy Joyce, was a cripple. The old folks consented to pose for Miriam, thinking thus to earn money for Lucy's operation, so that she might walk again. Miriam's sweetheart, Spencer, came to visit her, and was entranced by Lucy's ethereal beauty. He was the most wonderful man Lucy had ever seen, and she lost her heart to him. Miriam saw them together, and realized that her happiness was shattered. For Lucy's sake she told the girl that she and Spencer had discovered they did not love each other. Back in her studio, she completed her painting and won the grand prize with it. Revisiting Lucy, whose operation had turned out successfully, she saved the girl from drowning at the cost of her own life—the sublime sacrifice of love.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE CARD SHARP —(Sept. 17).—The cast: G. M. Anderson, Lee Willard, Lloyd Bacon, Harry Todd, Florence Cato.

Broncho Billy, in a quarrel with Faro Dan, a card sharp, shoots him and flees. Pursued, he hides in the wagon of a man whom he meets on the prairie. The posse is misled by Broncho Billy's friend and the fugitive escapes. Several years later, Broncho is made sheriff of an adjoining county. A rancher finds a cattle thief leading away some of his stock, and holds him with a rifle while his daughter calls the sheriff. Broncho Billy arrives and learns the thief is the man who befriended him. After a mental struggle Broncho arrests him, despite threats of exposure, and then hands in his star as sheriff and goes back to the old county to give himself up. He has the surprise of his life when he meets Faro Dan, who he merely had wounded, alive, and learns he now is honest.

AFFINITIES (Special—Two parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Richard C. Travers, Betty Scott, E. H. Calvert, Lillian Drew.

Frank Mitchell invites Alice Thomas, and Jack Thomas invites Mary Mitchell to go on an "affinity picnic," neither knowing of the other's scheme. Frank's party goes to one island in the lake; Jack's to another a mile away. Jack and Mary are left behind that night, and Jack swims to the other island for a boat. He gets one loaded with champagne intended for Frank's party. Frank and Alice discover the loss, jump into another boat and give chase, not knowing who their quarry is. Jack takes Mary aboard and dashes for the mainland, where they jump into an automobile. It was Mary's own car, but she doesn't know it. Her husband had used it. Frank takes Alice home. She is glad her husband hadn't returned. In the wee hours, Jack and Mary are arrested but Mary escapes. Her husband, trying to frame up some excuse for losing her machine is surprised when she climbs through a window. Meanwhile Alice worrying about Jack, decides to go over to Mary's—and arrives just as Mary is, begging Frank's forgiveness. The police come with Jack and Frank is exposed. Jack goes to his knees before Alice and all agree matters are even.

THE CIRCULAR PATH (Special—Three parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Henry B. Walthall, Warda Howard, Edmund F. Cobb, Canille D'Arcy.

The Rev. Darwin Kirby is in love with a woman who is fond of all the gaieties of life. She refuses to marry him and finally the preacher gives up the pulpit for the love of the girl. But he has not been trained in paths of the world and fails to make good. Finally he goes West for a new start, leaving his wife behind. Lonely, she takes up with an old sweetheart and spends much of her time with him. The western venture does not prove profitable, and sick and disconsolate the former preacher returns East. He finds his wife in a cafe with the other man. Goaded to fury by jealousy he shoots his rival. Thinking he has killed him, he hides in the slums where he drops to the lowest depths of degradation. But one day he hears that the man he shot is not dead. Calling together all his will power he determines to mend his ways. He makes a man of himself and re-enters the ministry. Then he seeks the wife he still loves. She, tired and sick of the consequences of her gay life, consents to begin anew and the two start together on the right path.

THE CALL OF THE SEA (Special—Three parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: Darwin Karr, Howard Lang, Betty Brown, Thomas Harper, Herbert Haywood, Alfred Grontell, Richardson Cotton.

Mary Horgan, daughter of a wealthy man, falls in love with a rugged fisherman and weds him against her father's wishes. He disowns her, and she, happy in her love, longs for her father's blessing. Comes a time when she is taken ill and the doctor says that only a noted surgeon of another village can save her life. He is unable to get there. Seeing her near death, the father relents, and sends his yacht, the fastest on the sea, after the surgeon. They are lost at sea in a storm, but finally reach port after many anxious hours in time to save the girl's life.

THE FABLE OF THE THROUGH TRAIN (Sept. 22).—The cast: Anna May Walthall, Anzinette Moore, Willie Belmont, Eugene Acker.

Two High School Heliotropes named Lib and Angie made a pact to be friends for ever and ever. Each kept her nightie at the other girl's house and each carried in a locket a four-leaf clover presented by one to whom she had bared her soul. Angis got Wilbur and Lib drew Otis. Wilbur was a hustler but lacked the terminal facilities to interest capital. Otis bulled his way into the strongholds of finance and copped the mazuma. After a lapse of years, Angie went to visit Lib. They had some talk, Angie mourned her lot and called Wilbur a false alarm. Lib told Angie to back up, that she ought to be thankful she had a husband's love and fine children. She said that she, wife of a successful business man, occupied a niche in the Hall of Fame right next to the sister of Jesse James. Having arrived at this cordial understanding, they chirked up and paid a lot of attention to a well-preserved bachelor who dropped in to get warm. Moral: When wealth walks in at the door, the press agent comes in through the window.

SNAKEVILLE'S HEN MEDIC (Sept. 23).—The cast: Victor Postal, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin, Ben Turpin, Carrie Turpin, Robert McKenzie.

Sophie Pain, the lady doctor, hangs out her sign in Snakeville and naturally creates quite a stir among the male population. Mustang Pete suddenly discovers and pretends he is ill and calls on the "hen medic." Bloggie, jealous, sends him a note that his wife wants him, and himself acquires a sudden ailment. Pete, finding he was fooled, tells Bloggie's wife her husband is making love to the lady doctor, and she rushes to her office. Bloggie escapes and locks his wife, Pete, the hen medic, and Slippery Slim, who was hired as office boy, in the office. Then he climbs to the roof and covers up the chimney. Suffocated by the smoke, the locked in Bloggie's victims telephone for the constable who rushes to the scene with a rifle. He pokes it through the window and Pete extracts the shell and places it in the stove. The place is blown up and Bloggie falls into a watering trough, where the constable arrests him. The hen medic, Pete, Bloggie's wife and Slim struggle out from under the wreckage.

LUBIN.

TONY AND MARIE (Sept. 27).—The cast: Francis Joyner, Bernard Siegel, George Bliss, Jessie Terry, Mary Charleson.

Tony comes to America, leaving his wife in Italy until he has made a home for her. He works as a laborer and saves every cent possible. Tony shares a tenement room with an organ-grinder, a monkey and Rosso, another laborer. A letter from Marie tells of a baby born to them and Tony has almost enough saved to furnish a little home. One night in the dark, Rosso attempts to rob the sleeping organ-grinder. The monkey chatters and awakens his master, who fights Rosso. Tony awakes and interferes. He gets the money and a knife from Rosso, who escapes, but the organ-grinder has been stabbed and thinks Tony did it. Dying, he tells the police, and Tony is jailed. Tony had written Marie to come to America. She arrives and finds Tony after a long search, but is helpless. She and the baby live on Tony's saving for awhile. She nurses a sick man in the next room, who turns out to be Rosso. Before dying, he confesses and Tony is freed.

THE WAYVILLE SLUMBER PARTY (Sept. 28).—The cast: Billy Bowers, Mabel Paige, Harry Loraine, James Levering, Frances Ne Moyer, Raymond McKee.

Professor Sparks is a traveling hypnotist, who comes to town just at the time that Mack asks Frances, the daughter of the local police chief, to marry him. She consents and they leave for the office of the Justice of Peace. The professor gets the chief to consent to be put to sleep and while they are taking a drink the professor puts a sleeping powder in the chief's glass. The chief goes to sleep in a store window. The chief's wife gets a letter telling her that the man her daughter is in love with is an A. P. A. She rushes down to the chief and tries to awaken him, but without success.

She finally gets the fire company, and after four buckets of water the chief arouses. When his wife tells him the news he jumps up and starts for the Justice's office. Once there the crowd proceeds to beat up the newly-made husband, but in the midst of the riot a telegram is handed in and it tells the mother that her son-in-law is not an A. P. A., but that those letters are his initials.

THE LAST ROSE (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 29).—The cast: Lottie Briscoe, Arthur Johnson, Eleanor Blanchard, Rosetta Brice, Howard M. Mitchell, Frances Sanson.

Carlotta Valondi, an Italian opera singer, is the idol of her friends. Angelo, also a singer, asks her to marry him, but she shows plainly that he bores her. She rents a house in the country, next door to the rectory where lives the young minister, John Converse, and his old maid sister, Matilda. John later meets Carlotta and they become friends. And then John falls in love with the Italian singer. He brings her home to his sister's horror. Carlotta laughs at all rules and insists upon seeing John even when he is in the midst of a sermon. Knowing her husband's fondness for her favorite song, "The Last Rose of Summer," Carlotta has a record made of her voice singing it. This delights John.

Marion, an old friend of John, with Matilda, visits them for a week, and John's attentions to this girl arouses the jealousy of his wife. This amuses her husband, who humors her. The sewing circle writes to Carlotta that they will meet at the rectory that Wednesday. Her husband asks her to be nice to them as a favor to him and she agrees for his sake. On Wednesday she steals away to the woods, but suddenly remembers her promise and goes back. She dashes in, her hair all disheveled and her frock awry. John is angry and they have their first quarrel. She repents as soon as he leaves and goes to make up. She finds him in the sitting room talking to Marion and creates a scene. John sends her upstairs and tries to apologize to Marion for the insult. Her anger over, Carlotta seeks her husband and tries to make things right. He tells her he cannot forgive her. Angered at this, she decides to run away for a few days to give him a lesson.

It so happens that Angelo has written her a note, which she receives that morning, asking her to come to him when she tires of her minister husband. This she flings to the floor. But next day Matilda finds this and the worst is thought of the missing wife. Carlotta returns at the end of the week to be barred by Matilda, who tells her that John has started proceedings for divorce. Carlotta pleads with her husband, who softens, but Matilda stands at his other side, urging that it is his duty to give this woman up.

Time passes, Carlotta returns to the stage, but her heart is broken. The passing of years brings softness and understanding to John. He reads in the papers that she intends to return to Italy forever. The day before she sails she decides to go to the old rectory just once. She steals upon the quiet porch and is about to go away when her attention is arrested by the strains of her old song. John is playing it and on the desk before him lies a faded rose. Carlotta knows then that he has not forgotten and enters. He looks up, she creeps closer to him, and all bitterness and past unhappiness are forgotten.

IN ZULULAND (Sept. 28).—The cast: Mattie Edwards and John Edwards.

In Zululand lives Queen Cocoa, who loves Zebo, a good-for-nothing-nigger. Zebo knows that if he can get the Queen to marry him, a meal ticket and an easy life will be his. The Queen's two daughters are quietly displeased, so when the lovers become too engrossed in each other and the wedding is in sight, the daughters hit upon a scheme to spoil everything and thereby save their own meal ticket and the throne.

One night when the Queen expects a visit from Zebo the daughters disguise as ghosts. First one and then the other meets him on the way to visit the Queen. He becomes so frightened that he does not go near her and she becomes so alarmed that she goes to his hut to discover the reason. At the door of the hut she meets the two ghosts, who warn her as they did Zebo, that all attentions between them must cease or they will get her. The next day finds Zebo in the hands of the executioner, surrounded by the tribe, with the Queen on the throne, ordering the execution.

VOICES FROM THE PAST (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: William Cohill, Lillie Leslie, Dorothy DeWolff, Joseph W. Smiley, Mrs. A. Terry, John Smiley, William H. Turner.

John Pemberton, bachelor, gives a thorough education to his ward, Elsie, aged 18, whom he secretly loves. During Elsie's final year at school in the city, John is startled to learn that she contemplates marriage with George Trent. John hurries to the city, finds Elsie in all innocence in Trent's home, and, against her protests, hurries her away. With Elsie back in her home, John is distressed to learn that she is planning an elopement with Trent. John intercepts Elsie just as she is leaving the house. He leads her to the library and leaves her alone with an envelope containing the reasons why she must not wed Trent.

As Elsie reads, she sees her mother, Alice, wooed by both John and a man named Craig, forced by her father to wed Craig because of his wealth. Later, when Elsie is pictured as a child of three, Alice is extremely unhappy with Craig, who mistreats her. Trent then enters the story. Professing friendship for Alice, he urges her to divorce herself from Craig. Meanwhile, Craig, enamored of a courtesan named Clara, prepares a note, saying that he is leaving Alice. He does not know that Alice, determined to divorce him, has written John, as an attorney, to come to her and arrange for the separation. Craig, carrying the note, enters his home to learn that John is there. The life-long hatred he has borne for John culminates in a fight in which Craig is killed by Alice in self-defense. Trent, unseen, has witnessed the tragedy through the window. John finds in Craig's pocket the note he had addressed to Alice. To all intents, it is a note left by a man contemplating suicide. Craig's death wound appears to have been self-inflicted. So John, to save Alice, places Craig's note on the table and the revolver in his hand. To all appearances Craig has committed suicide. John then takes Alice, with little Elsie, to his mansion, where she recuperates. John's love for Alice grows stronger and he asks her to marry him. She agrees. Trent, who has learned of Alice's presence in John's home, creeps into the house during John's absence and confronts Alice. He plunges her into mortal terror by telling her he knows she killed Craig and will keep quiet only upon her promise to marry him. John, returning unexpectedly, furiously attacks Trent. Trent, maddened, turns upon Alice with the declaration that he is going to expose her as a murderess. The shock is too much for Alice's constitution and she drops dead of heart failure.

The story fades back to the library, where Elsie finishes reading of how her mother died through Trent's perfidy. Elsie, repentant, seeks John. He is waiting for her, with the ring he had intended to put upon Alice's finger years before. And Elsie accepts him.

VITAGRAPH.

THE BUTTERFLY'S LESSON (Sept. 27).—The cast: Carolyn Birch, Louise Beaudet, Leo Delaney, Harry Northup.

Leila, a social butterfly, plays fast and loose with her admirers, Arnold Brayton and Count Malais, who is favored by her mother. Brooding over her treatment of him, Arnold, alone in his sailboat, is knocked overboard by the boom. He swims to a deserted island and arrives just in time to rescue Leila from the Count, who, having abducted her, intends keeping the girl there until she consents to marry him. Finding the Count has the motor handle of the only craft on the island, Arnold, after a terrific struggle, takes it from him, then springing into the boat, they sail for home, leaving the rascally Count stranded. As Arnold takes her in his arms, Leila tells him she has had her lesson and will never flirt again.

THROUGH TROUBLED WATERS (Broadway Star Features—Special Three Parts—Sept. 28).—The cast: Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer, Myrtle Gonzalez, Claire Toner, Jack Mower.

Gordon White, a handsome young mountaineer, falls in love with Viola Lorraine, an actress, and, inspired by her, writes a play which—with Viola in the lead makes a big hit. He marries the girl, but his absorption in play-writing causes them to drift apart, until they finally separate. By strange chance, they both take the same steamer for a Southern port, and when the boat is rammed and sunk by another steamer the two are cast away on a deserted island. There, after many hardships and a complete readjustment of their relations, Love comes into its own and the pair find happiness. Shortly after the birth of their child, a steamer sees their signal and takes them off from the island, which they leave with some regret. Back in civilization, Viola receives many flattering offers of theatrical engagements, but, after a struggle, decides in favor of home life and her husband.

RAGS AND THE GIRL (Sept. 29).—The cast: Maurice Costello, Adele De Garde, Mary Maurice, Ethel Corcoran, Florence Natol.

Tom Raine, a wealthy young broker, is set upon in a lonely wood by a tramp, knocked out and stripped of his clothes. Dressed in the tramp's rags, he reaches a hut in time to save June, a veritable wood nymph, from a beating at the hands of her cruel step-parents. He is driven from the place, but the girl saves him from being torn to pieces by the huge watch-dog, and Tom falls deeply in love with June. The pair are seen talking by the others, and the foster-father goes for Tom with a club. A fearful fight results, and but for the timely arrival of Tom's family who had seen the af-

THE PLAGUE SPOT (Sept. 30).—The cast: Donald Hall, Harry Northup, Richard Clarke, Billy Billings, Mildred Prat.

Old Eben Greggs, a wealthy miser, has a trusted medical advisor in Dr. John Farley, who has discovered a cure for the deadly Bubonic Plague. A crook kidnaps the old miser's only child and demands a heavy ransom. To outwit the crook, Dr. Farley pretends to secure the ransom without his employer's knowledge. While the two are at the safe, Farley carelessly drops his fountain pen point (which he had previously dipped in a phial containing a culture of Bubonic germs) onto the crook's hand. The doctor then tells the crook he is inoculated with the deadly germs, reduces him to abject fear and calls the police. Safely handcuffed, the crook is smilingly told that the germs have previously been rendered harmless by Dr. Farley's Plague Cure.

EDISON.

THE PARSON'S HORSE RACE (Sept. 29).—The cast: Raymond McKee, Julian Reed, Jessie Stevens, Jean Dumar, Fred Jones, Ford Fennimore, Will Louis, Jr.

Algernon, a tramp, makes the acquaintance of the parson, his wife, and their servant, Melinda, when the parson discovers him "treed" by the watch-dog. Calling off the dog, the parson inquires into Algy's past life, and learns that he has become a tramp after being "thrown down" by a woman. He applies to the parson for work and is asked if he knows anything about horses.

Almost immediately, Algernon commences to make good the statement that he was a racing man. Coming home from town, driving the parson, he passes the rig driven by Farmer Jones. Jones at once develops sporting blood and whips up his horse, passing the minister's buggy. But Algernon, too, has sporting blood, and standing up in the buggy, he whips up the parson's horses and soon passes the farmer. The wheels of the parson's buggy, however, catch in those of the farmer's, the latter being upset and its occupant thrown out. And thus begins the racing craze which is to lead to most of the young men of the countryside being threatened "with the law" by the anti-racing constable. The boys get together after morning service on Sunday and race their horses around the track at the fair grounds. The villagers, some of them—are scandalized by this desecration of the Sabbath, and urge the constable to put a stop to it. Twice more, on Sunday, the boys race and "get away with it;" then the constable fixes up a plan. He tells the minister that he will wait until next Sunday and then be all ready to pounce upon the offenders as they start to race.

A week passes, and on the following Sunday morning the boys are all lined up at the track awaiting the arrival of Algernon, their plan being to race while the service is going on, and to be innocently waiting when church "lets out." But on this particular Sunday, Algernon has been ordered to drive the minister's party to the church, by way of the cross-cut across the fair grounds. They pass the crowd of waiting vehicles. Algy's appearance is the cue of the young men to start, and in a moment they are off. Something gets into the parson's blood, and when for a moment his horse slows down, the parson stands up and urges him on.

Algy contributes his share of encouragement, and at the finish the parson's horse wins the race. It is then that the constable makes his appearance, and starts to "pinch" the whole crowd. The proud look in the parson's eye, however, coupled with the entreaties of the crowd to "be a reg'lar feller," causes him to change his mind, and receiving the promise of the boys to race thereafter on week days only, he grasps the parson's hand and declares him a real patron of the sport of kings.

KALEM.

THE GUILT (Broadway Favorites—Special—Three Parts—Sept. 27).—The cast: Jeanette Horton, Edward Nannery, Harland Moore, Ralph Locke, Robert Vaughn.

Eleanor Gordon, who inherits her father's temper, witnesses a quarrel between her parent and Roland, who has asked for her hand. Eleanor saves the secretary from being shot. Later, the girl and her father engage in a quarrel, in the course of which the pistol in Gordon's hand is accidentally discharged. The man falls dead. As the result of the testimony of the servants who heard the squabble between Roland and Gordon, the secretary is tried for the murder. Although Roland knows the truth, he keeps silent to save the girl he loves. Eleanor selfishly allows him to be pronounced guilty. Gates, the district attorney, also loves the girl but is convinced that she is the guilty party. Eleanor sees the governor in a vain effort to save Roland from the chair. On the morning of the execution, Gates pays a visit to the warden, but owing to his prejudice against capital punishment, the latter has left the prison for the day. Eleanor, trailing Gates with the hope of securing his assistance, finds him at the prison. Gates bluntly informs the girl of his belief in her guilt. Eleanor, unable to conceal her secret, confesses. At this moment, Thompson, a trusty who has overheard the conversation, steps forward and declares himself to be the slayer. It develops that he was Gordon's former partner and because he found that the man had defrauded him, shot at him from outside the house at the instant Gordon's weapon was discharged. Thompson's pistol was muffled by a Maxim silencer. Roland is saved from death in the nick of time and restored to the girl for whom he was willing to die.

FOILED (Sept. 28).—The cast: Ethel Teare, H. Griffith, Bud Duncan, Dave Morris, Charles Simpson.

Aloysius isn't a very big chap, but when it comes to the manly art of defense, oh my! Reckless Reginald, who tries to steal Ally's sweetheart, Gwendolyn, discovers this fact. Reckless summons two cutthroats and bids them kidnap Gwendolyn. But again Aloysius displays his fistic powers and lays the three men low. Reginald next summons Rubdub Ab Rummy, a genii. At Reggie's request, the genii hypnotizes Gwendolyn and makes her come to the villain. All would be well but for Rubdub's fondness for cigarettes. The instant he pauses for the purpose of lighting a butt, the spell breaks and Gwendolyn runs home.

On the day of the maid's marriage to Aloysius, Reginald plays his trump card. At his request, Rubdub casts a spell over the girl and compels her to leave the house just before the ceremony takes place. This done, the genii and Reggie kidnap poor Gwendolyn and place her in a barn. Aloysius and the wedding guests discover what has happened and hasten to the scene. At the same time, Rubdub and his gentle friend get into a quarrel. Reggie attempts to strike the genii but the latter disappears. When he again materializes, Rubdub waves his hand in Reckless Reginald's direction and the next instant finds that scoundrel changed into a skeleton! Gwendolyn, who has revived, and Aloysius and the guests, see what takes place. Suddenly noticing that Rubdub is glancing balefully in their direction, they turn, and with one accord, break all speed laws in getting away.

Parts—Sept. 29).—The cast: Frank Jonasson, Marin Sais, W. H. West, Ollie Kirkby, Thomas Lingham, True Boardman.

Nursing a grievance against Mason, manager of the Grand Hotel, Randall orders Pete, a member of his gang, to kill the man. Pete obtains a position as waiter. Later, the desperado fires a shot at the manager but only wounds him slightly. By hiding the pistol in a soup tureen, the would-be slayer averts suspicion from himself. Randall then ascertains that a silver service set which is to be presented to a U. S. battleship, is on exhibition at the hotel. The man thereupon lays plans to steal it. Pete renders valuable inside assistance and the Randall crew succeed in taking part of the service when the man on watch relaxes his vigilance.

Hilton, house detective, becomes convinced that Pete has had a hand in the robbery. This suspicion is confirmed when he discovers the crooks taking the rest of the service. Attempting to interfere, Hilton is captured and kidnapped. The Randall gang take him to their den. A fight over a division of the spoils develops. Randall is knocked unconscious. His wife, who has been trailing him, appears and to prevent her cries from being heard by the police, the gang take her away with them in an auto. Hilton tries to loosen his bonds and in doing so upsets a lamp and starts a fire. The man barely escapes after stopping to rescue Randall. The fire reaches a can of gunpowder and the building is destroyed. The fleeing auto arouses the suspicion of the police. The latter take up the pursuit and the crooks are captured. The silver service is found in the machine and returned to the Grand Hotel.

GEORGE KLEINE.

HER SECRET (Two Parts—Sept. 6).—Ethel Graham is courted by Owen Marston and Victor La Rue. Ethel accepts Owen's proposal of marriage. After their wedding Ethel and Owen give a mask ball. Victor is one of the guests and he makes use of the opportunity afforded to square accounts with Owen against whom he has a feeling of hatred. Although Ethel is masked, Victor picks her out and asks her to accompany him to the conservatory, where, by agreement, they unmask. Ethel is surprised to find her companion to be Victor. He proceeds to make love to Ethel, who indignantly leaves him and goes forth into the garden, Victor following. From the conservatory door Victor sees Ethel meet a much-excited young man. He tells her he is being pursued by detectives and asks her to hide him. She consents, and takes him into her boudoir by the way of the window. Victor sees this action and returns to the dance. Ethel procures for the stranger a costume of a monk and escorts him to the dance, instructing him to leave the house when the guests unmask and to hide in the garage at the rear of the house until morning, when she will aid him further.

Victor joins Ethel later in the evening and asks her to again accompany him to the conservatory. She flatly refuses but consents when he threatens to inform Owen of what he has seen. Meantime, Owen, noticing the strange occurrence, out of curiosity, follows and sees Victor in the act of attempting to embrace his wife. He orders Victor from the house and demands an explanation from Ethel. She tells him she has done no wrong but cannot explain, for the time being at least. Owen loses some of his confidence in his wife. The following morning Ethel takes the youth from his hiding place in the garage in an automobile to a deserted house. During her absence Owen finds the hat of the strange man in the bureau drawer in her bedroom and comes to the conclusion that his wife is untrue. Ethel's father, Mr. Graham, calls to see the young couple and hears from Owen what has come between them. Upon being quizzed by the two men when she returns, Ethel maintains she is innocent, and is loath to explain. The next day Owen and her father decide to follow her and question the chauffeur where he had driven his wife and the strange man. The chauffeur gives him the information and they direct him to drive to the deserted house. Ethel arrives at the deserted house, but finds she is alone. Victor tracks Ethel in his auto to the hiding place. He follows her into the house and, finding her in the room alone, attacks her. Ethel struggles and is saved when the stranger enters and combats Victor. During the struggle Victor shoots the young man and leaves.

Victor, on leaving the house, encounters Owen Marston and Mr. Graham. Victor draws his revolver and attempts to shoot Owen, but Owen is quick to defend himself and the bullet takes the life of Victor. Owen and Ethel's father then enter the deserted house. Ethel, hearing them enter and fearing that they may be the detectives, assists the wounded young man into a clothes closet just as they enter. They find Ethel with her hair deranged and demand to know all. Ethel is unable to speak. Owen hears a noise from within the closet and directs that Mr. Graham open the door. Upon doing so the young fugitive falls out face downward on the floor. Mr. Graham turns the face up and makes an exclamation. The "other man" proves to be Ethel's brother whom Mr. Graham disowned. The young man, realizing that death is close at hand, hurriedly explains to Owen and his father the reason of Ethel's keeping her secret—merely to keep him out of the hands of the law and the hands of those who might turn him over to justice. The brother dies, and Owen and his wife are reconciled.

THE SOCIAL LAW (Two Parts—Sept. 13).—The cast includes Ethel Grandin, Glen White and Warner Richmond.

Ethel Lee, who has a love for books, lives with her father at a little fishing village on the Jersey coast. Beside her books, her only pleasure is the occasional visit of old Cap'n Judson, who brings candies and tales of the big city she's so often read and dreamed about. Bill Lee, Ethel's father, anxious to get his daughter off his hands, forces her to accept the uncouth attentions of Big Jake, a coarse fisherman. At this time, Dick Harvey the dissolute son of a millionaire ship owner, arrives home one night more drunk than usual. His father's patience exhausted, Dick is ordered to report for work at the docks. Dick reports to none other than Cap'n Judson, and goes off with the skipper, arriving the following day at the fishing village. There the Cap'n makes his customary call on Ethel and her father. Dick and Ethel meet. While the young people are getting interested in each other, old Lee angrily interrupts them, and warns Ethel that unless she marries Big Jake at once, he will drive her from the house. Dick listens in amazement. Telling the girl that as his wife she'll have the finery and see the sights she has read about, Ethel and Dick leave for the city to be married. There, in Dick's apartment, Ethel asks him about the marriage, and Dick goes out—ostensibly to fetch a parson. Meeting his friends, they enjoy a joke and offer to act as minister and witness. The "marriage" performed, Dick's toy is speedily gowned in resplendant city finery.

Old Bill Lee finds Ethel's parting message, and asks the faithful Cap'n Judson to investigate. The skipper soon acquaints Dick's parents of the "elopement." There's a hurried meeting, a stormy scene, and Dick, professing repentance, promises to restore the girl to her father. Dick's bosom friend, Rupert, enters the apartment. Ethel recognizes the "witness" of the "wedding ceremony" and welcomes him. He comes to the point rapidly: tells the startled girl he loves her, and attempts to embrace her. When she reminds him she's his friend's wife, he tears the mask of illusion off and recites the tale of the mock marriage. This only enrages Ethel the more, and when Rupert makes another attempt to overcome her, a struggle takes place. Dick enters the scene and strikes the assailant to the ground. He recognizes "his best friend," and sees the hopeless shame on the face of his poor victim, whose devotion he has rewarded with fraud and dishoner.

Guiltily, Dick admits to the girl the whole truth, and declares that he loves her with his whole soul in spite of the deception—as he really does by now. As an answer to her look of reproach, he rushes out to find a minister—a real one, and hastens back only to find that his poor dupe has flown from her gilded cage. Ethel tries vainly to seek her father's forgiveness. The old man drives his daughter from the house. She wanders to a rocky eminence overlooking the sea. There she makes preparations to cast herself into the sea. Dick has rightly guessed that his little prize has gone back home. He follows her. A hurried glance into her cottage convinces him that she has walked down to the seashore, and he arrives there just as she plunges into the angry waters. He takes the plunge immediately after her. There's a struggle in the water, the lives of both hang on a thread; but with grim determination Dick strikes hard for the shore, where he folds the half-drowned girl in his arms. The marriage ceremony is performed that day, and Ethel's interrupted dream comes true.

A WOMAN'S MISTAKE (Two Parts—Sept. 20).—After three years of married life, Ethel Spencer bravely tries to convince herself that her husband's indifference and habitual late hours is due to business preoccupation. John Spencer has few scruples. He lies glibly, and conscience has long ceased to have any meaning for him. Ethel prepares for the theater. It's her birthday and John has promised to take her. At the club John that night, meets an old college chum, whom he hasn't seen since bachelor days, and invites him to come round one day "and meet the wife." Frank Barton, whose friendship for John was never too strong, promises indifferently, that he will call "one of these days."

Meeting another acquaintance on the way home, John is persuaded to come and have a drink at a cabaret. There, John meets its habitues, men and women. One of the women is on more than friendly terms with John, and jokes at the idea of his taking his wife to the theater. After a drink or two, John goes home.

Without preliminary excuses, and notwithstanding her reproachful pleading, John gruffly tells his wife that she can go alone to the theater if she wishes. Ethel tearfully removes her finery, and John goes back to the cabaret.

The next morning, pleading a week-end business trip to Chicago, John goes off, as Ethel receives an invitation from her old friend, Mildred Barry, pressing her to come out to Fairwood with John for the week-end. Ethel goes alone, and in a spirit of mischief Mildred introduces Ethel as Miss Spencer to all the guests. Among them is Frank Barton, and the two are unaware of each other's identity. Frank, in every sense a man's man, is much attracted to Ethel. He loves her deeply from the first introduction and resolves to propose marriage to her. They go out riding together and Frank declares himself. Ethel, bewildered by his tenderness, yields to his embrace and as suddenly repents. Her perplexed companion questions her, and catches the half-whispered reply, "I'm married—I'm Mrs. Spencer." Late that afternoon, Ethel tells Frank of their hostess' joke, and how his kindness made her forget herself. As Ethel beg's his forgiveness, a shadow crosses. John Spencer and his lady companion, of the cabaret, have been improving the shining hour at Fairwood, and John has overheard a few remarks which fell from Ethel not highly complimentary to himself.

Home once again, the husband resolves to punish his wife for her supposed treachery. Frank Barton is summoned to the house. The irate husband, meanwhile, bullying and cursing the butler, vents some of his spite upon that worthy and drives him from the house with oaths and blows. The old valet's heart bleeds for his beloved mistress, and he waits about—he knows his master's black mood will not end well. Frank arrives, and is astonished to confront John and "Miss Spencer." John, maliciously misconstruing his wife's terrified scrutiny of his friend, insults both with a vile accusation. Instantly there's a fight. Frank forces John up against the portieres, and John drops in a heap—dead. A dagger is found neatly embedded in his left side.

The police arrive and arrest Frank, who is circumstantially guilty. Frank makes no denial and allows himself to be led away, as the old butler is brought in trembling between two stalwart policemen. Terrified and unable to speak, he looks around the little group until his gaze is fastened on his beloved little mistress. He drops on his knees before her, and between his sobs they hear the words: "Forgive me—I'm sorry it happened, but he was mean to both of us!" The old servant is led away to answer justice and society. The future of the widow and her late husband's "friend" can only be happily conjectured.

THE MYSTERIOUS VISITOR (Two Parts—Sept. 27).—Ethel Adams, the only daughter of a wealthy mother, reads of the adventures of a girl who disguises herself as a man and of the exciting things which happen to her. The book greatly pleases Ethel, and while she is still thinking of it she chances to read in the paper of a clever crook who passes under the name of "The Spider," leaving a card with a spider engraved upon it behind him after each of his successful crimes. Now Ethel, who is of a somewhat mischievous disposition, begins to think what fun it would be to disguise herself as a man and commit robberies against some of her friends, making them believe that "The Spider" is the guilty one. Of course, she intends to tell them the joke after a little and restore their property to them, then laugh at their discomfiture.

While Ethel is revolving this plan in her mind, she sees coming toward her, Jack Leslie, a young society amateur detective. Jack is very much in love with Ethel, but she thinks him rather conceited and the thought of how she could trick him, shatter some of his self-satisfaction, were she to carry out her plan, decides her to carry into effect her scheme of mischief. Accordingly, when a few days later, Mrs. Adams gives a ball, Ethel has prepared everything necessary to her plan. During the evening Miss Ames, a dear friend of Ethel's and one of those whom she has selected as among her victims, goes into the garden with her lover, Mr. Harding. As they are in deep conversation, two hands steal out of the shrubbery and softly unclasp Miss Ames' handsome necklace, then disappear with the necklace in their grasp. A few moments later Miss Ames misses her necklace and at the time Harding discovers a card with the engraved spider upon it among the coils of Miss Ames' hair.

There is great excitement over the robbery and everyone believes that it has been committed by "The Spider." Jack Leslie is asked to take charge of the case. While he is in his den that same night a sharp whistle sounds from the next room and, rushing in there, he finds all his silver piled in the center of his dining-room table with a card from "The Spider" placed ironically on top. It is as if "The Spider" taunted Jack with the proof of how easily he could have stolen the silver and got safely away under Jack's very nose. Ethel is invited to Miss Ames' house for the week end. Mr. Ames, the father, advertises a reward of $1,000 for the return of the necklace. He receives word that "The Spider" will come to claim his reward at 12 o'clock. Mr. Ames summons Jack and his daughter's sweetheart, as well as a police detective, who is to wait outside the house and the three men determine to sit up in the room beside the safe in which the money is placed. Ethel waits until the house is quiet, then steals down, blows the fumes of a sleeping gas in through a key hole, and captures the reward, leaving the pearls and "The Spider's" cards in the hands of the men. Waiting in the hall to hear the consternation of the men, Ethel is caught in the hall. Jack immediately phones the police that he has captured the famous crook, but he is laughed at.

THE DECEIVERS (Two Parts—Sept. 7).—The cast: Agnes Vernon, Willis Marks, J. Thomas Dillon, L. M. Wells, Oliver Adair, Charles Giblyn.

Henry Hunt, a New York attorney-at-law and personal representative of James Dorrance, a millionaire, receives a letter calling him to consult with his client. Dorrance informs Hunt that his niece is missing and asks the lawyer to find her if possible. Hunt sends out wires to his friends in various cities and finally receives word from Grayson & Forbes, Boston lawyers, that a girl suffering from amnesia has been found in Boston, her personal appearance answering the description Dorrance gives of his niece. Philip Walsh, Hunt's secretary, finds himself hard pressed for funds to supply the extravagances of his mistress, Maizie LeClaire. Walsh receives a second telegram from the Boston attorneys declaring that an error has been made, and that the girl they have under observation is not Dorrance's missing niece.

The telegram gives Walsh an idea. Rita Waverly, a pretty clerk in Hunt's office, is infatuated with Walsh and the cashier decides that she will fit in splendidly in his schemes. Rita is frightened at Walsh's suggestion and at first refuses to have anything to do with the plan, but by mingled cajolery, promises, threats aid love-making Walsh moulds her to his purpose. Next day Walsh brings Rita to the Dorrance mansion and introduces her to the eccentric old millionaire. Dorrance introduces his nephew, "Mr. Mason," to Walsh, and after Rita is escorted to her room Walsh takes his leave. That evening Rita is invited to a reception and is leaving with her maid when Dorrance puts a necklace of pearls around her neck. As she is about to enter the Dorrance limousine Walsh approaches from the shadows and calls Rita to one side and asks for money.

While Rita explains that she has no money, Walsh sees the necklace of pearls about her neck and asks for it. When she refuses he tries to take it from her by force. Walsh jumps into the car with Rita, intending to get the necklace by hook or crook, but Rita hides the pearls and asks the chauffeur to drive back to the Dorrance home. Upon reaching the big mansion Rita runs in and returns the jewels to Dorrance, who is puzzled when she breaks down and sobs piteously. Mason consults with the chauffeur and learns of Walsh's attempt to steal the necklace.

Meanwhile Walsh is getting deeper and deeper into the mire. He threatens Rita with exposure unless she obtains and gives him the combination of the safe in the Dorrance home. Rita, under threat of death, does so, and at midnight Walsh enters the Dorrance home. Rita screams, however, and Mason appears in a doorway just as Walsh is choking her.

Walsh rushes out of the house into the arms of a patrolman.

Next morning Dorrance and Mason hold a consultation and call Hunt in. When the lawyer enters Dorrance's home he is astonished to see his former employee, Rita, there. Dorrance says nothing, but hands Hunt a telegram. The telegram reads:

"James Dorrance, Riverside Drive, New York City:

"In accordance with your instructions, we wired Hunt yesterday your niece had been found. Wired him today error has been made.

"Grayson & Forbes."

Hunt silently hands Rita the telegram. Dorrance then explains:

"Irregularities in the handling of my affairs at your office lately, Mr. Hunt, led to my arrangement with Grayson & Forbes and the engaging of Mr. Mason, who is not my nephew, but a detective. I have no kith or kin. I've never had a niece. I would like to adopt Rita if she is willing and you can arrange the necessary formalities, Mr. Hunt."

Dorrance then explains to Rita that he had known all along of Walsh's attempt to use her as his tool and of the latter's affair with Maizie LeClaire. Rita is astounded at the revelations made by the eccentric millionaire. When Dorrance offers to make Rita his adopted child she readily consents.

THE TENOR (Three parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: Hobart Henley, Carmen Phillips, Gretchen Lederer, Walter Belasco.

Antonio and Paula Sartori are left orphans by the death of their mother. Paula is adopted by a rich American woman while Antonio is adopted by the chief of a wandering band of musicians. Antonio and Marianna, the chief's daughter grow up together. Years pass. Paula has confined himself to close study of medicine and has become a well-known surgeon. His foster-mother on her death bed tells him of his brother's whereabouts. He has met Genevieve Palmer, an heiress, and, becoming infatuated with her, marries her. Antonio has become a famous singer and he and Marianna are making such a success together that they are called to America. His foster-father has died some years before and on his death bed gives to him a letter from the American woman telling of the adoption of Paula and where he can be found.

Paula has a very large practice and to keep up his energy gradually begins to use morphine. The habit grows upon him and finally he is little more than a fiend. His wife tires of him and is continually seen at the brightest cafes. One day she returns and finds him in the act of taking an injection. She sees the marks on his arm and in a rage leaves him. Later he reads in the paper of the arrival of Antonio and decides to pay his brother a visit. Antonio and Marianna arrive and are given a splendid reception. Their singing proves to be the talk of the hour and Genevieve, who has seen Antonio in several of his plays, becomes infatuated with him. They have several tete-a-tetes and Antonio's passionate nature is aroused. Marianna sees the drift of his affection and although deeply wounded, does not give any indication of the fact.

Antonio insists on taking Paula to see his sweetheart. The two brothers arrive at the house and Genevieve tenderly greets Antonio. Then she sees Paula and starts back in dismay as he is introduced. Paula denounces the woman, telling his brother that she is his wife. Overcome with rage, Paula starts for the woman, but his heart has become weakened by the drug and he falls dead. Antonio, overcome with horror, rushes from the house and back to the apartments where he and Marianna dwell. At last he has found out the kind of woman Genevieve is and in the reaction finds that Marianna has always held the true love of his heart. A reconciliation takes place between them.

NESTOR.

IT ALMOST HAPPENED (Sept. 20).—The cast: Billie Rhodes, Lee Moran, Neal Burns.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon are off for an outing at the beach. Mrs. Gordon is jealous of her husband, who has an eye for feminine charms when he sees them. Mr. Cutter is also spending a few days at the beach and while strolling around sees two charming "chickens" who seem open to a flirtation, but they play a joke on him and run back to the hotel. He follows, as he is stopping at the same place. Mr. Gordon and wife arrive at the same hotel. Just as they start from the room Mr. Cutter comes out of his room and speaks to Mrs. Gordon, who smiles at him. Gordon calls his wife down and shoves her back into the room. Cutter goes to the desk and gets a letter from his wife, telling him that she is coming to see him.

Gordon and his wife decide to take a swim and start out. In the hall they meet two girls. One of the girls knows wife, and while they are talking Gordon makes up with the other. He and wife go to the beach and Gordon is enjoying his swim until he looks up and sees his wife talking with a lifeguard. He forgets the swim and bawls her out for flirting. Wife decides to go to the hotel, but meets the two girls, who persuade her to take a walk with them. Gordon decides he has been too hard on his wfe, so gets some flowers for a peace offering, but he is unable to find her. Wife returns to the room, but has forgotten her keys, and Mr. Cutter gallantly gets them for her. Just as he is unlocking the door Gordon comes in and sees the two together. Again his jealousy flares up and they quarrel all night.

Next morning Gordon goes to the beach and his wife comes out in the hall with a kimona on. She bids him good-by and he leaves. When she goes back the door has shut, and, as it is a spring lock, she can't open it. Mr. Cutter sees her distress and invites her in his room, until he phones for the keys. Hardly is she seated when a knock is heard. Cutter recognizes his wife's voice and hides Mrs. Gordon in the bathroom. He admits his wife, who finds Mrs. Gordon. She is dragged out and finally explains satisfactorily, and all three decide to take a stroll. Gordon has become tired of playing by himself and returns home. He can't find his wife, and upon inquiry an old maid tells him his wife went out with Cutter. Overcome with jealous rage, he snatches a gun and exits, shooting in every direction. Finally he locates the three on the beach and there is shooting and running on every side. Wife finally gets to hubby's side and she and Mrs. Cutter finally explain things satisfactorily. Gordon and his wife make up, each promising to curb their jealousy. The Cutters follow their example.

WHEN LIZZIE WENT TO SEA (Sept. 24).—The cast: Victoria Forde, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran.

Eddie, the barber, is in love with Lizzie, a fruit vender, and their only cloud in their sky is Tony, who is also in love with the maiden. Lizzie, like the majority of her lovely sex, is prone to indulge in harmless flirtations and this, together with her preference for Eddie, throws Tony into a frenzy of rage. Tony goes to one of the numerous dives and plots with two of the inmates to kidnap Lizzie and bring her to a deserted wharf. The two villains accomplish their purpose but Eddie hears her scream and sets out in pursuit. Just as he is about to grab her he is knocked out and when he revives she is no where to be seen. Eddie finally locates her and they escape, closely pursued by the three rascals. Their escape cut off, Eddie takes to a launch and boards a passing steamer.

The three find out where Eddie and his love have gone and pursue them to the boat, boarding it unknown to the now happy couple. Lizzie is again captured and about to be taken off in a boat when Eddie misses her. A long chase ensues, in which Eddie is mistaken for the villain by the boat's sailors and is about to be roughly dealt with, when the captain and Lizzie arrive in time. The villains meet their just deserts and are put in irons while Eddie and his sweetheart greet the dying sunset with a kiss.

LAEMMLE.

THE CRY OF THE FIRST-BORN (Three parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: William Quinn, W. L. Rogers, R. C. Ryles, Jack Curtis, Yona Landowska, Peggy Morris, Antrim Short.

Owing to his father's illness, Cecil Crenwell is sent to inspect the family rice plantation in Hawaii. While there he falls in love with Uana, an Hawaiian girl, and wins her away from her native sweetheart, Kau. They are married and a child is born to them, which they name Naipo. Crenwell is called to England due to the illness of his father and he promises his wife to return as soon as possible. Shortly after Crenwell has left the Islands, Lieutenant Graham, of the Government Post, in whose care Crenwell has left Uana and the baby, attempts to force his attentions upon the girl. To escape his amorous advances, she leaps from a cliff and is permanently injured. Graham, in revenge, writes Crenwell that Uana and the child perished in an epidemic of fever which swept the Island. Crenwell is broken-hearted at the news but he does not return to the Islands, owing to Graham's advising him it would not be for the best.

Years roll by, and Uana faithfully awaits Crenwell's return. Crenwell, meantime, feeling his first love lost to him, and realizing the necessity of taking a wife to please the people upon the estate, marries Lillian. A child is born to them, and during the celebration of the birth, Crenwell's old friend, Captain Fenwick, returns from the Islands, and through him Crenwell learns the full story that Uana waited for many long years for his return, finally committing suicide when Graham, to complete his revenge, informs her of Crenwell's marriage in England. The boy still lives, Crenwell is informed. Being called upon to give a toast to his first born, Crenwell is forced to confess that this child is not his first-born; that there is another, born fifteen years before.

Lillian, Crenwell's wife, tells him there is nothing for them to do but to seek out the boy, the real first-born, and give to him his birthright. They depart; and upon arriving in the Islands, Crenwell finds Naipo, his son and first-born, has grown to hate his memory. Naipo is moved to kill his father, but at the critical moment is unable to take the revenge he has waited for. Naipo sees Crenwell's second child with Lillian, and that night, while all are asleep, he slips to the plantation house and steals Lillian's child as she lies asleep. The child is missed and a search begun. While roaming the beach, Crenwell looks up, and high on the cliff above he sees Naipo, with the baby held high above his head, about to dash it to the rocks below. In his excitement, Naipo falls, and the baby with him; but the baby is caught on a projecting bush and held safe, while Crenwell's first-born falls to his death on the rocks below. The baby is rescued.

HIS HOME COMING (Sept. 21).—The cast: King Baggot, Marie Weirman, Ned Reardon, Miss Spence, Joe Daily, Miss Gourtney.

Mr. Move is envious of Mr. Quick's beautiful house next door, and is always begging his wife to try and rent it. The Quicks show no disposition to move out, however. In Harlem live Mr. and Mrs. Newcomer in a very crowded flat. Mr. Move goes away on business—leaving Mrs. Move at the station gate. As she starts home, much to her surprise, she sees a "To Let" sign on the Quick's house. Overjoyed, she rents it at once, and puts an ad in the paper to sublet her own house next door. Mr. Newcomer reads the ad; rents the place and moving begins all around.

Mr. Move knows nothing of this as he is away on business. Mrs. Move has written him, but, having no stamp handy, leaves the letter on the mantlepiece and forgets to mail it. The following morning we see the Quicks slowly following their moving van. Mrs. Move is in their house while the Newcomers are safely settled in Move's old house. Mr. Move, having finished his business, comes home on the midnight train, not knowing his wife has moved. Meanwhile, Mr. Newcomer starts home from the office very late. Mrs. Newcomer is about to retire as Move lands on his old porch.

Not wishing to disturb his wife, Move takes off his shoes. Mrs. Newcomer has retired, while next door peacefully sits Mrs. Move reading, quite unaware that her dear husband is in town. Mr. Move, forgetting his shoes, goes upstairs in semi-darkness and begins to undress. Mr. Newcomer arrives, sees a pair of masculine shoes and throws them away, the shoes smashing through a window at Mrs. Move's feet. Mrs. Move recognizes her husband's shoes, and rushes out on a run. In the meantime, Move awakes Mrs. Newcomber, who screams in terror. Then Newcomber throws Move out of the house and he lands in his wife's arms. Explanations ensue when Newcomer delivers the forgotten letter left on the mantlepiece by Mrs. Move.

WHEN THE CALL CAME (Two parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Edith Roberts, Otto Kruger, John Sharkey, Conradi.

Rose and Charley Sterling are neighbors. They have settled their future long ago, and keep their intentions a secret. It is true they are not of the same faith, but what significance has creed for youth and love? One day Rose persuades Charley to come to her house and the youthful pair are making love when old Elias steps into the room. Charlie is shown the door without ceremony, and invited to stay at home in future. Rose is made to understand that it's not Charlie's fault, but—"East is East," and "Creed is Creed." Although old Elias has prevented Charley from coming to his house, he cannot prevent the music of the church opposite—where the Reverend Sterling ministers, and Charlie is chief choirmaster—from coming into his hame.

The next day Elias consults the minister about their children's little affair. The Rev. Sterling, as alarmed as Elias is of a mesalliance, bundles Charley off to college to study for the ministry. When Rose fails to hear her sweetheart's voice on the following Sunday, she learns that Charley is at college. With the lapse of years, Charles Sterling—now a son of the church—returns home—but Elias, as wise as he is pious, has a conference with Moses Blum, the marriage broker, and Rose is asked to make her choice. After turning down the first candidate, she decides to accept the second as there is no way out of it, and amid general rejoicing on Sunday evening at a betrothal ceremony, the pen is put into her hand to sign the contract. At that moment, the new young minister has stepped into the pulpit to give an inaugural address at his father's church, and the sound of Charley's voice proves too much for poor Rose. She flings the pen down and flees from the room.

Rose tries to forget the painful incident and devotes herself to acts of charity. One day she is called to the bedside of a sick neighbor and a minister is hastily summoned as the invalid shows signs of collapsing. In the absence of the district minister, his son—just ordained—is sent, and Rose again meets her old lover. Fate seems to have interfered again and they decide not to thwart it this time. In duty bound, they seek permission from their respective parents, and in each case are shown the door. As they turn to leave the minister's house, Charley receives a telegraphic "call" to a distant pastorate at a good salary. Rose sees in his pleasure her bitterness. How can he accept if she is to be Mrs. Sterling—in a close New England community? So she goes sadly back home again, where she finds her stricken father, who has already mourned for her as if she had ceased to exist.

JOKER.

HE WOULDN'T SUPPORT HIS WIFE (Sept. 25).—The cast: Wm. Franey, Gale Henry, Bob Vernon.

Shultz and the Chief of Police are rivals for the hand of the widow. She finally decides to marry Shultz and turns the Chief down. After the honeymoon is over, however, Shultz develops a growing laziness. One morning an item in a newspaper declares that a law has been passed, by which lazy husbands will be forced to work by the State and their wages paid to their wives. She calls up her old friend, the Chief, to see if it is really true and if she can secure his aid in dealing with her lazy husband. The Chief is only too glad to perform the task desired, and sets out with his gallant men. Shultz is arrested, and the Chief is by no means gentle in his treatment of the prisoner.

Shultz is put to work on the road gang near his home. Day by day he sees the Chief with his wife, and his anger knows no bounds. One day he sees the Chief pay his wife the wages due him and he becomes desperate. That night Shultz effects his escape closely pursued by the guards. The Chief is taking Mrs. Shultz to a Policemen's masquerade ball. Upon their arrival, the Chief discovers they will not admit him unless he, too, dons a fancy costume. Shultz is hiding in the garden. In the excitement, the Chief drops a black mask he has brought, and Shultz, finding it, plans to use it for his own purpose of disguise. The Chief runs into Shultz as he is hiding, and offers him fifty dollars for his costume, believing him to be one of the masqueraders. They have no sooner exchanged costumes, when the pursuing guards come up. The two men, being very much alike, the guards mistake the man in the convict's suit for the man they are seeking, and bundle him off to jail. Shultz finds his wife, and showing her the fifty dollars he received from the Chief, a reconciliation follows.

BISON.

A MESSAGE FOR HELP (Two parts—Sept 25).—Lieutenant Richards is in charge of the engineering corps which is running a telegraph line across the desert. Many of the Indians have never seen the poles and the wires before and are startled. Little Mona not being afraid puts her ear to one of the poles and listens to the sound traveling through it. Lieutenant Richards watches her with cynical amusement. He acosts her. She is much interested in the good-looking kind white man. Later she falls in love with him and gives him a pretty string of beads. She soon forgets her admirer Choco, and he grows suspicious and watches. A dispatch is sent to Richards from headquarters, telling him to use every precaution to avoid trouble with the restless Indians. He warns his men. Richard meets Mona near a telegraph pole and takes her in his arms and kisses her. The chief orders Mona to stay in the camp and to keep away from the pale face. She rebels.

One day an Indian tries to steal a gun and belt. A trooper fires at him and wounds him. He escapes to his tribe and the Indians seize the excuse to start a fight. Mona learns their intentions and tells her lover of the uprising. The Indians surprise the advance body of engineers and massacre them. They tie the body of one man on a horse with an arrow still in him, and set it loose. The horse reaches the cavalry camp. The captain, doubting his ability to cope with the Indians, sends a man out to climb the nearest telegraph pole and sends a message for help: The man is seen by the Indians, but manages to climb the pole and is able to send part of the message before a bullet finds its billet in his body and he falls.

The unfinished message tells enough to enable the commander to know where to send reinforcement. Lieutenant Richards and his party are hemmed in the Elk's Horn. They suffer from thirst and Richard offers to try to break through the circle of Indians and get water. Mona, from the hillside, sees his brave action and steals away and joins him and helps him get the water. He suffers a temporary collapse. She revives him and helps him on his way back. The cavalry arrive and relieves the gallant band. Mona helps to nurse the lieutenant, but as he recovers he gets tired of her attentions and his one desire is to get East. He is promoted and granted a three months' leave of absence.

Choco escapes and determines to kill Richards for stealing Mona from him, for he knows the lieutenant will not marry her. The time for Richard's departure arrives. Mona, with a premonition of disaster, will not leave him and he looks around for an excuse to get away from her. He gets her to sit by the telegraph pole and promises to return very soon. He puts his coat over her shoulders and his hat on her head and leaves her so. Choco steals up, sees what he believes to be the accursed white face and a quivering arrow pierces the trusting girl's breast. He runs up to gloat over his rival's suffering and is grief stricken at what he finds. Lieutenant Richards forgets all about the flirtation with the Indian maid as he clasps the "girl he left behind him" in his arms.

SCANDAL IN THE FAMILY (Two parts—Sept. 22).—The cast: Gertrude Selby, Hank Mann, Dick Smith, Reggie Morris.

Father, with two other old fossils, was sitting in the park for an airing. A swell dame appeared and the other two edged father out and went over and got acquainted. Just as they were getting along nicely, the lady's escort appeared. The guilty pair made a hasty exit, but the escort followed them up and slapped their faces. Father was congratulating himself that he remained out of the affair, when the escort noticed him and gave him a slap for good measure. He was knocked into a young chap who didn't like being bumped into.

He told father so, emphasizing his dislike with a smack on the jaw. Father went home and daughter insisted he meet her new sweetheart. Father was introduced, but the sweetheart was the young chap who had smacked him. Sweetheart was ordered out, but he went home and disguised as a girl to come back to the house. When father set eyes on him he thought him a girl. So did Hank, the park escort, and they both tried to elope with him. This led to disagreements. A taxi ran away, and Hank was hung up on a hot trolley wire. There was a marriage, but neither father nor Hank was the bridegroom.

AVENGED BY A FISH (Sept. 26).—The cast: Henry Bergman.

Father and daughter were at the beach, but they were uncongenial and father wandered off to get the salt air. A flirt rescued daughter from a vicious sardine in the surf and made a hit with her, so much of a hit that she agreed to wait on the sand for him while he went and got an umbrella. While he was gone, however, a life saver annoyed daughter and when the flirt returned she told him about it. He declared he would disguise as a bathing girl, lure the life guard with his beauty and then give him the beating of his life. Unfortunately father had gotten into some unpleasantness with a lady and she tore his bathing suit from him.

He later found a bathing suit, but it had "Life Saver" on it, and when daughter's admirer saw a gentleman with "Life Saver" on his shirt, he concluded same was his prey and attempted to beat him up. Things didn't work out as anyone expected, however. In fact they were so unexpected that the flirt and some officers of the law fell into the ocean where a shark was cruising. Meanwhile an innocent old lady fell off the pier, some gentlemen who couldn't swim also fell in, and there was a general confusion throughout. The life saver was the one who came out best, as he rescued daughter from the surf.

Morley is in financial straits and on every occasion urges Laura to marry in order to help him. She is torn by real love for Grant and fear that she will be thought mercenary by him. Morley becomes tired of the delay and resolves to take matters into his own hands. Grant has asked Laura to go on a drive with him and Morley bribes the chauffeur to arrange things so the pair will be left alone together.

Upon arriving in the woods, the close companionship proves too much for Grant and when he goes to pick up Laura—who has sprained her ankle—he is overcome with passion and crushes her in his arms. They decide on an immediate marriage. The chauffeur follows his instructions and breaks down at a lonely road-house. The pair find a minister and are married. When they return to the house, Grant is called to the 'phone and informed his fortune has almost been swept away. Morley arrives at this moment and begins to bluster Grant for being alone with his niece, thinking he will force him to marry Laura, but this is changed to chagrin when they notify him they have already been married.

His elation is short lived, for Grant tells him of his loss of fortune and Morley begins cursing him. He tries to drag Laura away, but Grant intercedes, knocks Morley down and, taking the girl in his arms, carries her to the auto and home. Laura is shown to her room and left sobbing. Irma is glad that the marriage has taken place and feels that the blow is the one thing needed to make a man of the boy. Grant, his first anger and disappointment abated, realizes he, too, loves the girl dearly. Because of his belief that she married him for his money he resolves to leave her. But when Laura comes to him, pleads her innocence, and he sees the love she has for him is real, he decides to make a new start.

THT FASCINATION OF THE FLEUR DE LIS (Three Parts—Sept. 26).—The cast: Cleo Madison Arthur Shirley and Lon Chaney.

The story is staged in an imaginary German principality. While working in the fields the wife is taken ill and her husband in leading her home passes the palace of the Duke of Safoulrug, on the grounds of which she sees the fleur de lis, and is so attracted by the flower that she can think of nothing but it for months after. When her baby girl is born there is a birthmark of the flower on her shoulder. The mother dies, and fifteen years later, Lisette, the baby girl, who has grown to be a charming young lady, is endowed by prenatal influence with a strong fascination for her mother's favorite flower. Passing the Duke's palace, she demands that her lover, Antoine, pluck one for her. As he is about to do so, the gardner, who ordered her mother away from the palace, demands that they move on, but Lisette manages to get a flower. This is witnessed by the young Duke, who says that she may possess it, notwithstanding the fact that it is a flower worn only by persons of royal blood. Lisette's father reprimands his daughter for taking the flower, and tells her the story of her mother.

Lisette eventually marries the Duke, and although he is deeply in love with her she cares little for him save that by her marriage she is in possession of the fleur de lis. During a reception by the King, His Majesty becomes infatuated with Lisette and while dancing with her he takes her in his arms just as the Duke enters. The King extends his hand for the Duke to kiss. He obeys and subsequently goes into the garden where he commits suicide. The announcement does not affect the Duchess, and she is later installed in the King's palace as his mistress. His Majesty is taken ill and Antoine, who has become a famous surgeon, is to operate on him. Lisette is at the bedside of the King the next morning when the doctor arrives. Antoine does not recognize her, and she, puzzled, goes to her suite where she paces up and down for hours while the doctor is working on the King. The operation is a success, and Antoine carries the glad news to Lisette, who says she does not care, and puts her arms around the doctor. He throws her aside with the remark that the fleur de lis is between them. This enrages Lisette to such an extent that she burns her birthmark out with a hot iron.

After a lapse of time Lisette is back with her father, and Antoine, feeling the power of love, also returns to the principality where, over the grave of Lisette's mother, a reconciliation is effected between Antoine and his sweetheart.

A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH (Five Parts—Sept. 6).—The cast: Hobart Bosworth, Jane Novak, Edmond Brown, Hobart Henley, Maud George, Albert MacQuarrie, Carl Von Schiller, Walter Belasco, W. Clark, Jr., Jane Bernoudy, Bob Vernon.

Paul Potter, who is working his way through college, is a popular member of the Yale football team, has many wealthy friends, among them Carl Wilmerding. Paul becomes engaged to Sylvia Castle, daughter of the banker in his home town, and takes her to the annual college "prom." Paul sees the contrast that Sylvia makes with the wealthy society people. His friend Wilmerding tries to convince Paul that society offers a bright future for him and that Sylvia would be "impossible" for him if he followed such a career. Through Wilmerding he meets Muriel Evers, a butterfly of fashion and a flirtatious married woman. Muriel leads him on artfully and infatuation follows, to the neglect of Sylvia, who finally releases Paul from their engagement. Sylvia's father suffers ruin on the stock market and dies as a result thus forcing Sylvia to go to the city to earn her own living.

Paul's intimacy with Mrs. Evers leads to a divorce from her husband and a marriage with Paul. Sylvia, meanwhile, goes from one position to another, until she finally decides to try her chances on the stage. She succeeds in obtaining a small part with a stock company and there makes the acquaintance and wins the friendship of Henry Leamington, a talented leading man, who is handicapped by his love of liquor. With the assistance of Leamington, Sylvia finally becomes leading woman, and through Leamington's love for her she is finally able to break the hold that liquor has upon him.

Paul discovers the unfaithfulness of his wife, and one day, seeing Sylvia Castle billed for a performance at one of the theaters, decides to renew their acquaintance and possibly win back her love. Sylvia finds that Paul has developed into a light in the world of fashion and welcomes his friendship. She refuses to listen to his protestations of love, remembering that he is now married. Leamington, who now loves Sylvia madly, becomes jealous and urges Sylvia to drop the society man.

One day Paul's wife is killed in an auto accident and, feeling himself free, Paul calls upon Sylvia in her dressing room on the eve of her greatest effort, in which she is to play opposite Leamington, who has been carefully coaching her for weeks. Paul pleads his love and asks her to marry him. He is overheard by Leamington, and the latter, believing she is yielding to Paul's proposals, goes to his dressing room and starts to drink heavily. Sylvia feels that her heart belongs to Leamington and that his love is by far the more faithful of the two and so rejects "the little brother of the rich" for the love of her old actor friend, whom she has saved from a drunkard's grave. Leamington takes a brace when Sylvia confesses her love for him and goes out on the stage and helps Sylvia to score the triumph of her career. After the performance they are married.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 13, "War"—Two parts—Sept. 12).—At the finish of the Twelfth Episode Roleaux was trying to gain an entrance to the main room of the Apaches' den, unaware of the Apache about to spring on him or the chief, with drawn gun, not ten feet back of him. As the Apache is about to spring, the chief, not seeing his man, fires at Roleaux but instead hits his Apache man. (While the injured man is getting attention, Roleaux escapes and hides.) The gendarmes, who had been close on the heels of Roleaux and had seen the Apache shoot his man instead of Roleaux, wait their chance on the outside of the den and grab him as he comes out in search of Roleaux. The Apache puts up an awful fight, and his screams bring out several of his pals, who put up a free-for-all fight with the gendarmes, the latter getting the best of the Apaches in the end and taking the chief, Blanc, and the others they had captured, to the station house, where they are all put through the third degree about the other murder in Kitty's room. Roleaux, who comes from his hiding place when the fight starts, helps the police a great deal with his brute strength, which puts him on favorable terms with them.

Kitty, closely followed by Frederick, arrives at the Apaches' den just as they are taking them away, and, seeing Roleaux is all right, she goes with them to the station and is with him when the Apache is found guilty. In the meantime, Sachio and his man arrive from Grahoffen and go to Michael. Sachio talks to the King while his man tries again to find the King's coin. After searching for some time, he finds the duplicate made by Frederick, and, believing it to be the other half, hurries back to Sachio, and, giving him the signal, they both hurry from the palace and to their King, who matches the coins, translates them, and, knowing nothing of the misleading inscription on the one just brought to him, he starts plans for the long-planned war against Gretzhoffen.

Kitty and Roleaux return to their hotel, and, going to Kitty's room, she shows him she still has the coin they took from Frederick, and they then lay their plans to get the other half from the King of Grahoffen. Frederick follows Sachio and his man at a safe distance, but being unable to learn anything of their plans and fearing something might happen determines to enter the palace. Here he meets Sachio and his man and overhears that they have the coins. Knowing that they will start trouble if they are permitted to leave the palace, even though one of the coins is the fake one he had made for the King, he tells them he wants to show them some old armor, and leads him to the torture chambers below. Frederick's plan is to get Sachio down there and lock him in the chamber, take the coin away from him and keep him there until he has gotten the other coin from the King of Grahoffen. But intsead Frederick is himself locked in. Kitty arrives at the palace to tell the King about the Apache's being found guilty of the murder, and, finding him intoxicated, she roams about the place. She eventually locates Frederick, tells him that she has heard Sachio say war will be started in twelve hours, and tries to get him to follow them, but he tells her that war with Grahoffen is unavoidable and the best thing to do is to surprise them by being ready when they start.

Sachio arrives in Grahoffen, gives the fake coin to his King, and marches toward Gretzhoffen. Sachio, at the head of his army, points out the palace to his men. Intoxicated with his success, he gives the order to his men to charge. As they charge hundreds of Gretzhoffen soldiers dash toward them from the bushes and open fire on them.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 14, "On the Battle Field"—Two parts—Sept. 19).—Sachio and his army are surprised by Count Frederick and his troops and the war between Grahaffen and Gretzhoffen is on in earnest. After desperate fighting, Sachio, a clever fighter and commander, gets the best of Frederick and his men, and for a while it looks bad for the Iron Master. While the King drinks more and more wine to give him courage, Kitty decides to help him if possible, and calling the old prime minister, who is sober for a wonder, tells him of Frederick's plight and asks him to help her get more men. This the Prime Minister does, and with Kitty at their head, the newly formed regiment arrives on the field of battle just as Frederick is about forced to give up to the enemy.

Roleaux, losing sight of Kitty and, learning that she is on the battlefield, tries to get to her side and, going through the enemy's lines, is captured and taken to the palace of Grahaffen, where he is held a prisoner.

On the battlefield, Frederick sees man after man of his army mowed down by a masked battery, which he is unable to locate. Sachio sees this and feels sure that within a short time, he will have Frederick's entire army mowed down. Frederick, on his horse, finally locates with the aid of a pair of powerful field glasses, the masked battery, a cleverly hidden affair behind trees, which are fastened on the battery itself. As he is about to give an order to charge upon it, a bomb explodes under his horse, blowing its legs off, and the horse and rider go down. This is seen by Sachio, who, thinking it is easy for him to advance, gives the order to do so. He is met, however, by Kitty and her small body of men, who check his advance.

Giving the command to one of the older men, Kitty goes to Frederick's help. Finding him only slightly wounded, they both chase Cachio and his men to the palace of Grahaffen. In the meantime, Roleaux succeeds in getting away from his guards, who are surprised by the return of their army, and, getting the coins, boards a fast yacht, bound for Gretzhoffen, just as Sachio and the King discover the loss of the coins and give chase. Sachio boards a torpedo boat, and, ordering the captain to catch the yacht ahead, quite unaware that Kitty and Count Frederick are in the dirigible just passing over their heads to the rescue of Roleaux. As they near the fort of Gretzhoffen, where the prime minister has finally placed some men, they see the yacht and, believing it belongs to the enemy, they fire upon it. Kitty and Frederick in the dirigible overhead, however, drop a rope ladder to the sinking yacht just in time to rescue Roleaux, who catches it and climbs to safety as the yacht goes down.

CENTAUR FEATURES.

THE WOMAN, THE LION AND THE MAN (Two parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Mlle. Ottawa, M. Gay, Roy Watson, Capt. Bonavita, Mr. Batty, Mme. D'Orsey.

At the zoo where she is performing with wild animals Mrs. Fairfield, daughter of George Winters, recognizing Mancey, a gentleman crook, who had been the cause of her father's downfall and untimely death, and who has since disappeared. The sight of him again overcomes her with conflicting emotions and she forgets her part with the animals until she is in danger. Her husband, Fairfield, springs into the arena and saves her. Mancey writes a note to Mrs. Fairfield demanding that she meet him. The note falls into the hands of Fairfield, who, without a word, has it delivered to his wife. He determines to be at the meeting place.

Mancey demands money from her under penalty of exposing the life of her father. Fairfield, overhearing the demand, is moved to step out and interfere, but he realizes that to do so would bring public disgrace upon his wife. Mrs. Fairfield feels the sting of Mancey's words and is lost in retrospection. Mancey's mind also reverts to the past. A plan suggests itself to Mrs. Fairfield. She whispers to Mancey to come to her home—late that night. At a signal she will admit him and pay the money he asks. The words please Mancey, but they do not escape the listening ears of Fairfield. Was his wife really going to accede to the demands of Mancey?

Engrossed in thought, Fairfield returned to the arena. He came face to face with Nero, the lion, his especial pet—and his wife's, too. He stroked Nero's mane and then an idea came to him. Why not let the lion have a little joy out of this? He was one of the family—the woman, the lion and the man. At the appointed time Mancey lay in waiting for the signal. She expressed the wish to retire. Fairfield bid her an affectionate good-night. In her dresser lay her revolver. She brought it out and after satisfying herself that all was quiet extinguished the light. It was the signal. Mancey cautiously made his way to the window while Mrs. Fairfield noiselessly made her way towards the room where the money was kept. Mancey was safely inside—the curtains part and he sees a lion. It is a duel in the dark between man and Nero, the lion Mr. Fairfield brought to revenge his wife's torments.

In the other room, where Fairfield has been waiting, his wife encounters him. They both hear the lion's roar and the fall of bodies. Mrs. Fairfield almost collapses. Fairfield takes the revolver from her hand, helps her to a chair and rushes into the room where Mancey had met his fatal Waterloo.

CUB.

THE TREASURE BOX (Sept. 24).—The cast: George Ovey, Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Goldie Colwell, Gordon MacGregor, Jefferson Osborne, Ray Lincoln.

Strolling through the park, Jerry finds a wad of money. Though he needs money badly, he claims honesty as one of his traits, and returns the wad to the rightful owner, who, in an outburst of generosity, rewards the finder with a genuine quarter. Jerry is disappointed at such little appreciation, but without the quarter he could not buy the meal he so anxiously looked forward to.

In the restaurant Jerry finds the service bad, the food worse, and the rules of deportment so lax that his quarter is stolen. So when the time comes to pay the bill he has to stand for the usual rush through the door and into the street. Angered at the whole proceeding. Jerry fights back and wins. But he has to run for his life, for the waiters soon get on their feet and pursue the fleeing Jerry. He takes refuge under a table in the back room of a cafe, where two blackmailers are discussing their plans. They have just dispatched a note to wealthy Colonel Biff demanding $1,000 in cash by six o'clock that evening or be blown up by an infernal machine. As Jerry's pursuers, now enforced by the police, enter the blackmailers throw the machine under Jerry's table and rush out. The crowd follows the blackmailers, leaving Jerry with the box, which, because of the ticking of the clock set to explode the machine, he believes to be filled with watches and other jewelry.

The police return and arrest Jerry, but Col. Biff, passing by, straightens things out by passing around $4 and takes Jerry to his home to be put to work to pay off the debt. Jerry meets Biff's daughter, falls in love with her, gets into a mess of trouble as a result, and ends up at the police station. It is now lacking a few minutes of six o'clock. Jerry is before the desk when the blackmailers are also brought in. They notice Jerry carries their machine and yell in terror, but before they can make themselves clear the bomb has exploded, wrecking the room and sending the occupants to all corners. When the dust clears away Jerry is seen hanging from the chandelier.

FALSTAFF.

SUPERSTITIOUS SAMMY (Sept. 13).—Sammy believed in everything—signs, omens, etc. In most instances, he could tell off hand what counted for good or bad fortune and any time he had his doubts he had a book which contained all sorts of information on the subject. Sammy spilled salt on the table and promptly threw some of it over his shoulder. It may have averted the bad luck, but it cost him a cook, and it nearly cost the cook an eye. He found a four-leaf clover, an excellent sign of luck, but he lost some of his appreciation for it when a cow kicked him.

It is good fortune to find a horse shoe or a pin. Sammy found them both, but unexpected sorrow came with them. Then he proposed to the young lady he admired and she accepted him. Sammy was sure it was because he had his stocking on wrong side out and perhaps it was, or perhaps it was because he knelt on his right knee while pouring out the story of his love. Their first difficulty came over selecting the date for the marriage. Sammy objected to Thursday, remembering the old song, "Thursday always was my Jonah Day," and he shook with horror when she mentioned Friday. The ceremony was set for Saturday, but Sammy did not appear, explaining that a black cat had crossed his path and he had to turn back.

The wedding guests were sent away, but they returned on Sunday only to face another disappointment. This time Sammy forgot the ring, and every one knows that you must not go back for anything after having once left your home without being prepared for bad luck. So the wedding guests were again sent away. On Monday, the matter was finally settled. Sammy received a letter from the young lady in which she explained that it is unlucky for a bride to wait too long, so she had annexed the best man and Sammy was no longer needed. This was a sad blow to the superstitious chap, but worse luck followed when he smashed a mirror which any one can tell you means seven years' of continued ill luck.

BESSIE'S BACHELOR BOOBS (Sept. 16).—The cast: Winifred Lane, George Welch, Claude Cooper, Charlie Emerson, Lindsay Morrison.

The Royal Squashmere was a typical summer hotel. The building was ornate but composed of a most inexpensive material. The food was as bad as the private golf course which figured in the circulars, while the rooms were so crowded with assorted insects that there was hardly any space for the guests. Worst of all, as all the unfortunate men patrons remarked, there were no "chickens." The women guests were veritable antiques and spent their time in rocking chairs talking about the Civil War.

Four bachelors had remarked these conditions separately, and each was planning to move, when joy came into their lives. The first man was the proud owner of an auto. His car broke down in front of a shabby farm house, all four tires blowing out. From the farm house came a fair maiden who invited him to sit in the shade while the chauffeur was putting in new inner tubes. She talked very sweetly with him. He did not know that she had scattered tacks in the road just to force this meeting.

Two of the other men made the girl's acquaintance while golfing. A long drive by one of them hit her on the head—(at least she told them so). They took her home with many apologies; both much impressed with her. The fourth man met her while fishing, a purely premeditated meeting on her part. And while the four were gathered at the farm house, the girl's father hung out a sign, "Farm Hands Wanted." All four of the men applied and agreed to work only for their board. As time passed each of the new hands separately courted the girl, and she smiled upon them all; then the tragedy happened. One by one saw his charmer in tears. She explained to each after much urging that the cruel man who held the mortgage on the farm was about to foreclose. Each of the infatuated ones pressed money upon her, as a "gift," and she accepted only after much urging. That night when the men returned to the farm weary after their day's exertion they found the place closed. Upon the door was a note in a woman's hand reading: "Dear Farm Hands: Pop and I have left the farm to go back on the road. We star in Uncle Tom's Cabin, and thanks to your generosity this year we can play the big time. Bessie Blinn."

They looked at one another and fainted.

SIMON'S SWIMMING SOUL-MATE (Sept. 20).—The cast: Carey Hastings, Riley Chamberlin, Mr. Hastings.

Simon was a farmer boy who did not believe in eugenics, otherwise he would never have fallen in love with Susie, his school-mate. Susie's mother was a chronic mental invalid so long that she naturally died, and her father was justly regarded as the laziest man in the county. In the course of time, Simon proposed, but Susie's father said, "My daughter cannot marry while I live. Someone must do the work around the dear old farm!"

Susie was tired of the dear old farm and perfectly willing to elope, but would not do so until she had discovered some method of "making father stick about the house." They selected glue, and when applied to the easy chair, it worked most successfully. The young couple departed and father remained at home firmly attached to his easy chair. Sometimes the pathway of elopers is rough and unpleasant. This young couple tried a carriage and also a hastily borrowed motorcycle, but although they traveled in circles most of the time, they could not dodge calamity. Finally they reached a village by the sea and rushed to the office of a Justice of the Peace. Then to their horror, they found he was out fishing and a kindly neighbor pointed him out to the young couple.

Two life guards strolling on the beach were alarmed a few moments later when a young man and woman in street clothes rushed to the water and plunged in. Visions of a double suicide came upon them and they followed, determined to effect a rescue. They overtook the fugitives hanging on to the judge's boat and imploring him to marry them. The only objection the judge had raised was that there was no witnesses, but the arrival of the life guards overcame this, and the pair were united. Father arrived in a motorboat a few minutes later, but what could he do? The young couple were married. He could, and did, refuse to give his blessing, but they cared not for that and swam off, side by side on the wedding journey which began with a short ocean voyage.

CON, THE CAR CONDUCTOR (Sept. 23).—The cast: Riley Chamberlin, Burnett Parker and George Barnes.

There are times when even the most popular man working for any company will get into difficulties just like the least fortunate employe—with this difference—that when it's the popular man who finds the trouble, he also finds about everybody is willing to help him out. That's why Con, the car conductor who was not only one of the oldest, but also the most popular man working for the Hicksville Traction Company, won the enmity of the foppish son of one of the stockholders of the company by refusing to charge the young man's carfare and by being further guilty of "intolerable rudeness" by ousting the monocled one from the car for non-payment of fare, found the superintendent ready to come to his aid with the suggestion that he report for duty as usual, though ostensibly "fired" for the assuagement of the griefs of the son and his stockholder father, but that until the trouble blew over Con should disguise himself.

Con cared little for the disguise, but it was its own recompense when it gave the old conductor a chance to "get even" with the youngster with the hated monocle. It was only a few days after his adoption of a disguise that Con had the pleasure of seeing the stockholder's son board his car. He discovered that the monocle was not altogether an affectation, for the young man was near-sighted. Thinking of this, Con put a car sign directly in front of the young man's vision, with the object of attracting his attention. But it was with malice aforethought that the sign was placed directly over the head of the simpering old maid opposite who jumped to the conclusion that the man staring was ogling her. This was too good an opportunity for the old maid to lose, and, especially when the watching conductor dropped a hint into her ear that there was a policeman at the next corner, she decided to have the "masher" arrested. Then came Con's opportunity. He confidentially told the youth who was badly frightened when he learned of the scrape into which he had innocently been precipitated that he would save him.

Con arranged this by making an appointment

[illegible] make a spectacular escape by [illegible] one leaving car into another while Con held back the policeman and the irate woman. He let the young man know however, that he knew who he was, and made an appointment to meet him that night at midnight in a far away graveyard. Thoroughly frightened when the conductor made his appearance at the graveyard at the appointed time, the stockholder's son became convinced that Con had not only saved his good name, but the family honor also, and insisted that his reward should come from the street car company. That was how Con got his long-looked-for raise. But there was one difficulty. He had to grow a real beard and keep on wearing it, no matter how much his fellow-employes chaffed him.

THE TERROR OF TWIN MOUNTAINS (Two Parts—Sept. 27).—The cast: E. Forest Taylor, Helene Rosson, Roy Stewart.

John has met heavy reverses through fire, and decided to go to the gold fields to try to recuperate. He leaves his young wife, and starts out in search of a fortune. Ivan, "The Terror of Twin Mountains," who makes his home in a cave in the hills, has aroused the country by his raids, and there is a reward of $5,000 offered for his capture dead or alive. John comes into town and sees the notice of reward. He asks concerning Ivan, and is told that no one dares prospect in the region of the "Terror's" lair.

Time goes on, but John is not successful in his search for gold. In his travels he chances to find a wallet in which he finds his wife's photograph. His mind in a state of wonderment, he goes to town, where he receives a letter from his wife saying that she is to join him. John is delighted and makes ready to meet the coach on which she will arrive. Ivan plans to rob the coach. As he sits contemplating the deed, his mind travels back to the days when he loved the girl who became John's wife. Taking out his wallet, he looks at her picture, and the feeling of disappointment and hate is renewed in his heart. Suddenly he sees the coach approaching. As he jumps to his feet, the wallet slides from his knee. The coach is held up, and the passengers robbed. Among the passengers, Ivan discovers Frances, John's wife. He conceives a bestial revenge. With brute force he carries her to his cave, after sending the coach on its way. The coach arrives in town, and John discovers his wife's fate, and at once starts to her rescue. Articles she has dropped on the way to the cave serve John as a guide. A terrible fight takes place in the cave, in which Ivan is killed, and John and Frances reunited.

HEARTS IN SHADOWS (Oct. 1).—The cast: Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester.

Out of employment and penniless, Nan Baird and her fatherless child, Elaine, are cast out upon the streets. Weary and dejected, the two finally wander into a park. Nan leaves the child on a bench while she goes to beg for food. Twice refused and with a heavy heart, she returns to the child who is hungry and crying. In desperation Nan makes another attempt and is again unsuccessful. At the height of her misery, Nan comes upon a woman carrying a money-laden mesh bag. Seizing the bag, which act is witnessed by Burke, the detective, Nan flees into an alley—directly into the arms of a policeman, and is arrested. In the police court Nan tells her story to the judge, explaining that it was only for the child (whom she had left in the park) that she committed the theft. She begs the Judge to let her go to the child. He finally consents to her returning to the park accompanied by the detective.

Meanwhile a kind-hearted woman comes upon Elaine, and takes the disconsolate child home. Finding the little one gone, Nan is frantic. When the detective accuses her of deceit, she attempts to escape, but is recaptured and taken to jail and thrown into a cell. Burke returns home and, to his surprise, discovers his wife comforting a ragged little girl. When he learns that his wife found the child in the park, he is convinced that the child is Nan's. The three hasten to the police court, and when Nan is brought in, the child rushes to her arms, and the evidence is conclusive. The prisoner is discharged, and given money and employment by the detective.

LOVE, MUMPS AND BUMPS (Sept. 28).—The cast: Neva Gerber, Webster Campbell, William Carroll, Lucille Ward, Rae Berger.

To avoid Percy's persistence, Edna hastens off to the mountains, taking advantage of an invitation to use the cabin of an old friend. Percy learns her destination and follows, much to the disgust of both Edna and her companion Susan. Percy develops symptoms of a mysterious nature, and fearing a protracted illness, hastens to his love to beg her to consider him. Two mountaineers hear the commotion of Susan trying to prevent Percy's entrance into the cabin. They see the condition of Percy's face and immediately quarantine the entire house-

The two women try to escape but are discovered and brought back by the mountaineers. Frank Travers is taking an outing in the hills and sees the men forcing the women into the cottage. Fearing some crime, he hastens to their assistance and is also obliged to remain in quarantine.

In the absence of the town physician, the veterinary is called in and diagnoses Percy's trouble as "lumpyjaw," a dreaded disease common to cattle. The days go by and an attraction springs up between Travers and Edna. Percy, bandaged and confined to his bed (by force) is compelled to witness the love-making of these two, causing him much unhappiness. Finally the town physician returns, and when called in, pronounces the malady only mumps and measles. The quarantine is removed and the inmates permitted to return to their various homes. Edna and Frank have found the enforced association so pleasant that they decide to make the cottage their summer home.

MIXED MALES (Oct. 2).—The cast: Frank Borzage, John Sheehan, Beatrice Van, Nelle Belle Wilder.

Si Jenkins and his son Hezekiah are in love, but under rather peculiar circumstances. Si is in love with the daughter, while his son is in love with the daughter's widowed mother. Neither confides his tale of love to the other. Each pair plans to elope without the knowledge of the others.

Owing to poor light, and a mistake in the selection of windows, Si steals the widow, and Hezekiah the daughter. When the ceremonies are performed, the secret comes out, much to the chagrin then ultimate pleasure of all concerned.

THANHOUSER.

HELEN'S BABIES (Two Parts—Sept. 14).—The cast: Harry Benham, Lorraine Huling, Helen Badgley, Baby Stewart.

Harry Burton was Helen's only brother. He was a steady-going young business man, of excellent habits, and as fond of the children as a bachelor uncle could be. Still he did not yearn for the exclusive control of his nephews, and a letter from his sister caused him some discomfort. Helen explained that she and her husband were going away for a couple of weeks, and she wanted Harry to take charge of the house while they were gone. Woman-like, she put the most important news in a postscript, stating that Alice Mayton, "whom you remember," was stopping with her mother at the summer hotel near Helen's home. Harry was secretly in love with Alice, which may explain why he gladly accepted his sister's invitation. The boys welcomed uncle with delight when he arrived. They met him down the road extremely dirty and noisy, and scared his livery horse by shaking sticks at it. They then clambered into the rig, and as the dust was blowing violently naturally demanded that he open his watch so that they "could see the wheels go round." As Miss Mayton drove on from the opposite direction at this moment the unhappy uncle yielded and was complimented upon the lovely way he was behaving as "children's companion."

In the morning the boys entered their uncle's room at five o'clock and aroused him so he would get an early start in enjoying himself. During his absence from the room they thoughtfully unpacked his trunk for him, took him out to get whistles, led him to the bank of a stream and laughed when he tumbled in trying to draw them back from the edge. Early in his stay the uncle thought it was his duty to send Miss Mayton some flowers. He packed them in a cardboard box he found in the library and dispatched them with a letter to Miss Mayton. When the girl read the letter she smiled happily, for it said, "Please accept these as a token of my esteem. They always remind me of you with all your grace and beauty." She then opened the box and found it contained two dirty rag dolls which she recognized as the property of Helen's babies. She sent them back to the wretched Harry whose nephews were highly indignant because he had used their "dollies'" cradle to put "nasty flowers" in. They added that they had discovered the mistake in time to throw the flowers out.

The children played prank upon prank upon their unhappy uncle. After the return of Helen and her husband Harry went to call upon Miss Mayton intending to propose to her. Bashfulness overcame him, however, and he sat beside her on a rustic bench near the hotel unable to say a word. Suddenly his nephews appeared and looked at him gravely. Then Buddy noticed their sentiments.

"When I love anybody," he said, "I kiss 'em."

Harry looked at Alice. She laughed. Then he [illegible] stepped away from him, saying, "I think that's a very good idea." This [illegible] encouragement Harry needed and he [illegible] her in his arms.

[illegible] the grateful uncle asked his brother what [illegible] wanted, saying he would [illegible] the very [illegible] was gratified. The uncle kept [illegible] on his promises. [illegible] married Harry and in the years that followed they [illegible] bless the time that the uncle had come to the country to take care of Helen's babies.

THE TWINS OF G. L. RANCH (Sept. 19).—The cast: Ernest Howard, Madeline Fairbanks, Marion Fairbanks, Leo Post, Dave Thompson.

The aged owner of G. L. Ranch lived with his only surviving relatives, his twin granddaughters. The ranchman was crippled by a severe case of rheumatism on the day that an agent of an eastern concern called. This man was authorized to purchase a considerable number of horses, providing that the prices and stock were satisfactory. Accompanied by one of the twins, he visited the corral, picked out the animals he wanted, and returned to the ranch-house ready to pay in cash. The old man accepted the offer, and the money, a considerable sum, was paid over to him in large bills. One of the girls went to the door with the buyer when he departed, and just as he rode away, she noticed two rough looking men approaching the house. This aroused her suspicions and later when she saw one of them peering in the window, while her grandfather counted his money, she became convinced that some crime was contemplated. Her sister was in the other room at the time, and the girl quickly thought up a plan to save the money. She picked up her big doll, told her grandfather that the money would be more safely hidden in the dress of her doll and that she would hide it in her closet. She then left the room with the doll, going into the kitchen where her sister was. At the same instant the men outside leaped into the front room through the window. The girl locked the door behind her, took the money from the doll, hid it in her dress, handed the doll to her twin, telling her to let no one take it, and then escaped through the rear door while the outlaws were busily engaged in beating down the door from the sitting room. The men did not know there were two little girls and when they saw the child cowering in the corner, the doll in her arms, they thought their hunt was over, but the girl suddenly jumped to her feet, and rushed out of the house, followed by the men. It was a short chase, ending at the edge of a cliff, where the girl despairing of escape, threw the doll over the brink. One man held her, while the other went for the toy, which he recovered with difficulty. He returned to his companion in an extremely angry mood, explaining that they had been tricked, and that the money was not on the doll. Then they roughly questioned the girl. A moment later, a posse rode on, headed by the other twin, and the crooks were easily captured.

THE DEAD MAN'S KEYS (Two Parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: Burt Delaney, Ernest Howard, Riley Chamberlin.

When the young clerk was placed on trial for the murder of his employer, a wealthy financier, the district attorney's office believed it had built up an absolutely unassailable case. The facts which the prosecution could prove and which the young man was unable to deny were as follows:

On the day of the crime the accused and several other employees had just returned from lunch when the annunciator rang and the young man's number appeared on the board. The accused entered the room, was there for some minutes, and then reappeared, a revolver in his hand. He declared that he had gone into the private room, and seen no trace of his employer, found the revolver on the floor, was surprised and picked it up. His attention was then attracted to a screen in one corner of the room and behind it he found the body of his employer. He then gave the alarm. Detectives reported that there were two doors to the room, one through the main office, which was filled with clerks, and the other a door to the hall. There was only one key to this latter door, and that was in the possession of the victim. The ringing of the bell would seem to indicate that Mr. Gray had summoned his employee, and there was plenty of evidence that the two men quarreled on the day of the murder and the day before. The fact that no one heard the shot was explained when it was discovered that the weapon was equipped with a Maxim silencer.

All that the young man had in his favor was the testimony of his fellow clerks as to his good qualities. Another person who believed in him was the girl to whom he was betrothed and when his trial took place she was in court, with her grandfather an aged locksmith. When the chief clerk took the stand the old locksmith showed interest and at his request his daughter secured permission for him to inspect the dead man's keys. After looking at them he took the stand and swore that on the night before the murder a man had called upon him with a wax model of a key and the locksmith made him a key. This he added, was exactly similar to the key of the private door of the dead financier's room. The excitement increased when the locksmith positively identified the chief clerk as his customer. Brought before the judge the chief clerk retained his nerve, and positively denied the accusation. The old locksmith then drew from his pocket a fair sized lump of wax. The locksmith looked at the wax through his spectacles, and said, "Here is a thumbmark, and it isn't mine." Before the chief clerk was aware of his intention the locksmith grabbed his hand and pressed his right thumb down upon the wax near the other mark, after which he held it up triumphantly and called attention to the fact that the two marks were made by the same thumb.

The chief clerk confessed. He had been stealing from the firm and knew his employer would soon find him out. He returned from lunch ahead of time, entered the inner office by the private door, disposed of his employer and the evidence against himself. When he was satisfied that the young clerk returned to the outer office he summoned him by the bell and slipped out through the side door before the young man entered, leaving the revolver behind him.

A DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE (Three Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Marshall Welch, Lorraine Huling, Florence La Badie, Harris Gordon and Boyd Marshall.

One of those who has had much to do with changing the history of the world is Friederich Nietzsche, the great German philosopher. To his mind only strong people of great ability were of any consequence, while those of mediocre ability were deserving of little consideration. "That the lifting up of the weak, in the long run, is an unprofitable and useless business," said the great philosopher, "is evident upon very brief reflection. Philanthropy, considered largely, is inevitably a failure. Nothing is more potent, indeed, than the fact that charity merely converts the unfit—who, in the course of nature, would soon die out and so cease to encumber the earth—into parasites—who live on indefinitely, a nuisance and a burden to their betters."

These sentiments found ready approval in the mind of a well known scholar, an American professor of philosophy. The professor's daughter became interested in settlement work, but the scholar refused to become interested in it. When his daughter brought a factory girl, ill and weak, to his home, he objected, but finally was induced to permit the factory girl to remain in the house.

The daughter's protege was not a skilful seamstress, and when several handsome gowns had been ruined by her carelessness, the professor decided to interfere. He told his daughter that the factory girl was "one of the unfit." The daughter refused to let the factory girl go, but the latter's pride was stung by the professor's words and she left the house of her own accord. In the hard struggle for livelihood which followed, a member of a gang of criminals tempted her with his ill-gotten gains, but she rejected him scornfully. While engaged in her settlement work, the rich girl was seen by the gangster. The man knew she was wealthy and determined to win her. Soon after, the young settlement worker came upon two roughly-dressed men who were about to attack a cripple. She ran to the victim's assistance, but the men scornfully thrust her aside, then the "rescuer" arrived in the person of a burly young man who knocked the two bullies down and then assisted the cripple to his feet. The "rescuer" was the gangster, and the cripple and the two other men were members of the gang. The gangster had carried the plan out in order to make a favorable impression upon the rich girl and he succeeded admirably. Even when she learned that he was a desperate criminal and had served sentences in state's prison, she did not shrink from him, for hadn't he promised to come to the settlement school and learn to be a better man?

In the meantime a new foreman came to the factory where the working girl was employed. He was an earnest, hard working young man, and a sincere attachment soon sprang up between him and the girl, which culminated in their engagement and the planning of an early marriage. At the settlement the gangster was a model "pupil." Awaiting a favorable opportunity he told her of his love, then spoke of his evil life of the past, working so skillfully upon her sympathies that he won her promise to be his wife. The professor was stunned when he received the news. In his hour of sorrow he remembered a quotation of Nietzsche which seemed to mock him. "The strong must grow stronger," said Nietzsche, "and that they may do so, they must waste no strength in the vain task of trying to lift up the weak."

"She is weak," the father said to himself, "but she is my daughter, and I will not see her led astray." It was the little factory girl whom the scholar had despised who came to him in his hour of need. She told him that she had heard of her daughter's infatuation for the gangster and confirmed his suspicions regarding the man. She told the professor to call with his daughter at her home that night. That evening the professor and his daughter called at the two little tenement rooms which served the working girl as a home. The rich girl was sullen and suspicious of her father and the other girl, but finally agreed to wait with her father in the next room and see for herself whether her suspicions were justified.

The working girl had pretended to the gangster that his attentions were pleasing to her, and had consented to his calling upon her in the evening. He did so, and she questioned him, drawing the admission from him that he cared nothing for the rich girl, and only wanted to get some of her money, as he had a wife in a nearby city and could not marry. In the next room the professor and his daughter listened, and the little settlement worker, thoroughly disillusioned, realizes how she had been deceived. Suddenly the hall door opened and the young foreman appeared. He saw the woman he loved apparently accepting the attentions of the gangster. A fight ensued between the two men, and the ex-convict sank to the floor. The workingman turned upon his sweetheart and bitterly denounced her. But the entrance of the professor and his daughter halted him, and when he heard the truth he begged his sweetheart's forgiveness. The gangster slunk out of the door. The professor and his daughter looked at the reconciled couple.

RELIANCE.

MERELY PLAYERS (Two parts—Sept. 26).—The cast: "Billie" West, Charles West, Frank Bennett, Howard Gaye, Harry Moody, Wilbur Higby.

The "King Dramatic Troupe," presenting tragic melodrama, meets with such meager and unappreciative audiences in the course of its tour through the middle west, that manager Wilbur King finds himself in desperate perplexity. As a last resort King conceives the idea of staging a sham hold-up and attempted abduction of his leading lady, Vaseline Limelight. King takes the editor of the village gazette into his confidence, and the editor, short for news, agrees to write up the thrilling scene in sensational style. The central figure of the highway kidnapping episode is to be Irving Mansfield the tragedian of the company. The editor accompanies King to the road, and the two await the dramatic scene. Miss Limelight rides in garbed in true theatrical style and mounted on an unassuming charger. Mansfield halts her grandly at the point of his pistol and is about to carry her away when the unexpected happens. Harry Steadfast, who secretly adores the leading lady, and who has not been let in on the great publicity secret, happens along, and takes the abduction in dead earnest. He rushes in, rescues the lady, and gives the poor tragedian an awful pommelling.

The editor refuses to print the story. The troupe retires in gloom. Darrow Darkwood, the villain, leaves immediately for New York. He plots to secure a booking for Miss Limelight at the Velasco theater, thus getting her into his power. After Darkwood's departure, the editor decides to print the story as it occurred, featuring Steadfast's blunder. He rallies the manager and the melancholy troupe with the suggestion that Steadfast be played up in print as Miss Limelight's real lover and suggests that if they would get married, he could print a story which would pack the little theater. Vaseline overcomes her objections to Steadfast because of the desperate position of the company, and marries him. Darkwood, in New York, succeeds in booking Miss Limelight for the Velasco theater. She proceeds thither with her husband in tow. Velasco assigns Steadfast a part too. To him he gives the role of a rescuer from the attentions of the villain, Darkwood. Steadfast becomes aware of Darkwood's attentions to his wife during rehearsals, and in the big scene chokes the villain so strenuously, that he nearly expires. This arouses latent love in the leading lady, and with Darkwood disposed of, the two live happily ever afterwards.

THE DOLL HOUSE MYSTERY (Two parts—Sept. 19).—The cast: Charles Gorman, Georgie Stone, Carmen De Rue, Jack Hull, Margaret Marsh, Ben Lewis.

John Grant, a broker, places some very valuable bonds in his library desk. Carmen, Grant's little daughter, sees the bonds. Thinking them very pretty, she takes them to her doll's house, unknown to her parents. Here, she and Georgie Morley, her poor little playmate, proceed to paper the house with the bonds. When Grant discovers the loss of the paper, he summons a detective. More bonds are placed on the table. Again little Carmen helps herself to the pretty papers and takes them to her play house. She makes Georgie a present of some of them, and he places them in his blouse and starts for home. The detective, leaving Grant's house at the same time, finds one of the papers, traces Georgie home. He watches outside, and sees Georgie's father, Jim Morley, an ex-convict who has been trying to lead a straight life, enter the door.

Georgie warns his father that the detective has found the paper which Carmen had given him. Although innocent, Morely is fearful of the police, and flees from the house with the boy in his arms. The detective follows, and there is a spectacular fight between the two men on the speeding freight. Morley succeeds in stunning the detective. Then he leaps with Georgie from the train. The detective organizes a posse and pursues. Morley, with Georgie, is cornered in a cabin and as he threatens to shoot, the posse commences firing.

Meanwhile, little Carmen has disclosed to her mother that the bonds are on the walls of her doll's house. Grant rushes to the police station to exonerate Morley, taking Carmen with him to tell her story. Learning at the station that the posse is after Morley, dead or alive, and that the innocent man may already have been killed, because of Carmen's playful prank, Grant leaves with the police in their high-power machine, in the hope that they may reach the cabin in time to save Morley's life. Carmen insists on being taken along. Grant and the police arrive just in time to restrain the posse from slaying the ex-convict. Morley is exonerated, and the two children, Georgie and Carmen, are happy again.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS (American Four Parts Sept. 23).—The cast: Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Josephine Ditt, William Enfe, Hal Clements, Bessie Banks and Perry Banks.

John Wright inherits his grandfather's estate and at once sets about the task of investigating the various sources of the income into which he came when the aged man died. While riding through a wooded section, Wright comes upon a girl struggling with a man. Wright dismounts and promptly pounds the man into submission. Then he takes the girl to the squalid place she calls home. The girl whom Wright had defended is Martha, daughter of Old Farmer Hobbs, a heartless man. At length his wife collapses under the strain, and dies. Martha accuses her father, charging that his meanness killed her mother. Then she leaves to seek a relative in the city. The man whom Wright had beaten is Ralph, a farmer, whom Hobbs ordered his daughter Martha to marry.

Arrived in the city, Martha learns that the person she seeks has gone. An aged woman in the shabby room, however, proves a real friend, and takes the girl Martha to live with her. While investigating his properties, John Wright comes upon the aged woman and Martha. The squalid tenement conditions lead Wright to establish an ideal working place, known as the Wright Industrial Home. Martha and her elderly companion are established in the home, where they fit into the happy community life which the Wright Industrial Home has brought into being.

John Wright hears a lecture on the life of the ancient Greeks, by Gerta Carr. He is enthusiastic about her doctrines and proposes that he and she join forces in the formation of a modern Grecian colony. He agrees to supply the necessary money, provided she will provide the teaching. She accepts and plans at once are formulated. In the village in which Martha lived John Wright establishes the colony in one of the spacious houses, which he inherited. All members are dressed in the flowing garb of the ancient Greeks. Among those at the colony supervised by John Wright and Gerta Carr is Martha. As she left her squalid home to join the exponents of Grecian life, she was seen by Ralph, who had gone to the city to seek her. A blow from John Wright's fist kept Ralph from molesting the girl. The arrival of the cult in the village was the cause of scandal galore. The thought of young men and women cavorting in scanty attire struck horror to the morals of the staid and gossipy townsfolk. Cleverly Hobbs and Ralph fan the spark of outraged dignity among the villagers into a flame, until it reaches such proportions that a mob is formed. In violent protest against the Greek exponents, the mob storms the home of the cult. The infuriated villagers charge across the lawn into the house where John Wright and his colony await them.

In the mob is Ralph, who has planned a terrible revenge. Under his arm he carries a box of dynamite. As the house is stormed, Ralp. goes to a deserted room, where he places hi blast and lights the fuse. He is caught in the act by John Wright. Ralps is choked and left unconscious, while Wright, warning the others, friend and foe alike, flees for his life. Barely have the members of the cult, and the villagers emerged from the palatial structure, when the dynamite explodes, wrecking everything. The explosion quells the mob's spirit. Side by side, townsfolk and the colonists explore the ruins, where they find the charred remains of Ralph, who died by the blast his own hand had set. Penitent, Hobbs kneels at the side of the boy and the others withdraw. From the ruins of the home rises a place more beautiful than the structure the blast had destroyed. The happy life of the cult is resumed. John Wright and Martha find their friendship has grown to love, and as the picture fades out the lovers can be seen walking together on the beautiful lawn with their arms encircling each other.

The car proves its merit under attacking conditions.

Toronto, Ont.—Covering hundreds of acres of ground, one of the most successful expositions ever held in Canada opens in this city.

THE PRIMA DONNA (Eclectic—Three Parts—Aug. 30).—After marrying a rich man who professes love for her, the prima donna finds he has other affairs, and leaves him to go her ways alone. And all the while, the young author, maker of the only plays worthy of her talent, lives a part crueler, more real to him than any theme yet evolved in his mind: for the action of this play is laid in his heart. He goes to her in the hospital, where her ill health has led her, to plead that she play the part of a Pierrot he has especially written for her. And then a marvelous thing happens. She feels the unmistakable urge of her spirit toward his and knows that this love is the biggest, holiest thing in her life. The doctor warns her that for her to rise means death; but what is death compared to the pleasure she feels in pleasing him? So she goes, and once again poses before the camera. This time it is a mad dance with a realistic fall at the end. So well has it all been done—fall and all—that even the emotion-calloused cameramen are touched and applaud. One tells her to rise, that the cameras are still; but she does not rise—her dance has taken her far.

COL. HEEZA LIAR AT THE BAT (Cartoon Comedy—Aug. 30).—On same reel with "An Intimate Study of Birds," Part 6, a synopsis of which was published on page 1562 of the Aug. 28 issue.

Me for the ball game this afternoon, muses the Colonel. The Colonel starts for the ball game in his new car, but the flivver gets balky and refuses to move for some time, and when it finally condescends to start, great speed is needed to reach the game in time. But more haste less speed and our friend is hurled ruthlessly out of the car on his head. Nevertheless, he picks himself up and runs on to the park. Arriving there, he finds the home pitcher going badly and in danger of being killed by the rain of hits that are flying like rifle-shots through the box.

Old Heeza then offers his services as boxman and enters the rifle pit to hurl the game of his life. He is greeted with a sneer by the opposing batsmen, but the sneers turn to snarls of hate when he starts to throw spitters, knuckle balls, fadeaways, and emery balls, and has speed to burn. He has the rival team so badly buffaloed that he fans them all. Of course, as a hitter he is equally good and in the fifteenth inning with the score a tie he knocks the ball out of the park and the leather is still going. Thus Heeza Liar enters the class of the immortals in the Baseball Hall of Fame.

MIX-UP FOR MAISIE (Phunphilms—Sept. 6).—Maisie Orpe is a dispenser of victuals in a second rate "beanery," and is the light of the lives of several of the town "swells." But Luke de Fluke, an all-round gay lad, and Shorty Magee, the local tough nut, seem to lead the field in Maisie's blue orbs. This finally causes strained diplomatic relations between the pair, and a duel to the death is arranged. Each contestant writes to the object of his attentions that if she wants to see his rival she must be on hand at dawn the next day. Then both choose the same second. The dawn of the next day sees the two rivals at the appointed place with the one second to attend to both. The duel starts as per schedule, but while they are fighting their hardest they look up and see Maisie going off with the second. This, of course, causes a cessation of hostilities and both look longingly in the direction of the loving couple. Then Luke's sword catches in the ground and he has to resort to his feet to gain the decision. This gives Shorty the chance he has been looking for and he hurls a bomb at his adversary and blows him up. Luke comes down after a while, however, and they, too, call off the contest through mutual sympathy over the loss of Maisie, who has gone with the second. But later on Shorty lands the "bird," and the way he does it and the anguish of Luke are a fitting climax to this comedy.

IN DAHOMEY (West Africa) (Globe Travel Split Reel—Sept. 6).—Why not take your patrons for a little jaunt through most interesting West Africa? Show them the primitive methods of the daily manners and customs of the natives, in striking contrast to our American way of doing things. Show them many of the most curious features of the daily existence of these people; their peculiar musical instruments, cotton spinning by hand, the gaudy wearing apparel, the weapons of warfare and their rulers.

PICTURESQUE JAVA (Globe—Split Reel—Scenic—Sept. 6). On the same reel as foregoing. Then start a "personally conducted" tour to the Island of Java, one of the most prosperous and populous of the Dutch East Indies. It is an island of volcanic origin and has many picturesque mountain and lowland regions. The tropically hot and moist climate gives a luxuriant growth to the foliage which covers the towering peaks and makes a most beautiful picture. Countless lakes covered with lily pads and blossoms add beauty to the scene and perfume to the air. Then the native houses form a decided contrast to the metropolitan houses of the foreign residents.

THE GALLOPER (Gold Rooster Plays—Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Clifton Crawford, Melville Stewart, Fania Marinoff, Rhys Alexander, Jessie Ralph, Sam Ryan and David Burton.

The story deals with a divorced war-correspondent who divides his time between dodging alimony-hunting divorced wives and various creditors. As a means of relief from his financial troubles he makes love to a brewer's widow, proposes, and is accepted. War breaks out between Turkey and Greece and he seizes the opportunity to dodge his trouble and a fiancee who does not appeal to him to go out as a war-correspondent to Greece. It happens that a young American millionaire at the same time is sailing for Africa to hunt big game. On the same steamer are two charming girls who are going to the front as Red Cross nurses. One of them turns out to be the war correspondent's last wife; the millionaire immediately falls in love with the other. Arriving in Greece, the war correspondent finds dodging his former wife too strenuous and resigns his position. The millionaire offers to take his name and act as correspondent for him. From then on there are all sorts of comical misunderstandings and situations. Scene after scene is a riot of laughter up to the very end where misunderstandings are cleared up, the millionaire is accepted by the Red Cross nurse, and the war correspondent reunited with his former wife.

THE LOST SECRET (Balboa—Two Parts—Sept.. 27).—Robert Taylor, manager of the Warren Powder Co., receives a warning in cipher to beware of foreign spies while manufacturing his new super-powerful high explosive, Lytonite. David Gerard, the company's chemist, working on the new death-dealer, moves to a lonely shack on the beach to conduct his experiments in private. But the chemist's secretary is in league with Gerloff, the foreign agent, and learns of the move. Gerard has with him his daughter, Gladys, a girl of twenty, who hates the idea of this solitude, and longs for congenial society. She gets it in the form of Gorloff, who, to get the Lytonite formula, feigns to be a shipwrecked sailor, and so works on the sympathy and into the house of the Gerards. By subtle inquiry Gorloff learns from Gladys the Lytonite formula is ready, and persuades her "for the good of humanity" to give it to him for safe keeping. But Gladys catches Gorloff spying on her father, and, suspecting him, refuses to give up the formula. Gorloff then attacks Gladys and steals some of the Lytonite cartridges, which he smuggles into his mouth, and starts away with, Gerard following. Gerard overtakes the man and there is a short struggle in which Gorloff falls, striking his chin on a rock. There is a terrific detonation—and space where once was Gorloff.

EXPLORING EPHRAIM'S EXPLOIT (Bray Cartoon—Sept. 27).—Ephriam, a darky aviator, is ploughing his way through the ether when, with the aid of his trusty spy-glass, he sees on a passing planet the figure of a dusky washerwoman bending over a tub unconscious of the fact that a vagrant goat has already eaten off enough of her clothes to make her look like a burlesque on a front row chorus queen. Eph's chuckles excite the curiosity of a cocky sparrow who sasses him from the gas bag of his dirigible. Ephraim takes a few shots at the bird, who deftly catches them, and flings them back at his astonished bean. The bird fails to pull down one of Eph's shots which hits the gas bag. In an instant Eph is traveling downward through space, his fall froken only by a dinky parasol. He lands conveniently on a spile in a lake, and, being a practical coon, immediately chucks his line in water and waits for a bite. A water snake, wriggling its crooked way up the spile is satisfied that Eph get a bite if it may only have a nip, and, uncorking the flask in our hero's back pocket, enters the birthplace of its spiritual brethren. A water bug finds his line a convenient bar for physical exercises, and does innumerable fancy dives off it into the water. A spider uses Eph's ebony dome as the starting place for a well-planned web, and is the cause of a series of startled squirmings that finally land the unlucky Ethiopian literally "into the jaws of death," represented here by the inviting open smile of an anxious alligator.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (Part Eight—on the same Reel as Foregoing—Sept. 27).—It isn't often one gets the opportunity of seeing this wise old bird up close, although its "Hoo-oooooooo" is a frequent disturbance. One of the group of nocturnal birds of prey is the barn, or screech owl, which grows to a length of 15 to 18 inches. When looking at the face of the barn owl, as one does in this film, one is greatly impressed by the large, luminous eyes which give it such an air of wisdom. Here we also see the large, curved talons of the barn owl, with which it grasps its prey. The forest owl, also shown, is another night marauder, whose habitat is in wooded regions. Like the barn owl, the forest owl preys upon mice and rats, making it a valuable aid and friend of the farmer. The gray owl is larger than either of those shown, frequently reaching a length of 25 to 30 inches. The owl uses its beak and claws both as offensive and defensive weapons. The owls, when very young, seem to be just a bunch of downy feathers.

THE BENT GUN (Deer—Two Parts—Released Week of Sept. 27).—Dick, a pugnacious boy, possessing the gambling fever, is expelled from school. In his anger his father also expels him from home. Dick bids his sister and sweetheart farewell, leaves for the West, and obtains employment on the I. X. L. Ranch. There Dick meets a notorious character, Black Pete, who entices him to become a cattle rustler, thereby losing their jobs. While on a drunken spree, Pete determines to seek revenge on his former employer and Dick consents to go with him.

Black Pete shoots the employer from behind an old barn and the employer, while falling, spies Dick riding away and concludes that he is the shooter. The cowboys are notified of the affair and give chase. Black Pete is shot and captured, but Dick, who is also shot in the arm, makes his escape. In falling off his horse Dick bends his gun, and in order to repair it with one arm, he ties the gun to a tree. While fixing the gun, Dick spies the posse coming, and to escape being captured, demands of his trained horse to shoot him which act he does. Dick is taken back to the ranch. In the meantime, Black Pete has confessed. Dick's father is notified and he takes his prodigal son back, and all is forgiven.

THE WAITER WHO WAITED (Federal—Two Parts—Released Week of Sept. 27).—The cast: Harry La Pearl, Gertrude Bambrick, Margaret Burke, Dick Cowan, Wil Rex and Dan Howard.

Oscar Piffle, a waiter in a "beanery," loses his job after an argument with Mr. Porpus, a customer. Oscar takes to the park to forget his sorrows, and while sitting on a bench picks up a paper, and sees that the Swelldorf Hotel is in need of a first class waiter. He runs all the way to the hotel, and is just in time to secure the job. He does not make a hit with Mr. Fish, a fellow-waiter, and they indulge in many scraps, Oscar always coming out best. While out for his daily exercise one day, saves Gertie, the village belle, from being robbed, and introduces himself as a pure food expert, and tells her that he is stopping at the Swelldorf.

Gertie invites him to call, which he does, only to find Mr. Porpus there. Both recognize each other, and Porpus starts to denounce Oscar. Gertie refuses to listen and they ignore him altogether. After Oscar leaves, Porpus continues to tell about him, but Gertie shows him his card and tells him that he is stopping at the Swelldorf. Porpus gets an idea and invites her to go to the Swelldorf for supper. When they are seated at the table, Oscar comes in to wait on them. Gertie is shocked, and turns her back on him. Oscar subtly takes the wallet of Porpus from his pocket, and then tells the head waiter that he is a crook, and never pays his bills. The head waiter presents his bill, and Porpus discovers his loss. The head waiter thinks it is a put up job, and he is kicked out of the hotel, but secures two revolvers, and comes back for revenge. The whole hotel is put in a riot by the shooting, and Mrs. Piffle also arrives with a gun. Finally Porpus runs out of bullets, and is subdued, but Mrs. Piffle arises, and, pointing her revolver at Oscar's head, leads him away. Gertie is thunderstruck, and faints in Fish's arms.

THE WOMAN HE MARRIED (Ramona—Two Parts—Released Week of Sept. 27).—The cast: Ann Kromann, C. James, Harold Smith, George Nave, Rheina Valdez, Bennison and Jack O'Brien.

A farmer's daughter runs away from home to join a male member of the fast set, and is subsequently abandoned by him. She finally obtains employment with a merchant company. Later she meets and marries a young rancher who takes her altogether on trust. Arriving at the ranch the newly-made wife finds in her husband's partner the man who abandoned her. The man and woman agree to silence and part. The husband hushes the wife's confession on her lips and takes her in his arms.

Back on the old ranch a younger sister of the girl who ran away is subjected to a similar temptation and is about to yield to the tempter and leave her father when the old man opens the hidden chapter and tells the girl of her sister's experience. The girl wisely resolves to remain at home. The story ends with her restoring her former humble lover to favor and the driving from the ranch of the man who would have betrayed her.

A BROTHER'S REDEMPTION (Santa Barbara—Two Parts—Released Week of Sept 27).—The cast: Scott Beal, Rheina Valdez and Hugh Bennison.

The story of a little girl left at a tender age to mother a baby brother and bear the brutality of a drunken father. The children escape and climb to the roof of a freight car. As the train is pulling out of the depot the pursuing father falls beneath the wheels and is killed. The youngsters arrive in a great city and the little mother takes up the burden of life for herself and brother.

In the years that follow the boy begins to follow in the footsteps of his father, the girl loyally stays by him, even to the extent of becoming a thief to save him from the result of his folly. The boy's regeneration is brought about in due course and the little mother marries the man of her choice.

KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE SERVICE.

THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR (Edison Feature Service—Five Parts—Sept. 1).—The cast: Irene Fenwick, Camille Dalberg, Della Connor, Richie Ling, Lawson Butt, Ben L. Taggart, Albert Andruss and John Nicholson.

Tom Grayson, an engineer employed in Mexico, quarrels with some Greasers. When they plot to kill him, the plan is overheard by Lake, a promoter of worthless mines who scents an opportunity to make himself solid with the engineer. Accordingly the authorities are informed, and Tom is saved and Lake thereby wins Tom's friendship and regard. Back in the New England village, Judge Grayson, his wife and their adopted daughter, Cecilia, make things as pleasant as possible for the little woman next door, who is socially ostracized by the village possips because nothing is known of her former life and associates.

When his work in Mexico is finished Tom returns home and thus meets the woman next door. Lake, hoping to obtain Tom's endorsement in a fraudulent mining venture, visits the Grayson's and one day is introduced to "Miss Ferguson." He acknowledges the introduction with a "Hello, Jenny!" The little woman at first denies her identity and then finally admits that she is Jenny Gay, the former actress whose celebrated divorce suit was dragged through the mire of the yellow journals the year before. Tom, however, refuses to lose faith in her and she tells him her unfortunate history: how, when she was starring on Broadway, Lake had been an ardent suitor and had made life miserable with his persecutions. To escape him she married Ben Whittier, a wealthy banker, but found no happiness in the union, owing to her husband's fondness for Lake and his readiness to believe Lake's lies about her. Then Jenny told him of that night in the big hotel which formed the basis of Whittier's divorce proceedings; of how she had returned about midnight and gone to her room when Lake, who was secreted in a closet, suddenly stepped out. Before she could break from his grasp the door was pushed open and Whittier, with two detectives, rushed in. After the sensational divorce, Jenny went to this quiet Connecticut town to seek peace and seclusion. At the conclusion of her narrative, they agree that the only thing to do is to wring a confession from Lake. This they plan to do.

In the meantime, Tom's father, a retired lawyer, suspects Lake. With the aid of Federal authorities he is able to do this and on the day set, two secret service men arrive. That afternoon Jenny writes a note to Lake telling him that she has changed her mind about marrying him. Tom, Mr. Grayson and the detectives are hid in Jenny's house and, at the proper moment, Tom comes out and forces from Lake a statement of the framed-up divorce. When this is published, the announcement of the coming marriage of Tom Grayson and "the woman next door" is announced.

THE MONEY MASTER (Five Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast: Frank Sheridan, Paul McAllister, Calvin Thomas, Sam Reid, Miss Anne Meredith, Miss Fania Marinoff and Bert Gudgeon.

PROLOGUE.—John J. Haggleton is the oil king of the world. In his first years while fighting bitterly for success his methods are unscrupulous. His wife suffers as a result and learns to hate his dishonesty. One day, finding written proof of a plot to burn up the oil refinery of a competitor, she leaves him, taking her baby boy and the condemning documents.

Lawrence, a competitor of Haggleton, shoots himself as a result of Haggleton's manipulations and another, Moran, ruined, falls into misery. Haggleton's wife dies in poverty, leaving her boy, Philip, in the care of a poor old man named Gentle, who brings him up under an assumed name so that the boy shall never know his father's name. Gentle keeps the documents incriminating Haggleton.

The story proper opens in Moran's home. Moran, who is now working in a miserable East Side bakery with his daughter, Jenny, a woman of the streets who has been ruined by Lawrence's son, but who has reformed, is in love with Philip Ames, who is really the son of Haggleton. He in turn is in love, not with Jenny, but with Margaret Lawrence, daughter of the man who committed suicide. She is a nurse in a hospital. Haggleton comes to visit the tenement in which the Morans live and there meets his son, who is calling on Moran. Haggleton does not reveal his identity. He discovers through Gentle the identity of his son and of the hatred his son has been taught to bear against the oil king. Haggleton is struck by the boy's speeches and when shown the horrible conditions of the people living in the tenement, he offers to help them with money, but his son refuses the money, saying that a man in order to make charity effective must not merely hand money to poor people but must understand them as well.

Haggleton, in an effort to win back his son, decides to try living as a laborer. He sends orders for his yacht to sail, spreading the rumor that he is on board for a long cruise. Then he starts life over in a tenement without a penny. Haggleton starts work as a kneader in Moran's bake-shop and after studying conditions begins to build up an electrical bake-shop, which will later become a real bread trust.

As they prosper, the home of Moran becomes happier, but Moran, inflamed by socialistic ideas, spread about by a few bakers who are thrown out of work by the electrical machinery, nurses anarchistic hatred against men such as Haggleton who ruined him. He doesn't know, however, that Jackson is Haggleton. To this argument Haggleton explains to him that his bread trust may be hurting a few bakers, but benefits the whole East Side. Haggleton learns of the engagement of Philip with Margaret Lawrence. He tries to withhold this marriage as he has much greater plans in mind for his son, and in so doing discloses his real identity. Moran, infuriated, tries to shoot Haggleton, but Philip, who has learned to love him in the past months, stands between Moran and his father and receives the shot. He is taken to the Haggleton home on Fifth avenue and nursed there by Margaret Lawrence. When his health is restored, Margaret announces her intention of leaving the house, for she thinks she can never bear to marry a son of the man who ruined her father. She is stubborn in her pride, but finally yields when Jenny comes to her and tells her that her own destroyer was none other than Margaret's brother. Margaret softens and henceforth Haggleton, Margaret and Philip devote their lives and huge fortune to the development of really useful charity.

THE FIXER (Five Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast: George Bickel, Harry Watson, Ben. L. Taggart, Ruby Hoffman, Alma Hanlon, Snitz Edwards, John Nicholson and Alfred Kepler.

When Bill Fowler decided to wed the wealthy widow, Isabel Dare, of Rye, N. Y., he gave a bachelor dinner. And the dinner degenerated into a quiet game with sugar for dice until constable Zack arrived with sleuths galore and landed them every one safe and sound in the local calaboose. So Christopher Cutting, Bill's friend, "The Fixer," put his brain to work, chloroformed Zack and hustled Bill home in time for the wedding. Meantime, Isabel's daughter, Dorothy, bid her sweetheart, Lieutenant Ned Hemmingway, U. S. A., a tearful good-bye for Ned was going away with William Fowler on a dangerous diplomatic mission to Mexico. Let it here be understood that William Fowler, diplomat, and Bill Fowler, bridegroom, were quite two different gentlemen.

But that didn't deter Bill. He stole the identity of Wm. Fowler and when Constable Zack arrived Bill told his bride that Zack was a special messenger from the President come to escort him to Mexico. Zack escorted him to the calaboose and "The Fixer," fixed it again, this time with cash, not chloroform. One lie begets another. Bill couldn't go home so soon, so "The Fixer" found a scheme. They went to Mexico and sent letters home from Laredo telling of their thrilling adventures and their diplomatic triumphs. Unfortunately, they are captured by a bandit general, Gomez, and treated ignominiously. They escape and find the real Wm. Fowler is famous. Bill wires the folks back in Rye and they send him a telegram inviting him to a reception in his honor. Unhappily for Bill, the real Wm. Fowler gets the invitation and accepts.

Meantime Isabel receives word her former husband may be alive. The former husband looks like the real diplomat. When Bill arrives and gets the ovation the diplomat is left in the cold. Bill is dressed like a major general and no one believes the real agent who is plainly dressed. Isabel, seeing the agent, believes him her former husband and drops at his feet pleading for mercy. Bill sees her and challenges the agent, who accepts. In the course of the duel, "The Fixer" saves Bill by hitting the diplomat with a brick from be[illegible] then discovers the absence of a birthmark which proves he is not her husband, and the party are faced by the problem of which is the real government agent. Lieutenant Hemmingway settles the matter by persuading the diplomat to see Bill's predicament and he departs without disproving Bill. Lieutenant Ned and Dorothy embrace; Bill and Isabel are reconciled and Cutting gets what all good fixers get—nothing!

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION

A ROYAL FAMILY (Columbia—Aug. 16).—The cast: Ann Murdock, Lila Barclay, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Montagu Love, Fuller Mellish, W. J. Draper, Edwin Mordant, Niles Welch, Albert Lewis, J. D. Cowles, Charles Prince, W. Nigh.

Angela is the seventeen-year-old daughter of the King of Arcacia, a little kingdom in war-stricken Europe. The disappearance of her brother when a child, fifteen years before, was so great a shock to the Queen-mother, that she died. The death of the Dowager Queen, her grandmother, left Angela solely in the care of her father, the King. Brought up without feminine influences surrounding her and being reminded constantly by the King of her dead brother, and his ambitions for his son had he lived, Angela, in such an atmosphere, readily acquired boyish tastes in both dress and manners.

Trouble between Arcacia and the kingdom of Kurland, due to ravages by a band of Kurland soldiers, and the internal disquietude occasioned thereby in both of these countries, leads to strained relations between them. To close this breach, the Cardinal suggests a marriage between the Princess and the Crown Prince of Kurland. This proposal meets the approval of the Prince, and he rides into Arcacia as Count Bernardine, to meet her incognito. But on his way he meets Angela, out riding, whom he mistakes for a boy. He asks her to direct him to the castle and she tells him to follow her. On the way to the castle, they meet the Cardinal and he introduces them, the Prince as Count Bernardine. The Count explains the purpose of his mission and Angela orders him to return to the Prince and say she refuses his offer of marriage. Interested herself in the Count, she prevails upon him to tarry a few days. Frequent meetings between them increases Angela's interest, for she begins to show signs of falling in love.

The seriousness of the situation between the two countries and the prospects of war pictured to her by the Count and her reflections thereon when alone, prompt Angela to agree to a marriage with the Prince for peace purposes. The Count has come upon a clue to the border outrages and this clue is a lead which involves in a conspiracy many closely allied to the Kingdom of Arcacia, among them Countess Varensa. The Count makes love to the Countess for the purpose of furthering investigations. When Angela finds him with his arms around the Countess, she misconstrues his motives. In a freakish moment of anger she cuts him over the face with her whip. On his departure, Angela secretly follows the Count, and unexpectedly into an affray, in which the Count, disguised in the mask and clothes of the messenger of the raiders whom he has attacked, has a hot fight. In the general melee that follows, Angela is made prisoner by the Kurlands.

Angela is rescued and is taken temporarily to an inn, where she is concealed by the Count, still masked, with the assistance of a youth attracted to Angela by her face, which seems familiar to him. Another fight ensues and the Count picks Angela up and carries her above the heads of the mob to safety. Upon his return, he pulls away his mask and discloses to the ruffians that he is their Crown Prince. On horses the Count escapes with Angela and the boy back to the castle which is surrounded by a mob of Arcacians demanding that war be declared against Kurland. To the multitude Angela proclaims she will marry the Prince and thus end the trouble between the two countries. At a later meeting between the Count and Angela he discovers both his real identity and that of the boy who helped in her rescue. The boy is none other than her own brother who [illegible] fifteen years before.

Having insufficient money for their [illegible] Ruth is tempted to "play the horses" and while after losing the dens mob attacks and captures the pool room is arrested in a raid. After a night in the station house her identity [illegible] as she has no money to pay the fine. A wealthy young attorney, Arthur Lowe, [illegible] the time, straightens matters out. Ruth, however, has lost her position, and in seeking another, at a beautiful summer hotel, runs into her elder sister, who some time before left home for the gayer life of the city, in company with two pseudo gentlemen—card sharps, one of whom she lives with. The other, Powers, is quick to realize that Ruth's prettiness will prove a wonderful decoy for their victims.

One day Ruth, while canoeing with Powers, is upset and saved from a watery grave by Lowe, who was leaving his launch for the shore, after which, recognizing each other, their friendship increases, while Powers' hatred of Lowe grows rabid. At a card game with Lowe, Powers is caught cheating by Ruth, who exposes him, whereupon a fight starts between the two men, in which Powers, about to strike Lowe over the head with a decanter, is shot through the shoulder by Ruth. The story ends happily with Ruth, her mother and Lowe leaving for a long cruise on Lowe's yacht, and as the stern of the yacht disappears in the distance, Dan Cupid, minus one arrow, stands on the shore smiling contentedly.

HER GREAT MATCH (Aug. 30).—The cast: Gail Kane, Vernon Steel, Ned Burton, Clarissa Selwynne, Lawrence Grattan, Julia Hurley.

Prince Adolph of Syravia, while on a pleasure trip through America, meets Jo Sheldon, a charming American girl. Some time later, at a Charity Fete, they again meet and fall in love. Mrs. Sheldon, Jo's stepmother, being deeply in debt, and unable to repay her creditors, forges Jo's signature to a note for the amount of her debts and gets the money from a Mr. Bote, a friend of the family and very wealthy, whose one ambition in life is to have the title of a Baron. The condition of the note is that Jo marry the Prince and have him bestow the title upon Bote.

The Duchess Louise, worried by the love of Jo and the Prince, explains to him that he will be able to marry Jo, only by a morganatic marriage. When the Prince proposes this to Jo, she indignantly refuses. Mr. Bote, hearing of this, tells Jo that he will stop payment on the check and send her father and stepmother to prison. Jo, knowing nothing of the note, goes to her stepmother for an explanation, whereupon after being told everything, she agrees to the marriage to save her father. In the meanwhile, the Prince receives a decoy message that his father, the King, is dying. He informs Jo that he must leave immediately, and asks her to await his return. On reaching there, and finding his father in the best of health, he persuades his younger brother to reign in his place, telling him of his love, then escaping for America, to sacrifice the throne and become an American citizen.

Mrs. Sheldon cashes the check and runs off to a foreign port, while Jo leaves for the country where her father's factory is located. The King, on learning of his son's escape, sends one of his men to America, to persuade him to return and stop the marriage. The servant arriving there ahead of the Prince, secures a position in Mr. Sheldon's factory. Jo is seriously injured in an accident, caused by the King's servant, who tries to make a getaway, but is caught and severely punished. The story ends happily, with Jo's recovery and a marriage between her and the Prince.

THE SOUL OF A WOMAN (Rolfe—Five Parts—Sept. 6).—The cast: Emily Stevens, George LeGuere, Theodore Babcock, Walter Hitchcock, Fred Stone, Howard Truesdell, Henry Bergman, Effingham Pinto, Del DeLois, Florence Short, Vivian Oakland, Ralph Austin, Edwin Martin, Baby Field.

Standish, an artist, uses Mary, his wife, as the model for his painting of The Madonna. When the Connoisseur and the Parishioner come to inspect the picture the Connoisseur recognizes in the model an old paramour and tells the husband so. The husband, surprised, says the model is the wife of a dear friend of his. The Connoisseur and the Parishioner buy the picture. After their departure the husband upbraids his wife. She tells him at length of her acquaintance with the Connoisseur and how, for five years, she believed herself legally married to him. But the husband will not forgive the wife and puts her and her baby out into the street.

The wife leaves the baby on the steps of a monastery with a crucifix bearing her name in the child's hand. The wife joins the inmates of the gay cafe called "The House of Lost Souls" and becomes its reigning queen. Seventeen years later the boy is a novice in the monastery. Before becoming a monk he wants to see the world. Father Anthony gives his consent. The boy wanders into "The House of Lost Souls" of which his mother is now the proprietress.

There the boy meets Lust, Rum, Avarice, Passion and Beauty. They try their wiles in vain. Finally he succumbs to Beauty. The others put a love-up on the boy and are dancing around him when the proprietress comes in. She stops the frivolity and takes the boy to her room. There he sees the crucifix and knows that the boy is her son. Without disclosing her identity she tells him to go back. As her old associates rush in she breaks her associations with them. After they leave she falls fainting. Eight years later the boy is a parish priest. In a fearful storm an old drab enters the church. It is the mother. She sees above the altar the painting of The Madonna for which she posed. She recognizes her son by the crucifix he still wears. The son gives the mother absolution as the Angel of Death comes in and carries away her spirit.

THE SILENT VOICE (Quality—Six Parts—Sept. 13).—The cast: Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow, Lester Cuneo, Helen Dunbar, Ann Drew, Miss C. Henry, Mr. Frank Bacon, Wm. Clifford.

Franklyn Starr, a talented and wealthy young composer of music, suffered a double misfortune in the sudden loss of his hearing and in the death of a mother deeply attached to him. Music, his great joy in life, was not taken from him and a complete change in Starr's character developed. Once generous, happy and helpful, Starr now grows sad and despondent. Deeply sensitive concerning his deafness, Starr resolved to leave the city and retire with his devoted servant, Spring, to the country and live the life of a hermit. One day, when tortured by a blacker mood, Starr rushed out of his cabin to seek the solace of the mountains. From the heights on which he stood, he was unable to hear the warning cries of the workmen who were setting off a charge of dynamite and a moment later he was hurled to the road below by a landslide caused by the blast. The attractive Marjorie Blair, a young woman of fashion happened to be riding through this mountain region at the time, and witnessing Starr's accident she rushed to his rescue. At this juncture, the inevitable took place. Starr fell in love with Marjorie, and Marjorie, won by Starr's rich personality, returned that love notwithstanding his deafness.

Shortly afterwards Starr married Marjorie and once more the happiness and serenity of former days returned to him. And this happiness would have been permanent if Starr's characterless relative, Bobbie Delorme, had not appeared on the scene, and, taking a mean advantage of a past innocent flirtation with Marjorie, tried to win her from her husband. Mistakenly believing in Marjorie's guilt, and thinking that again he has been robbed of all that makes life precious to him, Starr becomes bitter and misanthropic. In the end, however, he finds that he has been unjust to Marjorie, and this discovery, following close on the recovery of his lost hearing, fills him once more with the joy and zest of living.

THE BETTER MAN (Rolfe—Five Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Henry Kolker, Elsie Balfour, Orlando Daly, Renee Kelly, J. H. Goldsworthy, Mayme Kelso, Edwin Boring and Richard Lee.

John Stoddard is hired by Courtlandt Van Nest, a capitalist, to supervise the construction of a gigantic iron bridge. Stoddard encounters trouble with the men, whose minds are inflamed by Lavinsky, an agitator. The men ask for higher wages. At Van Nest's suggestion Stoddard goes to New York to attend a meeting of the Board of Directors of the company owning the bridge. At the meeting Stoddard advocates a compromise in the way of a small increase in pay, but the directors will make no concessions to the men. Stoddard meets Janet Van Nest, who, with her Aunt Sarah, is a typical product of the circle which believes in class aristocracy. Janet is engaged to Kenneth Stuyvesant, an idle, rich young fellow, a captain in the militia.

Janet and her aunt visit the militia encampment, staying at the hotel in Weyburn, N. Y., about a mile from where the bridge is being built. Stoddard shows Janet over the bridge. Janet feels that she has met a man who is a worker, who does things, and feels attracted to him, despite her aunt's words forbidding her to associate with him. Stoddard shows Janet through the poor section of the village, showing her the utter destitution of the working people. Janet writes a letter for Sevic, a rough working man, to his wife in the old country and sends her transportation. The men working on the bridge strike. Van Nest first calls in strike breakers, then the militia. As the militia are ready to fire Lavinsky prepares to hurl dynamite at them. Stoddard takes the dynamite away from him after a hand-to-hand fight. Stoddard turns the dynamite over to Kenneth, who has one of his men take it to the rear.

Stoddard and Janet go to Van Nest and say they will do anything to have justice done the men. Van Nest takes them up and stipulates that they give each other up. Reluctantly they consent. Janet goes to help the poor of the village. On her way she meets Kenneth. Kenneth is angry at her associations with the masses and, going to her home blames her aunt for driving the girl out. Missing Janet, Van Nest goes to Stoddard and demands the return of his daughter. Stoddard says he has kept his promise and not seen Janet, but seizes on the

Gentlemen:

I am writing to express my appreciation of the excellent manner in which you finished my film of last week. In my ten years' experience I can truthfully state that I have never seen finer work from Topical negatives. My film contained four different subjects. For two of these the exposure was guesswork, but I erred on the safe side with the result that I greatly over-exposed, but you remedied this in your laboratories, and turned out every inch of my film in first-class shape. You must have lost no time, either, in doing the work, for I received the film back sooner than expected. All round satisfaction in these days of hurry and hustle is surely something worth praising.

Trusting we shall become better acquainted, and sorry I didn't know you earlier, I am,

Very respectfully, opportunity to point out to Van Nest the great American procession of workers and the fact that the difference in the stations of himself and Van Nest is due to the fact that their father's path diverged earlier in the procession. Van Nest is plainly impressed. Meanwhile Edith Stoddard is busy fixing things up for Sevic's wife and children who have arrived from the old country. Van Nest meets Edith. She shows him the children and how true happiness is obtained through labor. He becomes reconciled to the idea of Janet marrying Stoddard.

The opening scenes show the relations of capital and labor starting with the cave man days, then in Biblical times, then in the feudal period and then today. The closing scenes are an allegory with Justice saying to Capital and Labor, "Why quarrel? You are each useless without the other."

PARAMOUNT.

OUT OF DARKNESS (Lasky—Sept. 9).—The cast: Charlotte Walker, Thomas Meighan, Margery Daw, Hal Clements, Tom Forman, Loyla O'Connor.

Helen Scott has been left the sole owner of the Scott Canneries by the death of her father, but being too busy with social duties Miss Scott leaves the handling of the business of the industry to her hard-fisted uncle and only calls upon him when she needs money. Harvey Brooks, manager of the Tampa branch of the canneries, is a hard-working young man with new ideas of social welfare. He has hundreds of people in his employ working under most unfavorable conditions and for starvation wages. He has pleaded with Helen Scott and her uncle to better the working conditions but has always been ignored. During the height of the social season Helen, with a party of friends, goes to Palm Beach, Fla., for the yacht races. While sailing her sloop one foggy night it is run down and sunk by a large schooner, a fruit carrier for the Scott canneries. Helen is rescued from the sea by the captain of the schooner. The heiress is stunned by a blow on the head, received at the time her sloop was struck. When she recovers she is unable to remember her name or her identiy. The schooner captain takes Helen to his home and, when she has recovered, his daughter, who works in the cannery, secures Helen a position beside her at the cutting table. Brooks, hearing of Helen's accident and loss of identity, takes an interest in her and she is attracted by his kind manner. Labor leaders are urging the cannery workers to strike and place the blame for the conditions upon young Brooks. One night Brooks is slugged and bound to a chair in his frame office building and the plant is set on fire by the excited workers. Helen, rushes through the flames to his aid and as she unbinds him she is overcome by smoke and falls unconscious by his chair. Brooks carries her to safety through the burning buildings and returns her to the schooner captain's home.

While they are both recovering from their burns a detective, employed by the uncle, locates Helen. The shock of the fire and the burns has slightly restored Helen's memory and the clever detective finally brings her to realize who she really is. Helen is in love with Brooks and he with her, believing that she is a poor factory girl. The heiress realizes that Brooks hates the real Helen Scott for her indifference to the workers. When he has recovered she meets him alone, tells him she is Helen Scott and breaks down his wall of hatred and together they go to help their coworkers.

THE CASE OF BECKY (Lasky—Sept. 13).—The cast: Blanche Sweet, Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Carlyle Blackwell.

Dorothy has been brought up to appear in public with Balzamo, a hypnotist, who claims to be her guardian. By constantly subjecting her to this hypnotic influence, he has weakened Dorothy's will-power. The dual personality which lurks in everyone becomes so strong that it insists upon manifesting itself to the world as another personage in the bodily form of Dorothy. This personage calls itself Becky and is fully cognizant of Dorothy, whom she hates, whereas Dorothy is not so truly aware of Becky—she does not remember all that Becky has said and done.

Dr. Emerson, a specialist in nervous diseases, who is much interested in hypnotism, has a young assistant, Dr. John Arnold, who possesses great hypnotic power. Dr. Emerson urges the development of the power, arguing that it can be used for good as well as evil purposes. Dr. Emerson tells Dr. Arnold how his own life was wrecked years ago by a hypnotist, who induced his wife to leave him and take their little child. The wife died deserted and the doctor has never been able to find the child or the hypnotist whom he knew as Schwartz. Balzamo, as Dorothy grows older, becomes attracted to her and decides to discharge the older woman that is working with him and make Dorothy his star performer. Dorothy, when she hears this, becomes for the first time visibly Becky and runs away. She has various experiences earning her living, always getting a position through her sweetness and amiability as Dorothy and losing it through the ugliness and malice of Becky, who appears more and more often as she grows stronger.

Dorothy becomes companion to Dr. Emerson's sister and begins to fight Becky. She visits the Doctor's sanitarium and there meets Dr. Arnold, who falls in love with her. There also, Becky insists upon making her appearance. Dr. Emerson recognizes it as a case of dual personality which he is anxious to study to help Dorothy. But Becky is impossible—she will tell the Doctor nothing and hates Dorothy because Arnold is in love with her. Becky takes malicious delight in making everybody miserable. Balzamo, who has traced the girl from place to place, comes to town to get her and to give a performance. Dorothy, frightened at the sight of him, tells Dr. Emerson everything. The two doctors make up their minds that they must kill Becky to free Dorothy and then free her from Balzamo. The fight begins and after a hard struggle Arnold kills Becky and defeats Balzamo and making him confess that Dorothy is Dr. Emerson's daughter. Balzamo is sent away with his power broken. Dorothy, knowing that Becky is no longer to be feared and that Balzamo is out of her life, yields herself willingly to Arnold's love.

A MOTHER'S CONFESSION (Five Parts).—Henry Patterson, living in Chicago with his wife, Lola, and infant boy, Harold, receives disturbing news regarding his mining interests at Denver. He goes there to investigate, and to avoid publicity, assumes the name of Henry Donovan. At Denver, he finds the mine is worthless, and faces ruin. He meets Louise Douglas, a wealthy woman, who becomes attracted to him. She makes overtures of marriage, unaware of his real identity. Henry, in a wild belief that he can save his family from poverty, marries Louise. He invents excuses to Lola, whom he still loves, for his long absence. The poor woman receives his money and affectionate letters, ignorant of his folly. In due course, Louise gives birth to a daughter, Muriel.

The months lengthen into years. Lola in her solitude, has formed a strong friendship for Fred Warren, an artist, for whom she poses. The artist, believing Lola to be a widow, presses her to marry him. Her refusals arouse his suspicion, until one day Lola receives a letter which, Warren notices, agitates her. The letter is, indeed, from her husband, a confession of his bigamous union with Louise, and promising to make early reparation. Taking advantage of Lola's absence from the room, Warren purloins the letter and learns her secret. Meanwhile, Louise has entrusted Henry with a large sum of money for investment in New York. He goes instead to his wife at Chicago. In a touching scene, past sins are confessed and forgiven, and the couple make preparations for a hasty departure. At the moment of leaving, Warren pays Lola an unexpected visit. Furiously Warren denounces Henry, calls him "Bigamist," and threatens to turn over his letter of confession to his wife Louise. Henry, demanding the letter, draws a revolver and, in the struggle, the pistol is accidentally discharged, killing the bigamist. With a plea for forgiveness as he dies, Henry hands over to Lola Louise's money. In order not to implicate her in the murder, Warren orders Lola away from the scene. She, having in mind the $50,000, heeds his advice and immediately leaves with Harold for New York, where she assumes the name of "Gibson." Warren telephones the police, giving himself up as the murderer.

Louise, notified by the Chicago police of her husband's death, comes to Chicago. Seeking revenge, she secures permission to see her husband's murderer. She enters the cell with a concealed weapon. There she learns for the first time the truth, from the written confession of her husband which the prisoner has concealed on his person. She is prostrated by grief, and her vow of vengeance becomes a promise to help the prisoner. The trial takes place. Warren, aided by Louise's counsel and her testimony, is declared "not guilty." With gratitude on the one side, and sympathy on the other, a strong bond of friendship is formed which soon gives way to love. Warren and Louise marry and come to live in New York. With the passing of years, Lola, giving way to extravagance, becomes penniless. Harold, now at Milan studying music, requests funds, and with her son's need in mind, Lola at a dance steals a necklace. Her theft detected, she is tried and sent to prison for two years.

Harold, who has made a name for himself in Milan, meets a charming student, Muriel Warren. Unaware of each other's antecedents, they form a deep attachment and finally arrange to return to America to marry. Lola's prison term expired, she comes to New York. There, sitting on a park bench, she picks up a discarded newspaper, in which she reads the wedding announcement of Harold and Muriel, to take place that afternoon. She rushes to the church, breaks through the crowd and, in a most dramatic scene, before the altar, makes her confession to the priest. Muriel now learns for the first time that her stepfather, Warren, killed her father. Her soul, embittered by the guilt of her parents, she leaves her mother's house and becomes a nun. Harold, learning that his father's misdeeds nearly caused the marriage of brother and sister, forgives his broken-hearted mother, takes her with him and makes a home for her.

EVIDENCE (Shubert—Five parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Lillian Tucker, Edwin August, Haidee Wright, Florence Hackett.

Lord Wimbourne, a young English peer, is summoned from his club, where he is spending the evening with his friends Lushington and Captain Pollock, by the illness of his son, Bing. Lushington is anxious over the boy; Pollock is indifferent and tries to drown his memories in drink. Both men love Lady Una, Wimbourne's wife, Lushington, unselfishly, while Pollock hates her husband and seeks revenge. Wimbourne and Lady Una entertain at a ball that night. The guests of honor are Lushington, Pollock, the Duchess of Gillingham, Mrs. Ebengham and Stavely. While Lushington and Una are talking on the balcony they are joined by Pollock. Wimbourne calls his wife to say good night to parting guests. Pollock remains on the balcony. Partly intoxicated, he goes to sleep. Awakening, he arouses himself violently, but seeing Una's scarf on the rail he decides to wait till she returns for it. Una searches for her scarf, and finds Pollock, who takes her in his arms, and is holding her when her husband appears.

The next morning Wimbourne refuses explanations. Pollock receives an order to report to the war office. He regrets his actions of the previous night and goes to Wimbourne Hall to explain, but Wimbourne refuses to see him and goes to his club. Una explains all to Lushington, who tries to reconcile her husband, but he declines and again scorns Pollock, who is enraged and decides on revenge. He sends Una a note: "Your husband at the Red Lion Inn in critical condition. Come at once." He hastens to the Inn, notifies the innkeeper that a lady will arrive soon greatly agitated. He wishes her to be shown at once to his room. No names must be mentioned. Una arrives and hastens to the room indicated by the innkeeper. Pollock seizes her in his arms and prevents her escape. He destroys the note, which is the only evidence of Una's innocence.

In the meantime, Wimbourne has picked up the blotter on the desk at which Pollock wrote and seeing on it the name of his wife he hastens home, where he is told of her departure for the inn. He follows her. Arriving, he breaks into the room where Una has fainted, and finds bending over the bed, to further compromise her, the Captain, who then departs. Una goes to the home of her Duchess Mother. A divorce is granted. Pollock leaves for the war. Lushington remains the true friend of the couple, and is a frequent visitor at Wimbourne Hall and a companion for Bing, the child. Lushington arranges a meeting between Una and Bing, who does not remember his mother, and believes her to be a Princess. It takes place one night when Wimbourne is making a speech in Parliament, and Una believes she will be alone with her child. But Lushington arranges that Wimbourne shall lose several sheets from his speech and returning to secure them will find Una there, thus hoping to bring the two together again. The plan works, but Wimbourne is only angry at Una's intrusion, and informs her that he is about to wed Mrs. Ebengham.

Broken hearted, Una leaves. Lushington begs her to marry him, but she refuses. He leaves, is sent to France on business, and later he goes to India, where he meets Pollock, who has repented of his double dealing and signs a confession exonerating Una. Lushington hastens back to London, where he succeeds in reuniting Una and Wimbourne.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 20, Two Parts—Sept. 13).—Arthur Stanley's injuries, which had befallen him while inspecting his mining property had attracted wide attention. The reports were meagre, save that his physician, Dr. Frank Durand, had, by good fortune, been with him at the time of the accident. The papers also stated that Mr. Powell's business affairs would be looked after by his cousin, Blair Stanley, of Richmond. Esther, after her first rebuff at the portal of the Powell mansion, returned again and again, but without seeing Arthur. On a last occasion, she was determined. She waited, with the watchful Quabba lingering near, until she had seen Durand and the Count de Vaux leave. She knew that Blair was at the office, and preferred to encounter Vivian Marston, whom she learned, was in charge of the sick room, alone.

Esther had no desire to bring notoriety or ruin, perhaps, upon the injured man by any premature disclosure of his real identity. But she was determined to go to any length, if necessary. Some intuitive sense of Esther's attitude must have impressed Vivian. "I will see the young lady," she told the man servant. When Esther reached Arthur's door, Vivian, masquerading in a nurse's costume, spoke as one having authority. "You cannot come in here. Mr. Powell is at death's door."

"Better he die with a true friend beside him than live with you and your associates ministering to him," Esther responded scornfully.

Arthur lay with his eyes closed. Esther bent by his bedside, paying no heed to Vivian, who passed by the foot of the bed and took a small instrument from the table, then returned to the back of the bed and laid a hand, as though to soothe him, on Arthur's unbandaged arm. At length Arthur opened his eyes and he saw Esther. He spoke a word or two, then fell into unconsciousness again. The daughter had lulled him.

Esther returned to her hotel, torn with conflicting emotions. Duty called her to Richmond, where Hagar was slowly recovering her reason; and stronger still, her deep and ardent love for Arthur held her here.

That night, a strange conclave—the stranglers of a soul—was gathered in the library of the young millionaire. There was Durand, Count de Vaux, Vivian and silent and brooding among them, Blair. They who plotted did not know that the diamond from the sky had lain unnoticed since early morn on the alighting board of one of the beehives in Rancher Jones' apiary, not twenty miles from the spot where Arthur had been injured.

Beneath a great dead tree, nearby, beside a rude campfire, were two billposters, preparing their supper. Burke, who went in search of syrup, came upon the diamond. He returned to the fire, and held it in the firelight. Then he hid the treasure in his pocket, but too late to escape the eye of his companion, Jack Williams.

In the Powell library, in Los Angeles, the plotting of the stranglers of Arthur's soul was reaching a climax. Suddenly Blair sprang to his feet.

"I do not claim to be a saint," he said. "But I will have no part in the murdering of this man with drugs. When Arthur is well I will kill him, face to face!"

Vivian's face softened, she drew her arms around Blair. The two men left the room. Vivian held the rebel in her embraces and worked him to her will. But his heart was never in the dastard work the drug thugs planned and carried through.

In the wilderness, two men slept in blankets beneath a tree burning at its base. Not far away, Marmaduke Smythe, lost and footsore, crouched in slumber beneath a bush. The tree crashed down, crushing Burke; ere he was dead, Williams despoiled him of the diamond and fled.

THE GAME OF THREE (Five Parts).—The cast: Barney Gilmore, Roy Gahris, Grace Norman, Lillian Niederaur, E. F. Roseman, John Sharkey, Violet Stuart, George Henry, Mabel Wright, Frank Stone, Roy Applegate, Richard Lysle.

Mazie King, an adventuress, through the kindly patronage of Mr. Niel, a society man, is enabled to be a guest at an anniversary reception. Taking advantage of the opportunity she lays her plans to get away with some valuable jewels. Jim O'Bryan, the tool, enters stealthily by way of a side window. He then waylays one of the house butlers and manages to change clothes with him, after which it is easy to get about unrecognized. In the guise of a butler and under the direction of Mazie Jim finally gets possession of the jewels. In making his escape from the house he is discovered by Detective O'Bryan and is wounded. Arriving at the rendezvous, where his partner in crime is waiting, they undertake to divide the spoils, but an argument arises and the wounded crook is forcibly ejected, minus the spoils, from the shack.

Ill from loss of blood he manages to reach the home of Tom and Molly Ryan, where he seeks protection, and is finally hidden in a clothes closet. In the meantime the detective arrives at the home of Tom, and although they are innocent, he arrests them. The detectives then return to the river front and finally locate the shack, but Travis, another crook, and Mazie manage to escape and get away on a steam launch, they took without the owner's permission. The detective follows on a river tug, finally overtaking and capturing the pair. At the police court, Tom and Molly, the innocent, and Travis and Mazie, the guilty, are brought face to face, but no evidence is available against Travis and Mazie, when suddenly Tim O'Bryan staggers in and acknowledges his part of the robbery at the same time accusing Travis and Mazie and clearing Tom and Molly of the charge. The finale is very effective, especially when Detective O'Bryan learns it was his own son whom he had wounded and was the actual thief.

AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN (Five Parts—Sept. 15).—Helen Davis, a girl of four, is run down by a reckless driver and suffers considerable injuries. The frightened driver, thinking he has killed the girl, carries the limp form into the woods, where later it is discovered by gypsies. After nursing the child back to health, these roamers attempt to return the baby to its parents, but their mission being misinterpreted they are driven from the Davis estate.

For the next fourteen years, Helen Davis wanders well over the face of the earth with her Nomad companions, finally returning with them to the scenes of her childhood. The theft of a horse in the neighborhood brings the gypsies under the sway of an unscrupulous lawyer, who has had for a client an aged eccentric named Hathaway. The old man, having lost considerable money through a bank failure, has buried his treasure, drawing a cypher map denoting its whereabouts. This he shows to his attorney, the unscrupulous lawyer. The attorney determines to secure the buried treasure, and through the co-operation of the gypsy chiefs the Hathaway house is ransacked for the map. While this crime is being committed old man Hathaway is murdered. He leave a son, George Hathaway, who has just returned from a European trip, and who has not only determined to recover the family wealth but also avenge his father's murder.

In the execution of these dual objects he meets Helen Davis, now Corina, a gypsy beauty, and straighaway falls in love with her. The trials and tribulations incident to the recovery of the family gold chest carries George Hathaway through many thrilling adventures, but eventually ends in his securing the chest and in the leaders of the gypsies plunging dramatically to their death through a broken bridge into a gulley hundreds of feet below. Helen Davis is quickly restored to her father, who can do nothing but consent to her marriage to George Hathaway.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

REFLEX CARBONS

The QUALITY Carbons of the WORLD

Specially constructed Negative with Copper Coated Core.

IN this our first public announcement to our friends and those we know will later be our friends, we want to give a brief history and description of our carbons.

REFLEX CARBONS are made by one of the oldest carbon manufacturers in the world whose plant is located in Switzerland. After making carbons of all kinds for many years the experience of the manufacturers showed them that the best results for projection work could only be obtained with a specially constructed negative for use with direct current. After many experiments they produced this Reflex brand with a copper coated cored negative. These REFLEX CARBONS have now been sold on the European continent, in England and other parts of the world for some three years and their popularity and sale increased so much from month to month that it was not until this year that the manufacturers were able to consider entering this, the greatest single market in the world.

In taking up these carbons we have proceeded very slowly and conservatively, getting them tried out by degrees in different parts of this country under varying conditions, and getting the opinions of various operators and experts. While all the opinions were not the same, many of the less progressive operators not liking or understanding the new idea of a separate negative, the vast majority of opinions were so flattering and favorable that we went ahead, placed large orders, and now have a considerable stock on hand in New York for immediate shipment.

We have two distinct kinds of carbons under the REFLEX brand, one for A. C. and the other for D. C. The A. C. carbons are plain cored carbons of the highest quality and greatest light output. The D. C. carbons are divided into positive and negative, the positive having a plain core and the negative a copper coated core.

In order to more thoroughly convince both friends and foes, that we are telling the truth when we say that REFLEX carbons are the QUALITY CARBONS of the WORLD, we will publish each week extracts from letters received not only from operators and managers in this country, but also from those in other parts of the world who are users of REFLEX CARBONS. All these letters are absolutely authentic and we will be glad to furnish the names and addresses to anyone.

¾ x 12 plain cored $10.00 per hundred carbons
⅝ x 12 plain cored $7.50 per hundred carbons
⅝ x 6 copper coated cored $3.75 per hundred carbons
½ x 6 copper coated cored $2.75 per hundred carbons

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will fill sample orders in lots of fifty each in all the above sizes providing cash accompanies the order in full.

You, Mr. Manager, and you, Mr. Operator, want to get the best possible light, so send us your order for some sample bundles to-day and give your spectators the best there is.

REMBUSCH SCREENS

ANNOUNCEMENT!

I have invented a new screen of WHITE FABRIC, that is especially for large and wide houses. It is the outcome of ten years of work and thousands of experiments. This screen is wonderfully brilliant at all angles; produces a picture without haze and of remarkable clearness and sharpness. IT IS NOT AN ALUMINUM OR GOLD BRONZE SCREEN. Exhibitors who have been disappointed with metallized screens will be delighted and astounded with this new white surface. Sold only to responsible parties, and demonstration will be made, in person, wherever possible, by Mr. Rembusch.

JUST THINK OF THIS!

Last week I was through Ohio on a trip and visited Youngstown, where I have fifteen Glass "Mirror Screens" installed. The screens at the Rex, Luxor, Palace, Dome, Orpheum, Colonial, Bijou, Dream, have been in place from six to eight years and are as good today as the day they left my factory.

Mr. Christa Diebel of the Dome, said to me: "F. J., I have for five years allowed every screen salesman who has come to Youngstown to put their sample against my Glass 'Mirror Screen' and in every instance there was such a difference, why, there was nothing to their screens. Sometimes when they found it was a Glass 'Mirror Screen' they wouldn't demonstrate."

WHY EXPERIMENT WITH CONCERNS WHO ARE HERE TODAY AND GONE TOMORROW WHEN I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS?

IN TEN YEARS I HAVE NEVER DISAPPOINTED ANYONE. MY GUARANTEE IS LIKE A GOLD BOND.

Look the Truth Squarely in the Face

Why pay a fancy price for a projector when you can buy a 1916 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH for considerably less than other highly advertised machines; considering that its quality and projection will outclass that of any other manufactured today?

Don't purchase the first machine that you see. Inspect them all. The MOTIOGRAPH will tell facts and appeals to the operator as well as exhibitor, especially when compared with the high priced machines.

If your Dealer does not have a MOTIOGRAPH on his floor, write us. We can give you valuable information in regard to projecting machines.

A BRAND NEW ONE!

If you are looking for a real lobby attraction, one that will surely draw the crowds to your theatre from many blocks away, install

Lapin's Musical Poster Frame

(Patent applied for)

Without a shadow of a doubt this clever device will practically pay for itself in a few weeks from the new patrons you will secure while frame is in use.

As shown in illustration the device is a beautifully designed frame with an upper name plate for the name of your theatre, and will hold one-sheet poster, announcement signs, photos, etc.

The cabinet extension seen in rear of frame is provided with musical electric bells which produce a really musical treat and is played directly from contact-board attached to your piano and while your pianist plays for the show inside of your theatre the bells play the same melodies outside in the lobby frame.

With Mr. Lapin's Piano keyboard contact device the wire leads are distributed directly from the contact-board above mentioned and extended to their respective positions on the binding posts on the bell frame regardless of distance between the two terminals.

The bells are played simultaneously with the fingering of the piano keys without changing the regular playing position of the piano in any way, while an electric switch combined with the soft pedal of piano enables the performer to continue or eliminate the playing of bells at will.

The tonal quality is loud, sweet and clear, and surpasses any electric musical bell on the market.

The power is derived from dry-cell batteries incased in base of piano and invisible, the up-keep of same being next to nothing per year. The bells are also well adapted for cabarets, dance halls, restaurants, cafés, amusement parks, skating rinks, etc.

We offer the BELL POSTER FRAME at an astonishingly low figure in order to quickly introduce them. Send for special introductory offer.
